Still, the unregulated and despotic power of the crown, which reached its height in Elizabeth's reign, proved, in many instances, superior to the law, until the reign of James I., 1623, when an act was passed, known as the Statute of Monopolies, 21 Jac. 1, ch. 3, which entirely prohibited all grants of that nature, and abolished existing monopolies. But the king was permitted to secure by letters patent to the inventor of any new manufacture, the sole right to make and vend the same for a term not exceeding fourteen years. Since that time the power of the monarch has been so far controlled by the law that the prohibition contained in the Statute of Monopolies has been fully observed, and under that statute has grown up the present system of British patent law, from which ours has to a great extent been derived. See Rob. Pat. §§ 1-8. See 12 Law Quart. Rev. 141, as to the earliest grants of privileges in England and the early history of patent law.

The constitution of the United States (art. 1, § 6, cl. 8) confers upon congress the power "to promote the progress of science and useful arts, by securing for limited times to authors and inventors the exclusive right to their respective writings and discoveries." This right can, accordingly, be conferred only upon the authors and inventors themselves; but it rests with congress to determine the length of time during which it shall continue. Congress at an early day availed itself of the power. The first act passed was that which established the patent office, on the 10th of April, 1790. There were several supplements and modifications to this law, the acts passed February 7, 1793, June 7, 1794, April 17, 1800, July 3, 1832, July 13, 1832. These were all repealed, by an act passed July 4, 1836, and a new system was established. Subsequently other changes were made by the acts of March 3, 1837, March 3, 1839, August 29, 1842, May 27, 1848, March 3, 1849, February 18, 1861, March 2, 1861, July 16, 1862, March 3, 1863, June 25, 1864, and March 3, 1865. The act of July 8, 1870, repealed all existing acts. Various minor amendments to it have been passed.

The patent laws were extended to the Canal Zone by Circular of the Isthmian Canal Commission (March 15, 1907). Protection of a patent right in the Philippines is procured by filing at the Bureau of Patents, etc., a certified copy of the United States patent (Circular of the Division of Customs, etc., of the war department, April 11, 1899, and subsequent circulars); and in Porto Rico, under the same circular of April 11, 1899, by filing at the office of the Secretary, San Juan, a certified copy of the patent.

Letters patent for inventions are granted for a term of seventeen years.

The law does not furnish any guarantee of the validity of the patent. It is nevertheless, prima facie evidence of its own validity; Pitts v. Hall, 2 Blatchf. 229, Fed. Cas. No. 11,192; it implies novelty and invention; Valley L. Works v. Wood's Sons Co., 196 Fed. 780, 116 C. C. A. 46, that the defendant's device is patented may tend, when offered in evidence, to show non-infringement, in some cases. See Corning v. Burden, 15 How. (U. S.) 252, 14 L. Ed. 683.

The exclusive right of the patentee did not exist at common law; it is created by acts of congress; and no rights can be acquired unless authorized by the statute and in the manner it prescribes; Dable Grain Shovel Co. v. Flint, 137 U. S. 41, 11 Sup. Ct. S. 34 L. Ed. 618. The rights granted by the patent are confined within the limits of the United States; consequently it does not extend to a foreign vessel lawfully entering one of our ports, where the patented improvement was placed upon her in a foreign port and authorized by the laws of the country to which she belongs; Brown v. Duchesne, 19 How. (U. S.) 183, 15 L. Ed. 595.

Of the subject-matter of a patent. The act of July 8, 1870, § 24, provides for the granting of a patent to the first inventor or discoverer of any new and useful art, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter, or any new and useful improvement thereof, not known or used by others in this country, and not patented, or described in any printed publication in this or any foreign country before his invention or discovery thereof, and not in public use or on sale for more than two years prior to his application, unless the same is proved to have been abandoned. By act of March 3, 1897 (in effect January 1, 1898), amending this section, the patenting or publication of an invention in a foreign country, if more than two years before the application in this country bars a patent.

There are five classes of inventions which may be the subjects of patents: first, an art; second, a machine; third, a manufacture; fourth, a composition of matter; and fifth, design. In Great Britain, letters patent granting exclusive privileges can be issued only to the inventors of a "new manufacture." But the English courts in defining the meaning of the term, have construed the word "manufacture" to be coextensive in signification with the whole of the first four classes of inventions thus recognized by our law. An art or process, a machine, and a composition of matter are all regarded there as manufactures. The field of mechanical invention in Great Britain is, therefore, coincident with that provided by our law, and the legal subject-matter of patents is the same in each country; 2 B. & Ald. 349; 2 M. & W. 544. But, inasmuch as we have three other classes of mechanical inventions, the term "manufacture" has a more limited signification here than it receives in Great Britain.

A process is an art or method by which any particular result is produced. Where a result or effect is produced by chemical action, by the operation or application of some element or power of nature, or of one substance to another, such modes, methods, or operations are called processes. A new process is usually the result of discovery; a machine, of invention. The arts of tanning, dyeing, vulcanizing india-rubber, smelting ores, etc., are usually carried on by processes, as distinguished from machines. But the term process is often employed more vaguely in a secondary sense in which it cannot be the subject of a patent. Thus, we say that a board is undergoing the process of being planed, grain of being ground, iron of being hammered or rolled. Here the term is used subjectively or passively, as applied to the material operated on, and not to the method or mode of producing that operation, which is by mechanical means, or the use of a machine as distinguished from a process. In this use of the term it represents the function of a machine, or the effect produced by it on the material subjected to the action of the machine, and does not constitute a patentable subject-matter, because there cannot be a valid patent for the function or abstract effect of a machine, but only for the machine which produces it. Corning v. Burden, 15 How. (U. S.) 267, 14 L. Ed. 683.

"A process is a mode of treatment of certain materials to produce a given result. It is an act, or series of acts, performed upon the subject-matter, to be transferred and reduced to a different state or thing. . . . In the language of the patent law, it is an 'art.' The machinery pointed out as suitable to perform the process may or may not be new or patentable; whilst the process itself may be entirely new, and produce an altogether new result. The process requires that certain things should be done with certain substances, and in a certain order; but the tools to be used in doing this may be of secondary consequence." Cochrane v. Deener, 94 U. S. 788, 24 L. Ed. 139. The term process is not used in the patent statutes, but it has been uniformly held that there may be a patent for a process; Tilghman v. Proctor, 102 U. S. 727, 26 L. Ed. 279. A process may be new though the apparatus is old; New Process Fermentation Co. v. Maus, 122 U. S. 413, 7 Sup. Ct. 1304, 30 L. Ed. 1193; Carnegie Steel Co. v. Iron Co., 185 U. S. 403, 22 Sup. Ct. 698, 46 L. Ed. 968; Lawther v. Hamilton, 21 Fed. 811. The process by which an article is produced and the product are two different inventions; Tucker v. Dana, 7 Fed. 213. The new combination of old processes constitutes a new process; Wallace v. Noyes, 13 Fed. 172; 7 E. & B. 725.

Letters patent for a process irrespective of the particular mode or form of apparatus for carrying it into effect are granted under the laws of the United States. Whoever discovers that a certain useful result will be produced in any art, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter, by the use of certain means, is entitled to a patent for it, provided he specifies the means he uses in a manner so full and exact that any one skilled in the science to which it appertains can, by using the means he specifies, produce precisely the result he discovers; Tilghman v. Proctor, 102 U. S. 727, 26 L. Ed. 279.

Processes of manufacture which involve chemical or other similarly elemental action are patentable, though mechanism may be necessary in carrying out the process, while those which consist solely in the operation of a machine are not, and where such mechanism is subsidiary to the chemical action, the fact that the patentee may be entitled to a patent upon the mechanism, does not impair his right to the patent for the process. But patentability of processes is not confined to those involving chemical or other similar elemental action; Expanded Metal Co. v. Bradford, 214 U. S. 366, 29 Sup. Ct. 652, 53 L. Ed. 1034. A valid patent cannot be obtained for a process which involves nothing more than the operation of a piece of mechanism, that is to say, for the function of a machine; Risdon I. & L. Works v. Medart, 158 U. S. 68, 15 Sup. Ct. 745, 39 L. Ed. 899; Carnegie Steel Co. v. Iron Co., 185 U. S. 403, 22 Sup. Ct. 698, 46 L. Ed. 968; U. S. Consol. Seeded Raisin Co. v. Fruit Co., 195 Fed. 264, 115 C. C. A. 234.

Where a patent clearly shows and describes the functions of a certain process, no other person can afterwards patent that process; New Process Fermentation Co. v. Koch, 21 Fed. 580. Where the process is described with the method of operation of a machine, the machine alone is patentable; Excelsior Needle Co. v. Needle Co., 32 Fed. 221; the product, unless itself new, is not patentable; id.

A machine is any contrivance composed of co-operating elements which act under the law imposed upon them to regulate or modify the relations between force, motion, and weight.

"The term machine includes every mechanical device or combination of mechanical powers and devices to perform some function and produce a certain effect or result;" Corning v. Burden, 15 How. (U. S.) 267, 14 L. Ed. 683; but when the effect is produced by chemical action, or by the application of some element or power of nature, or of one substance to another, such methods or operations are called processes; Piper v. Brown, 4 Fish. Pat. Cas. 175, Fed. Cas. No. 11,180.

A machine is an instrument composed of one or more of the mechanical powers, and capable, when set in motion, of producing by its own operation, certain predetermined physical effects. Rob. Pat. § 173. A machine differs from an art in that the act or series of acts which constitute the art become, in the machine, inseparably connected with a specific physical feature. The art is the primary conception, the machine the secondary. A machine differs from all other mechanical instruments in that its rule of action resides within itself. The structural law of a machine is its one enduring and essential characteristic. Rob. Pat. § 175; Parker v. Hulme, 1 Fish. 44, Fed. Cas. No. 10,740.

Mechanical movements, which are sometimes called the simple machines, are six in number: the lever, the pulley, the wheel and axle, the wedge, the screw, and the inclined plane. These are sometimes known as the mechanical powers, though neither these nor any other machinery can ever constitute or create power; they can only control, direct, and render it useful.

Machines, as generally seen and understood, are compounded of these simple machines in some of their shapes and modification. Such a combination as, when in operation, will produce some specific result, is regarded as an entire machine. It is so treated in the patent law; for although a new machine, or a new improvement of a machine, is an invention, and although only one invention can be included in a single patent, still several different contrivances, each of which is in one sense a machine, may all be separately claimed in a single patent, provided they all contribute to improve or to constitute one machine, and are intended to produce a single result; and a new combination of machines is patentable whether the machines themselves be new or old; Wyeth v. Stone, 1 Sto. 273, 568, Fed. Cas. No. 18,107; Evans v. Eaton, 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 454, 4 L. Ed. 433.

While a combination is a union of elements which may be partly new, or wholly old or wholly new, the combination is a means distinct from its constituent elements, any of which, if new and patentable, may be covered by separate claims in the same patent as the combination. A combination which produces by the co-operation of its constituents the result specified in the manner specified is a true mechanical device and a valid combination; Leeds & C. Co. v. Mach. Co., 213 U. S. 301, 29 Sup. Ct. 495, 53 L. Ed. 805.

Inventions pertaining to machines may be divided into four classes: 1. Where the invention embraces the entire machine; 2. Where it embraces one or more of the elements of the machine only, as the coulter of a plough; 3. Where the invention embraces both a new element and a new combination of old elements; 4. Where all the elements of the machine are old and the invention consists in a new combination. Almost all of the modern machines are of the fourth class; Union Sugar Refinery v. Matthiessen, 3 Cliff. 639, Fed. Cas. No. 14,399.

A manufacture is an instrument created by the exercise of mechanical forces and designed for the production of mechanical effects, but not capable, when set in motion, of attaining, by its own operation, to any predetermined results. It receives its rule of action from the external source which furnishes its motive power. A manufacture requires the constant guidance and control of some separate intelligent agent; a machine operates under the direction of that intelligence with which it was endowed by its inventor when he imposed on it its structural law. The parts of a machine, considered separately from the machine itself, all kinds of tools and fabrics, and every other vendible substance, which is neither a complete machine nor produced by the mere union of ingredients, is included under the title "manufacture"; Rob. Pat. § 182. An article of ornament may be a manufacture; Simpson v. Davis, 20 Blatch. 413, 12 Fed. 144; and a bond and coupon register in the form of a book; Munson v. New York, 3 Fed. 338; and a wooden pavement; 2 Webst. 126.

A manufacture, if new in itself, may be patentable whether the process or apparatus by which it is produced be new or not; Draper v. Hudson, Holmes 208, Fed. Cas. No. 4,069. A manufacture may be an invention distinct from the mode of producing it; United Nickel Co. v. Pendleton, 21 Blatch. 226, 15 Fed. 739. Making an old article by a new process or apparatus is not making a new manufacture; McKloskey v. Du Bois, 8 Fed. 710; a new process producing a new manufacture may involve two separate inventive acts; Tucker v. Dana, 7 Fed. 213. A new form of an old article may be a new manufacture; 25 O. G. 601; but to perceive a hitherto unknown quality in an existing substance is not the invention of a new substance; Ansonia B. & C. Co. v. Supply Co., 32 Fed. 81. Although a new process for producing an article is patentable, the product itself cannot be patented, if it is old; Cochrane v. Badische Anilin & Soda Fabrik, 111 U. S. 293, 4 Sup. Ct. 455, 28 L. Ed. 433.

A composition of matter is a substance composed of two or more different substances, without regard to form. A design is an ornamental object as specified in R. S. § 4929.

Invention, what constitutes. The general rule is that, wherever invention has been exercised, there will be found the subject-matter of a patent; Poppenhusen v. Falke, 5 Blatch. 46, Fed. Cas. No. 11,280.

The constitution provides for the grant to inventors of the exclusive right to the respective "discoveries," while R. S. § 4884, uses "inventions and discoveries."

Although the word "discovery" is used as entitling the discoverer to a patent, still, every discovery is not a patentable invention. The discoverer of a mere philosophical principle, or abstract theory, or elementary truth of science, cannot obtain a patent for the same, unless he applies it to some directly useful purpose. The patent can only be for such a principle, theory, or truth reduced to practice and embodied in a particular structure or combination of parts; Clark Thread Co. v. Linen Co., 140 U. S. 481, 11 Sup. Ct. 846, 35 L. Ed. 521; nor can there be a patent for a function or for an effect only, but for an effect produced in a given manner or by given means; Piper v. Brown, 1 Holmes 20, Fed. Cas. No. 11,180; Tilghman v. Werk, 2 Fish. 229, Fed. Cas. No. 14,046; or by a particular operation; Stone v. Sprague, 1 Sto. 270, Fed. Cas. No. 13,487; O'Reilly v. Morse, 15 How. (U. S.) 62, 14 L. Ed. 601; but a patent covers the means employed to effect results; Miller v. Mfg. Co., 151 U. S. 186, 14 Sup. Ct. 310, 38 L. Ed. 121.

A function is that "which a machine is designed to do, as distinguished from the machine itself and from the product of its action or something external to itself;" Denning Wire & Fence Co. v. Steel Co., 169 Fed. 793, 95 C. C. A. 259. In Westinghouse v. Power Brake Co., 170 U. S. 537, 18 Sup. Ct. 707, 42 L. Ed. 1136, it was said that the term "function" may not be readily defined, and that it was not advisable that it should be attempted.

While the end or purpose sought to be accomplished by the device is not the subject of a patent, the device or mechanical means by which the desired result is to be secured, is; Knapp v. Morss, 150 U. S. 221, 14 Sup. Ct. 81, 37 L. Ed. 1059. An idea is not patentable; a patent is valid only for the practical application of an idea; Sickels v. Borden, 3 Blatch. 535, Fed. Cas. No. 12,832; Rubber-Tip-Pencil Co. v. Howard, 20 Wall. 498, 22 L. Ed. 410. A principle denotes the physical force employed by an invention. It is some natural power or energy which operates with uniformity under given circumstances, and may thus be contemplated as obedient to law. It is a necessary factor in every means which produce physical effects, whether such means be natural or artificial; Rob. Pat. § 135.

To be entitled to a patent, a person must have invented and discovered some new and useful art, machine, manufacture, or composition of matter, or some new and useful improvement thereof; and it is not enough that a thing is new, in the sense that in the shape or form in which it is produced, it has not been known, and that it is useful, but it must amount to an invention or discovery; Burt v. Ivory, 133 U. S. 349, 10 Sup. Ct. 394, 33 L. Ed. 647.

An invention, to be patentable, must not only be new, but must also be useful. But by this it is not meant that it must be more useful than anything of the kind previously known, but that it is capable of use for a beneficial purpose. The word "useful" is also to be understood in contradistinction to "pernicious," or "frivolous." A contrivance directly and mainly calculated to aid the counterfeiter, the pickpocket, or the assassin, or which would in any way be directly calculated to be injurious to the morals, the health, or the good order of society, would not be patentable. Neither would a new contrivance which was of too trivial a character to be worthy of serious consideration; Langdon v. De Groot, 1 Paine 203, Fed. Cas. No. 8,059; Many v. Jagger, 1 Blatch. 372, Fed. Cas. No. 9,055; Parkhurst v. Kinsman, 1 Blatch. 488, Fed. Cas. No. 10,757.

The patent itself is prima facie evidence of utility; Waterbury Brass Co. v. Miller, 9 Blatch. 77, Fed. Cas. No. 17,254; Bell v. Daniels, 1 Bond 212, Fed. Cas. No. 1,247; and its use by the defendant and others is evidence of utility; Smith v. Elastic Fabrics Co., 1 Holmes 340, Fed. Cas. No. 13,050.

A mere application of an old device or process to the manufacture of an article is held to constitute only a "double use," and not to be patentable. There must be some new process or machinery used to produce the effect; Brown v. Piper, 91 U. S. 37, 23 L. Ed. 200; Roberts v. Ryer, 91 U. S. 150, 23 L. Ed. 267. See Howe Mach. Co. v. Needle Co., 134 U. S. 388, 10 Sup. Ct. 570, 33 L. Ed. 963; Grant v. Walter, 148 U. S. 547, 13 Sup. Ct. 699, 37 L. Ed. 552. A combination of old elements does not constitute a patentable invention, where they are all found, some in one and some in another of earlier devices for the same purpose, in which each element performs the same function that it has in the new combination; Busell Trimmer Co. v. Stevens, 137 U. S. 423, 11 Sup. Ct. 150, 34 L. Ed. 719; Knapp v. Morss, 150 U. S. 221, 14 Sup. Ct. 81, 37 L. Ed. 1059.

A mere carrying forward of the original thought, a change only in form, proportions, or degree, doing the same thing in the same way, by substantially the same means, with better results, is not such an invention as will sustain a patent; Belding Mfg. Co. v. Corn Planter Co., 152 U. S. 100, 14 Sup. Ct. 492, 38 L. Ed. 370; and something more is required to support one than a slight advance over what has preceded it, or mere superiority in workmanship or finish; International Tooth Crown Co. v. Gaylord, 140 U. S. 55, 11 Sup. Ct. 716, 35 L. Ed. 347.

Invention, in the nature of improvements, is the double mental act of discerning, in existing machines, processes or articles, some deficiency, and pointing out the means of overcoming it; General Electric Co. v. Electric Co., 174 Fed. 246, 98 C. C. A. 154.

Inventive skill has been defined as "that intuitive faculty of the mind put forth in the search for new results, or new methods, creating what had not before existed, or bringing to light what lay hidden from vision; it differs from a "suggestion of that common experience which arose spontaneously and by a necessity of human reasoning in the minds of those who had become acquainted with the circumstances with which they had to deal." Hollister v. Mfg. Co., 113 U. S. 72, 5 Sup. Ct. 717, 28 L. Ed. 901.

"Not every improvement is invention; but to entitle a thing to protection it must be the product of some exercise of the inventive faculties, and it must involve something more than what is obvious to persons skilled in the art to which it relates." Rosenwasser v. Berry, 22 Fed. 841.

"An invention, in the sense of the patent law, means the finding out—the contriving, the creating of something which did not exist, and was not known before, and which can be made useful and advantageous in the pursuits of life, or which can add to the enjoyment of mankind." Conover v. Roach, 4 Fish. 12, Fed. Cas. No. 3,125.

"It was never the object of those [patent] laws to grant a monopoly for every trifling device, every shadow of a shade of an idea, which would naturally and spontaneously occur to any skilled mechanic or operator in the ordinary progress of manufactures." Atlantic Works v. Brady, 107 U. S. 200, 2 Sup. Ct. 225, 27 L. Ed. 438.

"Originality is the test of invention. If that is successfully exercised, its product is protected; and it is immaterial whether it is displayed in a greater or less degree, or whether the new idea revealed itself to the inventor by a sudden flash of thought or dawned on his mind after groping his way through many and dubious experiments." Blake v. Stafford, 6 Blatch. 195, Fed. Cas. No. 1,504. Whenever a change or device is new, and accomplishes beneficial results, courts look with favor upon it. The law, in such cases, has no nice standard by which to gauge the degree of mental power or inventive genius brought into play in originating the new device. A lucky casual thought, involving a comparatively trifling change, often produces decided and useful results, and, though the result of a small amount of inventive skill, the law extends to it the same protection as if it were the product of a lifetime of profound thought and most ingenious experiment; Middletown Tool Co. v. Judd, 3 Fish. 141, Fed. Cas. No. 9,536. The patentee must be an inventor and he must have made a discovery. It is not enough that a thing shall be new and that it shall be useful, but it must amount to an invention or discovery; Thompson v. Boisselier, 114 U. S. 11, 5 Sup. Ct. 1042, 29 L. Ed. 76.

The unsuccessful effort of others in the same art, to accomplish the same result, indicates that the means by which the patentee has produced it are the result of inventive skill; Celluloid Mfg. Co. v. Zylonite Co., 28 Fed. 195; Dudgeon v. Watson, 29 Fed. 248. In The Barbed Wire Patent, 143 U. S. 275, 12 Sup. Ct. 443, 450, 36 L. Ed. 154, it appeared that the sales of the earlier article had been but tentative and slight, and those of the patented article enormous. In sustaining the patent in suit, Brown, J., said: "Under such circumstances courts have not been reluctant to sustain a patent to the man who has taken the final step which has turned a failure into a success. In the law of patents it is the last step that wins. . . . It may be laid down as a general rule, though perhaps not an invariable one, that if a new combination and arrangement of known elements produces a new and beneficial result, never attained before, it is evidence of invention."

The degree of invention is not prescribed by the statute; Hillborn v. Mfg. Co., 69 Fed. 958, 16 C. C. A. 569; nor is it material; Washburn & M. Mfg. Co. v. Haish, 4 Fed. 900; each case must stand on its own facts, but if the patented structure is at the head of the evolution in its particular art and is a marked improvement on what preceded it, the court should surely be predisposed in its favor; Bray v. Twine Co., 70 Fed. 1006. Courts give a liberal construction to the law, so as to protect every contrivance which can be called new, and which proves at all useful. The inventor, therefore, has the benefit of the doubt. But it is obvious that there is a limit beyond which mere changes cannot and ought not to receive this protection; Kirby v. Beardsley, 3 Fish. 265, Fed. Cas. No. 7,837.

Where the question of patentable novelty in a device was by no means free from doubt, the court, in view of the extensive use to which the patent had been put by manufacturers of wagons, resolved the doubt in favor of the patentee and sustained the patent; Topliff v. Topliff, 145 U. S. 156, 12 Sup. Ct. 825, 36 L. Ed. 658. While the utility of a contrivance, as shown by the general public demand for it when made known, is not conclusive evidence of novelty and invention, it is nevertheless highly persuasive in that direction, and in the absence of pretty conclusive evidence to the contrary, will generally exercise controlling influence; Hill v. Biddle, 27 Fed. 560; in doubtful cases only; Voigtmann v. Cornice Co., 148 Fed. 848, 78 C. C. A. 538; in case of doubt it will turn the scale; Krementz v. S. Cottle Co., 148 U. S. 556, 13 Sup. Ct. 719, 37 L. Ed. 558; it is better evidence of invention than the opinion of an expert or the intuition of a judge; Palmer v. Johnston, 34 Fed. 336; but not where public acceptance is the plain result of successful business methods in creating a market for the article. And not when the popularity is not due to any patentable feature. The fact that a patented device went into immediate use, and supplanted all others, cannot be attributed to artful advertising, in the case of an article such as an electric heater for railway cars, which is sold, not to the public, but to mechanics of skill in their art; Consolidated C. H. Co. v. Heating Corp., 82 Fed. 993. But extensive use has been said to be an unsafe criterion of patentability; McClain v. Ortmayer, 141 U. S. 419, 12 Sup. Ct. 76, 35 L. Ed. 800. When, in a class of machines widely used, it appears that at least, after repeated and futile attempts, a machine has been contrived which accomplishes the result desired, and when a patent has been granted to the successful inventor, the courts should not be ready to adopt a narrow or astute construction, fatal to the grant; Keystone Mfg. Co. v. Adams, 151 U. S. 139, 14 Sup. Ct. 295, 38 L. Ed. 103.

Simplicity in the device is itself a merit; 2 Webst. Pat. Cas. 113. Mere suggestions from others do not negative the existence of patentable invention, unless they cover the entire invention; Hubbell v. U. S., 5 Ct. of Cl. 1. The suggestion by others of a part of a device does not show the absence of inventive skill as to the whole; Worden v. Fisher, 11 Fed. 505. Where inventive skill was necessary in addition to suggestions of others, the inventor is entitled to a patent; Union Paper-Bag Mach. Co. v. Pultz & Walkley Co., 15 Blatchf. 160, Fed. Cas. No. 14,392; Alden v. Dewey, 1 Sto. 336, Fed. Cas. No. 153; O'Reilly v. Morse, 15 How. (U. S.) 62, 14 L. Ed. 601. To suggest that a certain result may be obtained, but without indicating how, is not an invention; Graham v. Gammon, 7 Biss. 490, Fed. Cas. No. 5,668. Mere experiment is not invention; Many v. Sizer, 1 Fish. 17, Fed. Cas. No. 9,050.

The simplicity of a device and its apparent obviousness after the event, ought not to detract from its meritoriousness. That it had never been suggested or thought of before, and effectually supplied the one thing necessary to bring success, when before there had been nothing but failure, is sufficient within the meaning of the patent law; McKay & C. L. Mach. Co. v. Dizer, 61 Fed. 102, 9 C. C. A. 382. "The apparent simplicity of a new device often leads an inexperienced person to think that it would have occurred to any one familiar with the subject; but the decisive answer is that with dozens and perhaps hundreds of others laboring in the same field, it had never occurred to any one before. The practised eye of an ordinary mechanic may be safely trusted to see what ought to be apparent to every one." Potts v. Creager, 155 U. S. 597, 15 Sup. Ct. 194, 39 L. Ed. 275.

A "double use" may involve invention if the second use is an art remote from the former use; otherwise, if the new use is such that it would occur to a person of ordinary mechanical skill; much depends upon the nature of the changes required to adapt the device to its new use; id.

Study, effort, and experiment are not alone enough to constitute inventive skill; Butler v. Steckel, 27 Fed. 219. Nor is the exercise of good judgment; Estey v. Burdett, 109 U. S. 633, 3 Sup. Ct. 531, 27 L. Ed. 1058. Nor the exercise of the reasoning process; Watson v. Ry. Co., 23 Fed. 443. Inventive skill requires thought, while mechanical skill does not; Butler v. Bainbridge, 24 Blatch. 163, 29 Fed. 142. Small discoveries may involve inventive skill; Hobbie v. Smith, 27 Fed. 656. If it exist in some degree, the courts will not measure it by an exacting standard; Valvona v. D'Adamo, 135 Fed. 544.

The exercise of mechanical skill must be considered as it existed at the date of the invention; Wilcox v. Bookwalter, 31 Fed. 224.

A mechanical equivalent exists where one device may be adopted instead of another by a person skilled in the art, from his knowledge of the art; Johnson v. Root, 1 Fish. 351, Fed. Cas. No. 7,411. Equivalents have been said to be "obvious and customary" interchanges; Smith v. Downing, 1 Fish. 64, Fed. Cas. No. 13,036. It is a question of fact depending on the opinion of experts and on an inspection of the machine; Foss v. Herbert, 2 Fish. 31, Fed. Cas. No. 4,957. It is a question of use, not of name; Graham v. Mason, 5 Fish. 1, Fed. Cas. No. 5,671. Equivalents may differ in shape; Graham v. Mfg. Co., 11 Fed. 148; a substitute in a combination does not cease to be an equivalent because, in addition, it does something more and better; Atlantic Giant Powder Co. v. Goodyear, 3 B. & Ard. 161, Fed. Cas. No. 623. Only those things can be considered equivalents for the elements of a manufacture which perform the same function in substantially the same way; Goodyear Dental Vulcanite Co. v. Davis, 102 U. S. 222, 26 L. Ed. 149.

The test of equivalency is whether the substituted element operates in substantially the same way to produce substantially the same result; Palmer v. Mach. Co., 186 Fed. 496. The doctrine of equivalency may be invoked for other than pioneer patents, the range depending upon and varying with the degree of invention; Continental Paper Bag Co. v. Paper Bag Co., 210 U. S. 405, 28 Sup. Ct. 748, 52 L. Ed. 1122. Where no inventive skill is shown in the substitute, it is an equivalent; Crouch v. Roemer, 103 U. S. 797, 26 L. Ed. 426.

Successive patents. "No patent can issue for an invention actually covered by a former patent, especially to the same patentee, although the terms of the claims may differ. The second patent, in such case, although containing a claim broader and more generic in its character than the specific claims contained in the prior patent, is also void. But where the second patent covers matters described in the prior patent, essentially distinct and separable, and distinct from the invention covered thereby, and claims made thereunder, its validity may be sustained." Miller v. Mfg. Co., 151 U. S. 186, 14 Sup. Ct. 310, 38 L. Ed. 121.

An improvement is an addition to or alteration in some existing means, which increases its efficiency without destroying its identity. It includes two necessary ideas: the idea of a complete and practical operative art or instrument and the idea of some change in such art or instrument not affecting its essential character but enabling it to produce its appropriate results in a more perfect or economical manner; Rob. Pat. § 210.

No patent can be granted for the mere importation of an invention brought from abroad; although it is otherwise in England. The constitution, as we have seen, only authorizes congress to grant these exclusive privileges to the inventors themselves. The mere fact of an inventor having obtained a patent for a device in a foreign country did not under the act of March 3, 1897, prevent his obtaining a patent for the same thing here, provided he applies for a patent here within seven months from the date of the foreign patent.

By the act of March 3, 1903, the period has been extended to one year (and to four months on design patents). When the foreign patent issues before the United States patent issues, the latter expires at the same time as the former, or, if there be more than one, with the former patent having the shortest term; but in no case will the term exceed seventeen years; Bate Refrigerating Co. v. Sulzberger, 157 U. S. 1, 15 Sup. Ct. 508, 39 L. Ed. 601.

By the act of July 8, 1870, an inventor might lodge a caveat in the patent office by virtue of which he was to a certain extent protected while perfecting his invention. The practice was abolished by the act of June 25, 1910, it having been found ineffective.

Of the application for a patent. When the invention is conceived or complete, and the inventor desires to apply for a patent, he causes a specification to be prepared, setting forth in clear and intelligible terms the exact nature of his invention, describing its different parts and the principle and mode in which they operate, and stating precisely what he claims as new, in contradistinction from those parts and combinations which were previously in use. This is accompanied by a petition to the commissioner of patents, stating the general nature of his invention and the object of his application. One copy of drawings should be attached to the specification, where the nature of the case admits of drawings; and, where the invention is for a composition of matter, specimens of the ingredients and of the composition of matter should be furnished.

If the inventor is shown to be the original and first inventor, a mere prior invention of the same thing in a foreign country, if not patented or described in some printed publication, will not affect his right to a patent here.

If the applicant has, either actually or constructively, abandoned his invention to the public, he can never afterwards recall it and resume his right of ownership.

Abandonment may be by conduct from which an intention to abandon will be inferred, or by public use or sale. In the former class, it may be before the application; by the application; or after application. Abandonment before application may be shown by any conduct from which can be inferred an intention to give the invention to the public; as, by throwing it aside and not using it; disclaiming any right in it, or giving it expressly to the public; and by public use of the device for even less than two years, taken in connection with circumstances tending to show that the inventor did not intend to secure a monopoly; Rob. Pat. § 349. It is a question of intention; McCormick v. Seymour, 2 Blatch. 240, Fed. Cas. No. 8,726; and of fact; Russell & Erwin Mfg. Co. v. Mallory, 10 Blatch. 140, Fed. Cas. No. 12,166.

An applicant, either by express words in his specification, or by a failure to claim all of his invention or by unreasonable delay in applying for a revision, may abandon the whole or a part of his invention; and after application he can abandon his invention by withdrawing his application.

Public use or sale of the invention for more than two years before the application works an abandonment; Andrews v. Hovey, 123 U. S. 267, 8 Sup. Ct. 101, 31 L. Ed. 160; this is a conclusive presumption; Sisson v. Gilbert, 9 Blatch. 185, Fed. Cas. No. 12,912; and a single use is enough; Egbert v. Lippmann, 104 U. S. 333, 26 L. Ed. 755. But this rule does not apply to a strictly experimental use; Innis v. Boiler Works, 22 Fed. 780; no matter how long it had continued; Elizabeth v. Pav. Co., 97 U. S. 126, 24 L. Ed. 1000. A mere temporary use by a few persons as an act of kindness, for a limited period, or a use where the party using it is bound to secrecy, or is actually under the control of the inventor, or a use by the inventor in private is not within the rule; Wyeth v. Stone, 1 Sto. 273, Fed. Cas. No. 18,107. Such public use, with or without the consent of the subsequent patentee, renders the patent invalid; Andrews v. Hovey, 123 U. S. 267, 8 Sup. Ct. 101, 31 L. Ed. 160.

The sale which works an abandonment in this connection must be a sale in the usual course of business; Henry v. Soap-Stone Co., 2 Fed. 78; and of the completed invention; id.; and merely placing the device on sale is not sufficient; Plimpton v. Winslow, 14 Fed.

919. A sale on trial, to test the invention, is not an abandonment, even though warranted; Graham v. McCormick, 11 Fed. 859.

Use by the inventor for the purpose of testing the machine, in order to devise means for perfecting its operation, is admissible where, as incident to such use, the product of its operation is disposed of by sale; such use does not change its character; but where the use is mainly for the purposes of trade and profit and the experiment is merely incidental to that, the principle, and not the incident, must give character to the use; Smith & G. Mfg. Co. v. Sprague, 123 U. S. 249, 8 Sup. Ct. 122, 31 L. Ed. 141.

Where an invention was complete and capable of producing the result sought to be accomplished, and the construction and mode of operation and use of the mechanism were necessarily known to the workmen who put it into safes, which were the articles in question, where it was hidden from view after the safes were completed and no attempt was made to expose the mechanism and thus prove whether or not it was efficient, it was held that it was not an experimental use; Hall v. Macneale, 107 U. S. 90, 2 Sup. Ct. 73, 27 L. Ed. 367. If an inventor, after having made his device, gives or sells it to another to be used by the donee or vendee without limitation or restriction or injunction of secrecy, and it is so used, such use is public even though confined to one person; Egbert v. Lippmann, 104 U. S. 333, 26 L. Ed. 755. Where the inventor of a connecting tie for rails used the device in constructing a cable road and reserved no future control over it, and had no expectation of making any material changes in it, and never examined it to see whether it was defective or could be improved, it was held that it was a public use so as to defeat the patent; Root v. R. Co., 146 U. S. 210, 13 Sup. Ct. 100, 36 L. Ed. 946. But where the inventor of a wooden pavement himself constructed an experimental pavement which was used for six years before the patent was applied for, and it appeared that he built it at his own expense and went to see the effect of traffic upon it and its durability, and examined it almost daily, it was held that this was an experimental use; Elizabeth v. Pavement Co., 97 U. S. 126, 24 L. Ed. 1000. Where the invention is a machine, such as a grist mill, its experimental use does not cease to be so because its products have been sold. But if the inventor allows his machine to be used by other persons generally, with or without compensation, or if it is by his consent put on sale for such use, then it will be in public use and on public sale, within the act; Root v. R. Co., 146 U. S. 223, 13 Sup. Ct. 100, 36 L. Ed. 946. Where there is no evidence of use or sale of the invention, which was a method of driven wells, by the applicant before his application, or by others with his consent, except putting down a single well, it was held that the use was merely experimental; Beedle v. Bennet, 122 U. S. 71, 7 Sup. Ct. 1090, 30 L. Ed. 1074.

The use of a telephone transmitter to test its efficiency is not a public use; International Tel. Mfg. Co. v. Supply Co., 171 Fed. 651, 96 C. C. A. 395; nor is the use of a computing machine in the census bureau for a week; Universal Adding Mach. Co. v. Comptograph Co., 146 Fed. 981, 77 C. C. A. 227; nor the use of a machine while being perfected, in a room from which the public and all others not engaged in its operation were excluded, improvements being made from time to time; Penn Electrical & Mfg. Co. v. Conroy, 159 Fed. 943, 87 C. C. A. 149; nor the building of a machine for a customer for experimental use by a purchaser, to be paid for if successful, and which was abandoned; Huntington Dry-Pulverizer Co. v. Mill Co., 109 Fed. 269. But the commercial use of a machine for more than four years, though its operation was unsatisfactory to the inventor, leading to frequent experiments and the addition of an element of value, is a public use; Risley v. Utica, 179 Fed. 876; and so where the discoverer of a new form of calcium carbide made a considerable quantity to demonstrate its commercial use and sent a quantity abroad without enjoining secrecy; Union Carbide Co. v. Carbide Co., 181 Fed. 104, 104 C. C. A. 522; and so of the construction and sale of a turbine wheel and its use to drive machinery, although one object was to have a practical test made; Swain v. Mach. Co., 102 Fed. 910; and of the exhibition of the subject of a design patent; Young v. Mfg. Co., 130 Fed. 150, 64 C. C. A. 502; and a single unrestricted sale of a machine; Swain v. Mach. Co., 111 Fed. 408, 49 C. C. A. 419; and the manufacture and sale, with delivery, of a machine, on order; National Cash Register Co. v. Cash Register Co., 178 Fed. 79, 101 C. C. A. 569; but not of a machine put out for trial "on sale or return," unless the trial period expired, or there was actual acceptance; W. B. Mershon & Co. v. Lumber Co., 189 Fed. 741.

The abandonment extends only to the exact invention publicly used or sold; Henry v. Soap-Stone Co., 2 Fed. 78.

Where, for eight years after rejection of an application, the applicant, without excuse, omits to reinstate it, meantime other patents issuing, he is taken to have abandoned his invention; U. S. Rifle & Cartridge Co. v. Arms Co., 118 U. S. 22, 6 Sup. Ct. 950, 30 L. Ed. 53; but a delay of 13 years in the patent office was held, under the circumstances, not to invalidate a patent; U. S. v. Telephone Co., 167 U. S. 225, 17 Sup. Ct. 809, 42 L. Ed. 144.

By act of March 3, 1897, it is provided that the failure to apply for a patent in this country for more than seven months (by act of March 3, 1903, changed to twelve months) after the inventor's application in a foreign country, bars the patent. And, by the same act, a failure to complete an application and prepare it for examination within one year after its filing, and a failure to prosecute the same within one year after action in the office, of which notice shall have been given, works an abandonment, unless the commissioner be satisfied that the delay was unavoidable.

If the application or any claim is rejected, the specification or the claim may be amended and a second examination requested. If again rejected, an appeal may be taken to the examiners-in-chief. If rejected by them, an appeal lies to the commissioner; and if rejected by him, an appeal may be taken to the court of appeals of the District of Columbia, upon notice to the commissioner, and filing the reasons of appeal in writing. Whenever a patent is refused, either by the commissioner or the supreme court, the applicant has a remedy by a bill in equity, and if the court so adjudge, he shall receive a patent.

All the proceedings before the patent office connected with the application for a patent are ex parte, and are kept secret, except in cases of conflicting claims, which will be referred to below.

Of the date of the patent. The patent usually takes date on the day it issues; and the final fee of twenty dollars must be paid not later than six months from the date of allowance.

The date of the application and not the date of the patent, controls in determining the legal effect to be given to two patents issued at different dates to the same inventor, and the order in which they are to be considered; The Barbed Wire Patent, 143 U. S. 275, 12 Sup. Ct. 443, 450, 36 L. Ed. 154. Where two patents issue on the same day, the earlier numbered patent will be senior, there being no other evidence of seniority; Crown Cork & Seal Co. v. Stopper Co., 136 Fed. 841, 69 C. C. A. 200.

Of two patents to the same person the one first numbered takes precedence, except where the patentee had an application pending for the second when the first was issued, and especially when the two are the result of splitting an application, in which latter case they are to be treated as a single patent; Benjamin Electric Mfg. Co. v. Dall Co., 158 Fed. 617, 85 C. C. A. 439.

The conception of an invention consists in the complete performance of the mental part of the inventive act. While this in theory necessarily precedes the physical reduction to practice, it in fact also embraces whatever of thought and skill the inventor may have exercised in bringing the invention to that point where reduction to practice can begin; Rob. Pat. § 376; and the date of the conception is the date when the idea of means, including all the essential attributes of the invention, becomes so clearly defined in the mind of the inventor as to be capable of exterior expression; Rob. Pat. § 80. The true date of invention is at the point where the work of the inventor ceases and the work of the mechanic begins; 18 O. G. 520.

The one who first conceives the invention, and is diligent to reduce it to practice is entitled to a patent in preference to one who conceives it subsequently, although the latter may have been the first to render the invention available for public use; Rob. Pat. § 383.

Of interferences. When an application is filed which interferes with another pending application or with an unexpired patent, an investigation is ordered for the purpose of determining who was the prior inventor, and a patent is directed to be issued or not accordingly. When the controversy is between two applications a patent will be finally granted to him who is shown to be the first inventor, and will be denied to the other applicant so far as the point thus controverted is concerned. But if the interference is between an application and an actual patent, as there is no power in the patent office to cancel the existing patent, all that can be done is to grant or withhold from the applicant the patent he asks. If the patent is granted to him there will be two patents for the same thing. The two parties will stand upon a footing of equality, and must settle their rights by a resort to the courts.

The parties to an interference are required to put their claims into proper shape, each, when proper, making the claims of the other, and the question of the patentability of the device for which the application is filed is then determined by the examiner. The issues are then defined by the examiner and the parties notified. Each party is then required to file a concise written statement under oath of the date of the conception of his invention, its reduction to practice, etc. If a party to an interference fail to file such a statement, he cannot show an earlier date for his invention than the date of his application. The averments of fact in the preliminary statement are conclusive upon the party who files it. If, in an interference between two applications, the date fixed in the preliminary statement is not earlier than the date of filing the previous application, the priority is awarded to the earliest application. Testimony is taken in contested cases and the question of priority passed upon. An appeal lies to the examiners-in-chief and from them to the commissioner. Priority of inventive act consists in the prior conception of the idea of means and the prior embodiment of this idea in some practically operative art or instrument, or reasonable diligence in perfecting such embodiment, and must be established by a clear preponderance of evidence; Rob. Pat. § 600. Conception of the invention may be shown by verbal descriptions, sketches, models, etc., but these have little weight in proving a reduction to practice. The testimony cannot carry the date of conception back of the statement filed. An applicant can terminate interference proceedings by disclaiming the matter in contest, whereupon judgment goes against him on the interference. A judgment in an interference has been held to be binding only on the parties to the record, and only in respect of further proceedings on the same question in the patent office, and not on the courts on the question of novelty or priority; King v. Werner, 1 Bann. & A. 394, Fed. Cas. No. 7,809; though the courts will consider it on a motion for a preliminary injunction against the defeated party; Celluloid Mfg. Co. v. Collar & Cuff Co., 24 Fed. 275; but the supreme court has held that where the question decided in the patent office is one between contesting parties as to priority of invention, the decision there must be accepted as controlling upon that question of fact in any subsequent suit between the same parties, unless the contrary is established by testimony, which in character and amount carries thorough conviction; Morgan v. Daniels, 153 U. S. 125, 14 Sup. Ct. 772, 38 L. Ed. 657. The opinion of the patent office on claims or earlier patents do not affect the applicant, except so far as they lead him to abandon or modify some of his claims; Palmer Pneumatic Tire Co. v. Lozier, 84 Fed. 659.

The question of interference is determined by the claims and not by the general appearance and functions of the machine shown, but not claimed; Dederick v. Fox, 56 Fed. 714. A decision in an interference determines only the question of priority of invention between the parties, and the loser may still contend that there is no interference in fact; or that the successful party is not entitled to the claims made; Westinghouse v. Hien, 159 Fed. 936, 87 C. C. A. 142, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 948.

An appeal lies from the Commissioner of Patents in an interference case to the court of appeals of the District of Columbia; Act of Feb. 9, 1893.

Whenever there are interfering patents, any person interested in any one of such patents may have relief against the interfering patent by suit in equity against its owners; the court may thereupon adjudge either patent void in whole or in part, etc., but such judgment shall affect none but parties to the suit and those deriving title under them subsequently to the judgment.

Of the specification. The specification is required to describe the invention in such full, clear, concise, and exact terms as to enable any person skilled in the art or science to which it relates, to make, construct, or use it. In the trial of an action for infringement, it is a question of fact for the jury whether this requirement has been complied with. See Carver v. Mfg. Co., 2 Sto. 432, Fed. Cas. No. 2,485; Davoll v. Brown, 1 W. & M. 53, Fed. Cas. No. 3,662. At the same time, the interpretation of the specification, and the ascertainment of the subject-matter of the invention from the language of the specification and claims and from the drawings are a matter of law exclusively for the court; Wood v. Underhill, 5 How. (U. S.) 1, 12 L. Ed. 23; Serrell v. Collins, 4 Blatch. 61, Fed. Cas. No. 12,671. The specification will be liberally construed by the court, in order to sustain the invention; Stone v. Sprague, 1 Sto. 270, Fed. Cas. No. 13,487; Winaus v. Denmead, 15 How. (U. S.) 341, 14 L. Ed. 717; Turrill v. R. Co., 1 Wall. (U. S.) 491, 17 L. Ed. 668; but it must, nevertheless, identify with reasonable clearness and accuracy the invention claimed, and describe the manner of its construction and use so that the public from the specification alone may be enabled to practise it; and if the court cannot satisfactorily ascertain the meaning of the patent from its face, it will be void for ambiguity; Emerson v. Hogg, 2 Blatch. 1, Fed. Cas. No. 4,440; Barrett v. Hall, 1 Mas. 447, Fed. Cas. No. 1,047. It will be construed in view of the state of the art; Lawther v. Hamilton, 124 U. S. 1, 8 Sup. Ct. 342, 31 L. Ed. 325; Burt v. Evory, 133 U. S. 349, 10 Sup. Ct. 394, 33 L. Ed. 647. A specification in letters patent is sufficiently clear and descriptive, when expressed in terms intelligible to a person skilled in the art to which it relates; Seabury v. Am Ende, 152 U. S. 561, 14 Sup. Ct. 683, 38 L. Ed. 553.

It is required to distinguish between what is new and what is old, and not mix them together without disclosing distinctly that for which the patent is granted; Wyeth v. Stone, 1 Sto. 273, Fed. Cas. No. 18,107. If the invention consists of an improvement, the patent should be confined thereto, and should clearly distinguish the improvement from the prior device, so as to show that the former only is claimed; Barrett v. Hall, 1 Mas. 447, Fed. Cas. No. 1,047; Brooks v. Bicknell, 3 McLean, 250, Fed. Cas. No. 1,944. Ambiguous terms should be avoided; nothing material to the use of the invention should be omitted; and the necessity of trials and experiments should not be thrown upon the public.

Of the claim. The claim is the statutory requirement prescribed for the purpose of making a patentee define what the invention is. It is to be read in the light of the description contained in the specification, and its literal terms may be enlarged or narrowed accordingly, but not to an extent inconsistent with their meaning; Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. R. Co., 71 Fed. 396, 18 C. C. A. 145, 38 U. S. App. 55. If an invention is not covered by the claim, it will not be protected by the patent; Grant v. Walter, 148 U. S. 547, 13 Sup. Ct. 699, 37 L. Ed. 552. A mere reference in a claim to a letter on the drawing does not in itself limit the claim to the precise geometrical shape shown in the drawing; Delemater v. Heath, 58 Fed. 414, 7 C. C. A. 279, 20 U. S. App. 14.

The claim is the measure of a patentee's right to relief; and while the specification may be referred to, to limit the claim, it can never be made available to expand it; McClain v. Ortmyer, 141 U. S. 419, 12 Sup. Ct. 76, 35 L. Ed. 800.

Separate claims in the same patent are independent inventions, and the infringement of one is not the infringement of the others; Leeds & Catlin Co. v. Talking Mach. Co., 213 U. S. 301, 29 Sup. Ct. 495, 53 L. Ed. 805.

A patent may embrace more than one invention; U. S. v. Allen, 192 U. S. 543, 24 Sup. Ct. 416, 48 L. Ed. 555; and it may embrace a process and the apparatus by which it is performed; Leeds & Catlin Co. v. Talking Mach. Co., 213 U. S. 301, 29 Sup. Ct. 495, 53 L. Ed. 805.

The inventor need not describe all the functions to be performed by his machine if they are evident in its practical operation; McCormick Harvesting Mach. Co. v. Aultman & Co., 69 Fed. 371, 16 C. C. A. 259, 37 U. S. App. 299.

The terms of the claims are carefully scrutinized in the patent office. It defines and determines what the applicant is entitled to. The scope of the patent should be limited to the invention covered by the claim; although the claim may be illustrated, it cannot be enlarged by the language used in other parts of the specification; Lehigh Valley R. Co. v. Mellon, 104 U. S. 112, 26 L. Ed. 639. The whole patent, including specifications and drawings, is to be taken into consideration, though the court looks to them only for the purpose of placing a proper construction upon the claims; Rich v. Lippincott, 2 Fish. 10, Fed. Cas. No. 11,758. The scope of the patent is given by the claims; Yale Lock Mfg. Co. v. Greenleaf, 117 U. S. 555, 6 Sup. Ct. 846, 29 L. Ed. 952; though it be less than the real invention; Waterbury Brass Co. v. Miller, 9 Blatch. 77, Fed. Cas. No. 17,254; parts which may be indispensable to the invention are not covered by the patent unless mentioned in the claims; McMillan v. Rees, 1 Fed. 722; and where a feature is inserted in the claims which is not essential, its materiality cannot be afterwards denied; Le Fever v. Remington, 13 Fed. 86. The patentee, in a suit brought on his patent, is bound by his claims; Keystone Bridge Co. v. Iron Co., 95 U. S. 274, 24 L. Ed. 344; the court will not enlarge the claims by the specification; Yale Lock Mfg. Co. v. Greenleaf, 117 U. S. 554, 6 Sup. Ct. 846, 29 L.

Ed. 952. Words in a claim such as "substantially as described" refer back to the descriptive parts of the specification and are implied in a claim whether inserted or not; Mitchell v. Tilghman, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 287, 22 L. Ed. 125; they relate only to the material features of the invention; Waterbury Brass Co. v. Miller, 9 Blatch. 77, Fed. Cas. No. 17,254. "Substantially as set forth" are technical words and are equivalent to saying "by the means described in the text of the inventor's application for letters patent as illustrated by the drawings, diagrams, and model which accompany the application;" Boyden A. B. Co. v. Brake Co., 70 Fed. 816, 17 C. C. A. 430, 25 U. S. App. 475.

A patentee cannot hold under his patent anything excluded therefrom by him or with his acquiescence during the stages of his application therefor; Hillborn v. Mfg. Co., 69 Fed. 958, 16 C. C. A. 569, 28 U. S. App. 525.

Where one originates a generic invention and also several specific inventions and presents the same for patent contemporaneously, he cannot enlarge each invention by use of general terms so as to obtain overlapping patents, Electrical Accumulator Co. v. Electric Co., 52 Fed. 130, 2 C. C. A. 682, 1 U. S. App. 320. An inventor is required to explain the principle of his machine and the best mode of applying the principle, so as to distinguish it from other inventions; but he is not necessarily limited to the one mode shown. A pioneer inventor is entitled to a generic claim, which will include every species within the genus, and may also insert in the same application specific claims for one or more of the species; Von Schmidt v. Bowers, 80 Fed. 121, 25 C. C. A. 323.

A claim must be interpreted with reference to the rejected claims and to the prior state of the art, and cannot be so construed as to cover either what was rejected by the patent office or disclosed by prior devices; Knapp v. Morss, 150 U. S. 221, 14 Sup. Ct. 81, 37 L. Ed. 1059.

In the interpretation of a patent, the usual canons of interpretation apply; National Hollow B. B. Co. v. Brake-Beam Co., 106 Fed. 693, 45 C. C. A. 544; Century Elec. Co. v. Mfg. Co., 191 Fed. 350, 112 C. C. A. 8; the claims will be fairly construed in the light of the specifications and drawings, and so as to save the patent, if meritorious; Mossberg v. Nutter, 135 Fed. 95; Denning W. & F. Co. v. Wire Co., 169 Fed. 793, 95 C. C. A. 259; or if it has won a position of unchallenged supremacy in the commercial world; Consol. Rubber T. Co. v. Rubber Co., 151 Fed. 237, 80 C. C. A. 589; but if the invention has never been put in use the construction may be narrow; National M. C. Co. v. Coupler Co., 171 Fed. 847, 96 C. C. A. 515; if two constructions are admissible, that one will be adopted which will give the inventor the protection to which he is entitled; Malignani v. Lamp Co., 180 Fed. 442. Recourse may be had to the patent office proceedings; rejected features cannot be reasserted, nor a broad construction insisted upon, when a narrow one was adopted in the office to meet objections of the examiner; Eck v. Kutz, 132 Fed. 758. Construction cannot be aided by parol testimony; Wolff T. F. Co. v. Steel Foundries, 195 Fed. 940, 115 C. C. A. 628; but technical terms may be explained by experts; Fried, Krupp Atkien-Gesellschaft v. Steel Co., 191 Fed. 588, 112 C. C. A. 194.

The specifications must be interpreted with the claims, not to contract or expand them, but to ascertain the intent; Century Electric Co. v. Mfg. Co., 191 Fed. 350, 112 C. C. A. 8. Reference may be had to the rejected claims; Williams Patent C. & P. Co. v. Crusher Co., 185 Fed. 805, 108 C. C. A. 37; and to the drawings; Steiner & Voegtly H. Co. v. Sash Co., 178 Fed. 831; and construction must be with reference to the state of the prior art; Williams Patent C. & P. Co. v. Crusher Co., 185 Fed. 805, 108 C. C. A. 37; definitions and admissions made in the office to avoid the state of the art are binding on the patentee; New York Asbestos Mfg. Co. v. Air-Cell Covering Co., 103 Fed. 316, affirmed in 112 Fed. 1022, 50 C. C. A. 669.

A claim for a function is bad; Matthews v. Shoneberger, 4 Fed. 635; though it will, if possible, be construed as a claim for means of performing the function; Royer v. Belting Co., 28 Fed. 850; thus a claim for doing an act is treated as a claim for the means of doing it; Fuller v. Yentzer, 94 U. S. 288, 24 L. Ed. 103.

While the law does not limit the number of claims, their multiplication is disapproved; Bostock v. Goodrich, 21 Fed. 316.

A drawing must be filed whenever the nature of the invention permits; 16 O. G. 809; a model is not required until called for by the patent office.

Of re-issues. It often happens that errors, defects, and mistakes occur in the specification of a patent, by which it is rendered wholly or partially inoperative, or perhaps invalid. Sec. 53 of the act of 1870 provides that when such errors or defects are the result of inadvertence, accident, or mistake, without any fraudulent or deceptive intention, the patent may be surrendered by the patentee, his executors, administrators, or assigns, and a new patent issued in proper shape to secure the real invention intended to have been patented originally. Rob. Pat. § 658. The identity between the invention described in the re-issue and that in the original patent is a question of fact for the jury; Burr v. Duryee, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 531, 17 L. Ed. 650. A patentee cannot secure in a re-issue claims covering what has been previously rejected upon his original application; Corbin C. L. Co. v. Lock Co., 150 U. S. 38, 14 Sup. Ct. 28, 37 L. Ed. 989.

A re-issued patent has the same effect and operation in law, on the trial of all actions for causes subsequently arising, as though the patent had been originally issued in such corrected form. From this it appears that after a re-issue no action can be brought for a past infringement of the patent. But, as the bare use of a patented machine is (if unauthorized) an infringement of the rights of the patentee, a machine constructed and lawfully used prior to the re-issue may be an infringement of the patent if used afterwards. The re-issued patent will expire when the original patent would have expired.

All matters of fact relating to a re-issue are finally settled by the decision of the commissioner, granting the re-issue; but it may be shown that the commissioner has exceeded his authority in granting a re-issue for an invention different from the one embraced in the original patent; Seymour v. Osborne, 11 Wall. (U. S.) 516, 20 L. Ed. 33. Where a re-issue is sought on the ground of inadvertent errors, rendering the patent inoperative, the decision of the commissioner upon the questions of fact relating to inoperativeness and inadvertence will not be re-examined by the courts; Beach v. Hobbs, 82 Fed. 910.

In a suit brought under R. S. § 4915, to obtain a re-issue refused by the patent office, the right of the complainant is to be determined on all the competent evidence, and not merely on the patent office record; Ingersoll v. Holt, 104 Fed. 682.

Where the only mistake suggested is that the claim is not so broad as it might have been, the mistake was apparent on the first inspection of the patent, and any correction desired should have been applied for immediately; the right to a correction may be lost by unreasonable delay. The claim of a specific device, and the omission to claim other devices apparent on the face of the patent, are in law a dedication to the public of that which was not claimed, and the legal effect of the patent cannot be revoked unless the patentee surrenders it and proves that the specification was so framed by real inadvertence, accident, or mistake, and this should be done with due diligence and before adverse rights have accrued. It was not the special purpose of the legislation to authorize re-issues with broader claims, though such a re-issue may be made when it clearly appears that there has been a bona fide mistake, such as chancery in cases within its ordinary jurisdiction would correct. The specifications cannot be substantially changed, either by the addition of new matter or the omission of important particulars, so as to enlarge the invention as intended to be originally claimed; Pattee Plow Co. v. Kingman, 129 U. S. 294, 9 Sup. Ct. 259, 32 L. Ed. 700. The re-issue is an amendment and cannot be allowed unless the imperfections in the original patent arose without fraud, and from inadvertence, accident, or mistake; Dobson v. Lees, 137 U. S. 258, 11 Sup. Ct. 71, 34 L. Ed. 652. The re-issued patent is not a new patent; and an existing contract concerning the patent before its surrender applies equally to it after the surrender and re-issue; McBurney v. Goodyear, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 569.

A re-issue can cover only what an examination of the original shows the original was intended to embrace; Flower v. Detroit, 127 U. S. 563, 8 Sup. Ct. 1291, 32 L. Ed. 175; and not that which the original did not describe or claim; Dunham v. Mfg. Co., 40 Fed. 667; though shown in the drawing; Marvel Buckle Co. v. Mfg. Co., 180 Fed. 1002, affirmed in 196 Fed. 1006, 115 C. C. A. 672. It can enlarge a claim by omitting an element previously claimed as essential; Matthews v. Mfg. Co., 124 U. S. 347, 8 Sup. Ct. 639, 31 L. Ed. 477. A re-issued claim may be broader; Weber v. Mfg. Co., 190 Fed. 189. Claims cannot be enlarged so as to cover matter already in public use after unreasonable delay; Flower v. Detroit, 127 U. S. 563, 8 Sup. Ct. 1291, 32 L. Ed. 175. If not for the same invention, the re-issue is void; Freeman v. Asmus, 145 U. S. 226, 12 Sup. Ct. 939, 36 L. Ed. 685.

A claim restricted by the patent office in the first re-issue cannot be enlarged by subsequent re-issues; Yale Lock Mfg. Co. v. James, 125 U. S. 447, 8 Sup. Ct. 967, 31 L. Ed. 807. A re-issue which brings in a claim originally rejected by the patent office with the acquiescence of the applicant, is void; Yale Lock Mfg. Co. v. Bank, 135 U. S. 342, 10 Sup. Ct. 884, 34 L. Ed. 168; but a re-issue may correct errors occasioned by the mistaken ideas raised in the patent office; Hutchinson v. Everett, 33 Fed. 502. Both the specification and the claims may be corrected by a re-issue; Hailes v. Stove Co., 10 Fed. 240.

Laches in applying for a re-issue is fatal to the re-issue and may be taken advantage of by a demurrer; Philadelphia Novelty Mfg. Co. v. Rouss, 39 Fed. 273. What is reasonable delay is a question for the court and the decision of the patent office on that point is not conclusive; Hoskin v. Fisher, 125 U. S. 217, 8 Sup. Ct. 834, 31 L. Ed. 759. The plaintiff must explain the delay in applying for a re-issue; Hoskin v. Fisher, 125 U. S. 217, 8 Sup. Ct. 834, 31 L. Ed. 759. The inadvertence must be in reference to the application and not to the invention. See a review of the cases in Parker & W. Co. v. Clock Co., 123 U. S. 89, 8 Sup. Ct. 38, 31 L. Ed. 100. A delay of three years is held to invalidate a re-issue; Mast, Foos & Co. v. Pump Co., 76 Fed. 816, 22 C. C. A. 586; so of more than five years, unexcused; United Blue-Flame O. S. Co. v. Glazier, 119 Fed. 157, 55 C. C. A. 553; but not of seven and a half months; A. D. Howe Mach. Co. v. Motor Washer Co., 197 Fed. 541, 117 C. C. A.

37; nor a year; Trethaway v. W. B. Bertels & Son Co., 180 Fed. 730, 104 C. C. A. 96; but where a patent, dated in 1882, was held void in 1894 and a re-issue was granted five months later, it was held valid; Maitland v. Mfg. Co., 86 Fed. 124, 29 C. C. A. 607; and a delay of twelve years, where the patent has been acquiesced in for ten years by the trade; Steiner & V. Hardware Co. v. Sash Co., 178 Fed. 831; but where a patent had been declared void, the patentee cannot continue to litigate on it for years and then apply for a re-issue; Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Electric Co., 158 Fed. 813, 86 C. C. A. 73; where, on an application for a re-issue, the primary examiner rejects certain claims, and the applicant abandons his application, the claims disallowed are not invalidated; McCormick H. M. Co. v. Aultman Co., 169 U. S. 606, 18 Sup. Ct. 443, 42 L. Ed. 875.

No action lies on the original patent after its surrender for re-issue; Burrell v. Hackley, 35 Fed. 833. A patentee, imposing words of limitation upon himself in his claim in taking out a re-issue, is bound thereby in subsequent suits on the re-issued patent; Crawford v. Heysinger, 123 U. S. 589, 8 Sup. Ct. 399, 31 L. Ed. 269.

A patent cannot be re-issued to enlarge a claim unless there has been a clear mistake in the wording of the claim, and an application is made within a reasonably short period after the original patent was granted; Parker & Whipple Co. v. Clock Co., 123 U. S. 87, 8 Sup. Ct. 38, 31 L. Ed. 100; Huber v. Mfg. Co., 148 U. S. 270, 13 Sup. Ct. 603, 37 L. Ed. 447.

A re-issue of a patent for an invention, after the expiration of foreign patents for the same invention is invalid; Commercial Mfg. Co. v. Canning Co., 135 U. S. 176, 10 Sup. Ct. 718, 34 L. Ed. 88.

Of patents for designs. The act of 1870 (amended May 2, 1902) permits any person to obtain a patent for a design, which shall continue in force for three and a half, seven, or fourteen years; at the option of the applicant. These patents are granted wherever the applicant has invented any new ornamental and original design for an article of manufacture, not known or used by others in this country before his invention thereof, or patented or described in any printed publication in this or any foreign country before his invention thereof, or more than two years before his application, and not in public use or on sale in this country for more than two years prior to his application, unless abandoned; Rowe v. Clapp Co., 112 Fed. 61, 50 C. C. A. 120.

A design is created by the imposition upon a physical substance of some peculiar shape or ornamentation which produces a particular impression upon the human eye, and through the eye, upon the mind. Its creation involves a change in the substance itself and not merely in the mode of presenting it for sale; and affects, not its abstract qualities, nor those on which its practical utility depends, but those only which determine its appearance to the sight; Rob. Pat. § 200; it must have esthetic value; Eaton v. Lewis, 115 Fed. 635, affirmed in 127 Fed. 1018, 61 C. C. A. 562; it is not enough that it identifies the article as a trade mark; Rowe v. Clapp Co., 112 Fed. 61, 50 C. C. A. 120.

The acts of congress were plainly intended to give encouragement to the decorative arts; they contemplate not so much utility as appearance; Gorham Co. v. White, 14 Wall. (U. S.) 511, 20 L. Ed. 731. A design is patentable though not more beautiful than former ones; Lehnbeuter v. Holthaus, 105 U. S. 94, 26 L. Ed. 939. Design patents require as high a degree or exercise of the inventive or origination faculty as utility patents; Western Elec. Mfg. Co. v. Odell, 18 Fed. 321. Where scrollwork is used there must be something peculiar to sustain a patent; Soehner v. Range Co., 84 Fed. 182, 28 C. C. A. 317.

A design patent cannot be enlarged in its scope from the specifications; Frank v. Hess, 84 Fed. 170.

The general method of making the application is the same as has been hereinbefore described, and the patent issues in a similar form.

The use of a design or colorable imitation thereof on any article of manufacture or the sale of any article to which the same shall have been applied, knowing that it has been so applied, renders the party liable to pay $250 or the profits in excess of that amount, and this may be recovered at law or in equity.

Of disclaimers. R. S. § 4922 provides that the plaintiff in a suit for infringement may disclaim so much of his patent as is in excess of his real invention and thus recover damages for the injury he has really sustained. Sec. 4917 provides for the filing in the patent office of a disclaimer of either a separate claim or some distinct and separate matter which can be excised without mutilating or changing what is left. These two sections are part of one law having one general purpose and both relate to a case in which a patentee, through inadvertence, accident, or mistake, and without any fraudulent intention, has included in his claim and in his patent, inventions to which he is not entitled, and which are clearly distinguishable from those to which he is entitled. The purpose of § 4917 is to authorize him to file a disclaimer to the part to which he is not entitled and of § 4922 is to legalize the suit on the patent mentioned in the section, and to the extent to which the patentee can rightfully claim the patented invention; Hailes v. Stove Co., 123 U. S. 582, 8 Sup. Ct. 262, 31 L. Ed. 284.

Delay in a disclaimer under § 4917 goes only to the question of costs; Sessions v. Romadka, 145 U. S. 29, 12 Sup. Ct. 799, 36 L. Ed. 609.

No person can avail himself of the benefits of this provision who has unreasonably neglected or delayed to enter his disclaimer.

A disclaimer by one owner will not affect the interest of any other owner.

A disclaimer cannot be used to change the character of the invention; Collins Co. v. Coes, 130 U. S. 56, 9 Sup. Ct. 514, 32 L. Ed. 858.

A disclaimer of an unnecessary or inadvertent statement in the specification may be entered in an infringement suit, when, if retained, they might illegally broaden the claim; Carnegie Steel Co. v. Iron Co., 185 U. S. 403, 22 Sup. Ct. 698, 46 L. Ed. 968; or to limit the patent to the actual invention; Simplex Ry. Appliance Co. v. Car Co., 189 Fed. 70, 110 C. C. A. 634, affirmed in Pressed Steel Car Co. v. Appliance Co., 223 U. S. 721, 32 Sup. Ct. 523, 56 L. Ed. 630. Where some claims are held invalid, a disclaimer must be filed thereto before obtaining an injunction as to sustained claims; F. D. Cummer & Son Co. v. Dryer Co., 193 Fed. 993, 113 C. C. A. 611.

After an action in equity for the infringement of letters patent has been heard and decided upon its merits, the plaintiff cannot file a disclaimer in court, or introduce new evidence upon that or any other subject, except at a rehearing granted by the court upon such terms as it thinks fit to impose; Roemer v. Bernheim, 132 U. S. 103, 10 Sup. Ct. 12, 33 L. Ed. 277.

Of the extension of a patent. See EXTENSION OF PATENTS.

Of the repeal of letters patent. The United States may sue in equity for the repeal of a patent obtained by fraud; U. S. v. Telephone Co., 128 U. S. 315, 9 Sup. Ct. 90, 32 L. Ed. 450; the power rests with the courts alone; Mica Insulator Co. v. Mica Co., 166 Fed. 440, 92 C. C. A. 292; a bill in equity to repeal two patents for the same subject-matter and to the same party is not multifarious; U. S. v. Telephone Co., 128 U. S. 315, 9 Sup. Ct. 90, 32 L. Ed. 450.

R. S. § 4918 provides that any person interested in one or more interfering patents may bring his bill in equity against the owner of the adverse patent, upon which the court may declare either of the patents void in whole or part, or inoperative, or invalid in any particular part of the United States. The judgment rendered affects only the parties or those taking under them.

Suits may be maintained by the government in its own courts to set aside one of its own patents, not only when it has a proprietary and pecuniary interest in the result, but also when it is necessary in order to enable it to discharge its obligations to the public, and sometimes when the purpose and effect are merely to enforce the rights of an individual. In a suit between individuals to set aside an instrument for a fraud, the testimony must be clear, unequivocal, and convincing and more than a bare preponderance of evidence is required. This is much more so when the government attempts to set aside its solemn patent; U. S. v. Telephone Co., 167 U. S. 224, 17 Sup. Ct. 809, 42 L. Ed. 144.

Of the assignment of patents. Every patent or an interest therein is assignable in law, by an instrument in writing; such assignments, etc., are void as against any purchaser or mortgagee for a valuable consideration, without notice, unless recorded in the patent office within three months. But an unrecorded assignment is valid as against a subsequent party who has had actual notice; Pitts v. Whitman, 2 Sto. 609, Fed. Cas. No. 11,196.

The right may be successively assigned without limit; Selden v. Gas Burner Co., 9 Fed. 390. Any person may take under an assignment, a married woman, an infant, etc.; Fetter v. Newhall, 17 Fed. 841. An invention may be assigned before it is perfected; Hammond v. Organ Co., 92 U. S. 724, 23 L. Ed. 767; but an agreement for the future assignment of a patent not yet granted is not a recordable instrument; New York P. B. Mach. Co. v. Mach. Co., 32 Fed. 783. A deed conveying "all the inventor's property and estate whatsoever" carries rights in unpatented inventions; Philadelphia W. & B. R. Co. v. Trimble, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 367, 19 L. Ed. 948.

Patents are creatures of the statute and an assignment is sufficient if it conforms to R. S. § 4898. It must be by a written instrument duly recorded; Ball v. Coker, 168 Fed. 304; but an assignment passes title against an infringer, though not recorded; Delaware S. T. Co. v. Tube Co., 160 Fed. 928, 88 C. C. A. 110; it need not be under seal; U. S. L. & H. Co. v. Electric Co., 189 Fed. 382, modified in 194 Fed. 866, 114 C. C. A. 612; nor acknowledged, when the genuineness of the assignor's signature is proved; Clancy v. Supply Co., 157 Fed. 554, 85 C. C. A. 314.

A certified copy of a patent office record of an assignment is not prima facie proof of the execution or genuineness thereof, nor is it made competent evidence by R. S. § 4898, as amended March 3, 1897; American Graphophone Co. v. Leeds Co., 140 Fed. 981; Eastern Dynamite Co. v. Mfg. Co., 164 Fed. 47, per Archibald, J.; contra, American Bank Protection Co. v. Bank, 181 Fed. 377, per Sanborn, J.; National Folding B. & P. Co. v. Box Co., 55 Fed. 488; Standard Elevator Co. v. Elevator Co., 76 Fed. 767, 22 C. C. A. 549.

An assignment is the transfer of the entire interest in a patented invention or of an undivided portion of such entire interest as to every section of the United States; Rob. Pat.

§ 762: it differs from grant in relation to the territorial area to which they relate. A grant is the transfer of the exclusive right in a specific part of the United States. It is an exclusive sectional right. A license is a transfer of a less or different interest than either the interest in a whole patent or an undivided part of such whole interest or an exclusive sectional interest; Potter v. Holland, 4 Blatch. 206, Fed. Cas. No. 11,329. See Littlefield v. Perry, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 205, 22 L. Ed. 577. Any transfer of an interest in a patented invention, which cannot operate as an assignment or grant, is a license; Rob. Pat. § 806.

A license is distinguished from an assignment and a grant in that the latter transfers the monopoly as well as the invention, while a license transfers only the invention and does not affect the monopoly otherwise than by estopping the licensor from exercising his prohibitory powers in derogation of the privileges conferred by him upon the licensee; Rob. Pat. § 806. See Pope Mfg. Co. v. Mfg. Co., 144 U. S. 248, 12 Sup. Ct. 641, 36 L. Ed. 423. A license is said to be merely the right not to be sued; Hawks v. Swett, 4 Hun (N. Y.) 146. It may be by parol; Gates I. Works v. Fraser, 153 U. S. 332, 14 Sup. Ct. 883, 38 L. Ed. 734. The right of a patent owner to license the use of his patent is not a creature of statute, but of the common law; U. S. v. Telephone Co., 29 Fed. 17.

No particular form is required for an assignment; Siebert Cylinder Oil-Cup Co. v. Beggs, 32 Fed. 790; to comply with the act it must be in writing; Gottfried v. Miller, 104 U. S. 521, 26 L. Ed. 851. It may be made either before or after the patent issues; Cammeyer v. Newton, 94 U. S. 225, 24 L. Ed. 72.

A grant of the exclusive right to make, use, and sell a patented article throughout the United States for the full term of the patent, is an assignment; Rapp v. Kelling, 41 Fed. 792; where the intention of a writing is to transfer all rights under the patent, it is an assignment; Siebert Cylinder Oil-Cup Co. v. Beggs, 32 Fed. 790.

One owning a patent with several claims cannot assign a single claim so as to pass the legal title; such a transfer is a mere license; Pope Mfg. Co. v. Mfg. Co., 144 U. S. 238, 12 Sup. Ct. 637, 36 L. Ed. 420. A joint owner may give a license; Pusey & J. Co. v. Miller, 61 Fed. 401.

A licensee cannot dispute the validity of the patent; National Rubber Co. v. Rubber-Shoe Co., 41 Fed. 48; but where a license does not recite the validity of the patent, a licensee who abandons the patent may set up the defence of invalidity in an action for royalties alleged to be payable by him after his repudiation; Mudgett v. Thomas, 55 Fed. 645; and a licensee is not estopped to question the validity of a patent in vindication of acts done after his license expired; H. Tibbe & Son Mfg. Co. v. Helneken, 37 Fed. 686. A patentee cannot question the validity of his own patent as against his assignee; Burdsall v. Curran, 31 Fed. 918; Woodward v. Mach. Co., 60 Fed. 283, 8 C. C. A. 622.

An oral agreement for the sale and assignment of the right to obtain a patent, is not within the statute of frauds, nor within R. S. § 4898, requiring assignments of patents to be in writing, and may be specifically enforced in equity, upon sufficient proof thereof; Dalzell v. Mfg. Co., 149 U. S. 315, 13 Sup. Ct. 886, 37 L. Ed. 749.

The right to damages for past infringements does not pass by assignment; New York G. S. Co. v. G. Sugar Co., 18 Fed. 638; May v. Juneau County, 30 Fed. 241; Kaolatype Engraving Co. v. Hoke, 30 Fed. 444; but see May v. Board, 30 Fed. 250; May v. Saginaw County, 32 Fed. 629; Siebert Cylinder Oil-Cup Co. v. Beggs, 32 Fed. 790; Emerson v. Hubbard, 34 Fed. 327; unless such right is expressly included.

Acts in pais will sometimes justify the presumption of a license; McClurg v. Kingsland, 1 How. (U. S.) 202, 11 L. Ed. 102. As to a verbal license, see Bell v. McCullough, 1 Bond 194, Fed. Cas. No. 1,256. A license to use an invention implied from circumstances is not transferable; Hapgood v. Hewitt, 119 U. S. 226, 7 Sup. Ct. 193, 30 L. Ed. 369; and a licensee cannot divide the territory in which he is licensed among third parties although the license is to him and his assigns; Brush Elec. Co. v. Elec. Light Co., 52 Fed. 945, 3 C. C. A. 368. A verbal assignment of an interest in a patent has no force against a subsequent assignee under a written transfer, without notice; Gates I. Works v. Fraser, 153 U. S. 332, 14 Sup. Ct. 883, 38 L. Ed. 734; but it has been held that a license to use a patent, not exclusive of others, need not be recorded and may be by parol; and a subsequent assignee of the patent takes title subject to such license, of which he must inform himself as best he may; but the verbal license will be strictly construed, and must show the consideration and alleged payment of royalties; Jones v. Berger, 58 Fed. 1006.

An assignment may be made prior to the granting of a patent. And when duly made and recorded, the patent may be issued to the assignee. This, however, only applies to cases of assignments proper, as contradistinguished from grants or licenses. The application must, however, in such cases be made and the specification sworn to by the inventor. See Rathbone v. Orr, 5 McLean 131, Fed. Cas. No. 11,585; Gay v. Cornell, 1 Blatch. 506, Fed. Cas. No. 5,280. The assignment transfers the right to the assignee, although the patent should be afterwards issued to the assignor; Gayler v. Wilder, 10 How. (U. S.) 477, 13 L. Ed. 504. The assignee of the entire right in a patent has the exclusive right to sue either at law or in equity for its subsequent infringement; Watterman v. Mackenzie, 138 U. S. 252, 11 Sup. Ct. 334, 34 L. Ed. 923; and may sue in his own name, and so may the assignee of the entire interest for some particular territory; Suydam v. Day, 2 Blatch. 20, Fed. Cas. No. 13,654; but see Ingalls v. Tice, 14 Fed. 297.

A license to use includes the right to make for use; Illingworth v. Spaulding, 43 Fed. 827.

The title to a patent passes to the assignee in bankruptcy of the patentee, subject to the assignee's election not to accept it if in his opinion it is worthless or would prove to be burdensome and unprofitable; and he is entitled to a reasonable time to elect whether he will accept it or not; Sessions v. Romadka, 145 U. S. 29, 12 Sup. Ct. 799, 36 L. Ed. 609. Upon the death of the owner of a patent, intestate, it passes to his administrator; Bradley v. Dull, 19 Fed. 913; who can sue thereon in another state without taking out ancillary letters of administration therein; Hodge v. R. Co., 1 Dill. 104, Fed. Cas. No. 6,561.

Licenses containing express stipulations for their forfeiture are not ipso facto forfeited upon condition broken, but remain operative and pleadable until rescinded by a court of equity; Rob. Pat. § 822; White v. Lee, 3 Fed. 222. The question of forfeiture depends upon the ordinary principles of equity; therefore a court will not rescind a license for non-payment of money at the time fixed therein, if payment has been subsequently tendered or justice can be done by a judgment for the amount already due; Rob. Pat. § 822; White v. Lee, 5 Bann. & A. 572, 3 Fed. 222. A refusal to pay royalties coupled with an abandonment of the license and a defence on other grounds, are sufficient for annulment; Bell v. McCullough, 1 Fish. 380, Fed. Cas. No. 1,256. If the contract contain no power of revocation, the licensor can only proceed at law for any breach; Chase v. Cox, 41 Fed. 475; Densmore v. Tanite Co., 32 Fed. 544.

Of joint inventors. The patent must in all cases issue to the inventor, if alive and if he has not assigned his interest. And if the invention is made jointly by two inventors, the patent must issue to them both. This is equally the case where one makes a portion of the invention at one time and another at another time.

It is not necessary that exactly the same idea should have occurred to each at the same time. If an idea is suggested to one and he even goes so far as to construct a machine embodying this invention, but it is not a completed working machine and another person takes hold of it and by their joint labor a perfect machine is made, a joint patent may be properly issued to them.

But if each person invented a distinct part of a machine, each should obtain a patent for his invention; Worden v. Fisher, 11 Fed. 505.

Of executors and administrators. Where an inventor dies before obtaining a patent, his executor or administrator may apply for and obtain such patent, holding it in trust for the heirs at law or devisees, accordingly as the inventor died intestate or testate. Nothing is said as to its being appropriated to the payment of debts; but, having once gone into the hands of the executors or administrators, it would perhaps become assets, and be used like other personal property.

The right to make a surrender and receive a re-issue of a patent also vests by law in the executor or administrator.

The liability of a patent to be levied upon for debt. The better opinion is that letters patent cannot be levied upon and sold by a common-law execution. The grant of privilege to the patentee would, from its incorporeal nature, seem to be incapable of manual seizure and of sale. Even if such a sale were made, there does not appear to be any provision in the acts of congress which contemplates the recording of a sheriff's deed; and without a valid record, the patentee might nevertheless make a subsequent transfer to a bona fide purchaser without notice, which would be valid.

But this peculiar species of property may be subjected to the payment of debts through the instrumentality of a bill in equity. The chancellor can act upon the person. He can direct the patent to be sold, and by attachment can compel the patentee to execute a conveyance to the purchaser; see Ager v. Murray, 105 U. S. 126, 26 L. Ed. 942, where it was further held that the court might compel the holder of the patent to assign it, or appoint a trustee for that purpose; or a receiver; In re Keach, 14 R. I. 571, but not if no income is being received; 25 T. L. R. 815. The right of a patentee will pass to his assignees in bankruptcy; 3 B. & P. 777; Sessions v. Romadka, 145 U. S. 29, 12 Sup. Ct. 799, 36 L. Ed. 609; but not to a trustee in insolvency in Massachusetts; Ashcroft v. Walworth, 1 Holmes 152, Fed. Cas. No. 580. The legal title to a patent does not pass to a receiver of an insolvent owner; but the receiver may maintain a bill to compel the owner to transfer it to him; McCulloh v. Association Horlogere Suisse, 45 Fed. 479.

How far a patent is retroactive. Section 37 of the act of 1870, following substantially the act of 1837, provides "that every person who may have purchased of the inventor, or with his knowledge and consent may have constructed any newly-invented or discovered machine, or other patentable article, prior to the application by the inventor or discoverer for a patent, or sold or used one so constructed, shall have the right to use, and vend to others, to be used, the specific thing so made or purchased, without liability therefor."

On the question of anticipation by a prior device, the patentee's invention will be considered as relating back to his original conception; Dixon v. Moyer, 4 Wash. C. C. 68, Fed. Cas. No. 3,931; Treadwell v. Bladen, 4 Wash. C. C. 703, Fed. Cas. No. 14,154.

Marking patented articles. Sec. 38 of the act of 1870 declares that in all cases where an article is made or vended by any person under the protection of letters patent, it shall be the duty of such person to give sufficient notice to the public that said article is so patented, either by fixing thereon the word "patented," together with the day and year the patent was granted, or when, from the character of the article patented, that may be impracticable, by enveloping one or more of the said articles, and affixing a label to the package, or otherwise attaching thereto a label containing a like notice; on failure of which, in any suit for the infringement of letters patent by the party failing so to mark, no damage shall be recovered by the plaintiff, except on proof that the defendant was duly notified of the infringement, and continued after such notice, to make, use, or vend the article patented. The burden of proof is on the plaintiff, in a suit for infringement, to allege and prove actual or constructive notice of the patent; Coupe v. Royer, 155 U. S. 584, 15 Sup. Ct. 199, 39 L. Ed. 263.

U. S. R. S. § 4901, imposes a penalty for marking an unpatented article "patented," or with any word importing that it is patented, for the purpose of deceiving the public; there is not a distinct offense for each article marked, but for the offense; London v. Dunbar Corp., 179 Fed. 506, 103 C. C. A. 130.

Defences. In any action for infringement the defendant may plead the general issue and having given thirty days notice previous to trial, may prove: 1. That for the purpose of deceiving the public the description and specification was made to contain less than the whole truth relative to the invention or more than is necessary to produce the desired effect; 2. That the patentee had surreptitiously or unjustly obtained the patent for that which was in fact invented by another, who was using reasonable diligence in adapting and perfecting the same; 3. That it has been patented or described in some printed publication prior to his supposed invention thereof or more than two years prior to the application; 4. That the patentee was not the original and first inventor of any material and substantial part of the thing patented; 5. That it had been in public use or on sale in this country more than two years before the application or had been abandoned to the public. R. S. § 4920, as amended. The italicized portions above were inserted in § 4920 by the act of March 3, 1897, and do not apply to patents previously granted.

Special notice of such defences must be given at law or must be set up in the answer in equity; notice of previous invention, knowledge, or use must state the names of the patentees and when granted and the names and residences of the persons alleged to have invented or to have had a prior knowledge of the thing patented and where and by whom it had been used.

Numerous other defences can be set up at law or in equity, such as the want of invention, novelty, or utility; absence of title in the plaintiff; non-infringement; estoppel; title in the defendant; a release, etc. See Rob. Pat. All of these, and also the above statutory defences, can be proved at law under a general issue plea; those not statutory do not require notice of special matter, unless under special practice in the particular court. The statute of limitations must be pleaded specially.

Prior use must be proved beyond reasonable doubt; Stegner v. Blake, 36 Fed. 183; it must antedate the patentee's invention and not merely his application; Von Schmidt v. Bowers, 80 Fed. 121, 25 C. C. A. 323.

A prior use of a device, in order to defeat a patent, must be something which was identical with the patented invention; Ellithorp v. Robertson, 4 Blatch. 307, Fed. Cas. No. 4,408. It is not enough to show older devices having part of the elements in one machine, part in a second, and part in a third, and then say that the patented device is anticipated; Kelly v. Porter, 17 Fed. 520. A prior use of all the elements of a device does not anticipate their combination; Kelleher v. Darling, 4 Cliff. 424, Fed. Cas. No. 7,653; a prior invention must have been complete and operative; Stephenson v. R. Co., 14 Fed. 457. A mere written description or drawing does not constitute a prior use; Detroit Lubricator Mfg. Co. v. Renchard, 9 Fed. 293; nor does the construction of a model; Union Paper-Bag Mach. Co. v. Pultz & Walkley Co., 16 Blatch. 76, Fed. Cas. No. 14,393. But there may be circumstances under which a complete model will suffice; Stephenson v. R. Co., 14 Fed. 457, 19 Blatch. 473; Coffin v. Ogden, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 120, 21 L. Ed. 821. A patent, though a mere paper one, may constitute anticipation if it discloses the principle of a subsequent invention; Universal Winding Co. v. Lünen Co., 82 Fed. 228.

If the prior use was the embryotic or inchoate it is not enough. If the device was a machine, it must have been clothed in a substantial form, sufficient to demonstrate at once its practical efficacy and utility; Coffin v. Ogden, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 120, 21 L. Ed. 821.

Trade magazines, copyrighted, and found in public and scientific libraries are "publications"; Truman v. Mfg. Co., 87 Fed. 470.

Abandoned experiments do not constitute a prior use; The Corn-Planter Patent, 23 Wall. (U. S.) 181, 23 L. Ed. 161; Hoyt v. Slocum, 26 Fed. 329. But throwing aside an invention does not necessarily show that it was an unsuccessful experiment; Brush v. Condit, 20 Fed. 826. It has been said that where an invention once in use has become a lost art, one who has re-invented it may obtain a patent therefor; Webst. Pat. 720.

Evidence as to the state of the art before the date of the conception of the invention is always admissible to show what was then known, to distinguish the new features from the old and to enable the court to perceive the precise limits of the inventive act; Rob. Pat. § 1020. No previous notice of this evidence is necessary; Shepley v. Cowan, 91 U. S. 337, 23 L. Ed. 424.

If letters patent be manifestly invalid upon their face, the question of their validity may be raised on demurrer; Richards v. Elevator Co., 158 U. S. 299, 15 Sup. Ct. 831, 39 L. Ed. 991; but only in an unusual case; Patent Button Co. v. Fastener Co., 84 Fed. 189; or where the lack of invention is so palpable that evidence could not show it otherwise; Gaines v. Coal & Iron Co., 173 Fed. 303; or when the court, on inspection, is convinced that the patent cannot be sustained; Kuhn v. Check Co., 165 Fed. 445, 91 C. C. A. 389.

The doctrine of laches has been said to apply to a case where a patentee has slept on his rights for sixteen years while infringement was open and notorious; Richardson v. Osborne & Co., 82 Fed. 96; but on the other hand it is held that mere delay will not bar a right unless it act as an estoppel; Sawyer Spindle Co. v. Taylor, 69 Fed. 838.

The failure of a patentee for some years to manufacture his device does not defeat his right to his patented invention; Masseth v. Johnston, 59 Fed. 613; Continental P. B. Co. v. Paper Bag Co., 210 U. S. 405, 28 Sup. Ct. 748, 52 L. Ed. 1122.

Utility is said to be absence of frivolity and mischievousness, and utility for some beneficial purpose; Rob. Pat. § 339; and the degree of utility is not material; Gibbs v. Hoefner, 19 Fed. 323. But there is no utility if the invention can be used only to commit a fraud with; Klein v. Russell, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 433, 22 L. Ed. 116; or for some immoral purpose; Lowell v. Lewis, 1 Mas. 182, Fed. Cas. No. 8,568; or can be used only for gambling purposes in saloons; Schultze v. Holtz, 82 Fed. 448; or if the invention is dangerous in its use; Mitchell v. Tilghman, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 287, 22 L. Ed. 125. It is no defence to a suit for infringing a patent that the owner has entered into a conspiracy in restraint of trade; Motion Picture Patents Co. v. Ullman, 186 Fed. 174; Strait v. Harrow Co., 51 Fed. 819.

Of infringements. The criterion of infringement is substantial identity of construction and operation. Mere changes of form, proportion, or position, or substitution of mechanical equivalents, will still be infringements, unless they involve a substantial difference of construction, operation, or effect; O'Reilly v. Morse, 1 How. (U. S.) 62, 14 L. Ed. 601; Foster v. Moore, 1 Curt. 279, Fed. Cas. No. 4,978. As a general rule, whenever the defendant has incorporated in his structure the substance of what the plaintiff has invented and properly claimed, he is responsible to the latter; Burr v. Duryee, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 531, 17 L. Ed. 650.

Where the patent is for a new combination of machines to produce certain effects, it is no infringement to use any of the machines separately, if the whole combination is not used; Silbsy v. Foote, 14 How. (U. S.) 219, 14 L. Ed. 394; Vance v. Campbell, 1 Black (U. S.) 427, 17 L. Ed. 168; Eames v. Godfrey, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 78, 17 L. Ed. 547. But it is an infringement to use one of several improvements claimed, or to use a substantial part of the invention, although with some modification or even improvement of form or apparatus; Wyeth v. Stone, 1 Sto. 273, Fed. Cas. No. 18,107. Where the patent describes and claims a machine, it cannot be construed to be for a process or function, so as to make all other machines infringements which perform the same function; and no infringement will in such case take place where the practical manner of giving effect to the principle is by a different mechanical structure and mechanical action; Corning v. Burden, 15 How. (U. S.) 252, 14 L. Ed. 683. If the patentee is the inventor of a device, he may treat as infringers all who make a similar device operating on the same principle and performing the same functions by analogous means or equivalent combinations, although the infringing machine may be an improvement of the original and patentable as such. But if the invention claimed is itself but an improvement on a known machine, by a mere change of form or combination of parts, it will not be an infringement to improve the original machine by the use of a different form or combination of parts performing the same functions. The doctrine of equivalents does not in such case apply, unless the subsequent improvements are mere colorable invasions of the first; McCormick v. Talcott, 20 How. (U. S.) 405, 15 L. Ed. 930. A pioneer in the art of making a practical device, who has invented a principle which has gone into almost universal use in this country, is entitled to a liberal construction of his claim; and another device containing all the elements of his combination should be held an infringement, though there are superficial dissimilarities in their construction; Sessions v. Romadka, 145 U. S. 29, 12 Sup. Ct. 799, 36 L. Ed. 609. A pioneer patent means one covering a function never before performed; a wholly novel device marking a distinct step in the progress of the art; Westinghouse v. Brake Co., 170 U. S. 537, 18 Sup. Ct. 707, 42 L. Ed. 1136. The new application of a patented device to another use, which does not involve the exercise of the inventive faculty, is an infringement as much as though the new machine were an exact copy of the old; Western Electric Co. v. La Rue, 139 U. S. 601, 11 Sup. Ct. 670, 35 L. Ed. 294. The mere fact that one who uses a patented process finds it applicable to more extended use than has been perceived by the patentee is not a defence to a charge of infringement; Lovell Mfg. Co. v. Cary, 147 U. S. 623, 13 Sup. Ct. 472, 37 L. Ed. 307.

A sale of the thing patented to an agent of the patentee, employed by him to make the purchase on account of the patentee, is not per se an infringement, although, accompanied by other circumstances, it may be evidence of infringement; Byam v. Farr, 1 Curt. 260, Fed. Cas. No. 2,264.

An infringer is not an outlaw. He can, if convinced that the patent is invalid or that he does not infringe, use the machine, subject to a risk of injunction and accounting. If patent be newly issued and generally infringed, his act should not be viewed in the same light as if the patent had been adjudicated and a license fee established; Diamond S. S. Mach. Co. v. Brown, 166 Fed. 306, 92 C. C. A. 224.

The making of a patented machine for philosophical experiment only, and not for use or sale, has been held to be no infringement; Whittemore v. Cutter, 1 Gall. 429, Fed. Cas. No. 17,600; Sawin v. Guild, 1 Gall. 485, Fed. Cas. No. 12,391; but a use with a view to an experiment to test its value is an infringement; Watson v. Bladen, 4 Wash. C. C. 580, Fed. Cas. No. 17,277. The sale of the articles produced by a patented machine or process is not an infringement; Boyd v. Brown, 3 McLean 295, Fed. Cas. No. 1,747; Simpson v. Wilson, 4 How. (U. S.) 703, 11 L. Ed. 1169; Merrill v. Yeomans, 94 U. S. 568, 24 L. Ed. 235; nor is the bona fide purchase of patented articles from an infringing manufacturer; Keplinger v. De Young, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 359, 6 L. Ed. 341; nor a sale of materials by a sheriff; Sawin v. Guild, 1 Gall. 485; 1 Robb 47, Fed. Cas. No. 12,391. Ignorance by the infringer of the existence of the patent infringed is no defence, but may mitigate damages; Hogg v. Emerson, 11 How. (U. S.) 587, 13 L. Ed. 824. Infringing articles made during the life of the patent cannot be sold afterwards;

Underwood Typewriter Co. v. Elliott-Fisher Co., 156 Fed. 588. See INFRINGEMENT.

The purchaser of a car load of beds covered by a patent from the owner of the territorial rights of Michigan, for the express purpose of selling them in Massachusetts, had the right to sell them anywhere within the United States, even within the territory already assigned to another person; Keeler v. Bed Co., 157 U. S. 659, 15 Sup. Ct. 738, 39 L. Ed. 848 (Brown J., dissenting); Hobbie v. Jennison, 149 U. S. 355, 13 Sup. Ct. 879, 37 L. Ed. 766; but one cannot buy a patented article in a foreign country from a person authorized to sell it there and then sell it in the United States; Dickerson v. Tinling, 84 Fed. 192, 28 C. C. A. 139.

Unpatented elements of a patented combination may not be sold for use therewith, though they might be for use with other machines; Leeds & Catlin Co. v. Talking Mach. Co., 213 U. S. 325, 29 Sup. Ct. 503, 53 L. Ed. 816; it was held that supplying repair parts, not separately patented, is not an infringement; National Malleable Casting Co. v. Steel Foundries, 182 Fed. 626.

The owners of letters patent can sue the United States in the court of claims for infringement of his patent. This does not apply to employes of the United States government or officers of the army or navy (Act of June 25, 1910). Officers or agents of the United States, though acting under its orders, are personally liable for infringement; Belknap v. Schild, 161 U. S. 10, 16 Sup. Ct. 443, 40 L. Ed. 599.

The United States has no right to use a patented invention without a license from the patentee or making compensation to him. No suit can be maintained, or injunction granted, against the United States, unless expressly permitted by act of congress. Officers or agents of the United States, although acting under order of the United States, are personally liable to be sued for their own infringement of a patent. Upon a suit in equity by the patentee of an improvement in caisson gates against officers of the United States, using in their official capacity a caisson gate made and used by the United States, in infringement of his patent, the plaintiff is not entitled to an injunction. Nor can he recover profits, if the only profit proved is a saving to the United States in the cost of the gate; Belknap v. Schild, 161 U. S. 10, 16 Sup. Ct. 443, 40 L. Ed. 599.

Of damages for infringement. Damages may be recovered in any district court of the United States, in the name of the party interested either as patentee, assignee, or grantee, and in case of a verdict for the plaintiff the court may enter judgment thereon for any sum above the amount found by the verdict as the actual damages sustained, according to the circumstances of the case, not exceeding three times the amount of such verdict, together with costs. A court of equity may award damages for infringement and increase the same in a similar manner. R. S. § 4921, as amended March 3, 1897, provides that upon a decree in equity for infringement the complainant shall be entitled to recover, in addition to profits, the damages he has sustained, which shall be assessed by the court, and the court has the same power to increase the damages as is given to the court to increase the damages found by verdict, even though the infringer made no profit; Marsh v. Seymour, 97 U. S. 348, 24 L. Ed. 963. At law a plaintiff is entitled to recover what he has lost although it exceed defendant's profits; in equity only the profits the defendant has actually made; Keystone Mfg. Co. v. Adams, 151 U. S. 139, 14 Sup. Ct. 295, 38 L. Ed. 103; Coupe v. Royer, 155 U. S. 565, 15 Sup. Ct. 199, 39 L. Ed. 263; Belknap v. Schild, 161 U. S. 10, 16 Sup. Ct. 443, 40 L. Ed. 599.

The actual damage is all that can be allowed by a jury, as contradistinguished from exemplary, vindictive, or punitive damages. The amount of defendant's profits from the unlawful user is, in general, the measure of the plaintiff's damages; and this may be determined by the plaintiff's price for a license; Hogg v. Emerson, 11 How. (U. S.) 607, 13 L. Ed. 824; but no interest is allowed on the profits until their amount is judicially ascertained; Tilghman v. Proctor, 125 U. S. 136, 8 Sup. Ct. 894, 31 L. Ed. 664. The rule of damages is different where a patent is only for an improvement on a machine and where it is for an entire machine; Seymour v. McCormick, 16 How. (U. S.) 480, 14 L. Ed. 1024. If there be a mere making and no user proved, the damages should be nominal; Whittemore v. Cutter, 1 Gall. 478, Fed. Cas. No. 17,601; and where there is in the evidence no basis for a computation of the damages, only nominal damages can be given; Cornely v. Marckwald, 131 U. S. 159, 9 Sup. Ct. 744, 33 L. Ed. 117. Where a royalty was proved on a device covering two claims and one only was sustained, only nominal damages were allowed; Proctor v. Brill, 4 Fed. 415; but it has been held that in an action at law, if there is no established royalty, the jury may consider what would be a reasonable royalty; and, in so doing, may consider the utility and advantage of the invention, and take into account defendant's profits; Cassidy v. Hunt, 75 Fed. 1012.

The advantage which defendants derived from using the patented device over what he could have derived by using any other known device constitutes the profits, if it can be reasonably ascertained; Fullerton Walnut Growers' Ass'n v. Mfg. Co., 166 Fed. 443, 92 C. C. A. 295; if, but for the use of the patented device, the defendant's device would not have been salable, the infringer is liable for the entire profits; Wales v. Mfg. Co., 101 Fed. 126, 41 C. C. A. 250; the profits recovery in equity may, in a proper case, exceed defendant's profits; Westinghouse v. Air Brake Co., 140 Fed. 545, 72 C. C. A. 61.

In equity, a plaintiff, though he has an established license fee, is not limited to the amount thereof as damages; but may instead of damages recover the profits the defendants have made; Tilghman v. Proctor, 125 U. S. 136, 8 Sup. Ct. 894, 31 L. Ed. 664.

The plaintiff may recover in equity as profits the advantages which the defendants have gained by using the invention, and a definite saving shown to have been made in the cost of manufacture; Tilghman v. Proctor, 125 U. S. 136, 8 Sup. Ct. 894, 31 L. Ed. 664. The expense of using the new process is to be ascertained from the manner in which the defendants have used it and not in the manner in which they might have used it; id.

A plaintiff cannot recover a defendant's entire profits unless the whole market value of defendant's article is shown to be due to the invention; Fay v. Allen, 30 Fed. 446, 24 Blatch. 275. But if the entire salability of the article is the result of the introduction of the patented feature, the plaintiff is entitled to all the profits made; McDonald v. Whitney, 39 Fed. 466; Hurlbut v. Schilling, 130 U. S. 456, 9 Sup. Ct. 584, 32 L. Ed. 1011. Where the invention apparently gave the device its value, the defendant must show the extent to which his own improvements were the cause of the profits which he had made; Morss v. Form Co., 39 Fed. 468. The profits are what the defendant made or saved; Vulcanite Pav. Co. v. Pavement Co., 36 Fed. 378. Nominal damages only are allowed where it is not shown what definite profits were due to the invention; Roemer v. Simon, 41 Fed. 41, 24 Blatch. 396; Everest v. Oil Co., 41 Fed. 742, 24 Blatch. 463; Fischer v. Hayes, 39 Fed. 613; or where plaintiff shows no established license fee, no market price, and no other use of the invention than by the defendant; Seattle v. McNamara, 81 Fed. 863, 26 C. C. A. 652.

Where the owner of a patent has a fixed license fee, this is the measure of damages for an infringement; May v. Fond Du Lac Co., 27 Fed. 691; this must be the license fee existing at the date of infringement; Hoe v. Kahler, 25 Fed. 274; one established afterwards may be considered, though it is not conclusive; Wooster v. Thornton, 26 Fed. 274; it is immaterial whether in such case the use of the invention has been profitable to the defendant. A single instance is not sufficient to establish a license fee; Graham v. Mfg. Co., 35 Fed. 597; but two instances may be; Cary v. Mfg. Co., 37 Fed. 654; it is not enough to show foreign license fees; Black v. Munson, 14 Blatchf. 265, Fed. Cas. No. 1,463. And a license fee must be shown by actual payment and not merely by promises to pay; Adams v. Stamping Co., 28 Fed. 360; nor by amount paid in settlement of a claim; Keyes v. Refining Co., 43 Fed. 478.

In the absence of an established license fee, damages must be shown by general evidence; Suffolk Co. v. Hayden, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 315, 18 L. Ed. 76; and there is a difference between infringement by sale and those by use. The measure of recovery in a suit in equity for infringement of patent is the gains and profits made by the infringer and such further damage as the proof shows that the complainant sustained in addition; but in an action at law the damages are measured only by the extent of the plaintiff's loss, as proved by the evidence, and when the evidence discloses the existence of no license fee, no impairment of the plaintiff's market, no damages of any kind, only nominal damages can be recovered; Coupe v. Royer, 155 U. S. 565, 15 Sup. Ct. 199, 39 L. Ed. 263.

Where the defendant's acts compelled the plaintiff to reduce his price, such loss is an item of damage; Mack v. Levy, 43 Fed. 72.

It is said that any attempt to classify the reported cases on damages would be futile; Rob. Pat. § 1061.

The statute of limitation is six years prior to the filing of the bill of complaint or the issuing of a writ at law; Act of March 3, 1897 (in effect January 1, 1898).

It is the province of the court to define the patented invention, as indicated by the language of the claims; and of the jury to determine whether, as so defined, it covers the defendant's article; Coupe v. Royer, 155 U. S. 565, 15 Sup. Ct. 199, 39 L. Ed. 263.

If one is employed to devise or perfect an instrument or a means for accomplishing a prescribed result, he cannot, after successfully accomplishing the work for which he was employed, plead title thereto as against his employer. What he accomplishes becomes the property of the employer. So when one is in the employ of another in a certain line of work and devises an improved instrument for that work and uses the property of his employer and the services of other employes to develop and put in practical form his invention, a jury or court is warranted in finding that the benefits resulting from his use of the property and the assistance of the coemployes of his employer have given to such employer an irrevocable license to use the invention; Gill v. U. S., 160 U. S. 426, 16 Sup. Ct. 322, 40 L. Ed. 480. But a railroad company is not entitled to the use of an invention of its master mechanic, when none of the company's material or labor entered into the perfecting of the invention or was devoted to its construction until after the patent had issued; Ft. Wayne, O. & L. R. Co. v. Haberkorn, 15 Ind. App. 479, 44 N. E. 322; and in Pressed Steel Car Co. v. Hansen, 137 Fed. 403, 71 C. C. A. 207, 2 L.

R. A. (N. S.) 1172; it was held that, in the absence of an express contract, the relation of employer and employe, under whatever circumstances, at least short of specific employment to make an invention, does not give the employer a right to the invention, or anything more than a shop-right or an irrevocable license to use it.

The fact that the patentee, when he made the invention, was general manager of a corporation, does not give the corporation any right in the patent; Johnson F. & E. Co. v. Furnace Co., 178 Fed. 819, 102 C. C. A. 267; where the patentee was president, it does not create an implied license to use the device of the patent; American S. Co. v. Stoker Co., 182 Fed. 642.

But where it was part of patentee's duty to improve the machinery, and the entire cost of the experiments, the building of an operative machine, and taking out patents was paid by the employer, who also built and installed machines in its factory under the patentee's directions, there was held to be an implied license to use these machines; Wilson v. Loom Co., 187 Fed. 840, 109 C. C. A. 600.

Patents can be granted to United States officers, except those in the patent office, without any fee, when the invention is used or to be used in the public service, but the patentee must file a stipulation, which must be inserted in the patent, that the invention may be used by the government and its officers in public work or by any other person in the United States; Act of March 3, 1883.

In patent cases, costs will not be awarded to complainant, where some of the claims sued on are withdrawn at the argument, and others are adjudged not infringed, although the decree sustains still other claims; Thomson-Houston Elec. Co. v. R. Co., 71 Fed. 886.

Jurisdiction of cases under the patent laws. The Judicial Code gives original jurisdiction to district courts of the United States in all cases arising under the laws of the United States granting exclusive privileges to inventors. This jurisdiction extends both to law and equity, and is irrespective of the citizenship of the parties or the amount in controversy. The jurisdiction of the federal courts is exclusive of that of the state courts; Elmer v. Pennel, 40 Me. 430. But this is to be understood of cases arising directly under the acts of congress, and not of those where the patent comes collaterally in question: as, for instance, where it is the subject-matter of a contract or the consideration of a promissory note; Nesmith v. Calvert, 1 W. & M. 34, Fed. Cas. No. 10,123; Rich v. Atwater, 16 Conn. 409. Hence a bill to enforce the specific performance of a contract for the sale of a patent-right is not such a case arising under the patent laws as gives jurisdiction to the federal courts; Marsh v. Nichols, S. & Co., 140

U. S. 344, 11 Sup. Ct. 798, 35 L. Ed. 413. A contract relating to a patent does not necessarily involve a federal question; Dale Tile Mfg. Co. v. Hyatt, 125 U. S. 46, 8 Sup. Ct. 756, 31 L. Ed. 683; Felix v. Scharnweber, 125 U. S. 54, 8 Sup. Ct. 759, 31 L. Ed. 687; Marsh v. Nichols, S. & Co., 140 U. S. 344, 11 Sup. Ct. 798, 35 L. Ed. 413. For the requirements of a bill on a patent, see McCoy v. Nelson, 121 U. S. 484, 7 Sup. Ct. 1000, 30 L. Ed. 1017. If a bill is filed so near the expiration of a patent that, under the rules, there could be no injunction, it will be dismissed; but if one could be obtained, though only three days before the expiration, the court may retain jurisdiction and proceed, with or without an injunction; Clark v. Wooster, 119 U. S. 322, 7 Sup. Ct. 217, 30 L. Ed. 392.

The expiration of a patent pending a suit for infringement does not defeat the jurisdiction of a court of equity, although it is a reason for denying an injunction which was the basis of equity jurisdiction; Beedle v. Bennett, 122 U. S. 71. A bill is not maintainable when filed only a few days before the patent expired; McDonald v. Miller, 84 Fed. 344.

Patent-right, note given for a. In many of the states, acts have been passed making void all notes given in consideration of a patent-right unless the words "given for a patent-right" are prominently written on the face of the note.

They usually provide that the maker shall have a defense against any holder. Such an act in Arkansas was held valid; Woods v. Carl, 203 U. S. 358, 27 Sup. Ct. 99, 51 L. Ed. 219; as a police regulation; Ozan Lumber Co. v. Bank, 207 U. S. 251, 28 Sup. Ct. 89, 52 L. Ed. 195. Also in Tod v. Wick, 36 Ohio St. 370; Pape v. Wright, 116 Ind. 502, 19 N. E. 459; Herdie v. Roessler, 109 N. Y. 127, 16 N. E. 198; contra, Hollida v. Hunt, 70 Ill. 109, 22 Am. Rep. 63; Crittenden v. White, 23 Minn. 24, 23 Am. Rep. 676. See many cases cited in 1 Dan. Neg. Instr. § 200. A state may provide that before the sale of a patent right, an authenticated copy of the letters patent and the authority of the vendor to sell shall first be filed in the clerk's office of the county; Allen v. Riley, 203 U. S. 347, 27 Sup. Ct. 95, 51 L. Ed. 216, 8 Ann. Cas. 137.

On the expiration of patents on the "Singer" sewing-machine, under which name it came to indicate a type of machine made by that company, the right to make the patented article and use the generic name passed to the public, but one using the name in selling such type of machines may be compelled to indicate that the articles made by him are his product and not the product of the owners of the extinct patent; Singer Mfg. Co. v. Mfg. Co., 163 U. S. 169, 16 Sup. Ct. 1002, 41 L. Ed. 118. See TRADE-MARK.

See CAVEAT; DEVICE; EXPERT; EXTENSION OF PATENTS; INFRINGEMENT; LABEL; RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

PATENT AMBIGUITY. An ambiguity which appears upon the face of an instrument. It is a settled rule that extrinsic evidence is not admissible to explain such an ambiguity. The general rule on the subject is thus stated in 2 Eng. Rul. Cas. 707: "Where a legal relation is sought to be established by means of a written instrument, if an uncertainty of intention appear by the expression of the instrument itself, the true intention cannot be ascertained by the aid of extrinsic evidence. For, as said by Lord Bacon (Maxims, Reg. 23), 'ambiguitas patens cannot be holpen by averment.'" 5 Bing. N. C. 425. See AMBIGUITY; LATENT AMBIGUITY.

PATENT OFFICE. See PATENT.

PATENT OFFICE, EXAMINERS IN. Officials in the United States patent office, whose chief duty it is to determine whether the subject-matter of applications for letters patent is such as to entitle the applicant to the grant of such letters. See PATENT OFFICE.

PATENT WRIT. A writ not closed or sealed up. Co. Litt. 289; 7 Co. 20.

PATENTEE. He to whom a patent has been granted. The term is usually applied to one who has obtained letters patent for an invention. See PATENT.

PATER (Lat.). Father. The term is frequently used in genealogical tables.

PATER-FAMILIAS (Lat.). In Civil Law. One who was sui juris, and not subject to the paternal power.

In order to give a correct idea of what was understood in the Roman law by this term, it is proper to refer briefly to the artificial organization of the Roman family,—the greatest moral phenomenon in the history of the human race. The comprehensive term familia embraced both persons and property; money, lands, houses, slaves, children, all constituted part of this artificial family, this juridical entity, this legal patrimony, the title to which was exclusively vested in the chief or pater-familias, who alone was capax domini, and who belonged to himself, was sui juris.

The word pater-familias is by no means equivalent to the modern expression father of a family, but means proprietor in the strongest sense of that term; it is he qui in domo dominium habet, in whom were centred all property, all power, all authority: he was, in a word, the lord and master, whose authority was unlimited. No one but he who was sui juris, who was pater-familias, was capable of exercising any right of property, or wielding any superiority or power over anything; for nothing could belong to him who was himself alieni juris. Hence the children of the fili familias, as well as those of slaves, belonged to the pater-familias. In the same manner, everything that was acquired by the sons or slaves formed a part of the familia, and, consequently, belonged to its chief. This absolute property and power of the pater-familias, only ceased with his life, unless he voluntarily parted with them by a sale; for the alienation by sale is invariably the symbol resorted to for the purpose of dissolving the stern dominion of the pater-familias over those belonging to the familia. Thus, both emancipation and adoption are the results of imaginary sales,—per imaginarias venditiones. As the daughter remained in the family of her father, grandfather, or great-grandfather, as the case might be, notwithstanding her marriage, it followed as a necessary consequence that the child never belonged to the same family as its mother: there is no civil relationship between them; they are natural relations,—cognati,—but they are not legally related to each other,—agnati; and therefore the child never inherits from its mother, nor the mother from her child. There was, however, a means by which the wife might enter into the family and subject herself to the power of her husband, in manu mariti, and thereby establish a legal relationship between herself and her husband. This marital power of the husband over the wife was generally acquired either coemptio, by the purchase of the wife by the husband from the pater-familias, or usu, by the prescription based on the possession of one year,—the same by which the title to movable property was acquired according to the principles governing the usucapio (usu copere, to obtain by use). Another mode of obtaining the same end was the confarreatio, a sacred ceremony performed by the breaking and eating of a small cake, farreum, by the married couple. It was supposed that by an observance of this ceremony the marital power was produced by the intervention of the gods. This solemn mode of celebrating marriages was peculiar to the patrician families. By means of these fictions and ceremonies the wife became in the eye of the law the daughter of her husband, and the sister of the children to whom she gave birth, who would otherwise have been strangers to her. Well might Gaius say, Fere nulli sunt homines qui talem in liberos habeant potestatem qualem nos habemus.

There is some similarity between the agnatio, or civil relationship, of the Romans, and the transmission of the name of the father, under the modern law, to all his descendants in the male line. The Roman law says of the children, patris, non matris, familiam sequuntur; we say, patris, non matris, nomen sequuntur. All the members of the family who, with us, bear the same name, were under that law agnates, or constituted the agnatio, or civil family. Those children only belonged to the family, and were subject to the paternal power, who had been conceived in justis nuptiis, or been adopted. Nuptiæ, or matrimonium, was a marriage celebrated in conformity with the peculiar rules of the civil law. There existed a second kind of marriage, call concubinatus,—a valid union and a real marriage,—which has been often improperly confounded, even by high authority, with concubinage. This confusion of ideas is attributable to a superficial examination of the subject; for the illicit intercourse between a man and a woman which we call concubinage was stigmatized by the opprobrious term stuprum by the Romans, and is spoken of in the strongest terms of reprobation. The concubinatus was the natural marriage, and the only one which those who did not enjoy the jus connubii were permitted to contract. The Roman law recognized two species of marriage, the one civil, and the other natural, in the same manner as there were two kinds of relationship, the agnatio and cognatio. The justæ nuptiæ or justum matrimonium, or civil marriage, could only be contracted by Roman citizens and by those to whom the jus connubii had been conceded: this kind of marriage alone produced the paternal power, the right of inheritance, etc.

But the rapid rise and extraordinary greatness of the city attracted immense crowds of strangers, who, not possessing the jus connubii, could form no other union than that of the concubinatus, which, though authorized by law, did not give rise to those legal effects which flowed from the justæ nuptiæ. By adoption, the person adopted was transferred from one family to another; he passed from the paternal power of one pater-familias to that of another: consequently, no one who was sui juris could be adopted in the strict sense of that word. But there was another species of adoption, called adrogatio, by which a person sui juris entered into another family, and subjected himself to the paternal power of its chief. The effect of the adrogatio was not confined to the person adrogatus alone, but extended over his family and property. 1 Marcade 75.

This extraordinary organization of the Roman family, and the unlimited powers and authority vested in the pater-familias, continued until the reign of Justinian, who by his 118th Novel, enacted on the 9th of August, 544, abolished the distinction between the agnatio and cognatio, and established the order of inheritance which, with some modifications, continues to exist at the present day in all countries whose jurisprudence is based on the civil law. See Maine, Anc. L. Ch. 5; GENS; PATRIA POTESTAS; PECULIUM.

PATERNA PATERNIS (Lat. the father's to the father's). In French Law. An expression used to signify that, in a succession, the property coming from the father of the deceased descends to his paternal relations.

PATERNAL. That which belongs to the father or comes from him: as paternal power, paternal relation, paternal estate, paternal line. See LINE.

PATERNAL POWER. The authority lawfully exercised by parents over their children. See FATHER; PATRIA POTESTAS.

PATERNAL PROPERTY. That which descends or comes from the father and other ascendants or collaterals of the paternal stock. Domat, Liv. Préf. tit. 3, s. 2, n. 11.

PATERNITY. The state or condition of a father.

The husband is prima facie presumed to be the father of his wife's children born during coverture or within a competent time afterwards: pater is est quem nuptiæ demonstrant; Tate v. Penne, 7 Mart. N. S. (La.) 553. So if the child is en ventre sa mère at time of marriage; Co. Litt. 123; 8 East 192. In civil law the presumption holds in case of a child born before marriage as well as after; 1 Bla. Com. 446, 454; Fleta, lib. 1, c. 6. In cases of marriage of a widow within ten months after decease of husband, the paternity is to be decided by circumstances; Hargrave, note to Co. Litt. § 188. Marriage within ten months after decease of husband was forbidden by Roman, Danish, and Saxon law, and English law before the Conquest; 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 481; Brooke, Abr. Bastardy, pl. 18; Palm. 10; 1 Bla. Com. 456. See ANNUS LUCRUS.

The presumption of paternity may always be rebutted by showing circumstances which render it impossible that the husband can be the father; Com. v. Shepherd, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 283, 6 Am. Dec. 449; 2 Myl. & K. 349; Cross

v. Cross, 3 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 139, 23 Am. Dec. 778; 1 S. & S. 150.

The declarations of one or both of the spouses, however, cannot affect the condition of a child born during the marriage; Tate v. Penne, 7 Mart. N. S. (La.) 553; Cross v. Cross, 3 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 139, 23 Am. Dec. 778. See ACCESS; BASTARD; BASTARDY; LEGITIMACY; PREGNANCY; PARENT AND CHILD.

PATHOLOGY. In Medical Jurisprudence. The science or doctrine of diseases. In cases of homicides, abortions, and the like, it is of great consequence to the legal practitioner to be acquainted in some degree with pathology. 2 Chitty, Pr. 42, n.

PATIBULUM. A gallows or gibbet. Fle-ta, l. 2, c. 3, § 9.

PATRIA (Lat.). The country; the men of the neighborhood competent to serve on a jury; a jury. This word is nearly synonymous with pais, which see.

PATRIA POTESTAS (Lat.). In Civil Law. The paternal power; the authority which the law vests in the father over the persons and property of his legitimate children.

In the early period of the Roman history, the paternal authority was unlimited: the father had the absolute control over his children, and might even, as the domestic magistrate of his family, condemn them to death. They could acquire nothing except for the benefit of the pater-familias; and they were even liable to be sold and reduced to slavery by the author of their existence. But in the progress of civilization this stern rule was gradually relaxed.

There are several instances given in which the emperors interfered to moderate the severity of fathers, and the power to kill the child was restricted and finally abolished during the empire. The father could originally abandon his male child to relieve himself of responsibility for it, but this was forbidden by the Institutes. Inst. 4, 8, 7. Over the property of the child the rights of the father were as absolute as over that of the slave; but this power was also moderated under the emperors until in the time of Justinian it was practically destroyed. The power of the pater-familias extended to all descendants in the male line, and it was not lost even over those who held the highest offices in the state or became victorious generals.

The children of a daughter were not subject to the paternal authority of her own father but entered into the family of her husband. The paternal power was never exercised by a woman, even if she were herself sui juris. It is for this reason, Ulpian observes, that the family of which a woman, sui juris, was the head, mater-familias, commenced and ended with her: mulier autem familie sue et caput et finis est. 1 Ortolan 191.

See PATER-FAMILIAS; PECULIUM.

The modern civil law has hardly preserved any features of the old Roman jurisprudence concerning the paternal power.

The Louisiana code provides that a child owes honor, respect, and obedience to the parents, but even the power of correction ceases with the age of puberty, and boys at fourteen and girls at twelve years of age may leave the paternal roof in opposition to the will of their parents. By modern law the paternal authority is vested in both parents, but usually exercised by the father alone. During the marriage the parents are entitled to the property of their minor children, subject to the obligation of support and education, paying taxes, repairs, etc. The paternal power ceases with the death of one spouse and is succeeded by tutorship, which, however, usually devolves upon the surviving parent, who can also at death appoint a testamentary tutor.

PATRICIDE. One guilty of killing his father. See PARRICIDE.

PATRIMONIAL. A thing which comes from the father, and, by extension, from the mother or other ancestor.

PATRIMONIUM. In Civil Law. That which is capable of being inherited.

Things capable of being possessed by a single person exclusively of all others are, in the Roman or civil law, said to be in patrimonio; when incapable of being so possessed, they are extra patrimonium.

Most things may be inherited; but there are some which are said to be extra patrimonium, or which are not in commerce. These are such as are common, as the light of heaven, the air, the sea, and the like; things public, as rivers, harbors, roads, creeks, ports, arms of the sea, the sea-shore, highways, bridges, and the like; things which belong to cities and municipal corporations, as public squares, streets, market-houses, and the like. See 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 421.

PATRIMONY. Any kind of property. Such estate as has descended in the same family; estates which have descended or been devised in a direct line from the father, and, by extension, from the mother or other ancestor. It has been held that the word is not necessarily restricted to property inherited directly from the father. 5 Ir. Ch. Rep. 525.

PATRINUS (Lat.). A godfather.

PATRON. In Ecclesiastical Law. He who has the disposition and gift of an ecclesiastical benefice.

In Roman Law. The former master of a freedman. Dig. 2. 4. 8. 1.

PATRONAGE. The right of appointing to office; as, the patronage of the President of the United States, if abused, may endanger the liberties of the people.

In Ecclesiastical Law. The right of presentation to a church or ecclesiastical benefice. 2 Bla. Com. 21.

PATRONIZE. To act as patron towards. The occupants of a house cannot be said to patronize it; Raymond v. People, 9 Ill. App. 344. See More v. Bennett, 48 N. Y. 472.

PATRONUS (Lat.). In Roman Law. A modification of the Latin word pater, father. A denomination applied by Romulus to the first senators of Rome, and which they always afterwards bore.

It is said that Romulus at first appointed a hundred of them. Seven years afterward, in consequence of the association of Tatius to the Romans, a hundred more were appointed, chosen from the Sabines. Tarquinius Priscus increased the number to three hundred. Those appointed by Romulus and Tatius were called patres majorem gentium, and the others were called patres minorum gentium. These and their descendants constituted the nobility of Rome. The rest of the people were called plebeians, every one of whom was obliged to choose one of these fathers as his patron. The relation thus constituted involved important consequences. The plebeian, who was called cliens (a client).

was obliged to furnish the means of maintenance to his chosen patron, to furnish a portion for his patron's daughters, to ransom him and his sons if captured by an enemy, and pay all sums recovered against him by judgment of the courts. The patron, on the other hand, was obliged to watch over the interests of his client, whether present or absent, to protect his person and property, and especially to defend him in all actions brought against him for any cause. Neither could accuse or bear testimony against the other, or give contrary votes, etc. The contract was of a sacred nature; the violation of it was a sort of treason, and punishable as such. According to Cicero (De Repub. ii. 9), this relation formed an integral part of the governmental system. Et habuit plebem in clientela principum descriptum, which he affirms was eminently useful. Blackstone traces the system of vassalage to this ancient relation of patron and client. It was, in fact, of the same nature as the feudal institutions of the middle ages, designed to maintain order in a rising state by a combination of the opposing interests of the aristocracy and of the common people, upon the principle of reciprocal bonds for mutual interests. Ultimately, by force of radical changes in the institution, the word patronus came to signify nothing more than an advocate.

PATROON. In New York. The lord of a manor. A proprietor of a tract of land with manorial privileges granted under the Dutch government of New York and New Jersey. Cent. Dict.

PATRUEUS (Lat.). In Civil Law. A cousin-german by the father's side; the son or daughter of a father's brother. Dig. 38. 10. 1.

PATRUUS (Lat.). In Civil Law. An uncle by the father's side; a father's brother. Dig. 38. 10. 10. Patruus magnus is a grandfather's brother, grand-uncle. Patruus major is a great-grandfather's brother. Patruus maximus is a great-grandfather's father's brother.

PAUPER (Lat. poor). One so poor that he must be supported at the public expense.

A laboring man, who has always been able to make a living, and who, until his last sickness, has never had occasion to ask or receive charity, is not a pauper, although without money or property with which to pay the expense of that sickness; Lander Co. v. Humboldt Co., 21 Nev. 415, 32 Pac. 849. See 16 Viner, Abr. 259; Woodf. Landl. & T. 201.

Before a person can be admitted to sue or defend as a pauper, proof must be given that he is not worth £25, his wearing apparel and the subject-matter of the cause or matter only excepted. He is exempt from court fees. Counsel may be assigned to him, and no fees can be taken from him. Brett, Comm. 681. See POOR; IN FORMA PAUPERIS.

PAUPERIES (Lat.). In Civil Law. Poverty. In a technical sense, Damnum absque injuria: i. e. a damage done without wrong on the part of the doer: e. g. damage done by an irrational being, as an animal. L. 1, § 3, D. si quod paup. fec.; Calvinus, Lex.

PAVE. To cover with stone, brick, concrete, or any other substantial matter, making a smooth and level surface. In re Phillips, 60 N. Y. 22.

To lay or cover with stone, brick, or other material, so as to make a firm, level, or convenient surface for horses, carriages, or persons on foot to travel on. It means as well to cover with asphalt or concrete, as to lay or cover with stone; Morse v. West Port, 110 Mo. 502, 19 S. W. 831.

The laying of a cross walk comes within the general designation of paving; In re Petition of Burke, 62 N. Y. 224; paving includes flagging, as well as other modes of making a smooth surface for streets and sidewalks; In re Petition of Burmeister, 76 N. Y. 181; Schenectady v. Union College, 66 Hun 179, 21 N. Y. Supp. 147. A footway made up with gravel, but not paved with stone or flags is a pavement; 15 Q. B. D. 652; 54 L. J. M. C. 147. To pave a street has been held not to include curbing and sidewalks; McAllister v. Tacoma, 9 Wash. 272, 37 Pac. 447, 658.

PAVIAGE. A contribution or tax for paving streets or highways.

PAWN. A pledge. A pledge includes, in Louisiana, a pawn and an antichresis; but sometimes pawn is used as the general word, including pledge and antichresis. La. Civ. Code, art. 3101; Hennen, Dig. Pledge. See PLEDGE.

PAWNBROKER. One whose business it is to lend money, usually in small sums, upon pawn or pledge. An ordinance requiring pawnbrokers to keep a book in which shall be entered a description of all property left in pawn, with the name and description of the pledgor and to submit such book to the inspection of the mayor or any police officer on demand, is a valid police regulation; St. Joseph v. Levin, 128 Mo. 588, 31 S. W. 101, 49 Am. St. Rep. 577; Lauder v. Chicago, 111 Ill. 291, 53 Am. Rep. 625. And one forbidding them to purchase certain specified articles is not unreasonable as imposing upon pawnbrokers a penalty for doing that which is lawful for other persons to do, as a city may not only regulate their business, but suppress and prohibit it; Kuhp v. Chicago, 30 Ill. App. 203.

An ordinance requiring pawnbrokers to take out a license is not authorized by a statute empowering city councils to make by-laws and ordinances not inconsistent with the laws of the state and necessary to carry out the object of the corporation; Shuman v. Ft. Wayne, 127 Ind. 109, 26 N. E. 560, 11 L. R. A. 378. See Schaul v. Charlotte, 118 N. C. 733, 24 S. E. 526; LICENSE; ORDINANCE; POLICE POWER.

PAWNEE. He who receives a pawn or pledge. See PLEDGE.

PAWNOR. One who, being liable to an engagement, gives to the person to whom he is liable a thing to be held as a security for the payment of his debt or the fulfilment of his liability. 2 Kent 577. See PLEDGE.

PAX REGIS (Lat.). That peace or security for life and goods which the king promises to all persons under his protection. Bract. lib. 3, c. 11. See PEACE.

In ancient times there were certain limits which were known by this name. The pax regis, or verge of the court, as it was afterwards called, extended from the palace-gate to the distance of three miles, three furlongs, three acres, nine feet, nine palms, and nine barleycorns; Crabb, C. L. 41; or from the four sides of the king's residence, four miles, three furlongs, nine acres in breadth, nine feet, nine barleycorns, etc.; LL. Edw. Conf. c. 12; LL. Hen. I.

PAY. To discharge a debt, to deliver a creditor the value of a debt, either in money or in goods, to his acceptance, by which the debt is discharged. Beals v. Ins. Co., 36 N. Y. 527. See Tolman v. Ins. Co., 1 Cush. (Mass.) 76.

PAY. A fixed and definite amount given by law to persons in military service in consideration of and as compensation for their personal services. Sherburne v. U. S., 16 Ct. Cl. 496. See LONGEVITY PAY.

Payable in trade. Payable in such article as the promisor deals in. Dudley v. Vose, 114 Mass. 34.

PAYEE. The person in whose favor a bill of exchange is made payable. See BILLS OF EXCHANGE.

PAYMENT. The fulfilment of a promise, or the performance of an agreement.

The discharge in money of a sum due.

It implies the existence of a debt, of a party to whom it is owed, and of a satisfaction of the debt to that party; Tuttle v. Armstead, 53 Conn. 175, 22 Atl. 677.

The word payment is not a technical term: it has been imported into legal proceedings from the exchange, and not from law treatises. When payment is pleaded as a defense, the defendant must prove the payment of money, or something accepted in its stead, made to the plaintiff or to some person authorized in his behalf to receive it; 2 Greenl. Ev. 509.

Payment, in its most general acceptation, is the accomplishment of every obligation, whether it consists in giving or in doing: solutio est præstatio ejus quod in obligatione est.

It follows, therefore, that every act which, while it extinguishes the obligation, has also for its object the release of the debtor and his exemption from liability, is not payment. Payment is doing precisely what the payer has agreed to do. Solvere dicitur cum aliquis fecit quod facere promissit.

However, practically, the name of payment is often given to methods of release which are not accompanied by the performance of the thing promised. Restrinzimus solutiones ad compensationem, ad novationem, ad delegationem, et ad numerationem.

In a more restricted sense, payment is the discharge in money of a sum due. Numeratio est nummaria solutio. 5 Massé, Droit commercial 229. That a payment may extinguish a debt, it must be made by a person who has a right to make it, to a person who is entitled to receive it, in something proper to be received both as to kind and quality, and at the appointed place and time.

In the civil law, it is said, where payment is something to be done, it must be done by the debtor himself. If I hire a mechanic to build a steam-engine for me, he cannot against my will substitute in his stead another workman. Where it is something to be given, the general rule is that it can be paid by any one, whether a co-obligor, or surety, or even a third person who has no interest; except that in this last case subrogation will prevent the extinction of the debt as to the debtor, unless the payer at the time of payment act in the name of the debtor, or in his own name to release the debtor. See SUBROGATION.

What constitutes payment. According to Comyns, payment by merchants must be made in money or by bill; Com. Dig. Merchant (F).

Payment must be made in money, unless the obligation is, by the terms of the instrument creating it, to be discharged by other means. Congress has, by the constitution, power to decide what shall be a legal tender; that is, in what form the creditor may demand his payment or must receive it if offered; and congress has determined this by statutes. The same power is exercised by the government of all civilized countries. See LEGAL TENDER.

In England, Bank of England notes are legal tender. But the creditors may waive this right, and anything which he has accepted as satisfaction for the debt will be considered as payment. What the parties agree shall constitute payment, the law will adjudge to be payment; Weir v. Hudnut, 115 Ind. 525, 18 N. E. 24.

The character of the money current at the time fixed for performance of, and not at the time of making, a contract, is the medium in which payment may be made; San Juan v. Gas Co., 195 U. S. 510, 25 Sup. Ct. 108, 49 L. Ed. 299, 1 Ann. Cas. 796. Although a coin is worn and cracked, yet if it still retains evidence of being genuine, it is not deprived of its legal tender quality, and is valid for payment of a street car fare; Cincinnati Northern T. Co. v. Rosnagle, 84 Ohio St. 310, 95 N. E. 884, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1030, Ann. Cas. 1912C, 639.

A debt contracted in a foreign country is payable in the currency of that country, and therefore, where the creditor sues in the United States, he is entitled to recover such sum in the money of the United States as equals the debt in the foreign country where it was payable; Grunwald v. Freese, 4 Cal. Unrep. 182, 34 Pac. 73. Where rent is payable in coin, its value is to be estimated at the market price of the coin at the time and place of payment; Gilbreath v. Dilday, 152 Ill. 207, 38 N. E. 572. See GOLD.

Upon a plea of payment, the defendant may prove a discharge in bank-notes, negotiable notes of individuals, or a debt already due from the payee, delivered and accepted or discounted as payment; Phil. Ev. Cowen & H. ed. n. 387. Bank-notes, in conformity to usage and common understanding, are regarded as cash; 1 Burr. 452; Keith v. Jones, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 120; Foley v. Mason, 6 Md. 37; unless objected to; Wheeler v.

Knaggs, 8 Ohio 169; 2 Cr. & J. 16, n.; Sea-well v. Henry, 6 Ala. 226. Treasury notes are not cash; Foquet v. Hoadley, 3 Conn. 534. Giving a check is not considered as payment; the holder may treat it as a nullity if he derives no benefit from it, provided he has not been guilty of negligence so as to cause injury to the drawer; 4 Ad. & E. 952; People v. Howell, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 296; Barnet v. Smith, 30 N. H. 256, 64 Am. Dec. 290; Comptoir D'Escompte de Paris v. Dresbach, 78 Cal. 15, 20 Pac. 28. See National Park Bank v. Levy, 17 R. I. 746, 24 Atl. 777, 19 L. R. A. 475; Good v. Singleton, 39 Minn. 340, 40 N. W. 359; Tiddy v. Harris, 101 N. C. 589, 8 S. E. 227; Barton v. Hunter, 59 Mo. App. 610. But see Downey v. Hicks, 14 How. (U. S.) 240, 14 L. Ed. 404. Giving a check is a conditional payment, and the debt is discharged only when the check is paid, unless it was agreed that the check should be received in satisfaction of the debt; Greenwich Ins. Co. v. Imp. Co., 76 Hun 194, 27 N. Y. Supp. 794.

Payment in forged bills is generally a nullity, both in England and this country; Bank of U. S. v. Bank of Georgia, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 333, 6 L. Ed. 334; Markle v. Hatfield, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 455, 3 Am. Dec. 446; Keene v. Thompson, 4 Gill & J. (Md.) 463; Simms v. Clark, 11 Ill. 137; Ramsdale v. Horton, 3 Pa. 330; Eagle Bank v. Smith, 5 Conn. 71, 13 Am. Dec. 37. So also of counterfeit coin; but an agreement to sell goods and accept specific money is good, and payment in these coins is valid even though they be counterfeit; 1 Term 225; Curdier v. Pennock, 14 S. & R. (Pa.) 51. The forged notes must be returned in a reasonable time, to throw the loss upon the debtor, Pindall's Ex'rs v. Bank, 7 Leigh (Va.) 617; Simms v. Clark, 11 Ill. 137. Payment to a bank in its own notes which are received and afterwards discovered to be forged is a good payment; 2 Parsons, Contr. 622, n. A forged check received as cash and passed to the credit of the customer is good payment; Levy v. Bank, 4 Dall. (U. S.) 234, 1 L. Ed. 814; Bank of St. Albans v. Bank, 10 Vt. 141, 33 Am. Dec. 188. Payment in bills of an insolvent bank, where both parties were innocent, has been held no payment; 7 Term 64; Ontario Bank v. Lightbody, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 101, 27 Am. Dec. 179; Pool v. Hathaway, 22 Me. 85. On the other hand, it has been held good payment in Bayard v. Shunk, 1 W. & S. (Pa.) 92, 37 Am. Dec. 441; Young v. Adams, 6 Mass. 185; Scruggs v. Gass, 8 Yerg. (Tenn.) 175, 29 Am. Dec. 114. See Richmond v. Irons, 121 U. S. 27, 7 Sup. Ct. 788, 30 L. Ed. 864. The point is still unsettled, and it is said to be a question of intention rather than of law; Story, Pr. Notes 125, 477*, 641. The payment of bonds, secured by a mortgage, made in Confederate money during the Civil War is held to have been received in good faith, and if accepted and acquiesced in for a long time, a court of equity will not interfere; Washington v. Ople, 145 U. S. 214, 12 Sup. Ct. 822, 36 L. Ed. 680.

If a bill of exchange or promissory note be given to a creditor and accepted as payment, it shall be a good payment; Benj. Sales 726; Com. Dig. Merchant (F); Coburn v. Odell, 30 N. H. 540; Mooring v. Ins. Co., 27 Ala. 254; Viser v. Bertrand, 14 Ark. 267; Bangor v. Warren, 34 Me. 324, 56 Am. Dec. 657. But regularly a bill of exchange or note given to a creditor shall not be a discharge of the debt till payment of the bill, unless so accepted; 1 Salk. 124.

If the debtor gives his own promissory note, it is held generally not to be payment, unless it be shown that it was so intended; Peter v. Beverly, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 567, 9 L. Ed. 522; Smith v. Smith, 27 N. H. 244; Burdick v. Green, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 247; 26 E. L. & E. 56.

If payment be made in the note of a factor or agent employed to purchase goods, or intrusted with the money to be paid for them, if the note be received as payment, it will be good in favor of the principal; 1 B. & Ald. 14; 7 B. & C. 17; but not if received conditionally; and this is a question of fact for the jury; Corlies v. Cumming, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 181.

It is said that an agreement to receive the debtor's own note in payment must be expressed; Porter v. Talcott, 1 Cow. (N. Y.) 359; Combination S. & I. Co. v. Ry. Co., 47 Minn. 207, 49 N. W. 744; Price v. Barnes, 7 Ind. App. 1, 31 N. E. 809, 34 N. E. 408; and when so expressed it extinguishes the debt; New York State Bank v. Fletcher, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 85; Caldwell v. Hall, 49 Ark. 508, 1 S. W. 62, 4 Am. St. Rep. 64; Pritchard v. Smith, 77 Ga. 463; but if such be not the express agreement of the parties, it only operates to extend the period of the payment of the debt; Segrist v. Crabtree, 131 U. S. 287, 9 Sup. Ct. 687, 33 L. Ed. 125. Whether there was such an agreement is a question for the jury; Johnson v. Weed, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 310, 6 Am. Dec. 279; Segrist v. Crabtree, 131 U. S. 287, 9 Sup. Ct. 687, 33 L. Ed. 125. Acceptance of an indorsed note of a debtor in payment for goods sold, merges and extinguishes the original debt; Strauss v. Trotter, 6 Misc. 77, 26 N. Y. Supp. 20. But the giving of a void note for an indebtedness does not pay it; Hartshorn v. Hartshorn, 67 N. H. 163, 29 Atl. 406.

A bill of exchange drawn on a third person and accepted discharges the debt as to the drawer; 10 Mod. 37; and in an action to recover the price of goods, payment by a bill not dishonored has been held a good defence; 4 Bingh. 454; 5 Maule & S. 62.

Retaining a draft on a third party an unreasonable length of time will operate as payment if loss be occasioned thereby; Raymond v. Baar, 13 S. & R. (Pa.) 318, 15

Am. Dec. 603; Gallagher v. Roberts, 2 Wash. C. C. 191, Fed. Cas. No. 5,195. Ans. Contr. 359. The receipt of a draft, in the absence of an express agreement, does not constitute a payment of the debt for which the draft is drawn; Stewart Paper Mfg. Co. v. Rau, 92 Ga. 511, 17 S. E. 748.

In the sale of a chattel, if the note of a third person be accepted for the price, it is good payment; Rew v. Barber, 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 272; 1 D. & B. 291. Not so, however, if the note be the promise of one of the partners in payment of a partnership debt; Horton v. Child, 15 N. C. 460.

In Maine and Massachusetts, the presumption, where a negotiable note is taken, whether it be the debtor's promise or that of a third person, is that it is intended as payment; Mancely v. McGee, 6 Mass. 143, 4 Am. Dec. 105; Gooding v. Morgan, 37 Me. 419. The fact that a note was usurious and void was allowed to overcome this presumption; Johnson v. Johnson, 11 Mass. 361. Generally, the question will depend upon the fact whether the payment was to have been made in notes or the receiving them was a mere accommodation to the purchaser; Salem Bank v. Bank, 17 Mass. 1, 9 Am. Dec. 111. And the presumption never attaches where non-negotiable notes are given; Edmond v. Caldwell, 15 Me. 340.

Payment may be made through the intervention of a third party who acts as the agent of both parties: as, for example, a stakeholder. If the money be deposited with him to abide the event of a legal wager, neither party can claim it until the wager is determined, and then he is bound to pay it to the winner; 4 Campb. 37. If the wager is illegal, the depositor may reclaim the money at any time before it is paid over; 8 B. & C. 221; 29 E. L. & E. 424. And at any time after notice given in such case he may hold the stakeholder responsible, even though he may have paid it over; see 2 Pars. Contr. 138.

An auctioneer is often a stakeholder, as in case of money deposited to be made over to the vender if a good title is made out. In such case the purchaser cannot reclaim except on default in receiving a clear title. But if the contract has been rescinded by the parties there need be no notice to the stakeholder in case of a failure to perform the condition; 2 M. & W. 244; 1 M. & R. 614.

A payment of a debt by a stranger without the debtor's request, if accepted as such by the creditor, discharges the debt so far as the creditor is concerned, and also as to the debtor, if he ratify it; Crumlish's Adm'r v. Imp. Co., 38 W. Va. 390, 18 S. E. 456, 23 L. R. A. 120, 45 Am. St. Rep. 872.

A transfer of funds, called by the civil-law phrase a payment by delegation, is payment only when completely effected; 2 Pars. Contr. 137; and an actual transfer of claim or credit assented to by all the parties is a good payment; 5 B. & Ald. 228; Butterfield v. Hartshorn, 7 N. H. 345, 26 Am. Dec. 741; Heaton v. Angier, 7 N. H. 397, 28 Am. Dec. 353; Arnold v. Lyman, 17 Mass. 400, 9 Am. Dec. 154. This seems to be very similar to payment by drawing and acceptance of a bill of exchange.

Where a purchaser contracts to pay a certain amount in printing, the seller cannot enforce the collection of such amount in cash, as a profit presumably attaches to the printing; Allen v. Wall, 7 Wash. 316, 35 Pac. 65; unless, of course, the party declines to pay in printing.

Foreclosure of a mortgage given to secure a debt operates as payment made when the foreclosure is complete; but if the property mortgaged does not produce a sum equal in value to the amount of the debt then due, it is payment pro tanto only; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 324; Amory v. Fairbanks, 3 Mass. 562; Case v. Boughton, 11 Wend. (N. Y.) 106. A transfer of a worthless mortgage in payment of a debt, does not discharge the debt where neither party at the time of the transfer knew that the mortgage was worthless; Walrath v. Abbott, 75 Hun 445, 27 N. Y. Supp. 529. A legacy also is payment, if the intention of the testator that it should be so considered can be shown, and if the debt was liquidated at the death of the testator; 1 Esp. 187; Strong v. Williams, 12 Mass. 391, 7 Am. Dec. 81; Williams v. Crary, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 368; Blair v. White, 61 Vt. 110, 17 Atl. 49. See LEGACY.

When money is sent by letter, even though the money is lost, it is good payment and the debtor is discharged, if he was expressly authorized or directed by the creditor so to send it, or if such authority can be presumed from the course of trade; Benj. Sales 727; 11 M. & W. 233; and in the case of an insurance premium, such premium is held to be paid when the letter containing it is deposited in the postoffice, addressed to the company; McCluskey v. Nat. L. Ass'n, 77 Hun 556, 28 N. Y. Supp. 931. But, even if the authority be given or inferred, at least ordinary diligence must be used by the debtor to have the money safely conveyed. See Wakefield v. Lithgow, 3 Mass. 249; Ry. & M. 149; 1 Exch. 477.

The payment must have been accepted knowingly. Many instances are given in the older writers to illustrate acceptance; thus if the money is counted out, and the payee takes a part and puts it in a bag, this is a good payment, and if any be lost it is the payee's loss; 5 Mod. 398. Where A paid B £100 in redemption of a mortgage, and B bade C put it in his closet, and C did so, and A demanded his papers, which B refused to deliver, and A demanded back his money, and B directed C to give it to him, and C did, it was held to be a payment of the mortgage; Viner, Abr. Payment (E).

When interest coupons on railroad bonds have been presented and paid at the usual place of payment, with money furnished by a third party, a private arrangement between such third party and the mortgagor that the transaction shall constitute a purchase of the coupons and not payment, will not be enforced against the bondholders; Fidelity Ins. T. & S. D. Co. v. R. Co., 138 Pa. 494, 21 Atl. 21, 21 Am. St. Rep. 911. One who lends money to a company to take up its coupons, is not entitled to be paid out of funds in the hands of the receiver; Newport & C. B. Co. v. Douglass, 12 Bush (Ky.) 673.

Generally, there can be but little doubt as to acceptance or non-acceptance, and the question is one of fact for the jury to determine under the circumstances of each particular case.

Evidence of payment. Evidence that any thing has been done and accepted as payment is evidence of payment.

A receipt is prima facie evidence of payment; but a receipt acknowledging the payment of ten dollars and acquitting and releasing from all obligations would be a receipt for ten dollars only; 5 B. & Ald. 696; Rich v. Lord, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 325. And a receipt is only prima facie evidence of payment; 2 Taunt. 241; Southwick v. Hayden, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 334; Salazar v. Taylor, 18 Colo. 538, 33 Pac. 369. For cases explaining this rule, see, also, Stackpole v. Arnold, 11 Mass. 27, 6 Am. Dec. 150; Johnson v. Weed, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 310; Agnew v. McGill, 96 Ala. 496, 11 South. 537. And it may be shown that the particular sum stated in the receipt was not paid, and, also, that no payment has been made; 2 Term 366; Fuller v. Crittenden, 9 Conn. 401, 23 Am. Dec. 364; Dutton v. Tilden, 13 Pa. 46. As against strangers thereto, a receipt is incompetent evidence of the payment thereby acknowledged; Ellison v. Albright, 41 Neb. 93, 59 N. W. 703, 29 L. R. A. 737. See RECEIPT.

Payment may be presumed by the jury in the absence of direct evidence; thus, possession by the debtor of a security after the day of payment, which security is usually given up upon payment of the debt, is prima facie evidence of payment by the debtor; 1 Stark. 374; Weidner v. Schweigart, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 385; Smith v. Gardner, 36 Neb. 741, 55 N. W. 245.

If an acceptor produce a bill of exchange, this is said to afford in England no presumption of payment unless it is shown to have been in circulation after he accepted it; 2 Campb. 439. But in the United States such possession is prima facie evidence of payment; Patton's Adm'rs v. Ash, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 116; People v. Howell, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 296; Dennie v. Hart, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 204. Payment is conclusively presumed from lapse of time. After twenty years' non-demand, unexplained, the court will presume a payment without the aid of a jury; 1 Campb.

27; Williams v. Mitchell, 112 Mo. 300, 20 S. W. 647; In re Smith's Estate, 152 Pa. 102, 25 Atl. 315; Idler v. Borgmeyer, 65 Fed. 910, 13 C. C. A. 198. Facts which destroy the reason of this rule may rebut the presumption; Knight v. McKinney, 84 Me. 107, 24 Atl. 744; Beekman v. Hamlin, 23 Or. 313, 31 Pac. 707. See Matter of Looram, 73 Hun 177, 25 N. Y. Supp. 877. And a jury may infer payment from a shorter lapse of time, especially if there be attendant circumstances favoring the presumption; Lesley v. Nones, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 410. The statute of limitations does not apply to an action by a legatee to collect a legacy which is a charge on land, and no presumption of payment arises from the lapse of twenty years; Williams v. Williams, 82 Wis. 393, 52 N. W. 429. Where an indebtedness is shown, it is presumed to remain unpaid until the contrary is shown; Diel v. Stegner, 56 Mo. App. 535.

In a suit to enforce a vendor's lien the acknowledgment of payment contained in the deed is only prima facie evidence of payment; Koch v. Roth, 150 Ill. 212, 37 N. E. 317.

A presumption may rise from the course of dealing between the parties, or the regular course of trade; Tayl. Ev. 194. Thus, after two years it was presumed that a workman had been paid, as it was shown that the employer paid his workmen every Saturday night, and this man had been seen waiting among others; 1 Esp. 296.

A receipt for the last year's or quarter's rent is prima facie evidence of the payment of all the rents previously due; Brewer v. Knapp, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 332. If the last instalment on a bond is paid in due form, it is evidence that the others have been paid; if paid in a different form, that the parties are acting under a new agreement.

Where receipts had been regularly given for the same amount, but for a sum smaller than was due by the agreement, it was held evidence of full payment; Girod v. Mayor, 4 Mart. O. S. (La.) 698.

Who may make payment. Payment may be made by the primary debtor, and by other persons from whom the creditor has a right to demand it.

An agent may make payment for his principal. An attorney may discharge the debt against his client; 5 Bingh. 506. One of any number of joint and several obligors, or one of several joint obligors, may discharge the debt; Viner, Abr. Payment (B). Payment may be made by a third person, a stranger to the contract.

It may be stated, generally, that any act done by any person in discharge of the debt, if accepted by the creditor, will operate as payment. In the civil law there are many exceptions to this rule, introduced by the operation of the principle of subrogation. Most of these have no application in the common law, but have been adopted, in some instances, as a part of the law merchant. See SUBROGATION; CONTRIBUTION.

To whom payment may be made. Payment is to be made to the creditor. But it may be made to an authorized agent. And if made in the ordinary course of business, without notice requiring the payment to be made to himself, it is binding upon the principal; 4 B. & Ald. 395; Smith v. Cordage Co., 41 La. Ann. 1, 5 South. 413. Payment to a third person by appointment of the principal will be substantially payment to the principal; 1 Phill. Ev. 200. Payment to an agent who made the contract with the payee (without prohibition) is payment to the principal; Anderson v. Turnpike Co., 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 86; 10 B. & C. 755. But payment may be made to the principal after authority given to an agent to receive; 6 Maule & S. 156. Payments made to an agent after the death of the principal do not discharge the debtor's obligation, even if made in ignorance of the principal's death; Long v. Thayer, 150 U. S. 520, 14 Sup. Ct. 189, 37 L. Ed. 1167. Payment to a broker or factor who sells for a principal not named is good; 11 East 36. Payment to an agent, when he is known to be such, will be good, if made upon the terms authorized; 11 East 36; if there be no notice not to pay to him; 3 B. & P. 485; and even after notice, if the factor had a lien on the money when paid; 5 B. & Ald. 27. If the broker sells goods as his own, payment is good though the mode varies from that agreed on; 1 Maule & S. 147; 2 C. & P. 49. Bankers are not agents of the owner to receive payment of the notes by reason simply of the fact that the notes were made payable at their bank; and moneys left with them to be used as payment are not thereby the moneys of the owner of the notes; Cheney v. Libby, 134 U. S. 68, 10 Sup. Ct. 498, 33 L. Ed. 818.

Payment to an attorney is as effectual as payment to the principal himself; Duquette v. Richar, 102 Mich. 483, 60 N. W. 974. So, also, to a solicitor in chancery after a decree; 2 Ch. Cas. 38. The attorney of record may give a receipt and discharge the judgment; Lewis v. Gamage, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 347; Kellogg v. Gilbert, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 220, 6 Am. Dec. 335; Richardson v. Talbot, 2 Bibb (Ky.) 382; if made within one year; Gray v. Wass, 1 Greenl. (Me.) 257. Not so of an agent appointed by the attorney to collect the debt; 2 Dougl. 623. Payment by an officer to an attorney whose power has been revoked before the officer received the execution did not discharge the officer; Parker v. Downing, 13 Mass. 465. Payment to one of two co-partners discharges the debt; Shepard v. Ward, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 542; Yandes v. Lefavour, 2 Blackf. (Ind.) 371; 6 Maule & S. 156; even after dissolution; 4 C. & P. 108. So payment to one of two joint creditors is good, though they are not partners; Morrow's Heirs v. Starke's Adm'r, 4 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 367. But payment by a banker to one of several joint depositors without the assent of the others was held a void payment; 4 E. L. & E. 342.

Payment to the wife of the creditor is not a discharge of the debt, unless she is expressly or impliedly his agent; 2 Scott N. R. 372; Thrasher v. Tuttle, 22 Me. 335; as to payment to the husband, see O'Callaghan v. Barrett, 66 Hun 633, 21 N. Y. Supp. 368. One who purchases the property of a married woman through the agency of her husband, must pay for it precisely as if he had purchased through an agent who sustained no such relation; Runyon v. Snell, 116 Ind. 164, 18 N. E. 522, 9 Am. St. Rep. 839. An auctioneer employed to sell real estate has no authority to receive the purchase-money by virtue of that appointment merely; 1 M. & R. 326. Usually, the terms of sale authorize him to receive the purchase-money; 5 M. & W. 645. Payment was made to a person sitting in the creditor's counting-room and apparently doing his business, and it was held good; 1 M. & M. 200; but payment to an apprentice so situated was held not to be good; 2 Cr. & M. 304. Payment to a person other than the legal owner of the claim must be shown to have been made to one entitled to receive the money; Seymour v. Smith, 114 N. Y. 481, 21 N. E. 1042, 11 Am. St. Rep. 683. Generally, payment to the agent must be made in money, to bind the principal; 10 B. & C. 760; Nicholson v. Pease, 61 Vt. 534, 17 Atl. 720; Scully v. Dodge, 40 Kan. 395, 19 Pac. 807. Power to receive money does not authorize an agent to commute; Kings-ton v. Kincaid, 1 Wash. C. C. 454, Fed. Cas. No. 7,822; Lewis v. Gamage, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 347.

An agent authorized to receive money cannot bind his principal by receiving goods; 4 C. & P. 501; or a note; 5 M. & W. 645; but a subsequent ratification would remedy any such departure from authority; and it is said that slight acts of acquiescence will be deemed ratification. Payment to one of several joint creditors of his part will not alter the nature of the debt so as to enable the others to sue separately; 4 Tyrwh. 488. Payment to one of several executors has been held sufficient; 3 Atk. 695. Payment to a trustee generally concludes the cestui que trust in law; 5 B. & Ad. 96. Payment of a debt to a marshal or sheriff having custody of the person of the debtor does not satisfy the plaintiff; 4 B. & C. 32. Interest may be paid to a scrivener holding the mortgage deed or bond, and also the principal, if he deliver up the bond; otherwise of a mortgage-deed as to the principal, for there must be a re-conveyance; 1 Salk. 157. It would seem, then, that in those states where no re-conveyance is needed, a payment of the principal to a person holding the security would be good, at least prima facie.

Subsequent ratification of the agent's acts is equivalent to precedent authority to receive money; Pothier, Obl. n. 528.

When to be made. Payment must be made at the exact time agreed upon. This rule is held very strictly in law; but in equity payment will be allowed at a time subsequent, generally when damages can be estimated and allowed by way of interest; 8 East 208; City Bank v. Cutter, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 414. Where payment is to be made at a future day, nothing can be demanded till the time of payment, and, if there be a condition precedent to the liability, not until the condition has been performed. And where goods had been sold "at six or nine months' credit," the debtor was allowed the option; 5 Taunt. 338.

Where no time of payment is specified, the money is to be paid immediately on demand; Bank of Columbia v. Hagner, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 455, 7 L. Ed. 219; Bailey v. Clay, 4 Rand. (Va.) 346. When payment is to be made at a certain time, it may be made at a different time if the plaintiff will accept; Viner, Abr. Payment (H); and it seems that the debtor cannot compel the creditor to receive payment before the debt is due. The time of payment of a pecuniary obligation is a material provision in the contract, and a creditor cannot be compelled by statute to accept payment in advance; People v. O'Brien, 111 N. Y. 1, 18 N. E. 692, 2 L. R. A. 255, 7 Am. St. Rep. 684.

Where to be made. Payment must be made at the place agreed upon, unless both the parties consent to a change. If no place of payment is mentioned, the payer must seek the payee; Moore, P. C. 274; Shepp. Touchst. 378; 2 M. & W. 223.

The debtor, if no place is specified in the contract, must seek the creditor, unless he shall have left the state in which was his domicile when the contract was made, in which case, readiness to pay within the state will suffice; Hale v. Patton, 60 N. Y. 236, 19 Am. Rep. 168; Dockham v. Smith, 113 Mass. 320, 18 Am. Rep. 495. But where an insurance company owed money on a fire policy (with the option of replacing the building) it was held to be the intent of the parties that payment should be made at the domicile of the insured; Pennsylvania L. M. F. Ins. Co. v. Meyer, 197 U. S. 407, 25 Sup. Ct. 483, 49 L. Ed. 810, where it was said that all debts are payable everywhere, unless there be some special limitation or provision in respect to the payments; debts, as such, have no situs or locus, but accompany the creditor everywhere, and authorize a demand upon the debtor everywhere, and that in general the debtor is bound to seek the creditor.

Refusal to receive payment offered at a place other than the stipulated place of payment, except upon certain conditions, is an implied waiver of the right to have the payment made in the place agreed on; Union M. L. Ins. Co. v. Plaster Co., 37 Fed. 286, 3 L. R. A. 90. Where there is a covenant for the payment of rent, the tenant must seek the landlord; 8 Exch. 689. A lessor must demand the rent upon the land on the day when it becomes due at a convenient time before sunset, in order to re-enter for breach of condition upon non-payment; Camp v. Scott, 47 Conn. 366; Jenkins v. Jenkins, 63 Ind. 415, 30 Am. Rep. 229. It has been held that a licensor of a patent must apply to the licensee for an account and payment; Dare v. Boylston, 6 Fed. 493. A telephone subscriber is bound to pay for services at the office of the company, and cannot require presentment of bills at his home; Magruder v. Tel. Co., 92 Miss. 716, 46 South. 404, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 560.

So, too, the creditor is entitled to call for payment of the whole of his claim at one time, unless the parties have stipulated for payment otherwise.

Questions often arise in regard to the payment of debts and legacies by executors and administrators. These questions are generally settled by statute regulations.

As a general rule, debts are to be paid first, then specific legacies. The personal property is made liable for the testator's debts, and, after that is exhausted, the real estate, under restrictions varying in the different states.

See EXECUTOR AND ADMINISTRATOR; LEGACY.

In the payment of mortgages, if the mortgage was made by the deceased, the personal estate is liable to discharge the mortgage debts; 2 Cruise, Dig. 147. But where the deceased acquired the land subject to the mortgage, the mortgaged estate must pay the debt; Duke of Cumberland v. Codrington, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 252, 8 Am. Dec. 492; 2 Bro. C. C. 57; Appeal of Hoff, 24 Pa. 203. See MORTGAGE.

Effect of Payment. The effect of payment is—first, to discharge the obligation; and it may happen that one payment will discharge several obligations by means of a transfer of the evidence of obligations; Pothier, Obl. 554, n. Payment by one who is primarily liable to one entitled to collect the debt is an extinguishment of the debt and all liability thereunder, and however held, transferred, or assigned, it is ever afterwards a mere nullity; Smith v. Waugh, 84 Va. 806, 6 S. E. 132. Second, payment does not prevent a recovery back when made under mistake of fact. The general rule is that a mistake or ignorance of law furnishes no ground to reclaim money paid voluntarily under a claim of right; 2 Kent 491; Campbell v. Clark, 44 Mo. App. 249; Harralson v. Barrett, 99 Cal. 607, 34 Pac. 342. But acts done under a mistake or ignorance of an essential fact are voidable and relievable both in law and equity; Poll. Cont. 439; Pensacola & A. R. Co. v. Braxton, 34 Fla. 471, 16 South. 317. Laws of a foreign country are matters of fact; Story, Const. 5th ed. § 1304; Haven v. Foster, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 112, 19 Am. Dec. 353; and the several United States are foreign to each other in this respect. See CONFLICT OF LAWS; FOREIGN LAWS. In Kentucky and Connecticut there is a right of recovery back equally in cases of mistake of law and of fact; Northrop's Ex'rs v. Graves, 19 Conn. 548, 50 Am. Dec. 264; Ray v. Bank, 3 B. Monr. (Ky.) 510, 39 Am. Dec. 479. In Ohio it may be remedied in equity; McNaughten v. Partridge, 11 Ohio 223, 38 Am. Dec. 731. In New York a distinction is taken between ignorance of the law and mistakes of law, giving relief in the latter case; Champlin v. Laytin, 18 Wend. (N. Y.) 422, 31 Am. Dec. 382. In England, money paid under a mistake of law cannot be recovered back; 4 Ad. & E. 858. Whenever money is paid upon the representation of the receiver that he has either a certain title in property transferred in consideration of the payment, or a certain authority to receive the money paid, when, in fact, he has no such title or authority, then, although there be no fraud or intentional misrepresentation on his part, the money may be recovered back without previous demand; U. S. v. Bank, 214 U. S. 316, 29 Sup. Ct. 665, 53 L. Ed. 1006, 16 Ann. Cas. 1184. The payment of a note for the purchase price of land, after the discovery of a mistake in computing the price, is no bar to an action to recover an overpayment resulting from such mistake; Cardinal v. Hadley, 158 Mass. 352, 33 N. E. 575, 35 Am. St. Rep. 492. See IGNORANCE; MISTAKE. A payment under protest is nevertheless voluntary, unless there was duress or coercion; Wessel v. Mortg. Co., 3 N. D. 160, 54 N. W. 922, 44 Am. St. Rep. 529. Third, part payment of a note will have the effect of waiver of notice of protest. Fourth, payment of part of the debt will bar the Statute of Limitations as to the residue; Whipple v. Stevens, 22 N. H. 219; Baxter v. Penniman, 8 Mass. 134; 28 E. L. & E. 454; even though made in goods and chattels; 4 Ad. & E. 71. But it must be shown conclusively that the payment was made as part of a larger debt; 6 M. & W. 824; Smith v. Westmoreland, 12 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 663. See EARNEST; PROTEST, PAYMENT UNDER.

The burden of proof, on a plea of payment, is on the party pleading it; Claffin v. Watch Co., 7 Misc. 668, 28 N. Y. Supp. 42; Lanier v. Huguley, 91 Ga. 791, 18 S. E. 39; Curtis v. Perry, 33 Neb. 519, 50 N. W. 426. As to appropriation of payments, see that title.

See NOVATION; APPROPRIATION; LEX LOCI; DISCHARGE; RECEIPT; ACCORD AND SATISFACTION; PERFORMANCE.

In Pleading. The name of a plea by which the defendant alleges that he has paid the debt claimed in the declaration; this plea must conclude to the country. See Chitty. Plead. In Pennsylvania a plea of payment, with leave, etc., is in common use; under it a defendant may give in evidence anything tending to show that, of right, the plaintiff cannot recover.

PAYMENT INTO COURT. In Practice. Depositing a sum of money with the proper officer of the court by the defendant in a suit, for the benefit of the plaintiff and in answer to his claim.

It may be made in some states under statutory provisions; State v. Weaver, 18 Ala. 293; Mason v. Croom, 24 Ga. 211; Brock v. Jones' Ex'r, 16 Tex. 461; Clark v. Mullenix, 11 Ind. 532; and in most by a rule of court made for the purpose; Mazyck & Bell v. McEwen, 2 Bail. (S. C.) 28; State v. Broughton, 29 N. C. 100, 45 Am. Dec. 507; in which case notice of an intention to apply must, in general, have been previously given.

The effect is to divest the defendant of all right to withdraw the money; Murray v. Bethune, 1 Wend. (N. Y.) 191; Clement v. Bixler, 3 Watts (Pa.) 248; except by leave of court; Mott v. Pettit, 1 N. J. L. 298; and to admit conclusively every fact which the plaintiff would be obliged to prove in order to recover it; 6 M. & W. 9; Goslin v. Hodson, 24 Vt. 140; Elliott v. Ins. Co., 66 Pa. 27, 5 Am. Rep. 323; as, that the amount tendered is due; 1 Campb. 558; Boyden v. Moore, 5 Mass. 365; Spalding v. Vandercook, 2 Wend. (N. Y.) 431; for the cause laid in the declaration; 2 B. & P. 550; Jones v. Hoar, 5 Pick. (Mass.) 285; to the plaintiff in the character in which he sues; 2 Campb. 441; the jurisdiction of the court; 5 Esp. 19; that the contract was made; 3 Campb. 52; and broken as alleged; 1 B. & C. 3; but only in reference to the amount paid in; Johnston v. Ins. Co., 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 315; 3 E. L. & E. 548; and nothing beyond such facts; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 206.

Under the rule in England money may be paid into court in satisfaction, and with or without denying liability therefor.

Generally, it relieves the defendant from the payment of further costs unless judgment is recovered for a sum larger than that paid in; Aikins v. Colton, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 326; Broughton v. Richardson, 2 Rich. (S. C.) 64; Goslin v. Hodson, 24 Vt. 140; Coghlan v. R. Co., 32 Fed. 316.

Payment of money into court, when the declaration is on a special contract, is an acknowledgment of the right of action to the amount of the sum brought in, and no more; 1 Tidd's Pr. 624. It does not waive the benefit of a defence, though that be to the whole claim; Funk v. Smith, 66 Pa. 27, 5 Am. Rep. 326; Branch v. U. S., 100 U. S. 673, 25 L. Ed. 759. But no defence can deprive the plaintiff of the right to the money in court. See TENDER.

PAYS. Country. Trial per pays, trial by jury (the country). See IN PAIS; PAIS.

PEACE. The concord or final agreement in a fine of land. 18 Edw. I. modus levandi finis.

The tranquillity enjoyed by a political society, internally by the good order which reigns among its members, and externally by the good understanding it has with all other nations. Applied to the internal regulations of a nation, peace imports, in a technical sense, not merely a state of repose and security as opposed to one of violence or warfare, but likewise a state of public order and decorum. Hamm. N. P. 139; 12 Mod. 566; People v. Johnson, 86 Mich. 175, 48 N. W. 870, 13 L. R. A. 163, 24 Am. St. Rep. 116.

The term peace in English and American law is used in a general way to express that condition which is violated by the commission of crime. In modern times it is expressed in England by the phrase king's peace, and in this country peace of the state or commonwealth. (There is a peace of the United States; In re Neagle, 135 U. S. 1, 10 Sup. Ct. 653, 34 L. Ed. 55.) Originally the phrase king's peace had no such broad meaning, but was used only in connection with crimes committed against persons, or in places, or at times and seasons, which were under the special protection of the king. See PAX REGIS. "Breach of the king's peace was an act of personal disobedience, and a much graver matter than an ordinary breach of public order; it made the wrong-doer the king's enemy. The notion of the king's peace appears to have had two distinct origins. These were, first, the special sanctity of the king's house, which may be regarded as differing only in degree from that which Germanic usage attached everywhere to the homestead of a freeman; and, secondly, the special protection of the king's attendants and servants, and other persons whom he thought fit to place on the same footing. . . . The rapid extension of the king's peace till it becomes, after the Norman Conquest, the normal and general safeguard of public order, seems peculiarly English. On the continent the king appears to have been recognized as protector of the general peace, besides having power to grant special protection or peace of a higher order, from a much earlier time." 1 Poll. & Maitl. 22.

There was the peace of the church, both that of the parish and the minister; so there was the peace of the sheriff, and of each lord, and indeed of every householder, for the breach of which atonement could be exacted. In writing of the criminal law of England in the twelfth century it is said, "The time has not yet come when the king's peace will be eternal and cover the whole land. Still we have here an elastic notion; if the king can bestow his peace on a privileged person by a writ of protection, can he not put all men under his peace by proclamation." See 2 Poll. & Maitl. 451-2. The phrase peace of the king was in that period used to express the idea that the crime which was alleged to be in breach of the "peace of God and of our lord the king," was one of those reserved as specially punishable in behalf of the king himself. These crimes were the original pleas of the crown but the king's peace by an easy process extended itself "until it had become an all-embracing atmosphere;" id. 462. That general peace which is now denominated the peace of the king or of the state, as the case may be, was in the early days protected only by the hundred court and the ealdorman. It is possible that mediæval usage which applied to an inferior court the phrase the peace of the lord, who held it, dates from the earliest period of the administration of justice. There is said to be some evidence that in the tenth century the phrase peace of the witan, was used, but no authority for the use of the term folk-peace; 1 Poll. & Maitl. 23. See also Pollock, The King's Peace, Oxford Lectures; Inderwick, The King's Peace.

Judges of the federal supreme and district courts, commissioners of district courts and judges and other magistrates of the several states may hold to security of the peace in cases under the United States constitution and laws; U. S. Comp. Stat. § 727.

PEACE OF GOD. The words, "In the peace of God and the said commonwealth, then and there being," as used in indictments for homicide and in the definition of murder, mean merely that it is not murder to kill an alien enemy in time of war, provided such killing occur in the actual exercise of war; Whart. Cr. Law § 310; State v. Gut, 13 Minn. 341 (Gil. 315).

PEACE OF GOD AND THE CHURCH. The freedom from suits at law between the terms. Spelman, Gloss.; Jacob, Law Dict. See PEACE.

PEACEABLE ASSEMBLY. See ASSEMBLY; LIBERTY OF SPEECH.

PECK. A measure of capacity, equal to two gallons. See MEASURE.

PECULATION. The unlawful appropriation by a depository of public funds, of the property of the government intrusted to his care, to his own use or that of others. Domat, Suppl. au Droit Public, l. 3, tit. 5. See EMBEZZLEMENT.

PECULIARS. See COURT OF PECULIARS.

PECULIUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. Private property.

The most ancient kind of peculium was the peculium profectitium of the Roman law, which signified that portion of the property acquired by a son or slave which the father or master allowed him, to be managed as he saw fit. In later civil law there are other kinds of peculium, viz.: peculium castrense, which includes all movables given to a son by relatives and friends on his going on a campaign, all the presents of comrades, and his military pay and the things bought with it; peculium quasi-castrense, which includes all acquired by a son by performing the duties of a public or spiritual office or of an advocate, and also gifts from the reigning prince; peculium adventitium, which includes the property of a son's mother and relatives on that side of the house, and all which comes to him on a second marriage of his parents, and, in general, all his acquisitions which do not come from his father's property and do not come under castrense or quasi-castrense peculium.

The peculium profectitium remains the property of the father. The peculium castrense and quasi-castrense, are entirely the property of the son. The peculium adventitium belongs to the son; but he cannot alien it nor dispose of it by will; and the father had the usufruct; nor can the father, unless under peculiar circumstances, alien it without consent of the son. Mackeldey, Civ. Law, § 557; inst. 2. 9. 1; Dig. 15. 1. 5. 3; Pothier, ad Pand. lib. 50, tit. 17, c. 2, art. 3.

PECUNIA (Lat.). In Civil Law. Property, real or personal, corporeal or incorporeal. Things in general (omnes res).

The law of the Twelve Tables said, uti quisque pater familias legasset super pecunia tutelave rei suæ ita jus esto: in whatever manner a father of a family may have disposed of his property or of the tutorship of his things, let this disposition be law. 1 Lecons Élém. du Dr. Civ. Rom. 288. But Paulus, in l. 5, D. de verb. signif., gives it a narrower sense than res, which he says means what is not included within patrimony, pecunia what is. Vicat, Voc. Jur. In a still narrower sense, it means those things only which have measure, weight, and number, and most usually strictly money. Id. The general sense of property occurs, also, in the old English law. Leg. Edw. Confess. c. 10.

Flocks were the first riches of the ancients; and it is from pecus that the words pecunia, peculium, peculatus, are derived. In old English law pecunia often retains the force of pecus. So often in Domesday: pastura ibidem pecuniæ villæ, i. e. pasture for cattle of the village. So vivæ pecuniæ, live stock. Leg. Edw. Confess. c. 10; Emendat. Wilhelm Primi ad Leges Edw. Confess.; Cowell.

PECUNIA NON-NUMERATA (Lat.). Money not paid or numbered.

The exceptio non-numeratæ pecuniæ (plea of money not paid) is allowed to the principal or surety by the creditor. Calvinus, Lex.

PECUNIA NUMERATA (Lat.). Money given in payment of a debt.

Properly used of the creditor, who is properly said to number, i. e. count out, the money to the debtor which he must pay, and improperly of the debtor, who is said to number or count out the money to the creditor, i. e. to pay it. Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Calvinus, Lex.

PECUNIA TRAJECTITIA (Lat.). A loan of money which, either itself or in the shape of goods bought with it, is to be carried over the sea, the lender to take the risk from the commencement of the voyage till arrival at the port of destination, and on that account to have higher interest; which interest is not essential to the contract, but, if reserved, is called fœnus nauticum. Mackeldey, Civ. Law § 398 b. The term fœnus nauticum is sometimes applied to the transaction as well as the interest, making it coextensive with pecunia trajectitia.

PECUNIARY. That which relates to money. A pecuniary provision does not apply to a provision in an agreement for alimony specifically dividing personal property of the parties; Davis v. Davis, 61 Me. 395. The exemption from registration of annuities without regard to pecuniary consideration was held to include the case of a grantee's giving up his business to the grantor; 4 Term 790. Bank notes; 3 id. 554; 1 B. & P. 208; checks; 8 Term 328; and a verbal promise to pay a debt in full; Phelps v. Thomas, 6 Gray (Mass.) 327; are pecuniary considerations. But the assignment of a leasehold interest is not; 2 B. & B. 702; or a transfer of stock; 3 B. & A. 602; or a surrender of a life interest in a sum of money and of a contingent interest in the corpus; 2 El. & Bl. 374; 2 B. & C. 875.

PECUNIARY CAUSES. Causes in ecclesiastical courts where satisfaction is sought for withholding ecclesiastical dues or the doing or neglecting some act connected with the church. 3 Bla. Com. 88. As to what causes are ecclesiastical, see 2 Burn, Eccl. Law 39.

PECUNIARY LEGACY. See LEGACY.

PECUNIARY LOSS. A loss of money, or of something by which money or something of money value may be acquired. Green v. R. Co., 32 Barb. (N. Y.) 33.

PECUNIARY PROFIT. An academy is not a corporation for pecuniary profit. Santa Clara F. Academy v. Sullivan, 116 Ill. 376, 6 N. E. 183, 56 Am. Rep. 776.

PEDAGIUM (Lat. pes, foot). Money paid for passing by foot or horse through any forest or country. Cassan de Coutum. Burgund. p. 118; Rot. Vasc. 22 Edw. III. m. 34.

PEDAULUS (Lat. pes, foot). In Civil Law. A judge who sat at the foot of the tribunal, i. e. on the lowest seats, ready to try matters of little moment at command of the prætor. Calvinus, Lex.; Vicat, Voc. Jur.

PEDDLER. Persons who travel about the country with merchandise for the purpose of selling it.

An itinerant trader, who carries goods about in order to sell them, and who actually sells them, to purchasers, in contradistinction to a trader who has goods for sale, and sells them, at a fixed place of business. A petty chapman, or other trading person going from town to town, or to other men's houses, and travelling either on foot or with horses, or otherwise, carrying to sell or expose to sale, any goods, wares, or merchandise. Graffy v. Rushville, 107 Ind. 502, 8 N. E. 609, 57 Am. Rep. 128; Com. v. Ober, 12 Cush. (Mass.) 493; Stamford v. Fisher, 63 Hun 123, 17 N. Y. Supp. 609.

An itinerant individual, ordinarily without local habitation or place of business, who travels about the country carrying commodities for sale. Davenport v. Rice, 75 Ia. 74, 39 N. W. 191, 9 Am. St. Rep. 454.

The distinctive feature has been held not to consist in the mode of transportation, though one of the statutory modes is essential to constitute a peddler, but in the fact that the peddler goes from house to house or place to place carrying his merchandise with him and concurrently sells and delivers it; Ballou v. State, 87 Ala. 144, 6 South. 393; Stamford v. Fisher, 140 N. Y. 187, 35 N. E. 500. One who, having a place of business in another town, goes about delivering goods at the houses of his customers, in pursuance of orders previously taken, and takes orders for future delivery, is not a peddler; Com. v. Eichenberg, 140 Pa. 158, 21 Atl. 258; State v.

Lee, 113 N. C. 681, 18 S. E. 713, 37 Am. St. Rep. 649; but one who manufactures and deals in proprietary medicines who, although having a permanent manufactory and residence, yet attends county fairs and publicly recommends his medicines as a cure for certain ailments, is held a peddler; State v. Gouss, 55 Ia. 21, 51 N. W. 1147.

The driver of a delivery wagon who takes orders for goods and subsequently delivers them is not a peddler; Hewson v. Englewood, 55 N. J. L. 522, 27 Atl. 904, 21 L. R. A. 736; nor is one who merely delivers goods previously sold by another; Stuart v. Cunningham, 88 Ia. 191, 55 N. W. 311, 20 L. R. A. 430; or a canvasser; Cerro Gordo v. Rawlings, 135 Ill. 36, 25 N. E. 1006; or one who exhibits samples of cloth and takes orders for clothing to be made therefrom; Radebaugh v. Plain City, 28 Wkly. L. Bul. (Ohio) 107.

But one who goes from house to house with merchandise, selling the same on the instalment plan is held a peddler; People v. Sawyer, 106 Mich. 428, 64 N. W. 333; South Bend v. Martin, 142 Ind. 31, 41 N. E. 315, 29 L. R. A. 531.

A state may impose a tax upon itinerant peddlers and require them to take out a license to practice their trade; Emert v. Missouri, 156 U. S. 296, 15 Sup. Ct. 367, 39 L. Ed. 430; but it may not discriminate between its own citizens and non-residents; Ward v. Maryland, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 418, 20 L. Ed. 449; Webber v. Virginia, 103 U. S. 344, 26 L. Ed. 565; Wrought Iron R. Co. v. Johnson, 84 Ga. 754, 11 S. E. 233, 8 L. R. A. 273; nor charge a higher price to the latter for a license than it imposes on the former; State v. Wiggin, 64 N. H. 508, 15 Atl. 128, 1 L. R. A. 56. See COMMERCE; LICENSE; COMMERCIAL TRAVELLER; DRUMMER.

PEDIGREE. A succession of degrees from the origin: it is the state of the family as far as regards the relationship of the different members, their births, marriages, and deaths. This term is applied to persons or families who trace their origin or descent.

On account of the difficulty of proving in the ordinary manner, by living witnesses, facts which occurred in remote times, hearsay evidence has been admitted to prove a pedigree: As declarations of deceased persons who were related by blood or marriage may be given in evidence in matters of pedigree; Fulkerson v. Holmes, 117 U. S. 397, 6 Sup. Ct. 780, 29 L. Ed. 915. See Rawley, Covenants § 17 N. 1; Warv. Abs. of Title 33, 313. See DECLARATION; FAMILY BIBLE; HEARSAY.

The pedigree of a dog may be shown by its registration; Citizens' Rapid T. Co. v. Dew, 100 Tenn. 317, 45 S. W. 790, 40 L. R. A. 518, 66 Am. St. Rep. 754.

PEDIS POSITIO (Lat. a planting or placing of the foot). A term used to denote an actual corporal possession. Possessio est quasi pedis positio: possession is as it were a planting of the foot. 3 Co. 42. See PEDIS POSSESSIO.

PEDIS POSSESSIO. (Lat.). A foothold; an actual possession. To constitute adverse possession, there must be pedis possessio, or a substantial inclosure. Bailey v. Irby, 2 N. & M'C. (S. C.) 343, 10 Am. Dec. 609; Jackson v. Sellick, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 269, per Kent, C. J.; Waggoner v. Hastings, 5 Pa. 303.

PEERAGE. See PARLIAMENT; PEERS.

PEERESS. A woman may be a peeress by creation, descent or marriage. If one who is a peeress in her own right marry a commoner, she retains her rank; otherwise, if she be only noble by her previous marriage; but even in such case, if she marry a peer, she retains her first rank, for all the nobility are pares. A woman, noble in her own right, or by a previous marriage, when she marries a commoner, communicates no rank to him. A woman, noble by a previous marriage, when afterwards marrying a commoner, is usually, by courtesy, addressed by the style and title she bore before her second marriage. All peeresses, whether in their own right or by marriage, shall be tried before the same judicature as peers. See Jacob, Law Dict.

PEERS (Lat. pares). The vassals of a lord; the freeholders of a neighborhood, before whom livery of seisin was to be made, and before whom, as the jury of the county, trials were had. 2 Bla. Com. 316. These vassals were called pares curiæ, which title see. 1 Washb. R. P. *23. The term was formerly used to designate co-vassalship, without restriction as to rank or condition; Harcourt, The Lord Steward 225.

Trial by a man's peers or equals is one of the rights reserved by Magna Carta. 4 Bla. Com. 349.

The nobility of England, though of different ranks, viz., dukes, marquesses, earls, viscounts, and barons, are equal in their privileges of sitting and voting in the house of lords; they are called peers of the realm.

They are created by writ summoning them to attend the house of lords by the title intended to be given, or by letters patent directly conferring the dignity. The former is the more ancient way; but the grant by patent is more certain. See Sullivan, Lect. 19 a; 1 Wood. Lect. 37.

In 1856, Baron Parke was created a life peer; the house of lords decided that a life peer could not sit and vote in parliament.

Bishops who sit in parliament are peers; but the word spiritual is generally added; e. g. "lords temporal and spiritual." 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 401*, n. 12.

The titles of all temporal peers are now hereditary; May, Law of Parl. 14; except certain peers holding judicial office, whose peerage is a life peerage only.

Scotch and Irish peers are not entitled to sit in the lords, but sixteen representative Scotch peers are elected to each parliament, and twenty-eight Irish peers are elected to sit in the lords for life.

A peerage is not transferable, except with consent of parliament; id. Succession to the title is destroyed by attainder; see 1 Bla. Com. 412*. A peerage cannot be surrendered, extinguished, or in any way got rid of unless the blood be corrupted; [1907] A. C. 10.

When an English peer has been adjudicated a bankrupt, he cannot sit in the house of lords; he loses no other privilege thereby. When the bankruptcy is determined he may resume his seat. If he obtains his discharge with a certificate that bankruptcy was the result of misfortune, the disqualification may be removed. But in the case of Scotch or Irish representative peers in the house of lords, bankruptcy not determined within a year vacates their seat.

A member of the house of commons, when he becomes an English or Scotch peer is disqualified to sit in the commons.

Peers formerly could vote by proxy, but the right was suspended by a standing order in 1868.

If a resolution is passed contrary to the sentiment of any member of the house, he may "protest" and enter his dissent on its journal. See PROTEST.

As to the trial of peers, see tit. Lord High Steward, in 8 Encyc. Laws of Eng.; Harcourt, The Lord Steward; Round, Peerage; Pike, Constit. Hist. of H. of L.; COURT OF THE LORD HIGH STEWARD; PARLIAMENT.

PEINE FORTE ET DURE (L. Fr.). A punishment formerly inflicted in England on a person who, being arraigned of felony, refused to plead and put himself on his trial, and stubbornly stood mute.

A jury was impanelled to try whether he stood "mute of malice," or "mute by the visitation of God," and if the latter the trial proceeded; but if the former the prisoner was solemnly warned by the judges of the terrible consequences described by Lord Coke, in the trial of Sir Richard Weston in 1615 for the murder of Sir Thomas Overbury, by the words—opere, frigore, et fame. Warnings were given (trina admonitio) and time was given for reflection and often the unfortunate was subjected to entreaties of friends and others, but if he remained obdurate he was adjudged to suffer the sentence of penance, or peine (which is said by Blackstone to be a corrupted abbreviation of prison) forte et dure. The judgment was that he return from whence he came, to a low dungeon into which no light could enter; he was to be laid down, naked, on his back, on the ground, his feet and head and loins covered, his arms and legs drawn apart by cords tied to posts, a sharp stone under his back, and as much weight of iron or stone as he could bear, or more than he could bear, placed on his chest. He was to have the next day three morsels of barley bread, without drink; the next, three draughts, as much each time as he could drink, of the nearest stagnant water to the prison, without bread; and such was to be his diet on alternate days, till he died. This punishment was vulgarly called pressing to death; 4 Bla. Com. 324; Cowell; Britton c. 4. fol. 11*. This punishment dates back to a period between 31 Edw. III. and 8 Hen. IV.; 4 Bla. Com. 324; Year B. 8 Hen. IV. 1. It did not at first include the pressing. Originally when asked how he would be tried the accused must choose between a trial "by God" (by ordeal) and "by my country" (by jury). After the former method of trial was abolished about 1215 the other method remained a privilege to be claimed and in those days the idea did not occur to any one of trying a prisoner by jury without his consent. By standing mute a prisoner put the court in difficulty, and at first he was put to death for not consenting to be tried "according to the law and custom of the realm." This was thought too severe and in the Parliament of Westminster under Edward I. there was provided for notorious felons confinement in prison forte et dure; which included all possible harsh features except death. Then to conquer obduracy, starvation was resorted to; but this being too slow, under Henry IV. the peine was substituted for the prison. It continued until 1772 although occasionally something stronger than exhortation was resorted to, as tying up by the thumbs in the presence of the court, at the Old Bailey in 1734. It only ended when standing mute, by statute, in England, became equivalent to a confession or verdict of guilty; 12 Geo. III. c. 20; but in 1827 it was enacted "that in such cases a plea of not guilty should be entered for the accused."

The obvious effect of standing mute was to avoid the forfeiture of goods consequent upon conviction of felony and the results of corruption of blood, by an attainder, in case of capital felony. Often, indeed usually, in treason cases certainly, conviction was sure and the fortitude required to endure this death by torture would save his children or other heirs from disinheritance. Great numbers did in fact undergo the punishment which was recorded by the clerk's entry or record, "mortuus en pen' fort' et dur'." The number in rural Middlesex alone in 1609–1618 was thirty-two, of whom three were women, and peers were not protected from it by their privilege. A case is recorded in the last year of George I. and one at least in the reign of George II.

The only instance in which this punishment has even been inflicted in this country is that of Giles Cory, of Salem, who refused to plead when arraigned for witchcraft; Washb. Jud. Hist. 142; 1 Chandl. Cr. Tr. 122.

See Jacob, Law Dict.; 4 Bla. Com. 324; 15 Viner, Abr., Mute.

PELL, CLERK OF THE. Pell is a roll of parchment. The Clerk of the Pell was an officer of the exchequer in England who entered every teller's bill on a parchment roll (pell of receipts) and made another roll (pell of disbursements). Abolished. Cent. Dict.

PENAL ACTION. An action for recovery of statute penalty. 3 Steph. Com. 535. See Hawk. Pl. Cr. Informatio. It is distinguished from a popular or qui tam action, in which the action is brought by the informer, to whom part of the penalty goes. A penal action or information is brought by an officer, and the penalty goes to the king; 1 Chitty, Gen. Pr. 25; 2 Archb. Pr. 188.

PENAL ACTIONS. Actions brought in England under a statute forbidding or requiring an act to be done and rendering an offender liable to pay a sum of money to be recovered from him in a civil action. Sometimes the plaintiff is the person aggrieved, sometimes the attorney-general; but most frequently a "common informer." They are not criminal actions. Odgers, C. L. 944.

PENAL BILL. The old name for a bond with condition by which a person is bound to pay a certain sum of money or do a certain act, or, in default thereof, pay a certain sum of money by way of penalty. Jacob, Law Dict. Bill.

PENAL CLAUSE. That particular clause or subdivision of a statute which fixes the penalty for a violation of previous provisions. See STATUTE; PENAL STATUTES.

A secondary obligation entered into for the purpose of enforcing the performance of a primary obligation. La. Civ. Code, art. 2117.

PENAL LAWS. See PENAL STATUTES.

PENAL SERVITUDE. A punishment which consists in keeping an offender in confinement and compelling him to labor.

PENAL STATUTES. Those which inflict a penalty for the violation of some of their provisions. Strictly and properly, they are those laws imposing punishment for an offence committed against the state, which the executive has power to pardon, and the expression does not include statutes which give a private action against a wrong-doer. Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 637, 13 Sup. Ct. 224, 36 L. Ed. 1123.

A solely penal law will not be enforced in another state, but a statute is not penal, so as not to be enforced by the courts of another state, merely because it awards punitive damages as the measure of the liability of the wrong-doer; Southern Ry. Co. v. Decker, 5 Ga. App. 21, 62 S. E. 678. An action for violation of the United States safety appliance act is civil in its nature; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. U. S., 220 U. S. 559, 31 Sup. Ct. 612, 55 L. Ed. 582.

See INTERPRETATION.

PENALTY. A clause in an agreement, by which the obligor agrees to pay a certain sum of money if he shall fail to fulfil the contract contained in another clause of the same agreement.

A penal obligation differs from an alternative obligation, for the latter is but one in its essence; while a penalty always includes two distinct engagements, and when the first is fulfilled the second is void. When a breach has taken place, the obligor has his option to require the fulfilment of the first obligation, or the payment of the penalty, in those cases which cannot be relieved in equity, when the penalty is considered as liquidated damages. Dalloz, Dict. Obligation avec Clause penale.

A distinction is made in courts of equity between penalties and forfeitures. In cases of forfeiture for the breach of any covenant other than a covenant to pay rent, relief will not be granted in equity, unless upon the ground of accident, fraud, mistake, or surprise, when the breach is capable of compensation; Eden, Inj. 22; 3 Ves. 692; 18 id. 58.

For the distinction between a penalty and liquidated damages, see LIQUIDATED DAMAGES.

The penalty remains unaffected, although the condition may have been partially performed: as, in a case where the penalty was one thousand dollars, and the condition was to pay an annuity of one hundred dollars, which had been paid for ten years, the penalty was still valid; Blackmer v. Blackmer's Adm'r, 5 Vt. 355.

The punishment inflicted by a law for its violation. The term is mostly applied to a pecuniary punishment; see Stearns v. Barrett, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 451, 11 Am. Dec. 223; 1 Saund. 58, n.; 16 Viner, Abr. 301; Torbett v. Godwin, 62 Hun 407, 17 N. Y. Supp. 46; U. S. v. Mathews, 23 Fed. 74; The Strathairly, 124 U. S. 571, 8 Sup. Ct. 609, 31 L. Ed. 580; although not restricted to it; State v. Hardman, 16 Ind. App. 357, 45 N. E. 345.

When a statute creating a forfeiture does not prescribe the mode of collecting it, either debt, information, or indictment will lie; U. S. v. Stocking, 87 Fed. 858. Section 975 of U. S. R. S. recognized the right to institute suits, but there are authorities which maintain that unless authorized by statute, the informer cannot sue in his own name for the penalty; U. S. v. Stocking, 87 Fed. 861.

See QUI TAM.

The words penal and penalty in their strict and primary sense, denote a punishment, whether corporal or pecuniary, imposed and enforced by the state for a crime or offence against its laws; Huntington v. Attrill, 146 U. S. 657, 13 Sup. Ct. 224, 36 L. Ed. 1123.

PENANCE. In Ecclesiastical Law. An ecclesiastical punishment inflicted by an ecclesiastical court for some spiritual offence. Ayliffe, Parerg. 420.

PENCIL. An instrument made of plumbago, red chalk, or other suitable substance, for writing without ink.

It has been held that a will written with a pencil is valid; 1 Phill. Ecc. 1; 2 id. 173; Beach, Wills § 23. See WILL.

PENDENTE LITE (Lat.). Pending the continuance of an action; while litigation continues.

An administrator is appointed pendente lite, when a will is contested. See ADMINISTRATOR; LIS PENDENS.

PENDENTES (Lat.). In Civil Law. The fruits of the earth not yet separated from the ground; the fruits hanging by the roots. Erskine, Inst. b. 2, tit. 2, s. 4.

PENDING. See LIS PENDENS.

PENDING SUIT. See AUTER ACTION PENDANT; UNITED STATES COURTS.

PENETRATION. See RAPE.

PENITENTIALS. A compilation or list of sins and other penances, compiled in the Eastern Church and in the extreme west about the sixth century. Stubbs, Canon Law, in 1 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. H. 252.

PENITENTIARY. A prison for the punishment of convicts.

A prison or place of punishment. The place of punishment in which convicts, sentenced to confinement and hard labor, are confined by the authority of the law. Millar v. State, 2 Kan. 174; State v. Nolan, 48 Kan. 723, 29 Pac. 568, 30 Pac. 486.

There are two systems of penitentiaries in the United States, each of which is claimed to be the best by its partisans,—the Pennsylvania system and the New York system. By the former, convicts are lodged in separate, well-lighted, and well-ventilated cells, where they are required to work during stated hours. During the whole time of their confinement they are never permitted to see or speak with each other. Their usual employments are shoemaking, weaving, winding yarn, picking wool, and such like business. The only punishments to which convicts are subject are the privation of food for short periods, and confinement without labor in dark but well-aired cells: this discipline has been found sufficient to keep perfect order; the whip and all other corporal punishments are prohibited. The advantages of the plan are numerous. Men cannot long remain in solitude without labor; convicts, when deprived of it, ask it as a favor, and, in order to retain it, use, generally, their best exertions to do their work well; being entirely secluded, they are of course unknown to their fellow-prisoners, and can form no combination to escape while in prison, or associations to prey upon society when they are out; being treated with kindness, and afforded books for their instruction and amusement, they become satisfied that society does not make war upon them, and more disposed to return to it, which they are not prevented from doing by the exposure of their fellow-prisoners when in a strange place; the labor of the convicts tends greatly to defray the expenses of the prison. The disadvantages which were anticipated have been found to be groundless. Among these were that the prisoners would be unhealthy; experience has proved the contrary: that they would become insane; this has also been found to be otherwise: that solitude is incompatible with the performance of business: that obedience to the discipline of the prison could not be enforced. These, and all other objections to this system, are by its friends believed to be without force.

The New York system, adopted at Auburn, which was probably copied from the penitentiary at Ghent, in the Netherlands, called La Maison de Force, is founded on the system of isolation and separation, as well as that of Pennsylvania, but with this difference, that in the former the prisoners are confined to their separate cells during the night only; during the working-hours in the daytime they labor together in workshops appropriated to their use. They eat their meals together, but in such a manner as not to be able to speak with each other. Silence is also imposed upon them at their labor. They perform the labor of carpenters, blacksmiths, weavers, shoemakers, tailors, coopers, gardeners, woodsawyers, etc. The discipline of the prison is enforced by stripes inflicted by the assistant keepers, on the backs of the prisoners; though this punishment is rarely exercised. The advantages of this plan are that the convicts are in solitary confinement during the night: that their labor, by being joint, is more productive; that, inasmuch as a clergyman is employed to preach to the prisoners, the system affords an opportunity for mental and moral improvements. Among the objections made to it are that the prisoners have opportunities of communicating with each other and of forming plans of escape, and, when they are out of prison, of associating together in consequence of their previous acquaintance, to the detriment of those who wish to return to virtue, and to the danger of the public; that the discipline is degrading, and that it engenders bitter resentment in the mind of the convict.

PENNSYLVANIA. One of the thirteen original states of the United States of America.

It received its name from a royal charter granted March 4, 1681, by Charles II. to William Penn. By that charter, Penn was constituted the proprietary and governor of the province, and vested with power to enact laws, with the consent of the freemen, to execute the laws, to appoint judges and other officers, incorporate towns, establish ports, levy customs, import and export goods, sell lands creating a tenure, levy troops, make war, and exercise other attributes of sovereign power. Appeals in judicial matters lay to the crown, and all laws could be annulled by the crown within five years after their passage.

The first frame of government was adopted and promulgated on April 25, 1682. The government was to be by the governor and freemen in a provincial council and general assembly. Both of the latter were chosen annually by the people. All laws were to originate with the council. A governor, judges, and other officers were to be appointed, during good behavior, by the governor from a double list presented by the council or assembly.

On April 2, 1683, a new frame was adopted, reducing the numbers both of the council and assembly. In 1693 the proprietary was deprived of his government and the province placed under the government of New York. But in 1694 Penn was duly reinstated.

A new frame of government adopted on October 26, 1696, made some material alterations in the existing order of things. The power of originating laws was thereby first conferred on the assembly.

The charter of privileges granted by the proprietary and accepted by the assembly on October 28, 1701, confirming the foregoing provisions and making numerous others, continued the supreme law of the province during the residue of the proprietary government.

In 1776, after the declaration of American independence, a constitution was formed adapted to the altered circumstances of the country, which continued in force until 1790, when a new one was substituted. This was amended in 1837 by the introduction of some very radical changes. Other amendments were made in 1850, in 1857, and in 1864. In 1874 a new constitution was adopted, which remains still in force with minor amendments.

PENNY. An English coin, of the value of one-twelfth part of a shilling. Its weight is approximately, 1-3 oz. avoird.; of a half penny, 1-5 oz.; of a farthing, 1-10 oz. A half penny is one inch in diameter. Whitaker's Alm.

PENNYWEIGHT. A troy weight of twenty-four grains, or one-twentieth part of an ounce. See WEIGHTS.

PENSION. A stated and certain allowance granted by the government to an individual, or those who represent him, for services performed by him for the country.

The act of August 26, 1776, of the old congress promised pensions to soldiers and seamen who might be disabled in the war; and the act of May 15, 1778, promised half pay for seven years after the end of the war to all commissioned officers who should serve until the end of the war. The earliest act of the United States congress was that of September 29, 1789, which directed that pensions that had been paid by the states should be paid by the United States. The act of July 4, 1836, was the foundation of pensions to widows and orphans.

Originally the secretary of war was directed to make out the list of pensioners. The law of May 15, 1828, was executed at the treasury department, but by resolution of June 28, 1832, all duties devolved on that department were transferred to the war department. On March 2, 1833, an independent pension bureau was established in the war department. For a time navy pension laws were executed in the navy department, but on March 4, 1840, this was transferred to the pension bureau. The act of March 3, 1840, created the Department of the Interior and transferred the pension business to that Department, where it now is; it is in charge of a commissioner of pensions.

Pensions have been divided into "invalid pension," "gratuitous or service pensions" and "land bounties."

"No pensioner has a vested legal right to his pension. Pensions are the bounties of the government, which congress has the right to give, distribute, or recall at its discretion." U. S. v. Teller, 107 U. S. 68, 2 Sup. Ct. 39, 27 L. Ed. 352. But by an act of December 21, 1893, payment of a pension cannot be withheld or suspended without notice to the grantee of not less than thirty days.

The following abstract is taken from a compilation published by authority of the government:

War of the Revolution, Service Pensions. Widows of soldiers who served 14 days or more, or were in battle during the war, were entitled, if not being married, to $8 a month after March 9, 1873, and $12 a month after March 19, 1886. The widow of a soldier who was granted a pension received a pension at the same rate, notwithstanding the marriage, upon proof of present widowhood. There is no law granting pensions to the descendants of soldiers. The daughters of Revolutionary soldiers have in some cases been placed on the pension list by special acts.

War of 1812, Service Pensions. Soldiers and sailors who served 14 days or more, or were in any engagement, and were honorably discharged, and the widows of such received $8 per month by the act of March 9, 1878; and by the act of March 19, 1886, such widow pensioners receive $12 per month. There is no law granting the service pensions to the descendants of soldiers or sailors.

Indian Wars from 1832 to 1842, Service Pensions. The act of July 27, 1892, provides pensions for surviving officers and enlisted men, including the marines, who were in the service for 30 days in the Black Hawk War, the Creek War, the Cherokee Disturbances or the Florida Seminole War, and honorably discharged, or personally named in any resolution of Congress, and for their widows, if they have not remarried. The amount was $8 a month, irrespective of rank. It was raised to $12 a month for widows.

Indian Wars from 1817 to 1858. The same acts apply to officers and enlisted men, including marines and those in the naval service, who served for 30 days or more and were honorably discharged, in certain specified Indian wars. Provision was also made for surviving widows, who had not remarried.

Indian Wars from 1855 to 1860. By act of May 30, 1908, the provisions of the act of July 27, 1892, were extended to the surviving officers and enlisted men of the Texas Volunteers, who served against Mexico and Indian depredators and to their surviving widows, if not remarried.

Mexican War, Service Pensions. By act of January 29, 1887, officers and enlisted men in the military or naval service for 60 days or who were in battle and honorably discharged or who were personally named in any resolution of Congress are entitled to a pension at 62 years of age; or, if not, upon proof of pensionable disability and dependence.

By act of January 29, 1887, the pension commences on that date if the pensionable condition existed at that date, in survivors' claims, by reason of age or dependence; if not, then on the date the applicant became 62 years of age or dependent or disabled. The rate was $8 a month, irrespective of rank. It was increased by the act of January 5, 1893, to $12 a month, but its benefits were limited to those who were pensioners on that date. To secure the increase there must be disability for manual labor and such destitute circumstances that $8 a month is insufficient for the necessities of life. The act of April 23, 1900, removed the limitations imposed by the act of January 5, 1893.

The act of March 3, 1903, pensions all survivors of the Mexican war at $12 a month, but does not increase the pension to a widow.

By act of April 19, 1908, a widow's pension was increased to $12 a month.

By act of February 6, 1907, any person who served 60 days in the Mexican War in either service and was honorably discharged and has reached 62 years of age is entitled to a pension irrespective of rank: At 62 years $12 a month; at 70 years $15 a month, and at 75 years $20 a month.

Pensions for Disability or Death Prior to March 4, 1861. Soldiers wounded or injured or who contracted disease in the line of duty are entitled to a pension corresponding in degree to the disability. Those in the naval service receive a like pension, except engineers, firemen or coal-heavers, for disability incurred prior to August 21, 1842. The widows or children under 16 years of age of soldiers who served prior to March 4, 1861, are entitled to a pension, if the soldier's death was due to causes contracted in time of actual war. Widows or children under 16 of sailors who served prior to

March 4, 1861, are entitled to pensions only when the sailor's death occurred in the service and in the line of duty. There is no law granting a pension to parents, brothers or sisters.

Invalids Since March 4, 1861. R. S. §§ 4692, 4693, provide for applications setting forth the company and regiment of service, or of the vessel if a sailor, and the nature of the wound and how received, etc. The act of June 27, 1890, as amended May 9, 1900, provided that any officer, soldier, sailor or marine who served 90 days or more during the War of the Rebellion and was honorably discharged and was suffering from a permanent disability not the result of vicious habits, which incapacitates him for manual labor in such degree as to render him unable to earn a support, is entitled to a pension of not less than $6 nor more than $12 per month. The act of May 9, 1900, amending the act of June 27, 1890, provides that each infirmity shall be considered and the aggregate of the disabilities shall be rated.

The act of February 6, 1907, provided that any person who served 90 days or more in either service during the Civil War and was honorably discharged is entitled to the following rates irrespective of rank: At 62 years of age $12 a month; at 70 years of age $15 a month; at 75 years or over $25 a month. A pensioner may file an application for an increase of invalid pension.

Navy Service Pensions under R. S. §§ 4756, 4757. Pensions for 20 years' service and for 10 years' service respectively are allowed by the Secretary of the Navy to enlisted men and appointed petty officers who have not been discharged for misconduct.

Pensions to Widows Since March 4, 1861. To obtain a pension under R. S. §§ 4702 and 4703, it must be shown that the soldier or sailor died of a disability contracted in the service and in the line of duty. Marriage may be proved in the usual way and by the testimony of two or more witnesses who knew that the parties lived together as husband and wife and were recognized as such; and as to the claims of widows and children of Indian and colored soldiers and sailors, there need be only proof that the parties were joined in marriage by some ceremony deemed by them obligatory, or habitually recognized each other as man and wife, and were so recognized by neighbors and lived together up to the date of enlistment when the husband died in the service, or, if otherwise, to the date of his death. By act of June 27, 1890, as amended by act of May 9, 1900, pensions are granted to widows upon proof that the soldier or sailor served at least 90 days during the War of the Rebellion, that he was honorably discharged and was dead, but his death need not have been the result of his service (under the act of March 13, 1896, his death may be presumed); that the widow is without support except by daily labor and that her actual net income did not exceed $250 per year and that she married the soldier or sailor prior to June 27, 1890.

By act of April 19, 1908, pensions are granted to widows upon proof that the soldier or sailor served at least 90 days during the Civil War and that he was honorably discharged or is dead, but his death need not have been the result of service and it may be presumed. Also, that she was married prior to June 27, 1890.

Pensions to Minors Since March 4, 1861. Pensions are provided under R. S. §§ 4702, 4703, for minor children of one who died of disability in the service and in the line of duty, and by the act of June 27, 1890, as amended May 9, 1900, minor children have title under these acts upon the death or remarriage of the widow, but where the widow of the soldier or sailor did not marry prior to June 27, 1890, and his death-cause did not originate in service or in the line of duty or where she has lived in open and adulterous cohabitation, the minor takes title, even though the widow be alive and unmarried.

Pensions to Helpless Children. The act of June 27, 1890, as amended May 9, 1900, continues the pension of a minor child who is insane, idiotic, or otherwise physically or mentally helpless, after it becomes 16 years of age and during its lifetime or during disability, and the benefits of this act are extended to all pensions granted before June 27, 1890, or thereafter granted under any statute. The helplessness of the child must have originated prior to 16 years of age and must have continued thereafter.

Pensions to Dependent Relatives. By R. S. § 4707, where a soldier or sailor died of a disease contracted in the service and in the line of duty, a pension is provided for the dependent mother, whether he left a widow or minor or surviving children, the mother being a widow or abandoned by her husband and unable to support herself. Provision is also made for a dependent father and dependent minor brothers and sisters, if the soldier or sailor was a celibate. No distinction is made in the pension laws between brothers and sisters of the half, and those of the whole blood.

The act of March 3, 1901, amending R. S. § 4708, and the act of February 28, 1903, provide for the restoration of pensions to certain remarried widows on renewed widowhood.

The act of August 5, 1892, provides pensions for army nurses.

The act of March 3, 1899, provides for the division of pensions under twenty-one rules, as to which reference must be made to the act.

Inmates of the Government Hospital for the Insane. By act of February 2, 1909, the pension accruing to an inmate of such hospital must be paid to the Superintendent or disbursing agent and used for the benefit of the pensioner, and in the case of a male pensioner, his wife, minor children and dependent parents, or, if a female pensioner, her minor children, if any, in the order named.

By act of May 11, 1912, any person who served 90 days or more in the military or naval service during the Civil War, who was honorably discharged, and has reached the age of 62 years or over, is entitled to a pension according to a sliding scale beginning with 62 years of age and 90 days' service with a pension of $13 a month, and increasing to 75 years of age and service of two years or over with a pension of $30 a month. If wounded, and by reason thereof not fit for manual labor or by reason of disease incurred in service or in the line of duty, the maximum pension is $30 without regard to length of service or age. And any person who served 60 days or over in the Mexican war and has been honorably discharged shall be entitled to $30 a month.

By R. S. § 4741, officers and men on revenue cutters co-operating with the navy are placed on the navy pension list. Special acts provide for a navy pension fund and a privateer pension fund and the pensioners thereon.

No person can draw a pension as an invalid and the pay of his rank for any period, unless his disability caused his employment in a lower grade or in the civil branch of the service; R. S. § 4724; and no person can draw two pensions; R. S. § 4715. No pension shall be paid to any person or to the widow or children or heirs of any deceased person who voluntarily engaged in or aided or abetted the rebellion; R. S. § 4716; unless such person afterwards voluntarily enlisted in the army or navy and incurred disability therein; act of March 3, 1877, amended August 1, 1892.

An offence against the act of June 27, 1890, is committed when a sum greater than ten dollars has been taken, regardless of the fact whether the pension has or has not been received, and it is not necessary to aver a demand for the return of the money wrongfully taken; Frisbee v. U. S., 157 U. S. 160, 15 Sup. Ct. 586, 39 L. Ed. 657. Where one fraudulently obtained pension money from a client he is not guilty of wrongfully withholding money from the pensioner under R. S. § 4786; it applies to money before it reaches the hands of the pensioner; Ballew v. U. S., 160 U. S. 187, 16 Sup. Ct. 263, 40 L. Ed. 388. See MILITARY BOUNTY LANDS.

R. S. § 4747, protects pension money from seizure or attachment under process while in the hands of the pension office or in transmission to the pensioner. But this does not protect it after it has reached his hands; Cranz v. White, 27 Kan. 319, 41 Am. Rep. 408; a pension check handed to the wife is protected against the husband's creditors; Bullard v. Goodno, 73 Vt. 88, 50 Atl. 544.

A Kentucky act (1912) granting pensions to indigent Confederate soldiers is not obnoxious to the Kentucky constitution, which prohibits the grant of separate emoluments to any man except for "public service"; the service to the state by serving in the Confederate army was a "public service"; Bosworth v. Harp, 154 Ky. 559, 157 S. W. 1084, 45 L. R. A. (N. S.) 692.

In re Opinion of the Justices, 190 Mass. 611, 77 N. E. 820, it was said that gratuities to civil war veterans may legitimately be made in the payment of money, the erection of statues, etc. And it is said in Judson, Taxation § 349, that whatever legitimately tends to inspire patriotic sentiments, etc., is a lawful purpose and will justify taxation or the exercise of the power of eminent domain. But it is held that the payment by a state of pensions to the widows and orphans of civil war veterans is illegal; Beach v. Bradstreet, 85 Conn. 344, 82 Atl. 1030, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 946.

Pensions to School Teachers. Acts exist in some states relating to such pensions. A New York act of 1895 authorizes towns to pension school teachers; an Ohio act creates a school teachers' fund in certain cities, and requires the board of education to deduct one per cent. of the salaries paid to all teachers and pay the same into a school teachers' fund. Where the board of education required teachers contracting for employment to consent to directing one per cent. of their salaries to a pension fund, it was held that its action was invalid; State v. Rogers, 87 Minn. 130, 91 N. W. 430, 58 L. R. A. 663.

Pensions or Relief Funds for Policemen and Firemen are provided for in some states; California, Illinois, New York, Rhode Island and Wisconsin. Under the New York act the deduction of $2 a month from each policeman's pay is compulsory; People v. McClare, 3 How. Prac. N. S. (N. Y.) 8. Acts in New York, Illinois and Ohio (as to Cincinnati) provide for relief funds for firemen.

A reasonable appropriation of municipal funds for a police pension is for a strictly municipal use and is valid; Com. v. Walton, 182 Pa. 373, 38 Atl. 790, 61 Am. St. Rep. 712.

Pensions to Mothers. In a few states acts have recently been passed giving pensions to needy mothers.

Pensions, Old Age. By act of 1908, every British subject, male and female, who has attained the age of 70 years, and if he or she has been a British subject, natural born or naturalized, for at least 20 years, and has, save for temporary absences, resided in the British kingdom for 20 years, and is not in receipt of an income amounting to £31. 10s. a year, is entitled to receive for the rest of his or her life a pension of from 1s. to 5s. a week according to the amount of the re-clipient's income, so as to bring that income just over 13s. per week. The right is unalienable by any act of the person; it does not pass in bankruptcy; but conviction of certain classes of crimes during the last 10 years, and in some cases the receipt of parochial relief, are a bar.

PENSIONARY PARLIAMENT. A Parliament of Charles II which was prolonged for nearly 18 years.

PENSIONER. One who is supported by an allowance at the will of another. The head of one of the Inns of Court, otherwise the Treasurer. Pension was used to designate meetings of the Benchers in Gray's Inn.

PENT ROAD. A road shut up or closed at its terminal points. Wolcott v. Whitcomb, 40 Vt. 41.

PEONAGE. A status or condition of compulsory service based upon the indebtedness of the peon to the master. The basal fact is indebtedness. It is involuntary servitude within the 13th amendment to the United States constitution. R. S. U. S. §§ 1990, 5526 constitute it a crime; Clyatt v. U. S., 197 U. S. 207, 25 Sup. Ct. 429, 49 L. Ed. 726. The system existed in New Mexico and other territories derived from Spain. The earliest case is Jaremillo v. Romero, 1 N. M. 190. Inducing one to labor in payment of debt by threats of prosecution may amount to peonage, if by reason of the different character of the parties such threats overcome the will of the servant; U. S. v. Clement, 171 Fed. 974. The offense is complete, whether the condition of peonage exists by virtue of a local law or custom, or in violation or without the sanction of the law; Peonage Cases, 123 Fed. 671.

A clear distinction exists between peonage and the voluntary performance of labor or rendering of services in payment of a debt. In the latter case the debtor may, at his will, break his contract; Ex parte Hollman, 79 S. C. 9, 60 S. E. 19, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 242, 14 Ann. Cas. 1105, where a statute was held invalid which provided for the imprisonment of one who wilfully and unlawfully breaks a contract to perform farm labor, after having received advances. The same act was held invalid in Ex parte Drayton, 153 Fed. 986. So an Alabama act making it a misdemeanor for a laborer, under contract to work farm lands, to break it and enter into a contract with a different person without the consent of his employer and without excuse and without giving notice, was held invalid as restricting the right to make contracts for employment; Toney v. State, 141 Ala. 120, 37 South. 332, 67 L. R. A. 286, 109 Am. St. Rep. 23, 3 Ann. Cas. 319; Peonage Cases, 123 Fed. 671.

PEONIA. In Spanish Law. A portion of land which was formerly given to a simple soldier on the conquest of a country. It is not a quantity of land of different size in different provinces. In the Spanish possessions in America it measured fifty feet front and one hundred feet deep. 2 White, N. Rec. 49; Strother v. Lucas, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 444, 9 L. Ed. 1137.

PEOPLE. A state: as, the people of the state of New York. A nation in its collective and political capacity. 4 Term 783. See U. S. v. Quincy, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 467, 8 L. Ed. 458. The aggregate or mass of the individuals who constitute the state. Solon v. State, 54 Tex. Cr. R. 261, 114 S. W. 349.

In neutrality laws, a government recognized by the United States. The Three Friends, 78 Fed. 175.

"People of the county" and "the county" may be regarded, as interchangeable. St. Louis County Ct. v. Griswold, 58 Mo. 175.

When the term the people is made use of in constitutional law or discussions, it is often the case that those only are intended who have a share in the government through being clothed with the elective franchise. Thus, the people elect delegates to a constitutional convention; the people choose the officers under the constitution, and so on. For these and similar purposes, the electors, though constituting but a small minority of the whole body of the community, nevertheless act for all, and, as being for the time the representatives of sovereignty, they are considered and spoken of as the sovereign people. But in all the enumerations and guaranties of rights the whole people are intended, because the rights of all are equal, and are meant to be equally protected; Cooley, Const. (2d Ed.) 40, 267; Cooley, Const. L. 278.

In a policy of insurance, "detainments of all kings, princes, and people," the word does not include insurance against any promiscuous or lawless rabble which may be guilty of attacking or detaining a ship; 2 Marsh. Ins. 508. See INSURGENTS; NATION.

The term people of the United States is synonymous with citizens; White v. Clements, 39 Ga. 261.

Sovereign people. Every citizen is one of this people, and a constituent member of the sovereignty; Scott v. Sandford, 19 How. (U. S.) 393, 15 L. Ed. 691; it includes registered voters as well as tax payers; In re Incurring State Debts, 19 R. I. 610, 37 Atl. 14.

Where a state constitution required process to run in the name of the State, it is deficient if it run in the name of the People; Manville v. Smelting Co., 17 Fed. 126; Perkins v. State, 60 Ala. 9.

PER. By. When a writ of entry is sued out against the alienee, or descendant of the original disseisor, it is then said to be brought in the per, because the writ states that the tenant had not the entry but by the original wrong-doer. 3 Bla. Com. 181. See ENTRY, WRIT OF; POST.

PER ÆS ET LIBRAM (Lat. æs, brass, libra, scale). In Civil Law. A sale was said to be made per æs et libram when one called libripens held a scale (libra), which the one buying struck with a brazen coin (æs), and said, "I say, by the right of a Roman, this thing is mine," and gave the coin to the vendor, in presence of at least three witnesses. This kind of sale was used in the emancipation of a son or slave, and in making a will. Calvinus, Lex. Mancipatio.

PER AGREEMENT. The addition of these words in a bill of particulars for services does not preclude from recovering the value of the services specified, although no agreement for the payment of a specified sum is proven. Robinson v. Well, 45 N. Y. 810.

PER ALLUVIONEM (Lat.). In Civil Law. By alluvion, or the gradual and imperceptible increase arising from deposit by water. Vocab. Jur. Utr. Alluvio; Ang. & A. Waterec. 53.

PER AND CUI. When a writ of entry is brought against a second alienee or descendant from the disseisor, it is said to be in the per and cui, because the form of the writ is that the tenant had not entry but by and under a prior alienee, to whom the intruder himself demised it. 3 Bla. Com. 181. See ENTRY, WRIT OF.

PER ANNULUM ET BACULUM (Lat.). In Ecclesiastical Law. The symbolical investiture of an ecclesiastical dignity was per annulum et baculum, i. e. by the ring and staff. 1 Bla. Com. 378; 1 Burn, Eccl. Law 209.

PER ANNUM. Strictly speaking, by the year or through the year. Ramsdell v. Hullett, 50 Kan. 440, 31 Pac. 1092.

PER AVERSIONEM (Lat.). In Civil Law. By turning away. Applied to a sale not by measure or weight, but for a single price for the whole in gross; e. g. a sale of all the wine of a vineyard for a certain price. Vocab. Jur. Utr. Aversio. Some derive the meaning of the phrase from a turning away of the risk of a deficiency in the quantity from the seller to the buyer; others, from turning away the head, i. e. negligence in the sale; others think aversio is for adversio. Calvinus, Lex.; 2 Kent 640; 4 id. 517.

PER CAPITA (Lat. by the head or polls). When descendants take as individuals, and not by right of representation (per stirpes), they are said to take per capita. For example, if a legacy be given to the issue of A B, and A B at the time of his death shall have two children and two grandchildren, his estate shall be divided into four parts, and the children and grandchildren shall each have one of them; 2 Bla. Com. 218; Knapp v. Windsor, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 158; 2 Jarm. Wills (6th Am. Ed.) 945; 3 Beav. 451.

PER CURIAM (Lat. by the court). A phrase which occurs constantly in the reports. It distinguishes the opinion or decision of the court from that of a single judge; Abb. Law Dict. 353; though frequently it merely precedes the opinion—"by the court"—without the last mentioned significance. See OPINION. It designates, in Pennsylvania, opinions written by the chief justice of the supreme court.

PER FORMAM DONI (Lat. by the form of the gift). According to the line of descent prescribed in the conveyance of the ancestor or donor of estate-tail. 2 Bla. Com. 113; Partridge v. Dorsey's Lessee, 3 Harr. & J. (Md.) 323; 1 Washb. R. P. 74, 81.

PER FRAUDEM (Lat.). A replication to a plea where something has been pleaded which would be a discharge if it had been honestly pleaded that such a thing has been obtained by fraud; for example, where, on debt on a statute, the defendant pleads a prior action depending, if such action has been commenced by fraud, the plaintiff may reply per fraudem. 2 Chitty. Pl. *675.

PER INCURIAM. Through want of care; through inadvertence. 35 E. L. & Eq. 302.

PER INFORTUNIUM (Lat. by misadventure). Homicide per infortunium, or by misadventure, is said to take place when a man in doing a lawful act, without any intent to hurt, unfortunately kills another. Hawk. Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 11; Co. 3d Inst. 56.

PER LEGEM TERRÆ. By the law of the land.

PER MINAS (Lat. by threats). When a man is compelled to enter into a contract by threats or menaces, either for fear of loss of life or mayhem, he may avoid it afterwards. 1 Bla. Com. 131; Bac. Abr. Duress, Murder (A). See DURESS.

PER MY ET PER TOUT (Law Fr. by the moiety, or half, and by the whole). The mode in which joint tenants hold the joint estate, the effect of which, technically considered, is that for purposes of tenure and survivorship each is the holder of the whole, but for purposes of alienation each has only his own share, which is presumed in law to be equal. 1 Washb. R. P. 406; 2 Bla. Com. 182; Chal. R. P. 335.

PER PAIS TRIAL. Trial by the country, i. e. by jury.

PER PROC. By procuration; by letter of attorney. It does not necessarily mean that the act is done under procuration. 27 L. J. Ex. 468; 3 H. & W. 554. A signature of a promissory note or bill of exchange by procuration operates as notice that the agent has but limited authority to sign, and the principal is only bound by such signature if the agent was acting within the actual limits of his authority, 12 C. B. N. S. 373.

PER QUOD CONSORTIUM AMISIT (Lat. by which he lost her company). If a man's wife is so badly beaten or ill used that thereby he loses her company and assistance for any time, he has a separate remedy by an action of trespass (in the nature of an action on the case) per quod consortium amisit, in which he shall recover satisfaction in damages. 3 Bla. Com. 140; Cro. Jac. 501.

PER QUOD SERVITIUM AMISIT (Lat. by which he lost her or his service). Where a servant has been so beaten or injured that his or her services are lost to the master, the master has an action of trespass vi et armis, per quod servitium amisit, in which he must allege and prove the special damage he has sustained. 3 Bla. Com. 142. This action is commonly brought by the father for the seduction of his daughter, in which case very slight evidence of the relation of master and servant is necessary; but still some loss of service, or some expense, must be shown; 5 B. & P. 466; 5 Price 641; Kendrick v. McCrary, 11 Ga. 603; Phelin v. Kenderdine, 20 Pa. 354. See SEDUCTION.

PER SALTUM. By sudden movement; passing over certain proceedings. 8 East 511.

PER SAMPLE. By sample. A purchase so made is a collateral engagement that the goods shall be of a particular quality. 4 B. & Ald. 387.

PER SE. Taken alone; in itself; by itself.

PER STIRPES (Lat. stirps, trunk or root of a tree or race). By or according to stock or root; by right of representation. Knapp v. Windsor, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 158; 2 Bla. Com. 217; 2 Kent 425.

When descendants take by representation of their parent, they are said to take per stirpes; that is, children take among them the share which their parent would have taken, if living.

PER TOUT ET NON PER MY (Law Fr. by the whole and not by the moiety). Where an estate in fee is given to a man and his wife, they cannot take the estate by moieties, but both are seised of the entirety, per tout et non per my. 2 Bla. Com. 182. The late married woman's acts have been held to abolish estates by entireties; Cooper v. Cooper, 76 Ill. 57; Clark v. Clark, 56 N. H. 105; Meeker v. Wright, 76 N. Y. 262; contra, Hullett v. Inlow, 57 Ind. 412, 26 Am. Rep. 64; Fisher v. Provin, 25 Mich. 350; Diver v. Diver, 56 Pa. 106. See ENTIRETY.

PER UNIVERSITATEM (Lat. by the whole). Used of the acquisition of any property as a whole, in opposition to an acquisition by parts: e. g. the acquisition of an inheritance, or of the separate property of the son (peculium), etc. Calvinus, Lex. Universitas.

PER YEAR. Equivalent to the word "annually." Curtiss v. Howell, 39 N. Y. 213.

PERAMBULATION. A travelling survey. A district within which a person has the right of inspection. A method in early Scotch and English history, and thence followed in the colonial period in United States, of determining and maintaining boundaries and monuments between tenants, and between neighboring parishes. Cent. Dict. See BEATING THE BOUNDS; DE PERAMBULATIONE FACIENDA.

PERAMBULATIONE FACIENDA, WRIT DE. In English Law. The name of a writ which is sued by consent of both parties when they are in doubt as to the bounds of their respective estates; it is directed to the sheriff to make perambulation, and to set the bounds and limits between them in certainty. Fitzh. N. B. 309.

"The writ de perambulatione facienda is not known to have been adopted in practice in the United States, but in several of the states remedies somewhat similar in principle have been provided by statutes." Greenl. Ev. § 146.

PERCEPTION (From per and capere). The taking possession of. For example, a lessee or tenant before perception of the crops, i. e. before harvesting them, has a right to offset any loss which may happen to them, against the rent; but after the perception they are entirely at his risk. MacKeldey, Civil Law § 378. Used of money, it means the counting out and payment of a debt. Also used for food due to soldiers. Vicat, Voc. Jur.

PERCH. The length of sixteen feet and a half; a pole or rod of that length. Forty perches in length and four in breadth make an acre of land.

PERCOLATION. See SUBTERRANEAN WATERS; WATERS.

PERDONATIO UTLAGARIÆ (Lat.). In English Law. A pardon for a man who, for contempt in not yielding obedience to the process of the king's courts, is outlawed, and afterwards, of his own accord, surrenders.

PERDUELLIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. At first, an honorable enmity to the republic; afterwards, a traitorous enmity of a citizen; consisting in being of a hostile disposition towards the republic, e. g. treason aiming at the supreme power, violating the privileges of a Roman citizen by beating him, etc., attempting anything against the person of the emperor, and, in general, any open hostility to the republic. Sometimes used for the enemy or traitor himself. Perduellio was distinguished from crimen imminutæ majestatis, as being an attempt against the whole republic, punishable in comitia centuriata, by crucifixion and by infamy after death. Calvinus, Lex.; Vicat, Voc. Jur.

PEREGRINI. The name given to aliens in Rome. The prætor peregrinus decided disputes between them and their disputes with Roman citizens and principally built up the body of law which received the name of jus gentium. Bryce, Rome & England. See PRÆTOR.

Under the denomination of peregrini were comprehended all who did not enjoy any capacity of the law, namely, slaves, alien enemies, and such foreigners as belonged to nations with which the Romans had not established relations. Savigny, Dr. Rom. § 66.

PEREMPT. To waive or bar an appeal by one's own act so as partially to comply with or acquiesce in a sentence of a court. Phill. Eccl. L. 1275; Rog. Eccl. L. 47.

PEREMPTORIUS (Lat. from perimere, to destroy). In Civil Law. That which takes away or destroys forever; hence, exceptio peremptoria, a plea which is a perpetual bar. See PEREMPTORY. Bract. lib. 4, c. 20; Fleta, lib. 6, c. 36, § 3; Calvinus, Lex.

PEREMPTORY. Absolute; positive. A final determination to act, without hope of renewing or altering. Joined to a substantive, this word is frequently used in law; as, peremptory action; Fitzh. N. B. 35, 38, 104, 108; peremptory nonsuit; id. 5, 11; peremptory exception; Bract. lib. 4, c. 20; peremptory undertaking; 3 Chitty, Pr. 112, 793; peremptory challenge of jurors; Inst. 4. 13. 9; Code 7. 50. 2; 8. 36. 8; Dig. 5. 1. 70. 73.

PEREMPTORY CHALLENGE. See CHALLENGE.

PEREMPTORY DAY. A precise time when certain business by rule of court ought to be spoken to.

PEREMPTORY DEFENCE. A defence which insists that the plaintiff never had the right to institute the suit, or that, if he had, the original right is extinguished or determined. 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 4206.

PEREMPTORY EXCEPTION. Any defence which denies entirely the ground of action. 1 White, Rec. 283. So of a demurrer; Lambeth v. Turner, 1 Tex. 364.

PEREMPTORY MANDAMUS. A mandamus requiring a thing to be done absolutely. It is usually granted after failure to show satisfactory cause on an alternative mandamus. No other return will be permitted but absolute obedience; 3 Bla. Com. *110; Tapp. Mand. 400. See MANDAMUS.

PEREMPTORY PAPER. A court paper containing a list of all motions.

PEREMPTORY PLEA. A plea which goes to destroy the right of action itself; a plea in bar or to the action. 3 Steph. Com. 11th ed. 541; 2 Saund. Pl. & Ev. 645.

PEREMPTORY RULES. Rules entered as of course in the office of the clerk of a court, on motion of counsel; they are made absolute in the first instance and do not come before the court, unless in some subsequent proceedings. Mitchell, Motions & Rules 9.

PERFECT. Complete. The word implies either physical, moral, or mechanical perfection. 17 C. B. N. S. 601. A guaranty that goods are perfect is construed to mean that they are perfect for the use intended; Roe v. Bachelidor, 41 Wis. 360.

The term is applied to obligations in order to distinguish those which may be enforced by law, which are called perfect, Aycock v. Martin, 37 Ga. 128, 92 Am. Dec. 56, from those which cannot be so enforced, which are said to be imperfect.

A perfect title is one which is good both at law and in equity. Warner v. Mut. A. Co., 21 Conn. 449.

PERFIDY. The act of one who has engaged his faith to do a thing, and does not do it, but does the contrary. Wolff § 390.

PERFORMANCE. The act of doing something. It is synonymous with fulfilling. Ætna Ins. Co. v. Kittles, 81 Ind. 97.

The thing done: as, Paul is exonerated from the obligation of his contract by its performance.

When a contract has been made by parol, which under the statute of frauds could not be enforced, because it was not in writing, and the party seeking to avoid it has received the whole or a part performance of such agreement, he cannot afterwards avoid it; Parkhurst v. Van Cortlandt, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 273; L. R. 1 Ch. 35; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Ristine, 77 Fed. 58, 23 C. C. A. 13, 40 U. S. App. 579; and such part performance will enable the other party to prove it aliunde; Thompson v. Tod, 1 Pet. C. C. 380, Fed. Cas. No. 13,978; Smith v. Brailsford, 1 Des. (S. C.) 350; Ebert v. Wood, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 218, 2 Am. Dec. 436.

The statute of frauds does not apply to a contract which has been fully performed by one party and partially, at least, by the other; Warwick & C. Water Co. v. Allen (R. I.) 35 Atl. 579. An agreement for constructing a party wall is so performed as to take it out of the statute when built by one owner and used by the other; Duvelmeyer v. Duvelmeyer, 7 Ohio Dec. 426. Part performance of a verbal contract for the sale of land is not sufficient to avoid the statute; Washington v. Soria, 73 Miss. 665, 19 South. 485, 55 Am. St. Rep. 555; though in some cases it is; Goodwin v. Smith, 89 Me. 506, 36 Atl. 997; as where the land was selected and a conveyance made; Lingeman v. Shirk, 15 Ind. App. 432, 43 N. E. 33; and where there has been an entry into possession under a parol promise and a deed has been tendered, it is sufficient part performance to sustain an action for the purchase money, though it would not have been for compelling specific performance; Stephens v. Harding, 48 Neb. 659, 67 N. W. 746.

If it is a parol contract for the sale of land, the general rule in equity is that it is taken out of the statute of frauds if there has been such part performance as to make it a fraud not to complete the contract; but if adequate compensation can be had in damages, the party is left to his suit. Where the performance has been in giving personal service, specific performance has been decreed; Lothrop v. Marble, 12 S. D. 511, 81 N. W. 885, 76 Am. St. Rep. 626; Davison v. Davison, 13 N. J. Eq. 246; contra, 8 App. Cas. 467.

The question what is sufficient delivery to operate as part performance to avoid the statute is one of frequent occurrence, and must usually be determined upon the circumstances of each case and is not a subject upon which it is easy to generalize. See St. Paul & M. Trust Co. v. Howell, 59 Minn. 295, 61 N. W. 141; Agnew v. Dumas, 64 Vt. 147, 23 Atl. 634; Curtis v. Lumber Co., 114 N. C. 530, 19 S. E. 374; Corbett v. Wolford, 84 Md. 426, 35 Atl. 1088; Powder River L. S. Co. v. Lamb, 38 Neb. 339, 56 N. W. 1019; Hudson Furniture Co. v. Carpet Co., 10 Utah, 31, 36 Pac. 132.

The question of performance becomes important where it is necessary to determine whether the non-performance of one party according to the exact terms of the contract will prevent a recovery upon it, or in case that is not permitted, upon a quantum meruit. As to the effect of a contract for services, where the employé is discharged for good cause before the termination of his contract, the authorities conflict. See Timberlake v. Thayer, 71 Miss. 279, 14 South. 446, 24 L. R. A. 231, where the authorities are collected. See also MASTER AND SERVANT. Where there is a contract for permanent employment, a substantial performance by the employer would have the effect of releasing him from liability upon his contract to an employé who refused to comply with the terms of the contract; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Cochran, 42 Neb. 531, 60 N. W. 894.

One who abandons a contract or refuses to perform it, the other party being willing to complete his performance, cannot recover on a quantum meruit for labor expended on partial performance; Johnson v. Fehsefeldt, 106 Minn. 202, 118 N. W. 797, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1069; Mikolajewski v. Pugell, 62 Misc. 449, 114 N. Y. Supp. 1084; contra, if the part performance is beneficial to the other party; Cleveland, C., C. & St. L. R. Co. v. Scott, 39 Ind. App. 420, 79 N. E. 226.

Where workmen refuse to perform a contract for their services and their employer makes a new contract with them at a greater price, he is bound to perform such new contract; Domenico v. Packers' Ass'n, 112 Fed. 554.

The non-performance of a building contract is not excused by inevitable accident; Haynes & Co. v. Second B. Church, 88 Mo.

285, 57 Am. Rep. 413; School District No. 1 v. Dauchy, 25 Conn. 530, 68 Am. Dec. 371; Dermott v. Jones, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 1, 17 L. Ed. 762; Tompkins v. Dudley, 25 N. Y. 272, 82 Am. Dec. 349; nor by the acceptance of the buildings when not finished in due time; Dermott v. Jones, 23 How. (U. S.) 220, 16 L. Ed. 442; but it may be by acts of the other party which delay completion, even if acquiesced in by the contractor; Mansfield v. R. Co., 102 N. Y. 205, 6 N. E. 386. The prevention of performance by the destruction of a building before completion, if the contract is entire, will prevent recovery for any part; L. R. 2 C. P. 651; so where the house was completed all but the painting; Annis v. Saugy (R. I.) 74 Atl. 81; but where there is a provision for payment from time to time, it is otherwise; 4 M. & W. 699. There may be waiver of strict performance as to time; Fallon v. Lawler, 102 N. Y. 228, 6 N. E. 392; and a recovery for work actually done; Knotts v. Stearns, 91 U. S. 640, 23 L. Ed. 252; a vendor who has waived performance at the time specified cannot rescind without reasonable notice to the vendee; Harris v. Troup, 8 Paige (N. Y.) 423; Cummings v. Rogers, 36 Minn. 317, 30 N. W. 892; Wallace v. Pidge, 4 Mich. 573. Nothing can be recovered for part performance of a contract unless full performance was waived or prevented; Catlin v. Tobias, 26 N. Y. 217, 84 Am. Dec. 183; Jennings v. Lyons, 39 Wis. 553, 20 Am. Rep. 57; Holden Steam Mill Co. v. Westervelt, 67 Me. 449; but see Avery v. Willson, 81 N. Y. 341, 37 Am. Rep. 503. See 2 Benj. Sales § 1032.

A builder may recover upon an entire contract which he has substantially performed less damages for actual incompleteness; Foeller v. Heintz, 137 Wis. 169, 118 N. W. 543, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 327; Philip Hiss Co. v. Pitcairn, 107 Fed. 425; Elizabeth v. Fitzgerald, 114 Fed. 547, 52 C. C. A. 321; Desmond-Dunne Co. v. Friedman-Doscher Co., 162 N. Y. 486, 56 N. E. 995; McCartan v. Trenton, 57 N. J. Eq. 571, 41 Atl. 830. Minor defects and omissions, if not wilful, do not prevent a recovery for substantial performance; Seebach v. Kuhn, 9 Cal. App. 485, 99 Pac. 723; and recovery is even allowed in cases where payment is conditioned on the production of an architect's certificate which the architect has refused because he is dissatisfied with the work; Wicker v. Messinger, 12 Ohio C. D. 425; but one who invokes that doctrine must himself have faithfully endeavored to perform; Gillespie Tool Co. v. Wilson, 123 Pa. 19, 16 Atl. 36. See Boettler v. Tendick, 73 Tex. 488, 11 S. W. 497, 5 L. R. A. 270; Elliott v. Caldwell, 43 Minn. 357, 45 N. W. 845, 9 L. R. A. 52.

Whether a contract is entire or severable with respect to its performance depends generally upon the consideration, and not the subject matter; Rugg v. Moore, 110 Pa.

236, 1 Atl. 320; if the latter is apportioned, either expressly or impliedly, the contract is severable; Morgan v. McKee, 77 Pa. 228; so also where it provides for the performance of different things at different times; Barrie v. Earle, 143 Mass. 1, 8 N. E. 639, 58 Am. Rep. 126; or where the price is apportioned to different items to be separately performed; Andrews v. Durant, 11 N. Y. 35, 62 Am. Dec. 55; 5 B. & Ald. 942. See Katz v. Bedford, 77 Cal. 319, 19 Pac. 523, 1 L. R. A. 826.

Where no time is fixed for performance, a reasonable time will be presumed to have been intended; Gruaz v. Le Crone, 45 Ill. App. 624; Peabody v. Bement, 79 Mich. 47, 44 N. W. 416; Russell v. Ormsbee, 10 Vt. 274; 4 Q. B. D. 133; Wheelock v. Tanner, 39 N. Y. 481; Whiting v. Gray, 27 Fla. 482, 8 South. 726, 11 L. R. A. 526. What is a reasonable time will depend upon the circumstances of the case; Greene v. Dingley, 24 Me. 131; L. R. 1 C. P. 385; Cameron v. Wells, 30 Vt. 633; Boyd & Co. v. Gunnison & Co., 14 W. Va. 1; and is a question for the jury; 18 N. Y. L. J. 1809; and may be shown by the acts of the parties or by expert evidence; Goddard v. Cresfield Mills, 75 Fed. 818, 21 C. C. A. 530; delivery of goods at six o'clock in the morning after the day fixed for performance is substantial performance; New Jersey Co. v. Wise Co., 55 Misc. 204, 105 N. Y. Supp. 231.

Where no time has been fixed, or where performance at an appointed time has been waived, either party may limit a reasonable period within which it must be performed, giving notice thereof to the other party; 16 Beav. 59, 239; L. R. 10 Eq. 281.

A contract for the delivery of a number of personal chattels of the same kind is severable in its nature, and if a part is accepted and appropriated to the use of the vendee, he must pay the stipulated price for such part, less damages sustained by reason of the failure to make complete delivery; Saunders v. Short, 86 Fed. 225, 30 C. C. A. 462.

Where the contract is silent as to the mode of performance, it should be according to the usage of the place where it is made; 11 Ex. 645; but it must be substantial and bona fide, conforming to the true intent and meaning, and not merely the letter, of the agreement; 4 id. 128. Conditions precedent must be performed; 3 Addison, Contr. 8th ed. [1189]. A contract to deliver personal property means only delivery at some convenient place subject to the disposal of the buyer upon notification to him; Kauffman v. Raeder, 108 Fed. 171, 47 C. C. A. 278, 54 L. R. A. 247; and if the shipments are to be made to places designated by the buyer who does not give the necessary orders, the seller is not required to tender the goods at the buyer's place of business; Seligman v. Beecher, 36 Pa. Super. Ct. 475. Where payment and delivery are to be at a specified time and place concurrently and one party is absent, the other party need only show that he was ready and willing to perform; Catlin v. Jones, 52 Or. 337, 97 Pac. 546.

One who prevents another from performing his part of a contract is estopped from insisting that any rights were lost by such failure to perform, but must give a reasonable time therefor after the obstruction is removed; Blodgett v. Zinc Co., 120 Fed. 893, 58 C. C. A. 79; Elkhart Car-Works Co. v. Ellis, 113 Ind. 215, 15 N. E. 249.

Where the buyer accepts a late shipment of one order for goods he does not waive his right to object to late deliveries of the other orders under the same contract; Braitsch v. Kiel Co., 114 N. Y. Supp. 872.

A party who is himself in default cannot insist on performance by the other party as a condition precedent to his performance; Harris Lumber Co. v. Lumber Co., 88 Ark. 491, 115 S. W. 168; contra, Tronson v. Colby University, 9 N. D. 559, 84 N. W. 474, where a note was given in consideration of the promisee's promise to discharge certain claims against the promisor and the promisee failed to pay the claims, such failure was no defense to an action on the note.

Difficulty or impossibility of performance, short of impossibility, will not excuse non-performance; Cameron-Hawn Realty Co. v. Albany, 207 N. Y. 377, 101 N. E. 162; but this does not apply to executory contracts for personal services, for the sale of specific chattels, or for the use of particular buildings; id.

See CONDITION.

In Kauffman v. Raeder, 108 Fed. 171, 47 C. C. A. 278, 54 L. R. A. 247, Sanborn, J., distinguished the case from Norrington v. Wright, 115 U. S. 188, 6 Sup. Ct. 12, 29 L. Ed. 366; Bowes v. Shand, 2 App. Cas. 467, and Telfner v. Russ, 162 U. S. 170, 16 Sup. Ct. 695, 40 L. Ed. 930, in that the questions in those cases related to the performance of executory contracts of sale under which the defendant had received no benefit for partial performance by the plaintiff for which they had not paid, and the broken covenants were covenants which went to the whole consideration of the contract, while in the case at bar the defendants had received the benefits of a substantial performance by the plaintiff without paying the agreed consideration therefor, and the covenant was a subordinate covenant, the breach of which could be readily compensated in damages. He stated the following rules:

Where one party to a contract has received and retains the benefit of a substantial partial performance thereof by another, he cannot rescind, but must perform his part, and his remedy for the breach of complete performance by the other party is limited to compensation in damages.

Where a party to a contract has conferred upon the other party the benefits of a substantial partial performance thereof, but has not completely performed the contract, he may sue the other party for specific performance or for damages for the latter's failure to perform, upon the ground of his own partial performance but not his complete performance; and the defendant may recoup his damages for the plaintiff's failure of the complete performance, or may recover them in an independent action.

The breach of a dependent covenant, which goes to the whole consideration, gives the injured party the right to rescind, or to treat the contract as broken and recover damages for a total breach.

The breach of an independent covenant, which does not go to the whole consideration, is not a breach of the entire contract and does not warrant its rescission by the injured party. The latter is still bound to perform his part of the contract and his only remedy is compensation in damages.

An open cessation of performance, even if justified, excuses the other party; The Eliza Lines, 199 U. S. 119, 26 Sup. Ct. 8, 50 L. Ed. 115, 4 Ann. Cas. 406.

A seller cannot repudiate the entire contract if the buyer has refused to pay for one instalment on delivery as stipulated; West v. Bechtel, 125 Mich. 144, 84 N. W. 69, 51 L. R. A. 791; contra, Webster v. Moore, 108 Md. 572, 71 Atl. 466.

See ELECTION OF RIGHTS OR REMEDIES; FROM; BREACH; INDEPENDENT PROMISES; SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

PERIL. The risk, contingency, or cause of loss insured against, in a policy of insurance. See RISK; INSURANCE.

PERIL OF DEATH. A term used to denote that condition of apprehension of death in which it is necessary that the donor should be, in order to make a valid gift mortis causa.

In the cases on this subject there is found a great lack of precision of definition. The result of an examination of the authorities is thus stated by Bates, Ch., in Robson v. Robson's Adm'r, 3 Del. Ch. 51. 63: "I have labored to obtain from the authorities a clear view of what is implied in these terms, peril of death, in other words, what is that precise condition of disability in consideration of which it is that the law gives effect to a gift causa mortis. Thus much is certain, that the gift, to be valid, in the first instance must be made under apprehension of death, as likely to result from some present peril, usually that of sickness. It is further certain that to render the gift finally effectual death must in fact ensue from the sickness or other peril under which it was made. But on another question I am unable to derive from the text books and decisions any settled conclusion: That question is, whether the apprehension of death must be an apprehension of death as presently imminent, the donor being, as it is said, in extremis; or, whether it is sufficient for the validity of the gift if death be contemplated as the probable result of the sickness, a result likely or even certain to occur but after an indefinite interval, it may be of weeks or months; as in the case of chronic diseases generally." After adverting to the difference of view to be found in the leading English cases, the chancellor continues: "The question is uncontrolled by any decisions known to me in our own courts; and as between the English cases I confess a strong preference for the narrower construction of these terms 'peril of death,' the one which seems to have been at first held. It is consistent with the original object of admitting these gifts into the English law; it guards the policy of the statute of wills; and prevents frauds and uncertainties of title." This view of the proper construction of the phrase "peril of death," was founded upon the theory that gifts mortis causa were testamentary in their nature. But Gibson, C. J., in Nicholas v. Adams, 2 Whart. (Pa.) 17, held to the contrary, "that these gifts are not testamentary, but, as he describes them, are gifts executed in the first instance by delivery of the thing, though defeasible by reclamation, the contingency of survivorship or deliverance from the peril." By way of comment on the last cited case it has been suggested that, "that able judge (and this is said with great deference) seems to have been misled by a consideration of gifts causa mortis under the civil law. Under that law these gifts formed quite an expanded system. They embraced all cases of gifts made in consideration of mortality, whether made in present danger or not." Robson v. Robson's Adm'r, 3 Del. Ch. 66.

See DONATIO MORTIS CAUSA.

PERILS OF THE SEA. All marine casualties resulting from the violent action of the elements, as distinguished from their natural, silent influence upon the fabric of the vessel. The Warren Adams, 74 Fed. 413, 20 C. C. A. 486.

A phrase contained in bills of lading, and a class of dangers to goods carried, the effects of which the carriers do not undertake to insure against in virtue of their general undertaking.

Bills of lading generally contain an exception that the carrier shall not be liable for "perils of the sea." What is the precise import of this phrase is not, perhaps, very exactly settled. In a strict sense, the words perils of the sea denote the natural accidents peculiar to the sea; but in more than one instance they have been held to extend to events not attributable to natural causes.

Perils of the sea denote natural accidents peculiar to that element, which do not happen by the intervention of man, nor are to be prevented by human prudence. It is a loss happening in spite of all human effort and sagacity; 2 Kent 597, approved in The Majestic, 166 U. S. 386, 17 Sup. Ct. 597, 41 L. Ed. 1039. It is said to have a broader signification than the act of God and includes calamities not caused by violence or a convulsion of nature, such as lightning, flood, or tempest; The Majestic, 60 Fed. 624, 9 C. C. A. 161, 20 U. S. App. 503, on appeal in The Majestic, 166 U. S. 386, 17 Sup. Ct. 597, 41 L. Ed. 1039, where Fuller, C. J., said that this might be the case, but did not decide the exact point.

Generally speaking the words "perils of the sea" have the same meaning in a bill of lading as in a policy of insurance. There is a difference in their effect in the two cases of contract. Where negligence of the master or crew of the vessel contributes to a loss by a peril of the sea, an insurer is liable, because the insured does not warrant that his servants shall use due care, whereas the exception of perils of the sea in a bill of lading does not relieve the carrier from his primary obligation to carry with reasonable care, unless prevented by the excepted perils; but when it is distinctly found that there is no negligence, there is no reason for much inconvenience in holding that the words have different meanings in the two kinds of commercial contract; The G. R. Booth, 171 U. S. 450, 19 Sup. Ct. 9, 43 L. Ed. 234; Compania De Navigacion la Flecha v. Brauer, 168 U. S. 104, 18 Sup. Ct. 12, 42 L. Ed. 398.

The damage must be due to an accident, of a kind peculiar to the sea, directly and exclusively, without any negligence on the part of the ship-owner or his servants, and must not be due to unseaworthiness of the ship when she started on the voyage; Pollock, Bill of Lading 40. "There must be some casualty, something which could not be foreseen as one of the necessary incidents of the adventure;" 12 App. Cas. 509.

Perils of the sea include a capture by pirates; Gage v. Tirrell, 9 Allen (Mass.) 310; loss by fire; Slater v. Rubber Co., 26 Conn. 128; Miller v. Nav. Co., 10 N. Y. 431; hidden obstructions in a river, recently brought there by the current; Redpath v. Vaughan, 52 Barb. (N. Y.) 489; but see Friend v. Woods, 6 Gratt. (Va.) 189, 52 Am. Dec. 119; loss due to motion of the sea; Christie v. The Craigton, 41 Fed. 62; but not by the natural and inevitable action of winds and waves; 12 App. Cas. 509; by a tidal wave and flood of unusual violence; Pearce v. The Thomas Newton, 41 Fed. 106. Also the following, if the immediate damage is caused by salt water; rolling and pitching of the ship in rough weather; 32 L. T. 847; running ashore in a fog; L. R. 9 Ex. 339; foundering in a collision; 12 App. Cas. 509; rough seas although not extraordinary; The Newport News, 199 Fed. 968; a loss caused by water entering a water-tight compartment through an open deadlight; Starbuck v. Ins. Co., 19 App. Div. 139, 45 N. Y. Supp. 995; damage to a cargo by sea water entering the hold around a loose rivet is a loss by perils of the sea; The Sandfield, 92 Fed. 663, 34 C. C. A. 612.

An accident happening in the course of necessary repairs is a peril ejusdem generis with those named in the policy and is covered by the general clause; Swift v. Ins. Co., 122 Mass. 573; but not where the accident is the necessary and inevitable result of the means of repair adopted; Eureka F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Purcell, 19 Ohio Cir. Ct. R. 135.

The loss of logs which broke loose from a raft by reason of a high wind after they had been towed out to a steamer for loading in the open sea is such loss; Munson Steamship Line v. Steiger & Co., 136 Fed. 772, 69 C. C. A. 492; rats eating a hole in a ship and letting water in; 12 App. Cas. 527; the destruction of goods at sea by rats has been held a peril of the sea, the carrier not being in default; Garrigues v. Cox, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 592, 2 Am. Dec. 493. See Infra.

It includes striking on a sunken rock not on the chart, or a rock from which the light has been removed, or an iceberg, or a vessel without lights; 12 App. 514; or a sword fish making a hole in the ship; id. 525; rough seas, though not extraordinary; The Newport News, 199 Fed. 968.

Where the vessel's main shaft was broken by a cause coming within perils of the sea and by the necessary delays for repairs the cargo was destroyed and the plaintiff lost the entire freight, it was held that this was a claim consequent on the disabling of the vessel by peril of the sea; 75 L. T. 155. Where a cargo was damaged by sea water, which, during the voyage, was caused by the giving way of a bolt used to fasten a stanchion, and it appeared that the ship had encountered very heavy weather, but the evidence showed that the stanchion had withstood with much heavier cargo on a former voyage, and there was no fault in the original construction shown, it was held that the loss came within the exemption clause; The Exe, 57 Fed. 399, 6 C. C. A. 410, 14 U. S. App. 626.

The stranding of a steamer by reason of the negligence of a local pilot, by which the anchor dragged and a portion of her cargo was damaged, is a sea peril and the steamer is not responsible for the negligence of the pilot; The Etona, 71 Fed. 895, 18 C. C. A. 380, 38 U. S. App. 50.

It does not include: Restraint of princes and rulers; Parkhurst v. Ins. Co., 100 Mass. 301, 97 Am. Dec. 100, 1 Am. Rep. 105; 10 Q. B. 517; Howland v. Greenway, 22 How. (U. S.) 502; loss by rats; The Miletus, 5

Blatch. 335, Fed. Cas. No. 9,545; 17 Q. B. Div. 670 (contra, Garrigues v. Cox, 1 Binn. [Pa.] 592, 2 Am. Dec. 493); destruction by vermin in certain seas, where such injury is to be expected; Martin v. Ins. Co., 2 Mass. 429; 12 App. Cas. 524; by worms; The Giles Loring, 48 Fed. 463; confiscation of cargo as contraband by a foreign court; 10 Q. B. 517; damage caused by an accident to machinery that would equally have occurred on land under similar condition; 12 App. Cas. 592; retardation of the voyage by which meats are spoiled; L. R. 4 C. P. 206; encountering heavy seas; The Gulnare, 42 Fed. 861; an explosion by which a hole was made in a ship's bottom and the cargo was injured by water; The G. R. Booth, 171 U. S. 450, 19 Sup. Ct. 9, 43 L. Ed. 234.

A wrongful jettison of sound cattle by order of the master from unfounded apprehensions during rough weather was held not a loss by peril of the sea; Compania de Navegacion la Flecha v. Brauer, 168 U. S. 104, 18 Sup. Ct. 12, 42 L. Ed. 398.

If the jettison of cargo or damage thereto is rendered necessary by, or due to, any fault or breach of contract on the part of the owner or master of the vessel, the loss must be attributed to that cause, rather than to the sea peril, although that may enter into the case; Corsar v. Spreckles & Bros. Co., 141 Fed. 260, 72 C. C. A. 378.

Where a cargo was damaged by water which reached it through a pipe which had been gnawed by rats, it was held that the ship was responsible for the whole damage to the cargo, less such portion as could be shown affirmatively to have been done by sea peril; The Euripides, 71 Fed. 728, 18 C. C. A. 226, 38 U. S. App. 1.

Where the loss might not have occurred but for the unseaworthiness of the ship or the negligence or breach of contract of the owner or master, it would seem that the owner is not exonerated by the fact that the proximate cause of the loss was a peril of the sea; The Portsmouth, 9 Wall. (U. S.) 684, 19 L. Ed. 754; 14 C. B. n. s. 59.

The owner of a ship cannot enforce contribution from the owners of the cargo to defray expenses incurred in rescuing the vessel from a peril encountered from bad seamanship or from the untrustworthy character of the vessel, but is entitled to such contribution where the peril incurred was one solely incident to navigation, unmixed with negligence on the part of the owner or the crew; Berry Coal & Coke Co. v. R. Co., 116 Mo. App. 214, 92 S. W. 714.

The mere fact of a collision at sea is not proof that it occurred in such a way as to be a peril of the sea; 11 P. D. 170. The burden of proof is on the shipowner; The Giava, 56 Fed. 243; The Mascotte, 51 Fed. 605, 2 C. C. A. 399, 1 U. S. App. 251; if goods are lost, the presumption is that it was the fault of the carrier; Christie v. The Craigton, 41 Fed. 62.

The exception in a charter-party as to dangers of the seas and navigation, is not applicable to the perils which arise from a breach of the ship-owner's obligation; Bowring v. Heband, 56 Fed. 520, 5 C. C. A. 640, 11 U. S. App. 648.

The mere fact that goods are damaged by sea water entering the ship does not create a presumption of damage by peril of the sea even when aided by the presumption of seaworthiness, for the water may still have got in through negligence; The Queen of The Pacific, 75 Fed. 74. But where sea perils have been encountered adequate to cause damage to a seaworthy ship and there is general proof of seaworthiness, the damage is presumptively due to such perils; The Sandfield, 79 Fed. 371.

Freight or passage money paid in advance may be recovered back if the voyage be broken up by a peril of the sea and the carrier fails to complete the contract; Chase v. Ins. Co., 9 Allen (Mass.) 311.

See ACT OF GOD; FORTUITOUS EVENT; HARTER ACT; PILOT; RESTRAINT OF RULES; SEAWORTHY.

PERINDE VALERE. A writ of dispensation granted by the pope to a clerk admitted to a benefice, although incapable. Gibs, 87; 3 Burn, Eccl. L. 111.

PERIOD. A stated and recurring interval of time, a round or series of years, by which time is measured. People v. Leask, 67 N. Y. 528.

When used to designate an act to be done or to be begun, though its completion may take an uncertain time, as for instance, the act of exportation, it must mean the day on which the exportation commences. Sampson v. Peaslee, 20 How. (U. S.) 579, 15 L. Ed. 1022. See TIME.

PERIODICAL PAYMENTS. Payments occurring periodically, that is, at fixed times from some antecedent obligation and not at variable periods at the discretion of individuals. 42 L. J. Ch. 337.

PERIODICAL PUBLICATIONS. This term in the post office act of March 3, 1879, as used in its obvious and actual sense, denotes the generally understood class of publications commonly called by the name of periodicals. Houghton v. Payne, 194 U. S. 88, 24 Sup. Ct. 590, 48 L. Ed. 888. A periodical, in the postal laws, implies that no single number of a series is a complete book in itself; Smith v. Hitchcock, 226 U. S. 53, 33 Sup. Ct. 6, 57 L. Ed. 119.

A post office department order relating to the transportation of periodicals was held not illegal as constituting an unjust discrimination against certain periodicals; Review of Reviews Co. v. Hitchcock, 192 Fed. 359.

See PERIODICAL WORK.

PERIODICAL WORK. Within the copyright act, 5 & 6 Vict., one that comes out from time to time and is miscellaneous in its articles; 16 L. J. Ch. 142; but a newspaper has been held not a periodical within that act; 39 L. J. Ch. 132; L. R. 9 Eq. 324; contra, 50 L. J. Ch. 621; 17 Ch. D. 708.

See PERIODICAL PUBLICATION.

PERIPHRAIS. Circumlocution; the use of other words to express the sense of one.

Some words are so technical in their meaning that in charging offences in indictments they must be used or the indictment will not be sustained; for example, an indictment for treason must contain the word traitorously; an indictment for burglary, burglariously; and feloniously must be introduced into every indictment for felony; Co. 3d Inst. 15; 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. 172; 4 Bla. Com. 307; Bac. Abr. Indictment (G 1); Com. Dig. Indictment (G 6); Cro. Car. c. 37.

PERISH. To come to an end; to cease to be; to die.

What has never existed cannot be said to have perished.

When two or more persons die by the same accident, as a shipwreck, no presumption arises that one perished before the other.

See SURVIVOR.

PERISHABLE. Subject to speedy decay. Webster v. Peck, 31 Conn. 498.

PERISHABLE GOODS. Goods which are lessened in value and become worse by being kept.

Losses due to the natural decay, deterioration, and waste of perishable goods in the hands of a carrier are excusable. Reference must always be had, however, to the nature and inherent qualities of the articles in question, their unavoidable exposure at the time and place, and under the general circumstances, while in the charge of a carrier of ordinary prudence, and their condition when entrusted to him; Schoul. Bail. 397; American Exp. Co. v. Smith, 33 Ohio St. 511, 31 Am. Rep. 567.

In admiralty practice, property in its nature perishable, or liable to deterioration, injury, or decay, may be sold pending suit and the proceeds brought into court to abide the event of the suit; Jones v. Springer, 226 U. S. 148, 33 Sup. Ct. 64, 57 L. Ed. 161; or the court may order it appraised and deliver it to the claimant, upon his paying into court such sum of money, or giving such bond as the court may direct; Bened. Adm. § 444; The Alligator, 1 Gall. 148, Fed. Cas. No. 248; The Struggle, 1 Gall. 476, Fed. Cas. No. 13,550.

There is a similar practice in equity and in most of the states such property when taken in execution or under attachment, on petition may be ordered sold, pending suit; in which case the proceeds of sale are held in place of the property. See COMMON CARRIERS.

In order to authorize the court to order property levied upon under a warrant of attachment, to be sold as being perishable, it must appear that such property is inherently liable to deterioration and decay and it is not sufficient to show that it will depreciate in value because of changes in fashion; Fisk v. Spring, 25 Hun (N. Y.) 367. Fattened cattle are perishable property; McCall v. Peachy's Adm'r, 3 Munf. (Va.) 288; also potatoes; Williams v. Cole, 16 Me. 208; skins and furs; Astor v. Ins. Co., 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 202; kid gloves; Fisk v. Spring, 25 Hun (N. Y.) 367; but not merchantable corn; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. McClellan, 54 Ill. 67, 5 Am. Rep. 83.

A vessel chartered mainly for the transportation of bananas from Port Limon to New York, with knowledge by her owners of a practice to cut and prepare the bananas in expectation of her arrival on a certain date to load, was held liable for damage from deterioration of the fruit by delay in reaching Port Limon through unseaworthiness; The Georg Dumois, 88 Fed. 537.

The doctrine applies to real estate in litigation and liable to deteriorate; Middleton v. R. Co., 26 N. J. Eq. 269.

See BONA PERITURA.

PERJURY. The wilful assertion as to a matter of fact, opinion, belief, or knowledge, made by a witness in a judicial proceeding as part of his evidence, either upon oath or in any form allowed by law to be substituted for an oath, whether such evidence is given in open court, or in an affidavit, or otherwise, such assertion being known to such witness to be false, and being intended by him to mislead the court, jury, or person holding the proceeding. 2 Whart. C. L. § 1244.

The wilful giving, under oath, in a judicial proceeding or course of justice, of false testimony material to the issue or point of inquiry. 2 Bish. N. Cr. Law § 1015.

It consists in swearing wilfully and corruptly to some matter which is untrue. State v. Smith, 63 Vt. 201, 22 Atl. 604.

Various false statements in one oath constitute but a single offense; Black v. State (Ga.) 79 S. E. 173.

The intention must be wilful. The oath must be taken and the falsehood asserted with deliberation and a consciousness of the nature of the statement made; for if it has arisen in consequence of inadvertency, surprise, or mistake of the import of the question, there was no corrupt motive; Hawk. Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 69, s. 2; Cro. Eliz. 492; U. S. v. Babcock, 4 McLean 113, Fed. Cas. No. 14,488; 11 Q. B. 1028; State v. Lea, 3 Ala. 602; People v. Brown, 74 Cal. 306, 16 Pac. 1. But one who swears wilfully and deliberately to a matter which he really believes, and which is false, and which he had no probable cause for believing, is guilty of perjury; Com. v. Cornish, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 249. And so is one who swears falsely, though he testifies against his will; Com. v. Turner, 98 Ky. 526, 33 S. W. 88. Where a bankrupt, having submitted the facts fairly to his counsel, swore to a schedule wrongly made out on his advice, it was not perjury; U. S. v. Conner, 3 McLean 573, Fed. Cas. No. 14,847; but advice of counsel sought as a cover, in bad faith, is no excuse; Tuttle v. People, 36 N. Y. 431; nor is intoxication; People v. Willey, 2 Park. Cr. C. (N. Y.) 19; Schaller v. State, 14 Mo. 502; though it may be considered by the jury on the question of intent; Lytle v. State, 31 Ohio St. 196.

The oath must be false. The party must believe that what he is swearing to is fictitious; and if, intending to deceive, he asserts that which may happen to be done without any knowledge of the fact, he is equally criminal, and the accidental truth of his evidence will not excuse him; Co. 3d Inst. 166; Hawk. Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 69, s. 6; 1 Bish. N. Cr. L. § 437. See People v. Burden, 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 467; 1 C. & K. 519; Gibson v. State (Tex.) 15 S. W. 118. As, if a man swears that C D revoked his will in his presence, if he really had revoked it, but it was unknown to the witness that he had done so, it is perjury; Hetl. 97. Knowledge by a witness that his testimony is false, is tested, like intention generally, by sound mind and discretion, and by all the circumstances; soundness of mind, where nothing to the contrary appears, being assumed; McCord v. State, 83 Ga. 521, 10 S. E. 437.

The party must be lawfully sworn. The person by whom the oath is administered must have competent authority to receive it; an oath, therefore, taken before a private person, or before an officer or court having no jurisdiction, will not amount to perjury, "For where the court hath no authority to hold plea of the cause, but it is coram non judice, there perjury cannot be committed;" Jackson v. Humphrey, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 498; 3 C. & P. 419; Com. v. White, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 453; 12 Q. B. 1026; Co. 3d Inst. 166; State v. Wymberly, 40 La. Ann. 460, 4 South. 161; U. S. v. Hall, 131 U. S. 50, 9 Sup. Ct. 663, 33 L. Ed. 97. See Renew v. State, 79 Ga. 162, 4 S. E. 19; Anderson v. State, 24 Tex. App. 715, 7 S. W. 40; Butler v. State, 36 Tex. Cr. R. 483, 38 S. W. 46; State v. Gates, 107 N. C. 832, 12 S. E. 319; State v. Wilson, 87 Tenn. 693, 11 S. W. 792.

But it has been held that the indictment need not aver jurisdiction of the case in which the perjury was committed; Com. v. Hatfield, 107 Mass. 227; State v. Newton, 1 G. Greene (Iowa) 160, 48 Am. Dec. 367. And generally there need be no averment as to how the authority of the officer or jurisdiction was acquired; 6 B. & C. 102; Elghmy v. People, 79 N. Y. 546; State v. Dayton, 23

N. J. L. 49, 53 Am. Dec. 270; only a general allegation of jurisdiction is required; Stafer v. State, 3 W. Va. 689.

Where a defect in the proceedings is waived, perjury may be committed: Maynard v. People, 135 Ill. 416, 25 N. E. 740. A false affidavit will be perjury where the officer who administered the oath was a minor, in the absence of a statutory disqualification of minors from holding office; Harkreader v. State, 35 Tex. Cr. R. 243, 33 S. W. 117, 60 Am. St. Rep. 40.

The proceedings must be judicial; Pegram v. Styron, 1 Bail. (S. C.) 595; Com. v. Warden, 11 Metc. (Mass.) 406; Lamden v. State, 5 Humphr. (Tenn.) 83; Waggoner v. Richmond, Wright (Ohio) 173; R. & R. 459. Proceedings before those who are in any way intrusted with the administration of justice, in respect of any matter regularly before them, are considered as judicial for this purpose: 2 Russ. Cr. 518. See Arden v. State, 11 Conn. 408; State v. Stephenson, 4 McCord (S. C.) 165. Perjury cannot be committed where the matter is not regularly before the court; State v. Alexander, 11 N. C. 182; State v. Wyatt, 3 N. C. 56; State v. Hayward, 1 N. & M'C. (S. C.) 546; Cook v. Staats, 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 407; State v. Keene, 26 Me. 33; State v. Hall, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 25; 5 B. & Ald. 634. An oath not administered pursuant to, or required or authorized by, any law, cannot be made the basis of a charge of perjury; State v. McCarthy, 41 Minn. 59, 42 N. W. 599.

The assertion must be absolute. If a man, however, swears that he believes that to be true which he knows to be false, it will be perjury; 10 Q. B. 670; Com. v. Cornish, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 249. It is immaterial whether the testimony is given in answer to a question or voluntarily; State v. Dayton, 23 N. J. L. 49, 53 Am. Dec. 270; Com. v. Pollard, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 225. Perjury cannot be assigned upon the valuation, under oath, of a jewel or other thing the value of which consists in estimation; 1 Kebl. 510. But in some cases a false statement of opinion may become perjury; 10 Q. B. 670; Fergus v. Hoard, 15 Ill. 357; State v. Lea, 3 Ala. 602; Com. v. Edison (Ky.) 9 S. W. 161.

The oath must be material to the question depending; 1 Term 63; Com. v. Knight, 12 Mass. 274, 7 Am. Dec. 72; White v. State, 1 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 149; Steinman v. McWilliams, 6 Pa. 170; State v. Smith, 40 Kan. 631, 20 Pac. 529; State v. Lawson, 98 N. C. 759, 4 S. E. 134; People v. Perazzo, 64 Cal. 106, 28 Pac. 62. See Gandy v. State, 23 Neb. 436, 36 N. W. 817; State v. Blize, 111 Mo. 464, 20 S. W. 210. Where the facts sworn to are wholly foreign from the purpose and altogether immaterial to the matter in question, the oath does not amount to perjury; 2 Russ. Cr. 521; Co. 3d Inst. 167; 8 Ves. 35; Bac. Abr. Perjury (A); Hinch v.

State, 2 Mo. 158; People v. Ah Sing, 95 Cal. 657, 30 Pac. 796. But all false statements wilfully and corruptly made by a witness as to matters which affect his credit are material; [1895] 1 Q. B. 797; and so is every question on cross-examination which goes to the credit of a witness, as, whether he has been before convicted of felony; 3 C. & K. 26; 1 C. & M. 655. And see Com. v. Pollard, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 225; Williams v. State, 28 Tex. App. 301, 12 S. W. 1103. False evidence, whereby, on the trial of a cause, the judge is induced to admit other material evidence, even though the latter evidence is afterwards withdrawn by counsel, or though it was not legally receivable, is indictable as perjury; 2 Den. C. C. 302; 3 C. & K. 302.

It is perjury where the witness swears falsely in giving evidence legally inadmissible, but which becomes material by being introduced in evidence; Meyers v. U. S., 5 Okl. 173, 48 Pac. 186.

The materiality of the false oath is for the court and not for the jury; U. S. v. Singleton, 54 Fed. 488; People v. Lem You, 97 Cal. 224, 32 Pac. 11; Stanley v. U. S., 1 Okl. 336, 33 Pac. 1025.

Formerly it required the testimony of more than one witness to convict one accused of perjury; 4 Bla. Com. 358; 2 Russ. Cr. 1791; but this rule is relaxed so as to permit a conviction on the testimony of one witness with corroborating circumstances; U. S. v. Wood, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 440, 10 L. Ed. 527; Com. v. Butland, 119 Mass. 317; State v. Heed, 57 Mo. 252; Hashagen v. U. S., 169 Fed. 396, 94 C. C. A. 618; even where the statute makes the crime an exception to the requirement of only one witness; State v. Gibbs, 10 Mont. 213, 25 Pac. 289, 10 L. R. A. 749; but the corroboration must be strong; Woodbeck v. Keller, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 118; and to a material point; State v. Buile, 43 Tex. 532; though it may be circumstantial; Hernandez v. State, 18 Tex. App. 134, 51 Am. Rep. 295.

A defendant in a criminal prosecution, who testifies in his own behalf and of his own accord, is guilty of perjury if he testifies falsely. He is to be treated the same as any other witness; State v. Hawkins, 115 N. C. 712, 20 S. E. 623; Murphy v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 314, 26 S. W. 395; Hutcherson v. State, 33 Tex. Cr. R. 67, 24 S. W. 908; State v. Park, 57 Kan. 431, 46 Pac. 713.

Where one person arranges with another to commit perjury, both are in pari delicto; Anderson v. Carkins, 135 U. S. 483, 10 Sup. Ct. 905, 34 L. Ed. 272. An attempt to induce a person to commit perjury on the contemplated trial of an indictment not yet returned, has been held not to be subornation of perjury; State v. Howard, 137 Mo. 289, 38 S. W. 908.

The immunity from prosecution on account of testimony by a bankrupt under examination does not protect him from indictment for perjury; Edelstein v. U. S., 149 Fed. 636, 79 C. C. A. 328, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 236, and note; contra, U. S. v. Simon, 146 Fed. 89; In re Gaylord, 112 Fed. 668, 50 C. C. A. 415, the latter being, on this point, a dictum; in the first case a writ of certiorari was denied; Edelstein v. U. S., 205 U. S. 543, 27 Sup. Ct. 791, 51 L. Ed. 922, and subsequently the decision thus "left undisturbed by the supreme court" (as Lacombe, J., expresses it) was followed in another circuit court of appeals; Wechsler v. U. S., 158 Fed. 579, 86 C. C. A. 37.

Punishment of perjury is provided for by statutes in all the states, and also by the United States when it is committed in any proceeding by or under federal laws; U. S. R. S. §§ 5392-5396. For a form of indictment approved as correct in every substantial part, see Bucklin v. U. S., 159 U. S. 682, 16 Sup. Ct. 182, 40 L. Ed. 304.

The power of punishing witnesses for testifying falsely in a judicial proceeding belongs peculiarly to the government in whose tribunals that proceeding is had; Re Loney, 134 U. S. 372, 10 Sup. Ct. 384, 33 L. Ed. 949. In general, perjury is committed as well by making a false affirmation as a false oath. See OATH.

It is unnecessary, in an indictment for perjury in making an affidavit under R. S. § 5396, to set out the affidavit at length; U. S. v. Law, 50 Fed. 915.

The accused may show that his memory had become unreliable by reason of the near approach of paresis; State v. Coyne, 214 Mo. 344, 114 S. W. 8, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 993; Leaptrot v. State, 51 Fla. 57, 40 South. 616; People v. Doody, 172 N. Y. 165, 64 N. E. 807.

As to the effect of perjury upon a judgment obtained by means of it, the general rule is that false swearing or perjury at the trial is not alone sufficient to warrant the setting aside of the judgment; Ross v. Wood, 70 N. Y. 8; Greene v. Greene, 2 Gray (Mass.) 361, 61 Am. Dec. 454; Pico v. Cohn, 91 Cal. 129, 25 Pac. 970, 13 L. R. A. 336, 25 Am. St. Rep. 159; Graves v. Graves, 132 Ia. 199, 109 N. W. 707, 10 Ann. Cas. 1104, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 216, and note to this and two other cases from Kansas and North Carolina, where the cases are collected with the result of sustaining the general rule as stated, though with some conflict of decision. The rule is declared in U. S. v. Throckmorton, 98 U. S. 61, 25 L. Ed. 93, but some doubt was raised by Marshall v. Holmes, 141 U. S. 589, 12 Sup. Ct. 62, 35 L. Ed. 870; but in U. S. v. Gleeson, 90 Fed. 778, 33 C. C. A. 272, the court declined to treat the latter case as limiting the rule of the former. In Kersey v. Rash, 3 Del. Ch. 321, it was said by Bates, Ch., that "if a verdict were obtained by means of perjury which the defendant at law, through surprise or the disability of sickness, was unable to meet, a court of law would grant a new trial, or if the perjury were discovered too late for application to a court of law, equity might well relieve." But in Steele v. Culver, 157 Mich. 344, 122 N. W. 95, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 564, it was held that where a judgment was confessedly obtained by perjury, equity will not enjoin its enforcement; so in Maryland Steel Co. v. Marney, 91 Md. 360, 46 Atl. 1077; contra, Boring v. Ott, 138 Wis. 260, 119 N. W. 865, 19 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1080. The note above cited in 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 216, shows some conflict in the state courts and also in England and Canada, and it may be referred to for cases too numerous for citation here.

No civil action lies for perjury so long as the judgment procured by it stands; Stevens v. Rowe, 59 N. H. 578, 47 Am. Rep. 231; Verplanck v. Van Buren, 76 N. Y. 247; Dunlap v. Glidden, 31 Me. 435, 52 Am. Dec. 625; Cunningham v. Brown, 18 Vt. 123, 46 Am. Dec. 140.

One who has lost a case by perjury of a witness against him cannot sue the witness; Godette v. Gaskill, 151 N. C. 52, 65 S. E. 612, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 265, 134 Am. St. Rep. 964; Horner v. Schinstock, 80 Kan. 136, 101 Pac. 996, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 134, 18 Ann. Cas. 21; Cunningham v. Brown, 18 Vt. 123, 46 Am. Dec. 140; Cro. Jac. 601; Cro. Eliz. 520.

See a note collecting the cases on nearly every point of the law of perjury in 85 Am. Dec. 488-501.

PERMANENT. This word does not always embrace the idea of absolute perpetuity; Hascall v. Madison University, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 185; or forever, or lasting forever, or existing forever; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Marshall, 136 U. S. 393, 10 Sup. Ct. 846, 34 L. Ed. 385; Bassett v. Johnson, 2 N. J. Eq. 155. Where the citizens of a locality are induced to give large sums of money for the establishment of an educational institution, it means that the place agreed on shall be the site of the institution so long as it shall endure; Hascall v. Madison University, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 186.

PERMANENT ABODE. A domicile, a home, which a party is at liberty to leave, as interest or whim may dictate, but without any present intention of changing it. Dale v. Irwin, 78 Ill. 181. See NON-RESIDENT; DOMICIL; HOME.

PERMANENT EMPLOYMENT. Employment for an indefinite time which may be severed by either party. Lord v. Goldberg, 81 Cal. 596, 22 Pac. 1126, 15 Am. St. Rep. 82; Perry v. Wheeler, 12 Bush (Ky.) 541; 4 C. B. 479.

PERMANENT TRESPASS. A trespass consisting of trespasses of one and the same kind, committed on several days, which are, in their nature, capable of renewal or continuation, and are actually renewed or continued from day to day, so that the particular injury done on each particular day cannot be distinguished from what was done on another day. In declaring for such trespasses, they may be laid with a continuando; 3 Bla. Com. 212; Rac. Abr. Trespass (B 2, I 2); 1 Saund. 24, n. 1; Pollock, Torts 482. See CONTINUANDO; TRESPASS.

PERMISSION. A license to do a thing; an authority to do an act which without such authority would have been unlawful. A permission differs from a law: it is a check upon the operations of the law.

A negation of law, arising either from the law's silence, or its express declaration. Ruth. Nat. L. b. 1, c. 1.

Express permissions derogate from something which before was forbidden, and may operate in favor of one or more persons, or for the performance of one or more acts, or for a longer or shorter time.

Implied permissions are those which arise from the fact that the law has not forbidden the act to be done.

PERMISSIVE. Allowed; that which may be done: as, permissive waste, which is the permitting real estate to go to waste. When a tenant is bound to repair, he is punishable for permissive waste. See WASTE.

PERMISSIVE LETTERS. In a note by the secretary of the navy, October 1, 1861, this term was used as indicating an authority something less than a grant of letters of marque. See 2 Hall. Int. L. Baker's ed. 120.

PERMIT. A license or warrant to do something not forbidden by law: as to land goods imported into the United States, after the duties have been paid or secured to be paid. Act of Congr. March 2, 1799, s. 49, cl. 2. See form of such a permit, Gordon Dig. App. II. 46.

It denotes a decided assent; Chicago v. Stearns, 105 Ill. 558. It may mean suffer; 7 Ch. Div. 145; although it is more positive than allow or suffer; Chicago v. Stearns, 105 Ill. 558. It implies consent given or leave granted; Loosey v. Orser, 4 Bosw. (N. Y.) 391. It has been defined to mean allow by not prohibiting. Com. v. Curtis, 9 Allen (Mass.) 266. Every definition of suffer or permit includes knowledge of what is to be done under the sufferance or permission and intention that what is done was what was to be done; Gregory v. U. S., 17 Blatch. 325, Fed. Cas. No. 5,803.

See EASEMENT; LICENSE.

PERMUTATION. In Civil Law. Exchange; barter.

This contract is formed by the consent of the parties; but delivery is indispensable, for without it it is a mere agreement. Dig. 31. 77. 4; Code 4. 64. 3.

Permutation differs from sale in this, that in the former a delivery of the articles sold must be made, while in the latter it is unnecessary. It agrees with the contract of sale, however, in the following particulars: that he to whom the delivery is made acquires the right or faculty of prescribing; Dig. 41. 3. 4. 17; that the contracting parties are bound to guarantee to each other the title of the things delivered; Code 4. 64. 1; and that they are bound to take back the things delivered when they have latent defects which they have concealed; Dig. 21. 1. 63. See Aso & M. Inst. b. 2, t. 16, c. 1; MUTATION; TRANSFER.

PERMUTATIONE. A writ to an ordinary commanding him to admit a clerk to a benefice upon exchange made with another. Cowell.

PERNANCY (from Fr. prendre, to take). A taking or receiving, e. g. of rents.

PERNOR OF PROFITS. He who receives the profits of lands, etc. A cestui qui use, who is legally entitled and actually does receive the profits, is the pernor of profits. Termes de la Ley.

An expression used in early English statutes to designate one who had a beneficial interest in property conveyed to uses. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 402.

PERPARS. A part of the inheritance. Fleta.

PERPETRATOR. Within the meaning of a statute giving an action against the perpetrator of an act, where a servant of a railroad company is killed through the negligence of a fellow-servant, the company itself may be regarded as the perpetrator. Philo v. R. Co., 33 Ia. 47.

PERPETUAL. That which is to last without limitation as to time: as, a perpetual statute, which is one without limit as to time, although not expressed to be so.

PERPETUAL CURACY. The office of a curate in a parish where there is no spiritual rector or vicar, but where the curate is appointed to officiate by the impropiator. 2 Burn, Eccl. Law 55.

The church of which the curate is perpetual. 2 Ves. Sen. 425. See 2 Steph. Com. 11th ed. 695; 2 Burn, Eccl. Law 55; 9 Ad. & E. 556. As to whether such curate may be removed, see 2 Burn, Eccl. Law 5.

PERPETUAL EDICT. In Roman Law. See EDICT.

PERPETUAL INJUNCTION. Opposed to an injunction ad interim or an interlocutory injunction; an injunction which finally disposes of the suit, and is indefinite in point of time. See INJUNCTION.

PERPETUAL SUCCESSION. The continuous existence which enables a corporation to manage its affairs and hold property without the necessity of conveyances for the purpose of transmitting it. By reason of this quality, this ideal and artificial person remains, in its legal entity and personality, the same, though frequent changes may be made of its members; and although all of its members may be changed, and new ones substituted for the old, it still legally remains the same. Field, Corp. § 50; Scanlan v. Crawshaw, 5 Mo. App. 340.

PERPETUATING TESTIMONY. The act by which testimony is reduced to writing as prescribed by law, so that the same shall be read in evidence in some suit or legal proceedings to be thereafter instituted.

The origin of this practice may be traced to the canon law, cap. 5, X, ut lite non contestata, etc. 8 Toullier, n. 22. Statutes exist in most of the states for this purpose. Equity also furnishes means, to a limited extent, for the same purpose.

See BILL TO PERPETUATE TESTIMONY; IN PERPETUAM REI MEMORIAM.

PERPETUITY. Any limitation tending to take property out of commerce for a longer period than a life or lives in being, and twenty-one years beyond, and, in case of a posthumous child, a few months more, allowing for the term of gestation. Randall, Perp. 48.

Such a limitation of property as renders it inalienable beyond the period allowed by law. Gilbert, Uses, Sugd. ed. 260, n.

"A future limitation, whether executory or by way of remainder, and of real or personal property, which is not to vest till after the expiration of or which will not necessarily vest within, the period prescribed by law for the creation of future estates, and which is not destructible by the person for the time being entitled to the property subject to the future limitation, except with the concurrence of the person interested in the contingent event." Lewis, Perpetuities ch. 12. This was said by Gibson, C. J., to be the nearest approach to a perfect definition of a perpetuity; Hillyard v. Miller, 10 Pa. 334.

It is suggested that some confusion has arisen in connection with the law of perpetuities because of a certain ambiguity in the legal definition of the term itself. "The original meaning of a perpetuity is an inalienable, indestructible interest. The second artificial meaning is, an interest which will not vest to a remote period. This latter is the meaning which is attached to the term when the rule against perpetuities is spoken of;" Gray, Perp. § 140. The author last cited considers it a matter of regret that the rule should not have been known as the rule against remoteness, rather than the rule as against perpetuities.

The comment was made upon this statement that notwithstanding the declaration quoted from this author, "yet in all his illustrations he shows that interests which were destructible were not perpetuities";

Miffin's Appeal, 121 Pa. 205, 15 Atl. 525, 1 L. R. A. 453, 6 Am. St. Rep. 781, where it is held that indestructibility of the estate of the person, for the time being entitled to the property, is essential to constitute a perpetuity.

The following is suggested as the true form of the rule: "No interest subject to a condition precedent is good, unless the condition must be fulfilled, if at all, within twenty-one years after some life in being at the creation of the interest;" Gray, Perp. 201. A later work adheres more closely to the familiar phraseology (a course which has great advantages in the discussion of common-law rules of decision), in defining it as a rule which "forbids the postponement of the vesting of real or personal property for an estate in fee-simple, in tail or absolute interest, during a longer period than lives in being and twenty-one years after, an extension being allowed for gestation if gestation exists;" Brett, L. Cas. Mod. Eq. 47. See, also, McArthur v. Scott, 113 U. S. 340, 5 Sup. Ct. 652, 28 L. Ed. 1015; L. R. 44 Ch. D. 85. The rule against perpetuities as distinguished from that against making estates indefinitely inalienable, concerns itself only with the vesting or assignment of estates and not with their termination; Brooks v. Belfast, 90 Me. 318, 38 Atl. 222; and when properly so limited, it is applicable to a gift in trust for charity; id. An interesting case in Colorado holds that notwithstanding statutory adoption, in that state, of the common law prior to 4 James I., English decisions after that year are to be regarded as authority in determining what the common law as to perpetuities was at that time; Chilcott v. Hart, 23 Colo. 40, 45 Pac. 391, 35 L. R. A. 41.

The rule against perpetuities is one of decision only, and in England is affected only by statute under what is known as the Thelluson Act, the passage of which was occasioned by litigation arising under the will of Peter Thelluson who died in 1797. See Thelluson v. Woodford, 4 Ves. Jr. 227; 11 Ves. 112. For the text of the act see Gray, Perp. Appx. B. note; and for the history of the litigation which led to it, see Hargrave, Thelluson Case, ch. 1.

The act was directed against trusts for accumulation. Such a trust which violates the rule against perpetuities is wholly void, but one which is good within the rule might violate the Thelluson Act and be void for the excess; Gray, Perp. § 687. The act prohibits accumulations other than during four distinct periods, the language being: "For any longer term than the life or lives of any such grantor or grantors, settler or settlers; or the term of twenty-one years from the death of any such grantor, settler, deviser, or testator; or during the minority or respective minorities of any person or persons who shall be living, or en ventre sa mere at the time of the death of such grantor, deviser, or testator; or during the minority or respective minorities only of any person or persons who, under the uses or trusts of the deed, surrender, will, or other assurances directing such accumulations, would, for the time being, if of full age, be entitled unto the rents, issues and profits, or the interest, dividends, or annual produce so directed to be accumulated." And only one of these periods can be taken; 16 Sim. 391; 25 Ch. D. 729. In Pennsylvania there is a statute of the same kind, Act 1853, Apr. 18, § 9, the text of which will be found in Gray, Perp. Appx. B. In Alabama accumulations are prohibited for more than ten years, or to the termination of minority in case of a minor in being at the date of conveyance or death of the testator.

The legislation on the subject of perpetuities has been classified as of three kinds: 1. A general provision that perpetuities shall not be allowed. 2. A short and simple statute declaring or modifying the law. 3. An elaborate scheme to be substituted for the common law.

The first class consists mainly of constitutional provisions in Arkansas, Nevada, North Carolina, Tennessee, Texas, and Vermont. A similar provision existed formerly in Florida, but was omitted in the last constitution. The second class includes Georgia, Iowa, and Kentucky, with statutes properly declaratory of the common law; and Alabama, Connecticut, North and South Dakota, the District of Columbia, Idaho, Indiana, Mississippi, New Jersey, Ohio, and Pennsylvania, where the common-law rule is somewhat modified. The third class embraces the states which have followed, in the main, the New York statute, providing against, (1) remoteness of interests in land; (2) accumulation of land and profits therefrom; (3) the same as to personal property. Michigan and Minnesota have followed the first and second parts of the New York system, and Indiana substantially the whole of it. The prohibition of this legislation is against a restraint upon the power of alienation for more than two lives in being at the creation of the estate. But in Indiana, California, and Dakota, where the New York system to a large extent was followed, the restraint was not confined to two existing lives. In Wisconsin, where the New York statute was first followed exactly, in 1887, the period was extended to two lives in being and twenty-one years thereafter. See Gray, Perp. Appx. B. & C.; 1 Stims. Am. Stat. L. § 1440. The rule affects both legal and equitable interests and real and personal estate; it is not of feudal origin, but the outgrowth of necessities of modern times; and while strictly applied, regard is had rather to substance than form; Gray, Perp. §§ 202, 203.

Under the common-law rule there is no limit to the number of lives that can be taken; 11 Ves. 146.

A trust for as long a period under the statute as is possible is legal at common-law and is limited for the lives of the annuitants and 21 years after the last survivor's death; Fitchie v. Brown, 211 U. S. 321, 29 Sup. Ct. 106, 53 L. Ed. 202, where there were forty annuitants (lives) in being.

The limitations of an estate pur autre vie cannot be too remote; 3 P. Wms. 262. Gift to support animals during their lives and the life of the survivor was held good within the rule; 41 Ch. Div. 552. For the purposes of the rule men and women are deemed capable of having issue as long as they live; 1 Cox 324. A condition subsequent in a conveyance giving a right of re-entry for condition broken is subject to the rule when attached to the fee or the grantor's entire interest; [1899] 2 Ch. 540. In the United States, these rights of re-entry are not subject to the rule, on the ground that they are old common law rights. By statute some states provide that no condition can be imposed to continue in effect for more than a specified time, usually from twenty to thirty years.

A testatrix gave an estate to a trustee to accumulate the income until her youngest living grandchild should reach 21, and then to pay over annually to her grandchildren. The gift was held bad on the ground that payment need not be made until one year after the fund accrues, which would be 22 years from the creation of the interest; Fosdick v. Fosdick, 6 Allen (Mass.) 41.

Powers are within the rule and generally are prevented from being too remote, because they can last only during the continuance of the trust and generally some one is found within the rule who has an absolute vested interest, and then these powers of sale simply cease altogether or else they are considered as existing, but are destructible by the one having the absolute interest, and so are not too remote; Pulitzer v. Livingston, 89 Me. 359, 36 Atl. 635.

1. If a power can be exercised at too remote a period, any estate appointed under it is bad. 2. It does not follow, because appointments may be bad, that the power is bad. 3. Remoteness of appointment depends on its distance from the creation and not the exercise of the power.

Where the donee of the power appoints to one of the objects of the power by giving her a general power of appointment to such persons as she sees fit, the appointment is good on the ground that giving a general power of appointment is considered the same as giving the absolute estate; 2 Cl. & F. 453.

Where a testator devised his property in trust for his children living at his death and if any are dead then the share of such to go to his children, and gave the trustee power to sell the property, such power is valid, inasmuch as the objects have the equitable estate and can call for a conveyance of the legal estate at any time; Cooper's Estate, 150 Pa. 576, 24 Atl. 1057, 30 Am. St. Rep. 829. The testator devised property upon trust for A for life and then to A's children as he shall by deed or will appoint. By will, A directed that £2000 be paid to each of his daughters when attaining 24, the residue to be divided among his sons equally when attaining 24. A died and at his death two of his children were under 3 years of age. Held that the gifts to daughters were independent gifts, and those of them which came within the rule were good, but that the gifts to sons were to them as a class, and that they all failed; 30 Beavan 111. We are not, solely, limited to read the exact words of the appointment into the original power in order to determine whether the gift as created comes within the rule, but can as part of the description take the persons designated by the donee with their actual circumstances at the time of the appointment, e. g. if all the sons had been over 3 years of age at testator's death, then the appointment would have been good; id. So at the time the power was created, was it certain that if donee made an appointment such as he actually made it would have vested within the power; L. R. 16 Eq. 1; contra, Smith's Appeal, 88 Pa. 492. When English courts speak of a general power, they mean a general power to appoint by deed or will; 39 L. J. Ch. N. S. 188; however, in 29 Chan. Div. 251, it was decided that giving a general power to appoint by will is just like giving absolute ownership, and this case would seem to overrule the preceding case in 39 L. J. Ch. N. S. 188.

Gifts to charity are an exception to the rule and a gift over from one charity to another at a period beyond the rule is good; [1891] 3 Ch. 252.

The rule is not one to carry out testator's intentions and you cannot vary the same on account of the rule.

In the application of the rule, a child en ventre sa mere is to be considered as in being, irrespective of whether it be for the child's benefit or not; 7 Term 100.

The principle controlling the allowance of the period of gestation under the rule is, that life begins from conception and it is sufficient if the person entitled to a future interest at majority is begotten though not born within a life in being at its creation; Gray, Perp. § 220. This principle has been extended to allow two periods of gestation; 7 Term 100; and it has been a subject of discussion whether three might be allowed; 3 Yo. & Coll. 328; Lewis, Perp. 726; Gray, Perp. § 222. The time runs only from the creation of the interest, and if by will, then the situation is taken as it is at the testator's death and not at the time of making the will.

An interest is not obnoxious to the rule if it begins within the required limits although it may end beyond them; Pulitzer v. Livingston, 89 Me. 359, 36 Atl. 635.

Where a future interest is void as against the rule, prior limitations will be treated precisely as if the void limitation had been omitted; Church in Brattle Square v. Grant, 3 Gray (Mass.) 142, 63 Am. Dec. 725; 4 Ves. Jr. 427; Saxton v. Webber, 83 Wis. 617, 53 N. W. 905, 20 L. R. A. 509. See an extended note classifying and analyzing the cases, 20 L. R. A. 509. Subsequent limitations though not in themselves too remote, following an interest too remote were held by Sugden, L. C., to fail. The authorities relied upon for this view are to be found in his argument as counsel in Beard v. Westcott, 5 B. & Ald. 801, and his decision as chancellor in Mony-penny v. Dering, 2 De G. M. & G. 145. In Beard v. Westcott, the limitation was held good in the common pleas; 5 Taunt. 393; and bad in the king's bench; 5 B. & Ald. 801. The latter view is seriously controverted as not supported by the authorities cited in Sugden's argument; Gray, Perp. §§ 251-257; Lewis, Perp. 421, 661.

A limitation of a legal estate to the unborn children of an unborn person, i. e. a contingent remainder, is bad and not within the rule, on the ground that a possibility limited on a possibility is bad; 44 Ch. Div. 85. This rule applies to equitable as well as legal estates, but the technical doctrine would be limited to contingent remainders.

A vested interest is not subject to the rule, and therefore it does not affect reversions and vested remainders and analogous equitable interests and interests in personality; Gray, Perp. § 205. Whether contingent remainders are so has been the subject of much discussion involving the mooted question of limiting a possibility upon a possibility. That they are within the rule is contended by many authorities; Gray, Perp. §§ 284-298, where it is earnestly contended that contingent remainders and all future interests should fall within the rule, which conclusion is also supported by Lewis, Perp. c. 16, Suppl. 97. See, also, 20 Ch. D. 562; 1 Jarm. Wills 255, 260; 2 id. 845; Wood v. Griffin, 46 N. H. 230; 60 L. T. 247; contra, Wms. R. P. 6th Am. ed. 274; 2 H. L. Cas. 186. See L. R. 43 Ch. D. 246.

The rule applies to personal property; Lewis, Perp. 613; Gray, Perp. § 315; and future estates in personality are treated just the same as in realty, and hence it would seem that there can be a life estate in personality with a vested future interest, instead of stating that all future estates in personality must be executory devises; 3 Chan. Div. 211. In case of chattels real, technically there could not be future vested interests. Equitable interests are affected by analogy to legal estates; those vested are not subject, and those not vested are subject to the rule; id. §§ 322, 323.

An option to purchase land is an equitable interest and within the application of the rule; 20 Ch. Div. 562. In England, the practice was said to be to give an option for the lives of the present descendants of Queen Victoria, but as a general rule the option is only for 21 years, because of the difficulty of finding a life. The fact that the option is too remote to recover the lands may or may not affect the right to bring an action on the breach of the contract for damages. An action was allowed in [1906] 2 Ch. 532. Where land was conveyed to a corporation on their agreement to build a tunnel when called upon, specific performance was allowed against the corporation, and it was held that the rule did not apply; [1910] 1 Chan. 12. For a criticism of these cases, see the articles in 51 Solicitor's Jour. 648, 669; 54 id. 471, 501.

An option on coal lands, to be accepted "at any future time whatsoever," is void as constituting a perpetuity, and equity will decree its cancellation on a bill to remove a cloud from the title to the land; Barton v. Thaw, 41 C. C. Rep. (Pa.) 396, following L. R. 2 Ch. D. 257, 532; Winsor v. Mills, 157 Mass. 362, 32 N. E. 352 (where an agreement to purchase land at any time before it otherwise should be sold was held void as being within the rule against perpetuities); Starcher v. Duty, 61 W. Va. 373, 56 S. E. 524, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 913, 123 Am. St. Rep. 990, where an option made for one year, but to be extended from year to year, was held void for the same reason.

The rule against perpetuities does not affect contracts unless they are such as create rights of property; id. § 329; L. R. 43 Ch. D. 205. The rule is not applicable to a resulting trust which arises on the failure of an estate granted for a particular use which has ceased; Hopkins v. Grimshaw, 165 U. S. 342, 17 Sup. Ct. 401, 41 L. Ed. 739; nor to a power to sell, upon the expiration of an estate tail, and divide the proceeds among persons then ascertainable; Barber v. R. Co., 166 U. S. 83, 17 Sup. Ct. 488, 41 L. Ed. 925.

The statutes against perpetuities were directed at private trusts and accumulations and not at public, charitable, or eleemosynary trusts or uses; Jones v. Habersham, 107 U. S. 174, 2 Sup. Ct. 336, 27 L. Ed. 401; Potter v. Chapin, 6 Paige (N. Y.) 639. The rule cannot be invoked to defeat a charitable use; White v. Keller, 68 Fed. 796, 15 C. C. A. 683; but a gift for the encouragement of yacht-racing is not such a use and may therefore be void as a perpetuity; [1895] 2 Ch. 657.

Where a gift over may take effect on a number of different contingencies, which contingencies would make some gifts good and others bad, then, if the testator has expressly separated them, the court will give effect to the good limitations; however, if the testator has not separated the contingencies, then there is no reason for the court separating them at one place any more than another, and hence they will hold the gift bad; 2 W. Bl. 704; 2 H. Bl. 358. There is an exception to the above rule, when by means of separation it is possible to have a contingent legal remainder in realty, in which case the court will so separate the gifts, even though the testator has not; 7 H. L. Cas. 531.

If a gift by will to a class is void as to one of the class because against the rule as to perpetuities, it is void as to all; Coggin's Appeal, 124 Pa. 10, 16 Atl. 579, 10 Am. St. Rep. 565. When a gift is made to a class, the share which each member of the class is to receive must be fully determined within the limits of the rule (e. g. a gift to a class, such as to A's children when they reach 25). Those living at testator's death will reach 25 during their life and when they reach 25 the class is closed and the interests become vested; however, some of the other members may die before reaching 25, and this will increase the shares of the others, so it cannot be told what share each will get until they all reach 25 or die, and hence the share which each member will get on final distribution has to be determined within the period of the rule, or the gift is bad; 2 Mer. 363. Although persons may popularly be spoken of as not belonging to the same class, still they may legally belong to the same class, as a gift to A's nephews and testator's children at 25; 6 Sim. 485.

What appears to be a gift to a class may in some cases be considered as separate and independent gifts to the members of the class, as a gift to the testator's children at 21 and if any die such child's share to go to its children at 21, such gift is good, as the shares are determined during a life in being and are not dependent on any contingency that may arrive after this time; 11 Hare 372; 3 De G., M. & G. 390.

Where an absolute interest is given in the first place, and later the testator introduces clauses modifying the gift, and such clauses are too remote, then, for the purpose of saving the bequest and preventing an intestacy, the modifying clauses will be disregarded; 2 Beavan 352; but an absolute interest must have been given in the first instance; 22 L. J. Ch. N. S. 1020. However, in England, where a gift was made to A for life and then to an unborn daughter, with a restraint against anticipation, the latter clause was disregarded and the court held that there cannot be a restraint to last after the limits of the rule. So a restraint on a daughter unborn at the testator's death is bad; 11 Ch. Div. 645. See 15 Ch. Div. 610.

Where limitations are to take effect during or at the determination of an estate tail, such limitations are not obnoxious to the rule, since they are at all times within the absolute control of the person who has the present estate, for he can bar them, and this is true even though the present estate is in the hands of a minor and he is under disability to convey; 2 Bro. C. C. 215; 1 Lev. 35.

Mr. Justice Powell, in Scattergood v. Edge, 12 Mod. 278, distinguished perpetuities into two sorts, absolute and qualified; meaning thereby, as it is apprehended, a distinction between a plain, direct, and palpable perpetuity, and the case where an estate is limited on a contingency, which might happen within a reasonable compass of time, but where the estate, nevertheless, from the nature of the limitation, might be kept out of commerce longer than was thought agreeable to the policy of the common law. But this distinction would not now lead to a better understanding or explanation of the subject, for whether an estate be so limited that it cannot take effect until a period too much protracted, or whether on a contingency which may happen within a moderate compass of time, it equally falls within the line of perpetuity, and the limitation is therefore void; for it is not sufficient that an estate may vest within the time allowed, but the rule requires that it must; Randall, Perp. 49; Rand v. Butler, 48 Conn. 293; 7 Sim. 173; Odell v. Odell, 10 Allen (Mass.) 1; Coggin's Appeal, 124 Pa. 10, 16 Atl. 579, 10 Am. St. Rep. 565. See Cruise, Dig. tit. 32, c. 23; 1 Belt, Suppl. to Ves. Jr. 406; 2 Ves. 357; 3 Saund. 388; Com. Dig. Chancery (4 G 1); 3 Ch. Cas. 1; Davis v. Williams, 85 Tenn. 646, 4 S. W. 8.

Under statutes of the New York class, a devise which suspends the power of alienation for a specific time, not measured by two lives, but by a term of years, is void; Trowbridge v. Metcalf, 5 App. Div. 318, 39 N. Y. Supp. 241; Montignani v. Blade, 74 Hun 297, 26 N. Y. Supp. 670. That a contingency may arise which will make the estate alienable is immaterial, but the validity of the provision must be determined independently of any possible agreement of parties; Winsor v. Mills, 157 Mass. 362, 32 N. E. 352; but a power is not rendered void because by its terms an appointment might possibly be made which would not take effect within the required period; In re Lawrence's Estate, 136 Pa. 354, 20 Atl. 521, 11 L. R. A. 85, 20 Am. St. Rep. 925.

See ORRION.

PERQUISITES. In its most extensive sense, perquisites signifies anything gotten by industry or purchased with money, different from that which descends from a father or ancestor. Bract. l. 2, c. 30, n. 3; 1. 4, c. 22. In a more limited sense, it means something gained by a place or office beyond the regular salary or fee.

PERSON. A man considered according to the rank he holds in society, with all the right to which the place he holds entitles him, and the duties which it imposes. People v. R. Co., 134 N. Y. 506, 31 N. E. 873.

The term is, however, more extensive than man. It may include artificial beings, as corporations; 1 Bla. Com. 123; 4 Bingh. 669; People v. Com'rs of Taxes, 23 N. Y. 242; quasi-corporations; Sedgw. Stat. & Const. L. 372; L. R. 5 App. Cas. 857; territorial corporations; Seymour v. School District, 53 Conn. 507, 3 Atl. 552; and foreign corporations; People v. McLean, 80 N. Y. 259; under statutes, forbidding the taking of property without due process of law and giving to all persons the equal protection of the laws; Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 18 Sup. Ct. 418, 42 L. Ed. 819; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 150, 17 Sup. Ct. 255, 41 L. Ed. 666; concerning claims arising from Indian depredations; U. S. v. Transp. Co., 164 U. S. 686, 17 Sup. Ct. 206, 41 L. Ed. 599; relating to taxation and the revenue laws; People v. McLean, 80 N. Y. 254; to attachments; Bray v. Wallingford, 20 Conn. 416; usurious contracts; Philadelphia Loan Co. v. Towner, 13 Conn. 249; applying to limitation of actions; Olcott v. R. Co., 20 N. Y. 210, 75 Am. Dec. 393; North Mo. R. Co. v. Akers, 4 Kan. 453, 96 Am. Dec. 183; and concerning the admissibility as a witness of a party in his own behalf when the opposite party is a living person; La Farge v. Ins. Co., 22 N. Y. 352. A corporation is also a person under a penal statute; U. S. v. Amedy, 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 392, 6 L. Ed. 502. Corporations are "persons" as that word is used in the first clause of the XIVth Amendment; Covington & L. Turnp. Co. v. Sandford, 164 U. S. 578, 17 Sup. Ct. 198, 41 L. Ed. 560; Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 18 Sup. Ct. 418, 42 L. Ed. 819; People v. Fire Ass'n, 92 N. Y. 311, 44 Am. Rep. 380; U. S. v. Supply Co., 215 U. S. 50, 30 Sup. Ct. 15, 54 L. Ed. 87; contra, Central P. R. Co. v. Board, 60 Cal. 35. But a corporation of another state is not a "person" within the jurisdiction of the state until it has complied with the conditions of admission to do business in the state; Fire Ass'n of Phila. v. New York, 119 U. S. 110, 7 Sup. Ct. 108, 30 L. Ed. 342; and a statutory requirement of such conditions is not in conflict with the XIVth Amendment; Pembina Consol. S. M. & M. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 125 U. S. 181, 189, 8 Sup. Ct. 737, 31 L. Ed. 650.

It has been held that when the word person is used in a legislative act, natural persons will be intended unless something appear in the context to show that it applies to artificial persons; Blair v. Worley, 1 Scam. (Ill.) 178; Appeal of Fox, 112 Pa. 337, 4 Atl. 149; but as a rule corporations will be considered persons within the statutes unless the intention of the legislature is manifestly to exclude them; Stribbling v. Bank, 5 Rand. (Va.) 132.

A county is a person in a legal sense; Lancaster Co. v. Trimble, 34 Neb. 752, 52 N. W. 711; but a sovereign is not; In re Fox, 52 N. Y. 535, 11 Am. Rep. 751; U. S. v. Fox, 94 U. S. 315, 24 L. Ed. 192; but contra within the meaning of a statute, providing a penalty for the fraudulent alteration of a public record with intent that any "person" be defrauded; Martin v. State, 24 Tex. 61; and within the meaning of a covenant for quiet and peaceful possession against all and every person or persons; Giddings v. Holter, 19 Mont. 263, 48 Pac. 8. An Indian is a person; U. S. v. Crook, 5 Dill. 459, Fed. Cas. No. 14,891; and a slave was so considered, in so far, as to be capable of committing a riot in conjunction with white men; State v. Thackam, 1 Bay (S. C.) 358. The estate of a decedent is a person; Billings v. State, 107 Ind. 54, 6 N. E. 914, 7 N. E. 763, 57 Am. Rep. 77; and where the statute makes the owner of a dog liable for injuries to any person, it includes the property of such person; Brewer v. Crosby, 11 Gray (Mass.) 29; but where the statute provided damages for the bite of a dog which had previously bitten a person, it was held insufficient to show that the dog had previously bitten a goat; [1896] 2 Q. B. 109; a dog will not be included in the word in an act which authorizes a person to kill dogs running at large; Heisrodt v. Hackett, 34 Mich. 283, 22 Am. Rep. 529.

It includes women; Opinion of Justices, 136 Mass. 580; Warwick v. State, 25 Ohio St. 21; Belles v. Burr, 76 Mich. 1, 43 N. W. 24; but see In re Goodell, 39 Wis. 232, 20 Am. Rep. 42; In re Bradwell, 55 Ill. 535, where the statute was in reference to admission to the bar, and it was held that, while the term was broad enough to include them, such a construction could not be presumed to be the legislative intent.

Where the statute prohibited any person from pursuing his usual vocation on the Lord's Day, it was held to apply to a judge holding court; Bass v. Irvin, 49 Ga. 436.

A child en ventre sa mere is not a person; Dietrich v. Northampton, 138 Mass. 14, 52 Am. Rep. 242; but an infant is so considered; Madden v. Springfield, 131 Mass. 441.

In the United States bankruptcy act of 1898, it is provided that the word "persons" shall include corporations, except where otherwise specified, and officers, partnerships, and women, and, when used with reference to the commission of acts which are therein forbidden, shall include persons who are participants in the forbidden acts, and the agents, officers, and members of the board of directors or trustees, or their controlling bodies, of corporations.

Persons are the subject of rights and duties; and, as a subject of a right, the person is the object of the correlative duty, and conversely. The subject of a right has been called by Professor Holland, the person of inherence; the subject of a duty, the person of incidence. "Entitled" and "bound" are the terms in common use in English and for most purposes they are adequate. Every full citizen is a person; other human beings, namely, subjects who are not citizens, may be persons. But not every human being is necessarily a person, for a person is capable of rights and duties, and there may well be human beings having no legal rights, as was the case with slaves in English law. . . . A person is such, not because he is human, but because rights and duties are ascribed to him. The person is the legal subject or substance of which the rights and duties are attributes. An individual human being considered as having such attributes is what lawyers call a natural person. Pollock, First Book of Jurispr. 110. See Gray, Nature and Sources of Law, ch. II.

PERSONA (Lat.). In Civil Law. Character, in virtue of which certain rights belong to a man and certain duties are imposed upon him. Thus, one man may unite many characters (personæ); as, for example, the characters of father and son, of master and servant; Mackeldey, Civ. Law § 117.

In its original signification, a mask; afterwards, a man in reference to his condition or character (status). Vicat, Voc. Jur. It is used metaphorically of things, among which are counted slaves. It is often opposed to res: as, actio in personam and actio in rem.

Power and right belonging to a person in a certain character (pro jure et potestate personæ competente). Vicat, Voc. Jur. Its use is not confined to the living, but is extended to the dead and to angels. Id.

A statue in a fountain whence water gushes.

So far as the language of the Roman law is any authority, a slave was a person. Both Gaius and Justinian include them among persons, and that is conclusive as to the Roman use of the word; Hunter, Roman Law 160. "Modern writers on Roman law concurrently say that a slave was not a person, but it is certain that the Roman lawyers sometimes use persona so as to include slaves"; Pollock, First Book of Jurispr. 111.

PERSONA GRATA. A term used in diplomacy to indicate that a representative of one nation is personally acceptable, in that capacity, to the government to which he is accredited.

PERSONA MISERABILIS. See FORUM.

PERSONAL. Belonging to the person.

PERSONAL ACTION.

In Civil Law. An action in which one person (the actor) sues another (the reus) in respect of some obligation which he is under to the actor either ex contractu or ex delicto. It will be seen that this includes all actions against a person, without reference to the nature of the property involved. In a limited sense of the word action in the civil law, it includes only personal action, all others being called petitions. See REAL ACTION.

In Common Law. An action brought for the recovery of personal property, for the enforcement of some contract or to recover damages for its breach, or for the recovery of damages for the commission of an injury to the person or property. Such arise either upon contracts as, account, assumpsit, covenant, debt, and detinue (see these words), or for wrongs, injuries, or torts, as trespass, trespass on the case, replevin, trover (see these words). Other divisions of personal actions are made in the various states; in Vermont and Connecticut an action is in use called an action of book debt. See PERSONAL PROPERTY.

PERSONAL ASSETS. See ASSETS.

PERSONAL CHATTELS. See CHATTELS.

PERSONAL CONTRACT. A contract as to personal property. A covenant (or contract) personal relates only to matters personal as distinguished from real, and is binding on the covenantor (contractor) during his life, and on his personal representatives after his decease, in respect of assets. 3 Co. 22 a.

PERSONAL COVENANT. A covenant which binds only the covenantor and his personal representatives in respect to assets, and can be taken advantage of only by the covenantee.

A covenant which must be performed by the covenantor in person. Fitzh. N. B. 340.

All covenants are either personal or real; but some confusion exists in regard to the division between them. Thus, a covenant may be personal as regards the covenantor, and real as regards the covenantee; and different definitions have been given, according to whether the rights and liabilities of the covenantor or the covenantee have been in consideration. It is apprehended, however, that the prevalent modern usage is to hold a covenant real, if it is real,—that is, runs with the land so as to apply to an assignee, either as regards the covenantor or the covenantee. See Platt, Cov. 61; 4 Bla. Com. 304; Thomas v. Poole, 7 Gray (Mass.) 83. See COVENANT.

PERSONAL EFFECTS. In a will, the words are held not to include personal property in the testator's house, such as furniture and pictures. Lippincott's Estate, 173 Pa. 368, 34 Atl. 58. See WILL.

PERSONAL ESTATE. The term is sometimes used as synonymous with personal property, but its use should not lead to the supposition that there can be any such thing as an estate in personalty, properly so called. Will. Pers. Prop. 8.

But Dicey (Confl. Laws, Moore's ed. 311) considers personal estate and personal property synonymous. They are so used in Acts of Parliament.

PERSONAL GOODS. That property which passes by hand and property which marriage passed from the wife to the husband. Co. Litt. 185 b. See PERSONAL PROPERTY.

PERSONAL INJURY. Bodily injury. State v. Clayborne, 14 Wash. 622, 45 Pac. 303.

PERSONAL LIABILITY. The statutory liability of stockholders of corporations by which they are held individually liable for the debts of the corporation. See STOCKHOLDERS; JOINT STOCK COMPANY.

PERSONAL LIBERTY. Freedom from physical and personal restraint; the right to the pursuit of happiness; freedom to go where one chooses and to pursue such lawful occupations as may seem suitable.

In its broad sense personal liberty would include freedom from unlawful arrest and restraint, from unlawful seizures and searches, from assault and battery, from libel and slander, from general warrants of arrest, from unfair monopolies in trade, and from quartering soldiers in time of peace; and it would include also the right of trial by jury, liberty of conscience, freedom of the press, the right to travel and emigrate, to bear arms and to petition the government for redress of grievances. But in its stricter sense it includes only freedom to move about as one pleases and to pursue any lawful calling; Munn v. Illinois, 94 U. S. 142, 24 L. Ed. 77; Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 106, 21 L. Ed. 394; Butchers' Union Co. v. Slaughter-House Co., 111 U. S. 757, 4 Sup. Ct. 652, 28 L. Ed. 585; People v. Marx, 99 N. Y. 377, 2 N. E. 29, 52 Am. Rep. 34. See CONSTITUTIONAL; POLICE POWER; ASSAULT; CORRECTION; IMPRISONMENT; HABEAS CORPUS; EXPATRIATION; PHYSICAL EXAMINATION; SEARCH; PRELIMINARY EXAMINATIONS; LIBERTY OF CONTRACT; LIBERTY.

PERSONAL PROPERTY. The right or interest which a man has in things personal.

The right or interest less than a freehold which a man has in realty, or any right or interest which he has in things movable.

Personal property is to be distinguished from things personal. There may be, for example, a personal estate in realty, as chattels real; but the only property which a man can have in things personal must be a personal property. The essential idea of personal property is that of property in a thing movable or separable from the realty, or of perishability or possibility of brief duration of interest as compared with the owner's life, in a thing real, without any action on the part of the owner. See 2 Bla. Com. 14 and notes, 384 and notes.

It includes money, chattels, things in action and evidence of debt; Streever v. Birch, 62 Hun 298, 17 N. Y. Supp. 195; McLaughlin v. Alexander, 2 S. D. 226, 49 N. W. 99; and the right which a vendor has to enforce a contract for the sale of real property; People v. Willis, 133 N. Y. 383, 31 N. E. 225. It does not include dogs untaxed; State v. Doe, 79 Ind. 9, 41 Am. Rep. 599.

A crop growing in the ground is personal property so far as not to be considered an interest in land, under the statute of frauds; Smith v. Jones, 12 Me. 337; 5 B. & C. 829; 10 Ad. & E. 753.

It is a general principle of American law that stock in corporations is to be considered as personal property; 4 Dane, Abr. 670; 1 Hill, R. P. 18; Tregear v. Water Co., 76 Cal. 537, 18 Pac. 658, 9 Am. St. Rep. 245; though it was held that such stock was real estate; Griswold v. Penniman, 2 Conn. 567; but the rule was then changed by the legislature.

Title to personal property is acquired—first, by original acquisition by occupancy; as, by capture in war, by finding a lost thing; second, by original acquisition by accession; third, by original acquisition by intellectual labor: as, copyrights and patents for inventions; fourth, by transfer, which is by act of law, by forfeiture, by judgment, by insolvency, by intestacy; fifth, by transfer by act of the party, by gift, by sale. See Graves, Title to Pers. Prop.; Pew; PROPERTY; REAL PROPERTY; POSSESSION.

Possession of personal property is prima facie title thereto; Crawford v. Kimbrough, 76 Ga. 299. See Lowery v. Erskine, 113 N. Y. 52, 20 N. E. 588.

PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVES. The executors or administrators of the person deceased. 5 Ves. 402; 1 Madd. 108; Cox v. Curwen, 118 Mass. 198. The personal representative of a lessee for years is his assignee. 1 Ld. Raym. 553; 12 Eng. Rul. Cas. 59.

In wills, these words are sometimes construed to mean next of kin; 3 Bro. C. C. 224; 2 Jarm. Wills 112; 1 Beav. 46; that is, those who would take the personal estate under the statute of distributions. They have been held to mean descendants; 19 Beav. 448. See LEGAL PERSONAL REPRESENTATIVES.

PERSONAL SECURITY. The legal and uninterrupted enjoyment by a man of his life, his body, his health, and his reputation. 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 202.

PERSONAL SERVICE. The delivery of a writ to the person therein named in person. Leaving a copy at his place of abode is not personal service; Moyer v. Cook, 12 Wis. 336.

Bouv.—162

PERSONAL SERVICES. See SPECIFIC PERFORMANCE.

PERSONAL STATUTE. A law whose principal, direct, and immediate object is to regulate the condition of persons.

The term is not properly in use in the common law, although Lord Mansfield, in 2 W. Bla. 154, applied it to those legislative acts which respect personal transitory contracts, but it is occasionally used in the sense given to it in civil law and which is adopted as its definition. It is a law, ordinance, regulation, or custom, the disposition of which affects the person and clothes him with a capacity or incapacity which he does not change with his abode. See 2 Kent 613.

PERSONALITY. A term used to designate that quality of a law which concerns the condition, state, or capacity of persons.

An action in personality is one brought against the right person, or the person against whom it lies. Fitzh. N. B. 92.

The personality of laws is a phrase used by foreign jurists to designate all laws concerning the condition, state, or capacity of persons, as distinguished from the reality of laws, which means all laws concerning property or things. To express the idea that the operation of a law is universal, it is termed a personal statute, and, on the other hand, to express the idea that its operation is confined to the country of its origin it is designated a real statute. Sto. Conf. L. § 16.

Livermore used the words personality and reality, and Henry the words personalty and realty; Story preferred the former, as less likely to lead to mistakes, as, in our law, personalty and realty are used exclusively to designate personal and real property. Id.

See SIRUS.

PERSONALTY. That which is movable; that which is the subject of personal property and not of a real property.

PERSONATE. In Criminal Law. To assume the character of another without lawful authority, and, in such character, do something to his prejudice, or to the prejudice of another, without his will or consent.

The bare fact of personating another for the purpose of fraud is no more than a cheat or misdemeanor at common law, and punishable as such; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 1010; 2 Russ, Cr. 479.

By statute punishment is inflicted in the United States courts for false personation of any person under the naturalization laws, and of any person holding a claim or debt against the government; R. S. §§ 5424, 5436. See, generally, Renoard v. Noble, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 293; 16 Viner, Abr. 336; Comyns, Dig. Action on the Case for a Deceit (A 3).

PERSONNEL OF NAVY ACT. See RANK; NAVY PERSONNEL ACT.

PERSUADE, PERSUADING. To persuade is to induce to act. Persuading is inducing others to act. Inst. 4. 6. 23; Dig. 11. 3. 1. 5.

In the act of the legislature which declared that "if any person or persons knowingly and willingly shall aid or assist any enemies at open war with this state, etc., by persuading others to enlist for that purpose, etc., he shall be adjudged guilty of high treason," the word persuading thus used means to succeed; and there must be an actual enlistment of the person persuaded in order to bring the defendant within the intention of the clause; Respublica v. Roberts, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 39, 1 L. Ed. 27; 4 C. & P. 369; 9 id. 79. The attempt to persuade a servant to steal his master's goods, or other person to undertake a larceny or other crime, is an indictable misdemeanor, although the person approached declines the persuasion; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 767.

If one counsels another to suicide, and it is done in his presence, the adviser is as guilty as the principal. Accordingly, where two persons, agreeing to commit suicide together, employ means which take effect on one only, the survivor is a principal in the murder of the other; 8 C. & P. 418; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 652; Whart. Cr. L. § 448.

PERSUASION. The act of influencing by expostulation or request. While the persuasion is confined within those limits which leave the mind free, it may be used to induce another to make his will, or even to make it in his own favor. But if such persuasion should so far operate on the mind of the testator that he would be deprived of a perfectly free will, it would vitiate the instrument; Miller v. Miller, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 269, 8 Am. Dec. 651.

PERTINENT. That which tends to prove or disprove the allegations of the parties. Willes 319. Matters which have no such tendency are called impertinent; 8 Toullier, n. 22.

PERTURBATION. A technical word which signifies disturbance or infringement of a right. It is usually applied to the disturbance of pews or seats in a church. In the ecclesiastical courts, actions for these disturbances are technically called "suits for perturbation of seat." 1 Phill. Eccl. 323. See PEW.

PERVERSE VERDICT. A verdict rendered by a jury which choose not to take the law from the judge, but will act on their own erroneous view of the law. In such cases, however honest the intentions of the jury may be, their verdict is perverse. 14 Eng. L. & Eq. 532.

PERVISE, PARVISE. The palace yard at Westminster.

A place where counsel used to advise with their clients.

An afternoon exercise or moot for the instruction of students. Cowell; Blount.

PESAGE. In England, a toll charged for weighing avoirdupois goods other than wool. 2 Chitty, Com. Law 16.

PESO. The name of gold and silver coins in the Philippine Islands and in Cuba. See LEGAL TENDER.

PESQUIDOR. In Spanish Law. A corner. White, New Recop. b. 1, tit. 1, § 3.

PETENS. A demandant; the plaintiff in a real action. Bract. fol. 102, 106 b.

PETER'S PENCE. An ancient levy or tax of a penny on each house throughout England paid to the pope. It was called Peter's Pence because collected on the day of St. Peter, ad vincula; by the Saxons it was called Rome-feoh, Rome-scot, and Rome-penny-ing, because collected and sent to Rome; and lastly, it was called hearth money, because every dwelling-house was liable to it, and every religious house, the abbey of St. Albans alone excepted.

It had its origin with the Mercian king Offa, who by a liberal tribute to Rome procured a new bishopric for Lichfield. It goes back to the tenth century. Stubbs, Const. Hist. of England.

PETIT (sometimes corrupted into petty). A French word signifying little, small. It is frequently used: as, petit larceny, petit jury, petit treason (q. v.).

PETIT ASSIZE. A jury to decide on questions of possession. Britton c. 42; Glanv. lib. 2, c. 6, 7. Used in contradistinction to the grand assize, which was a jury to decide on questions of property. See GRAND ASSIZE.

PETIT CAPE. See CAPE; GRAND CAPE.

PETIT JURY or PETTY JURY. The "little" jury, so called to distinguish it from the "grand" (or "large") jury. Brett, Comm. 1162, n.

PETIT SERJEANTY. See SERJEANTY.

PETIT TREASON. In English Law. The killing of a master by his servant, a husband by his wife, a superior by a secular or religious man. In the United States, this is like any other murder. See HIGH TREASON; TREASON.

PETITIO. A count or declaration. Glanv.

PETITION. An instrument of writing or printing, containing a prayer from the person presenting it, called the petitioner, to the body or person to whom it is presented, for the redress of some wrong or the grant of some favor which the latter has the right to give.

By the constitution of the United States, the right "to petition the government for a redress of grievances" is secured to the people. Amend. art. 1.

See CONSTITUTION OF UNITED STATES.

Petitions are frequently presented to the courts in order to bring some matters before them. It is a general rule in such cases that an affidavit should be made that the facts therein contained are true as far as known to the petitioner, and that those facts which he states on information he believes to be true. It is said that the sufficiency of a petition must be determined by its face, and can neither be aided nor destroyed by the accompanying exhibits, the exhibits being no part of it; Merrill v. Trust Co., 46 Mo. App. 238.

PETITION OF RIGHT. In English Law. A proceeding in chancery by which a subject may recover property in the possession of the king.

This is in the nature of an action against a subject, in which the petitioner sets out his right to that which is demanded by him, and prays the king to do him right and justice; and, upon a due and lawful trial of the right, to make him restitution. It is called a petition of right because the king is bound of right to answer it and let the matter therein contained be determined in a legal way, in like manner as causes between subject and subject. The petition is presented to the king, who subscribes it with these words, soit droit fait al partie, and thereupon it is delivered to the chancellor to be executed according to law. Co. 4th Inst. 419, 422 b; Mitf. Eq. Pl. 30, 31; Cooper, Eq. Pl. 22, 23.

The modern practice is regulated by statute 23 and 24 Vict. c. 34, which provides that the petition shall be left with the home secretary for Her Majesty's consideration, who, if she shall think fit, may grant her fiat that right be done, whereupon the fiat having been served on the solicitor of the treasury, an answer, plea, or demurrer shall be made, in behalf of the crown, and the subsequent pleadings be assimilated as far as practicable to the course of an ordinary action; Mozl. & W.

A statute which Charles I. approved June 7, 1628. As it was not drawn in the common form of an act of parliament, it was so called. It is one of the four great charters of British liberty. It recited that by the laws of England subjects "should not be compelled to contribute to any tax, tallage, aid or any like charge not set by common consent in parliament"; yet the people of England were required to lend certain sums to the crown and many of them, upon their refusal, had been constrained to appear before the Privy Council and be imprisoned, etc.

It recited that by the Great Charter no individual should be taken, imprisoned or dispossessed of his freeholds or liberties, or be outlawed or exiled, etc., but by the law of the land, nevertheless, divers subjects had been imprisoned without cause shown, and when brought up on habeas corpus and no cause certified, had been returned back to prison. It complained that soldiers and mariners had been quartered on the people.

It complained that commissioners had been appointed, with power to proceed "according to the justice of martial law" against such soldiers and mariners, etc. And "by such summary course as is agreeable to martial law and is used in armies in time of war," to try, condemn and execute such offenders "according to the law martial." The petition prayed that these wrongs be righted and that no man thereafter be compelled to make any gift, loan, benevolence, etc. The petition being read June 2, 1628, the king made an evasive answer, but on June 7 he gave his answer in the accustomed form: "Soit droit fait comme il est désiré." See the text in 2 Larned's History for Ready Reference 875.

PETITORY. That which demands or petitions; that which has the quality of a prayer or petition; a right to demand.

A petitory suit or action is understood to be one in which the mere title to property is to be enforced by means of a demand, petition, or other legal proceeding, as distinguished from a suit where only the right of possession and not the mere right of property is in controversy. 1 Kent 371; U. S. v. King, 7 How. (U. S.) 846, 12 L. Ed. 934. Admiralty suits touching property in ships are either petitory, in which the mere title to the property is litigated, or possessory, to restore the possession to the party entitled thereto.

The American courts of admiralty exercise unquestioned jurisdiction in petitory as well as possessory actions; The Amelia, 23 Fed. 406; Wood v. Two Barges, 46 Fed. 204; but admiralty will not enforce a merely equitable title; The Eclipse, 135 U. S. 599, 10 Sup. Ct. 873, 34 L. Ed. 269. In England the courts of law, some time after the restoration in 1660, claimed exclusive cognizance of mere questions of title until the statute of 3 & 4 Vict. c. 65. By that statute the court of admiralty was authorized to decide all questions as to the title to or ownership of any ship or vessel, or the proceeds thereof remaining in the registry in any cause of possession, salvage, damage, wages, or bottomry, instituted in such court after the passing of that act; Ward v. Peck, 18 How. (U. S.) 267, 15 L. Ed. 383; The Friendship, 2 Curt. C. C. 426, Fed. Cas. No. 5,123.

PETROLEUM. See OIL.

PETTIFOGGER. One who pretends to be a lawyer, but possesses neither knowledge of the law nor conscience.

An unprincipled practitioner of law, whose business is confined to petty cases.

PETTY. See PETIT.

PETTY AVERAGE (called, also, customary average). Several petty charges which are borne partly by the ship and partly by the cargo, such as the expense of tonnage, beaconage, etc. Abb. Sh. 13th ed. 658; 2 Pars. Mar. Law 312; 1 Bell, Com. 567. See AVERAGE.

PETTY BAG OFFICE. In English Law. An office in the court of chancery, appropriated for suits against attorneys and officers of the court, and for process and proceedings by extent on statutes, recognizances ad quod damnum, and the like. Termes de la Ley.

PETTY CONSTABLE. The ordinary constable, as distinguished from the high constable of the hundred. 1 Bla. Com. 355; Bac. Law Tr. 181, Office of Constable; Willc. Cons. c. 1, § 1. See CONSTABLE.

PETTY LARCENY. See LARCENY.

PETTY SESSIONS. See SESSION.

PEW. A seat in a church, separate from all others, with a convenient place to stand therein.

It is an incorporeal interest in the real property. The pewholder does not own the soil; Cooper v. Presbyterian Church, 32 Barb. (N. Y.) 234; Gay v. Baker, 17 Mass. 435, 9 Am. Dec. 159. And although a man has the exclusive right to it, yet it seems he cannot maintain trespass against a person entering it; 1 Term 430; but case is the proper remedy; 3 B. & Ald. 361; 8 B. & C. 294. In First Baptist Church v. Witherell, 3 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 296, 24 Am. Dec. 223; it was held that the owner of a pew can, if disturbed in its use, maintain trespass, case, or ejectment, according to the circumstances.

The right to pews is limited and usufructuary, and does not interfere with the right of the parish or congregation to pull down and rebuild the church; Price v. Methodist Church, 4 Ohio 541; Freligh v. Platt, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 496; Sohler v. Trinity Church, 109 Mass. 21; Com. v. St. Mary's Church, 6 B. & R. (Pa.) 508; indemnifying those whose pews are destroyed; Gay v. Baker, 17 Mass. 435, 9 Am. Dec. 159. See 2 Bla. Com. 429; 19 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 1; Gay v. Baker, 17 Mass. 435, 9 Am. Dec. 161; First Baptist Church v. Witherell, 3 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 296, 24 Am. Dec. 230. The pewholder's right is only to occupy his pew during public worship; How v. Stevens, 47 Vt. 262.

His right is subject to the paramount rights of the parish; First Baptist Society in Leeds v. Grant, 59 Me. 250; but it is held that a rule of the Roman Catholic Church forbidding a layman to control his pew will not be regarded by the courts, unless it was part of the contract; O'Hear v. De Goesbriand, 33 Vt. 602, 80 Am. Dec. 653 (criticised in 15 Am. L. Reg. 280).

When pews are removed from a church merely as a matter of expediency, the owners are entitled to payment; Aylward v.

A pew may be used only for divine service and for meetings of the congregation held for temporal purposes. The pewowner must preserve order, while enjoying his pew; Wall v. Lee, 34 N. Y. 149.

Where not otherwise provided by statute the interest is considered as real estate, subject to the incidents of that kind of property; 1 Washb. R. P. 9; O'Hear v. De Goesbriand, 33 Vt. 602, 80 Am. Dec. 653; (see also Heeney v. St. Peters Church, 2 Edw. Ch. [N. Y.] 608); White v. Bailey, 14 Conn. 279; Third Presbyterian Congregation v. Andruss, 21 N. J. L. 325. In Massachusetts and New Hampshire pews are personal property by statute. In Pennsylvania they are held personal property as to devolution, although, strictly speaking, an interest in real estate; Church v. Wells' Ex'r, 24 Pa. 251. See, generally, State v. Trinity Church, 45 N. J. L. 230; Best, Pres. 111; Crabb, R. P. § 481; Baum, Church Law.

PHARMACY. See DRUGGIST.

PHAROS. A watch-tower, at sea mark, which cannot be erected without lawful warrant and authority. 3 Inst. 204.

PHILIPPINE ISLANDS. War was declared with Spain on April 25, 1898. On May 1, 1898, the forces of the United States captured Manila bay and harbor. The protocol of August 12, 1898, provided that the United States would occupy and hold the city, bay and harbor of Manila pending the control, disposition and government of the Philippines. Manila was opened as a port of entry on August 20, 1898, and Cebu on March 14, 1899. The executive order of July 12, 1898, was not proclaimed in Cebu until February 22, 1899, or later. The treaty of peace was signed on December 10, 1898, but ratifications were not exchanged until April 11, 1899. The Spanish forces evacuated the island of Cebu on December 25, 1898, having first appointed a provisional governor. Shortly thereafter the native inhabitants formerly in insurrection against Spain took possession of the island, formed a so-called republic and administered the affairs of the island until possession was surrendered to the United States on February 22, 1899, prior to which time the United States had not been in possession of the islands.

After the treaty of peace with Spain, the Philippines ceased to be a "foreign country" in the view of the tariff act; De Lima v. Bidwell, 182 U. S. 1, 21 Sup. Ct. 743, 45 L. Ed. 1041; the subsequent insurrection did not constitute it such; Lincoln v. U. S., 197 U. S. 419, 25 Sup. Ct. 455, 49 L. Ed. 816. No distinction can be made, so far as concerns the matters decided in De Lima v. Bidwell, 182 U. S. 1, 21 Sup. Ct. 743, 45 L. Ed. 1041, between Porto Rico and the Philippines; Fourteen Diamond Rings v. U. S., 183 U. S. 176, 22 Sup. Ct. 59, 46 L. Ed. 138. The inhabitants continuing to reside there, who were Spanish subjects on April 11, 1899, and resided there and their children born subsequently thereto are made citizens of the Philippines and entitled to the protection of the United States, excepting such as have elected to remain subjects of Spain.

For a history of matters growing out of the Spanish-American war, see U. S. v. Heinszen, 206 U. S. 370, 27 Sup. Ct. 742, 51 L. Ed. 1098, 11 Ann. Cas. 688; Macleod v. U. S., 229 U. S. 416, 33 Sup. Ct. 955, 57 L. Ed. 1260.

Congress in dealing with the Philippine Islands may delegate legislative authority to such agencies as it may select; U. S. v. Heinszen, 206 U. S. 370, 27 Sup. Ct. 742, 51 L. Ed. 1098, 11 Ann. Cas. 688. In 1901 it had been held that while the president, as commander-in-chief, had authority to impose customs duties in Porto Rico on goods coming into that country from the United States prior to the ratification of the treaty, no such executive power existed after that ratification; De Lima v. Bidwell, 182 U. S. 1, 21 Sup. Ct. 743, 45 L. Ed. 1041. After the ratification of the treaty with Spain, congress passed the Foraker Act, imposing tariff duties. These, too, were held lawful because they were imposed, not simply by virtue of the authority of the president, acting under the military power, but in conformity with a valid act of congress; Dooley v. U. S., 183 U. S. 151, 22 Sup. Ct. 62, 43 L. Ed. 128.

On the same day, in a case involving the validity of tariff duties levied on diamonds brought into the United States from the Philippines, it was held that such duties were unlawful; Fourteen Diamond Rings v. U. S., 183 U. S. 176, 22 Sup. Ct. 59, 46 L. Ed. 138; because the Philippines were not foreign territory. In January and in March, 1902, in two cases, it was sought to recover duties paid on goods taken into the Philippines, after the ratification of the treaty with Spain and before the passage of the act of congress of March 8, 1902. It was held that the president was without power, after the ratification of the treaty, and in the absence of express authority from congress, to impose the duties in question; Lincoln v. U. S., 197 U. S. 419, 25 Sup. Ct. 455, 49 L. Ed. 816; id., 202 U. S. 484, 26 Sup. Ct. 728, 50 L. Ed. 1117. An act of congress of June 30, 1906, then ratified the collection of duties levied under the order of the president. In a case commencing after the decision in Fourteen Diamond Rings v. U. S., 183 U. S. 176, 22 Sup. Ct. 59, 46 L. Ed. 138, it was contended that congress had not the power to ratify, by legislation, an order which the president had no right to make without express authority from congress, and that congress could not delegate to the president the right of prescribing a tariff of duties. The court held that, though the duties were illegally exacted, the illegality was not the result of an inherent want of power in the United States to have authorized the imposition of the duties, but simply arose from the failure to delegate to the official the authority essential to give immediate validity to his conduct in enforcing the payment of the duties; that the illegal act of the president might be ratified by congress in accordance with the law of agency, and that congress might delegate legislative authority to the president or to any other agent it might select; U. S. v. Heinszen, 206 U. S. 370, 27 Sup. Ct. 742, 51 L. Ed. 1098, 11 Ann. Cas. 688.

PHOTOGRAPH. The mechanical process of photography is judicially recognized as a means of producing true likenesses which are admissible in evidence in the trial of civil and criminal cases. The difference between the images produced upon a photographic plate and upon the human eye does not render a photograph inadmissible in evidence, but bears only upon the effect of such evidence; 1 Greenl. Ev. 92; Scott v. New Orleans, 75 Fed. 373, 21 C. C. A. 402; Macleod v. Scripps, 52 Mich. 214, 17 N. W. 815, 18 N. W. 209. A photograph of the subject-matter in controversy is admissible in evidence, when proved to have been fairly taken; Cowley v. People, 83 N. Y. 464, 38 Am. Rep. 464; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Upton, 194 Fed. 371, 115 C. C. A. 379; Church v. Milwaukee, 31 Wis. 512; Franklin v. State, 69 Ga. 42, 47 Am. Rep. 748; Kansas City, M. & B. R. Co. v. Smith, 90 Ala. 25, 8 South. 43, 24 Am. St. Rep. 753; Udderzook v. Com., 76 Pa. 340; In re Jessup, 81 Cal. 408, 21 Pac. 976, 22 Pac. 742, 1028, 6 L. R. A. 594; Barker v. Perry, 67 Ia. 146, 25 N. W. 100; Ordway v. Haynes, 50 N. H. 159. There should be preliminary proof of care and accuracy in the taking, and of their relevancy; Cunningham v. R. Co., 72 Conn. 244, 43 Atl. 1047; McKarren v. R. Co., 194 Mass. 179, 80 N. E. 477, 10 Ann. Cas. 961. The testimony of the photographer is not essential; id.; New York, S. & W. R. Co. v. Moore, 105 Fed. 725, 45 C. C. A. 21.

While the reported cases do not always show that the photograph offered in evidence was first authenticated, yet there is no case which holds that such proof is unnecessary. The following cases show that such proof was assumed to be necessary or was given; Cooper v. R. Co., 54 Minn. 379, 50 N. W. 42; Geer v. Min. Co., 134 Mo. 85, 34 S. W. 1099, 56 Am. St. Rep. 489; People v. Fish, 125 N. Y. 136, 26 N. E. 319; State v. Kelley, 46 S. C. 55; Buzard & Hilliard v. McAnulty, 77 Tex. 438, 14 S. W. 138; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Hall, 91 Ala. 112, 8 South. 371, 24

Am. St. Rep. 863; Miller v. R. Co., 128 Ind. 97, 27 N. E. 339, 25 Am. St. Rep. 416. It has been said that photographs are merely secondary evidence; Duffin v. People, 107 Ill. 113, 47 Am. Rep. 431; Leathers v. Wrecking Co., 2 Woods 680, Fed. Cas. No. 8,164; but they are of a high order of proof; Beardslee v. Columbia Tp., 188 Pa. 496, 41 Atl. 617, 68 Am. St. Rep. 883. Where the jury has viewed the premises in question a photograph of them is generally inadmissible; Blair v. Pelham, 118 Mass. 420; Church v. Milwaukee, 31 Wis. 512; but where the photographs themselves are the subject of the controversy, or the original subject of the photograph cannot for any reason be produced, it is otherwise; Barnes v. Ingalls, 39 Ala. 193; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Kendall, 49 Ill. App. 398; Perkins v. Buaas (Tex.) 32 S. W. 240; Omaha S. R. Co. v. Beeson, 36 Neb. 361, 54 N. W. 557; Church v. Milwaukee, 31 Wis. 512; Wilcox v. Wilcox, 46 Hun (N. Y.) 32; In re Jessup, 81 Cal. 408, 21 Pac. 976, 22 Pac. 742, 1028, 6 L. R. A. 594; Daly v. Maguire, 6 Blatch. 137, Fed. Cas. No. 3,551. The discretion of the court in the admission of photographs does not differ from the exercise of that power with reference to other kinds of evidence; Ortiz v. State, 30 Fla. 256, 11 South. 611; Van Houten v. Morse, 162 Mass. 414, 38 N. E. 705, 26 L. R. A. 430, 44 Am. St. Rep. 373; Archer v. R. Co., 106 N. Y. 598, 13 N. E. 318; Hynes v. McDermott, 82 N. Y. 41, 37 Am. Rep. 538.

Photographs are admissible to show the physical condition, characteristics, and identity of persons and property, in civil and criminal cases; Brown v. Ins. Co., 65 Mich. 306, 32 N. W. 610, 8 Am. St. Rep. 894; Taylor, B. & H. Ry. Co. v. Warner, 88 Tex. 642, 32 S. W. 868; People v. Webster, 139 N. Y. 73, 34 N. E. 730; Gilbert v. Ry. Co., 160 Mass. 403, 36 N. E. 60; *Malachi v. Notwithstanding they may have been taken some time, as a year, after the occurrence of the transaction which they represent; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Crose, 113 Ill. App. 547; but not where the original can be readily exhibited, unless for use in identifying handwriting or detecting forgery; Baxter v. R. Co., 104 Wis. 307, 80 N. W. 644, they must, however, show conditions actually existing and are inadmissible where they merely show persons in assumed positions to illustrate the claims of parties. They have been admitted in actions for personal injury to show the condition of the injured person soon after the injury; People's G. L. & C. Co. v. Amphlett, 93 Ill. App. 194; and also when taken nine years before to show emaciation.

ation; Rock Island v. Drost, 71 Ill. App. 613; also when taken just before and after the injury; Davis v. R. Co., 136 N. C. 115, 48 S. E. 591, 1 Ann. Janesville*, 104 Wis. 570, 80 N. W. 944, 47 L. R. A. 691, 76 Am. St. Rep. 892. In an action for negligently causing the death of a wife, her photograph is not admissible in evidence to show that she was a beautiful woman; Smith v. R. Co., 177 N. Y. 379, 69 N. E. 729. They may also be rejected as improper and indecent where the evidence may be obtained by private examination out of court and expert testimony given as the result of it; Guhl v. Whitcomb, 109 Wis. 69, 85 N. W. 142, 83 Am. St. Rep. 889.

They may be used to show the station where the decedent was killed and the condition of the tracks; *MacFeat v. R. It is doubtful if they ought to be admitted to show the health, strength, or agility of a person; Gilbert v. R. Co., 160 Mass. 403, 36 N. E. 60.

Upon a criminal trial, photographic likenesses taken after death, of persons whom it is material to identify, may be exhibited to witnesses acquainted with such persons in life as aids in the identification; Ruloff v. People, 45 N. Y. 215. Where a mutilated body was found, the witness was allowed to testify that the face resembled a photograph of a person alleged to be the one found, though he had not known the man before death; Udderzook v. Com., 76 Pa. 340. The healthy condition of the deceased may be proved by a colored photograph taken a short time before death; Washington L. Ins. Co. v. Schaible, 1 W. N. C. (Pa.) 369; and in an indictment for bigamy a photograph of the first husband may be shown to a witness to the first marriage to prove his identity with the person mentioned in the marriage certificate; 4 F. & F. 103.

A photograph of scenery may be misleading as to distances and should be looked at with caution; Com. v. Keller, 191 Pa. 122, 43 Atl. 198; so when slight differences of height, etc., would be important; Cunningham v. R. Co., 72 Conn. 244, 43 Atl. 1047.

See note in Dederichs v. R. Co., 14 Utah, 137, 46 Pac. 656, 35 L. R. A. 802.

A photograph made by the cathode or X-ray process will be admitted as secondary evidence; its competency depends upon the science, skill, experience, and intelligence of the person who took the picture and testified with regard to it. Lacking these important qualifications, it should not be admitted, and it is to be weighed like other competent evidence. In an action for personal injuries it was held competent to submit to the jury an X-ray photograph taken by a surgeon, showing the overlapping bones of one of the plaintiff's legs, where it was broken at the time of the accident, and where the surgeon was familiar with the process by which the impression was secured, as well as with fractures, and the surgeon testified that the photograph accurately represented the condition of the leg at the point of the fracture, and that by the aid of the X-rays he was enabled to see the fracture and overlapping bones as if they were uncovered to the sight; Bruce v. Breall, 99 Tenn. 303, 41 S. W. 445.

In a criminal case in New York the prosecution claimed that a bullet struck the victim in the jaw, and split, one piece being deflected into the jaw and the other piece into the back of his head. The defence claimed that the piece lodged in the back of the victim's head was not a fragment but a bullet. To prove this, the defence introduced an X-ray photograph of the head and neck showing the lodgment of the bullet, and the testimony of the physician who took the photograph; 56 Alb. L. J. 309; 15 Med. Leg. J. 246.

An X-ray photograph is admissible in evidence if properly taken; De Forge v. R. Co., 178 Mass. 59, 59 N. E. 669, 86 Am. St. Rep. 464; to show the internal tissues of the body; Geneva v. Burnett, 65 Neb. 464, 91 N. W. 275, 58 L. R. A. 237, 101 Am. St. Rep. 628; but they are not infallible; Miller v. Mintun, 73 Ark. 183, 83 S. W. 918; it need not be shown that it was taken by a competent person, or that the apparatus was such as to secure an accurate picture; it need only appear, by the evidence of competent witnesses, that it truly represents the object; Carlson v. Benton, 66 Neb. 486, 92 N. W. 600, 1 Ann. Cas. 159; its admission is within the discretion of the trial court; Jameson v. Weld, 93 Me. 345, 45 Atl. 299; Dolan v. Mut. R. F. Life Ass'n, 173

Mass. 197, 53 N. E. 398. The same rules apply as to ordinary photographs; Mauch v. Hartford, 112 Wis. 40, 87 N. W. 816. See an article in 35 Am. L. Rev. 617.

It is a breach of contract and violation of confidence for a photographer to make unauthorized copies of his customer's photograph. A private individual may enjoin the publication of his photograph, but a public character may not, in the absence of a breach of contract or violation of confidence in procuring the likeness from which the publication is made. A statesman, author, artist, or inventor who seeks public recognition, may be said to have surrendered this right to the public; Corliss v. Walker Co., 64 Fed. 280, 31 L. R. A. 283; 40 Ch. D. 345. See PRIVACY; INJUNCTION.

One who reproduces a copyrighted photograph cannot escape liability as an infringer by merely showing that the copy which he reproduced did not bear the notice of copyright when he purchased it, but he must also show that it bore no notice when it left the custody of the owner of the copyright; Falk v. Engraving Co., 54 Fed. 890, 4 C. C. A. 648. Violation of the right in a copyrighted photograph is subject by statute to a penalty. See Bolles v. Outing Co., 77 Fed. 966, 23 C. C. A. 594, 46 L. R. A. 712.

PHRENASTHENIA. A morbid condition, also known as the insanity of the degenerates, used to indicate the general mental infirmity of degenerates or individuals with vices of organization who are insane, but whose insanity presents special characteristics growing out of mental infirmity. It is usually hereditary and congenital. The insanity is a secondary phenomenon, vice of organization being the primary one; 2 Clevenge, Med. Jur. 856.

PHYSICAL EXAMINATION. The question as to whether, and under what circumstances, courts will permit the physical examination of litigants and of persons accused of crime, and also of property in litigation, has been much mooted. A physical examination of a woman under the writ of de ventre inspiciendo was known to the common law under special circumstances. See JURY OF WOMEN. This early practice has been urged as a precedent for permitting a physical examination in certain civil and criminal cases.

In Union Pacific R. Co. v. Bottsford, 141 U. S. 250, 11 Sup. Ct. 1000, 35 L. Ed. 734, the question was the right of a federal court to order a surgical examination of the plaintiff, in an action of tort. Mr. Justice Gray referred to the common-law writ of de ventre inspiciendo in capital cases, and also in civil cases involving the rightful succession to property of a decedent against fraudulent claims of bastards, and said that the learning and research of counsel for the plaintiff in error (John F. Dillon) had "failed to produce an instance of its even having been considered in any part of the United States as suited to the habits and conditions of the people." He added that "so far as the books within our reach show, no order to inspect the body in a personal action appears to have been made or even moved for, in any of the English courts of common law, at any period of their history." The ruling of the court below, refusing such an examination, was sustained. See, also, Pennsylvania Co. v. Newmeyer, 129 Ind. 401, 28 N. E. 860; McQuigan v. R. Co., 129 N. Y. 50, 29 N. E. 235, 14 L. R. A. 466, 26 Am. St. Rep. 507; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Griffin, 80 Fed. 278, 25 C. C. A. 413; Parker v. Euslow, 102 Ill. 272, 40 Am. Rep. 588.

That the court has no inherent power to order a physical examination is held in Camden & S. R. Co. v. Stetson, 177 U. S. 172, 20 Sup. Ct. 617, 44 L. Ed. 721; Larson v. Salt Lake City, 34 Utah, 318, 97 Pac. 483, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 462; May v. R. Co., 32 Mont. 522, 81 Pac. 328, 70 L. R. A. 111, 4 Ann. Cas. 605. That trial courts have the inherent power to order a medical examination by experts of the person of a plaintiff seeking a recovery for personal injuries, if the examination is applied for and made before entering upon the trial, is held in Western Glass Mfg. Co. v. Schoeninger, 42 Colo. 357, 94 Pac. 342, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 663, 126 Am. St. Rep. 165; Wanek v. Winona, 78 Minn. 98, 80 N. W. 851, 46 L. R. A. 448, 79 Am. St. Rep. 354; Harvey v. Traction Co., 26 W. N. C. (Pa.) 231; South Bend v. Turner, 156 Ind. 418, 60 N. E. 271, 54 L. R. A. 396, 83 Am. St. Rep. 200; Brown v. R. Co., 12 N. D. 61, 95 N. W. 153, 102 Am. St. Rep. 564; see Larson v. Salt Lake City, 34 Utah, 318, 97 Pac. 483, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 462. After the right had been denied in New York, a statute was passed; but it has been held that such an act will be strictly construed; Goldenberg v. Zirinsky, 114 App. Div. 827, 100 N. Y. Supp. 251; Bowe v. Brunnbauer, 13 Misc. 631, 34 N. Y. Supp. 919; Potter v. Hammondsport, 112 App. Div. 91, 98 N. Y. Supp. 186. Where they do not so provide, they will not be extended to compel answers to questions; 16 P. R. (Ont.) 496. See also 14 id. 171.

The New Jersey act providing for such examination was held binding on a federal court; Camden & S. R. Co. v. Stetson, 177 U. S. 172, 20 Sup. Ct. 617, 44 L. Ed. 721.

The question whether a court has at common law the power to compel a plaintiff in an action for a personal injury to submit to a surgical examination, is a matter of practice and not of evidence, and as a matter of practice relating to the power of courts, neither state statutes nor the decisions of state courts on the subject are binding on federal courts under R. S. § 721, providing that, with certain exceptions, the laws of the several states shall be regarded as rules of decisions in trials at common law in such courts, which, as to such matters are governed by the decisions of the supreme court of the United States; Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Kendall, 167 Fed. 62, 93 C. C. A. 422, 16 Ann. Cas. 560.

Where a plaintiff in an action for an injury to his knee, while on the witness stand, voluntarily exhibits the injured knee to the jury, the defendant is entitled to require him to submit the same to surgical examination, and the court has power, independently of any statute, to compel such submission; Chicago & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Kendall, 167 Fed. 62, 93 C. C. A. 422, 16 Ann. Cas. 560. Such an order was held ultra vires; 46 L. J. 696. But the statute 31 & 32 Vict. c. 19, § 26, authorizes any judge of a court in which an action is pending to recover damages for a railway accident to order an examination of the person injured; 43 L. J. Rep. Exch. 150.

But while it has been held that the defendant has no absolute right to have a personal physical examination of the plaintiff made, in an action for personal injuries, yet in the discretion of the court such examination may be made, if essential for the ascertainment of truth or to subserve the ends of justice; Owens v. R. Co., 95 Mo. 169, 8 S. W. 350, 6 Am. St. Rep. 39; Ala. G. S. R. Co. v. Hill, 90 Ala. 71, 8 South. 90, 9 L. R. A. 442, 24 Am. St. Rep. 764; Hall v. Manson, 99 Ia. 698, 68 N. W. 922, 34 L. R. A. 207; Edwards v. Three Rivers, 96 Mich. 625, 55 N. W. 1003; Carrico v. Ry. Co., 39 W. Va. 86, 19 S. E. 571, 24 L. R. A. 50; Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Childress, 82 Ga. 719, 9 S. E. 602, 3 L. R. A. 808, 14 Am. St. Rep. 189; White v. Ry. Co., 61 Wis. 536, 21 N. W. 524, 50 Am. Rep. 154; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Thul, 29 Kan. 466, 44 Am. Rep. 659; Lane v. Ry. Co., 21 Wash. 119, 57 Pac. 367, 46 L. R. A. 153, 75 Am. St. Rep. 821; Schroeder v. R. Co., 47 Ia. 375.

A plaintiff, in an action for personal injuries alleged to have caused the secretion of albumen and sugar, may be required to produce in court, for analysis, specimens of his urine, accompanied by an affidavit that it was voided by him; the privacy of his person not being thereby invaded; Cleveland, C. C. & St. L. Ry. Co. v. Huddleston, 151 Ind. 540, 46 N. E. 678, 36 L. R. A. 681, 68 Am. St. Rep. 238. See 13 Harv. L. Rev. 224.

It is within the discretion of the court to refuse to require the plaintiff to submit to a physical examination which requires the administration of anæsthetics; Strudgeon v. Sand Beach, 107 Mich. 496, 65 N. W. 616.

In some courts plaintiffs are allowed to exhibit to the jury their injuries, and to perform physical acts showing the nature and extent of their injuries; Schroeder v. R. Co., 47 Ia. 375; Hatfield v. R. Co., 33

Minn. 130, 22 N. W. 176, 53 Am. Rep. 14; but other courts hold this to be improper, because such evidence cannot be preserved in a bill of exceptions for use in an appellate court; 19 Cent. L. J. 144; and where a juror was allowed to manipulate the plaintiff's injured hand, it was error, although exhibiting it was proper; Vance v. Drug Co., 149 Ill. App. 499.

In a trial of an action of trespass for assault and battery, it is not error to permit the jury to examine with their fingers scars on the plaintiff's head caused by a blow from defendant's pistol; Jackson v. Wells, 13 Tex. Civ. App. 275, 35 S. W. 528.

A court of equity will not, in a patent case, even if it had the power, require the respondent, claiming under an alleged anticipating patent, to perform experiments in the presence of plaintiff's witnesses, except where so extraordinary a course is necessary; Simonds Rolling Mach. Co. v. Mfg. Co., 83 Fed. 490.

In an action for breach of warranty on a sale of a horse, the court has no power to order that the defendant have the privilege of sending a veterinary surgeon into the plaintiff's stable to examine the horse; Martin v. Elliott, 106 Mich. 130, 63 N. W. 998, 31 L. R. A. 169.

In a suit for divorce on the ground of impotence a court has power to compel the parties to submit to a surgical examination when facts essential to a correct decision may thereby be ascertained; Devanbagh v. Devanbagh, 5 Paige (N. Y.) 554, 28 Am. Dec. 443; Anonymous, 89 Ala. 291, 7 South. 100, 7 L. R. A. 425, 18 Am. St. Rep. 116; 32 L. J. Mat. 12; in divorce proceeding because of malformation of the wife the court made an order for her inspection, but did not require the husband to submit to inspection; 16 Week. Rep. 943.

The measurement in the presence of the jury of a woman's foot and her leg six inches above the ankle, in a suit for injuries to the foot and ankle, must be permitted by the court when there is a direct conflict as to such measurement by the medical men called by the respective parties,—at least if the witness herself does not object; Hall v. Manson, 99 Ia. 698, 68 N. W. 922, 34 L. R. A. 208.

The better practice seems to be to apply to the party to be examined, before trial, for permission to make the examination, and upon his refusal, to present a motion for leave, by affidavit, showing the refusal, and also the probability that the examination will result in some material disclosure. The party applying for the order for examination should also offer to pay the expense of such examination; Richmond & D. R. Co. v. Childress, 82 Ga. 719, 9 S. E. 602, 3 L. R. A. 808, 14 Am. St. Rep. 189. In practice, some courts order a private physical examination of a party to be made by a physician, who may then testify in regard thereto at the trial of the cause.

A physical examination, if made, must be made by physicians agreed upon by the parties or selected by the court, care being taken to prevent danger to life, pains of body, or any indignity to the person; Schroeder v. R. Co., 47 Ia. 375; Miami & M. T. Co. v. Baily, 37 Ohio St. 104; McGovern v. Hope, 63 N. J. L. 76, 42 Atl. 830; Lane v. R. Co., 21 Wash. 119, 57 Pac. 367, 46 L. R. A. 153, 75 Am. St. Rep. 821.

Where an order for physical examination is made, the court will enforce it by refusing to try the cause until it is complied with; Hess v. R. Co., 7 Pa. Co. Ct. Rep. 565; by dismissing the action, or refusing to allow the plaintiff to give evidence to establish his injury; Miami & M. T. Co. v. Baily, 37 Ohio St. 104; or by striking out and withdrawing from the consideration of the jury the allegations relative to his injury, or punishing him for contempt; Schroeder v. R. Co., 47 Ia. 375; Hatfield v. R. Co., 33 Minn. 130, 22 N. W. 176, 53 Am. Rep. 14. A refusal to submit to a physical examination, if the court permit him to prosecute his claim will be very strong evidence against the person refusing; Kinney v. Springfield, 35 Mo. App. 97; and may be considered by the jury as reflecting on his good faith; Union P. R. Co. v. Botsford, 141 U. S. 250, 11 Sup. Ct. 1000, 35 L. Ed. 734.

Upon an appeal of mayhem where the issue joined is whether it is mayhem or no mayhem, it will be decided by the court upon inspection with the assistance of surgeons, if desired; 3 Bla. Com. 332.

In criminal proceedings there is no power to undress and medically examine the person of a prisoner, without his consent, although such examination might further the ends of justice; 13 Cox, C. C. 625. It is error for a court to require a person on trial for murder to exhibit his leg at the place where it was amputated, although a certain material fact may be established thereby; State v. Garrett, 71 N. C. 85, 17 Am. Rep. 1. Where a prisoner refused to make a print of his foot in a pan of soft earth in order that the witnesses for the prosecution might testify as to similarity of such tracks with those found at the scene of the crime, the court said it was optional with the accused, who refused, and upon conviction a new trial was granted; Stokes v. State, 5 Baxt. (Tenn.) 619, 30 Am. Rep. 72; contra, Walker v. State, 7 Tex. App. 245, 32 Am. Rep. 595. A woman indicted for the murder of her illegitimate child refused to allow physicians selected by the coroner to examine whether she had recently been delivered of a child, and upon being threatened, yielded. The court ruled out the testimony of the physicians upon the ground that no person shall, in any criminal case, be compelled to be a witness against himself; People v. McCoy, 45 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 216.

On the other hand, it has been held not to be error to compel the defendant to exhibit tattoo marks on his body, to the existence of which a witness had testified; State v. Ah Chuey, 14 Nev. 79, 33 Am. Rep. 530; or to compel the accused to make his footprints in an ash heap, and to allow the prosecution to show that they corresponded with those found at the scene of the crime; Walker v. State, 7 Tex. App. 245, 32 Am. Rep. 595; or for an officer to compel the accused to put his foot in print found at the place where the crime was committed and at the trial testify to the result of the comparison; State v. Graham, 74 N. C. 646, 21 Am. Rep. 493; Blackwell v. State, 67 Ga. 76, 44 Am. Rep. 717; and it is held that the state has power in a prosecution for rape to order an examination by a physician of the vagina of the prosecutrix; People v. Preston, 19 Cal. App. 675, 127 Pac. 660.

PHYSICAL FACT. A fact, the existence of which is perceptible by the senses.

"A fact considered to have its seat in some inanimate being, or, by virtue, not of the qualities by which it is constituted animate, but of those which it has in common with the class of inanimate beings." 1 Benth. Jud. Ev. 45.

PHYSICIAN. A person, who has received the degree of doctor of medicine from an incorporated institution.

One lawfully engaged in the practice of medicine.

As used in a policy of life insurance, the term "family physician" has been held to mean the physician who usually attends, the members of a family in the capacity of a physician, whether or not he usually attended or was consulted by the insured himself; Price v. Ins. Co., 17 Minn. 497 (Gil. 473), 10 Am. Rep. 166.

In the Roman law and at common law until 1422 the practice of medicine and surgery was free to all. A statute in that year confined it to those who had studied the subject in a university and who were bachelors of science.

A statute forbidding the practice of medicine without a license covers osteopathy; Bandel v. Department of Health, 193 N. Y. 133, 85 N. E. 1067, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 49; Little v. State, 60 Neb. 749, 84 N. W. 248, 51 L. R. A. 717; contra, State v. McKnight, 131 N. C. 717, 42 S. E. 580, 59 L. R. A. 187; State v. Liffing, 61 Ohio St. 39, 55 N. E. 168, 46 L. R. A. 334, 76 Am. St. Rep. 358; Collins v. Texas, 223 U. S. 288, 32 Sup. Ct. 286, 56 L. Ed. 439; Ex parte Collins, 57 Tex. Cr. R. 2, 121 S. W. 501; one who practices "suggestive therapeutics" without drugs or surgery;

Witty v. State, 173 Ind. 404, 90 N. E. 627, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1297; a "magnetic healer" in the nature of an osteopath; People v. Trenner, 144 Ill. App. 275; one who pretends to heal by rubbing; State v. Yates, 145 Ia. 332, 124 N. W. 174; one who practices "vital healing," professing to cure without drugs or surgery; State v. Adkins, 145 Ia. 671, 124 N. W. 627; one who treats the eye and fits spectacles, having "Dr." on his office door; State v. Blumenthal, 141 Mo. App. 502, 125 S. W. 1188; one who advertises as "the Masseuseur Doctor," though he used no medicine; Newman v. State, 58 Tex. Cr. R. 223, 124 S. W. 956; one who treats diseases without drugs; 70 L. R. 835.

A "healer by divine gift" was held guilty of practicing medicine without a license; Smith v. People, 51 Colo. 270, 117 Pac. 612, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 158; where it was held that evidence as to religious belief is not admissible, the object of the statute being to make certain requirements for the public health; see cases collected in Witty v. State, 173 Ind. 404, 90 N. E. 627, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1302; State v. Bresee, 137 Ia. 673, 114 N. W. 45, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 103.

Giving Christian Science treatment for a fee for the cure of disease is within an act requiring a certificate from the board of medical registration; State v. Marble, 72 Ohio St. 21, 73 N. E. 1063, 70 L. R. A. 835, 106 Am. St. Rep. 570, 2 Ann. Cas. 898. But praying for those suffering from disease, or teaching that disease will disappear and physical perfection be attained as a result of prayer, was held not to constitute the practice of medicine; State v. Mylod, 20 R. I. 632, 40 Atl. 753, 41 L. R. A. 428.

The business of massage does not violate a statute forbidding the practice of medicine without a license; Smith v. Lane, 24 Hun (N. Y.) 632; but prescribing patent medicine does; Thompson v. Staats, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 395; Jordan v. Overseers of Dayton, 4 Ohio 295. The law does not recognize any difference between schools of medicine; Corsi v. Maretzek, 4 E. D. Sm. (N. Y.) 1.

A law providing that no person shall be licensed to practice medicine except after examinations by the state board, is not in conflict with the fourteenth amendment of the United States constitution; State v. Carey, 4 Wash. 424, 30 Pac. 729; nor is a statute making it a misdemeanor to practice medicine without a certificate from the state board of health that the practitioner is a graduate of a reputable medical college, unconstitutional, as depriving him of property without due process of law; Dent v. West Virginia, 129 U. S. 114, 9 Sup. Ct. 231, 32 L. Ed. 623; nor is a Texas act establishing a state board of health and requiring osteopaths to be registered; Collins v. Texas, 223 U. S. 288, 32 Sup. Ct. 236, 56 L. Ed. 439.

Bad or unskilful practice in a physician or other professional person, whereby the health of the patient is injured, is usually called malpractice (mala praxis).

Wilful malpractice takes place when the physician purposely administers medicines or performs an operation which he knows and expects will result in damage or death to the individual under his care; as in the case of criminal abortion; Elw. Malp. 243; People v. Lohman, 2 Barb. (N. Y.) 216.

Negligent malpractice comprehends those cases where there is no criminal or dishonest object, but gross negligence of that attention which the situation of the patient requires; as if a physician should administer medicines while in a state of intoxication, from which injury would arise to his patient.

Ignorant malpractice is the administration of medicines calculated to do injury, which do harm, which a well-educated and scientific medical man would know were not proper in the case; Elw. Malpr. 198; Com. v. Thompson, 6 Mass. 134; 5 C. & P. 333; 5 Cox, C. C. 587; Whart. & St. Med. Jur. 755.

This offence is a misdemeanor (whether it be occasioned by curiosity and experiment or neglect), because it breaks the trust which the patient has put in the physician, and tends directly to his destruction. See 3 Chitty, Cr. Law 863; 4 Wentw. Pl. 360; 2 Russ. Cr. 277; Com. v. Pierce, 138 Mass. 165, 52 Am. Rep. 264; Rice v. State, 8 Mo. 561; 3 C. & P. 629.

Besides the public remedy for malpractice, in many cases the party injured may bring a civil action; Landon v. Humphrey, 9 Conn. 209, 23 Am. Dec. 333; Wilnot v. Howard, 39 Vt. 447, 94 Am. Dec. 338.

Civil cases of malpractice are of very frequent occurrence on those occasions where surgical operations are rendered necessary, or supposed to be so, by disease or injury, and are so performed as either to shorten a limb or render it stiff, or otherwise prevent the free, natural use of it, by which the party ever after suffers damage. This may embrace almost every kind of surgical operation; but nine-tenths of all such cases arise from amputations, fractures, or dislocations; Elw. Malpr. 55.

To the performance of all surgical operations the surgeon is bound to bring at least ordinary skill and knowledge. He must apply without mistake what is settled in his profession. He must possess and practically exercise that degree and amount of knowledge and science which the leading authorities have pronounced as the result of their researches and experience up to the time, or within a reasonable time, before the issue or question to be determined is made; Elwell, Malpract. 55; 6 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 774; Hewitt v. Eisenbart, 36 Neb. 794, 55 N. W. 252.

Although the physician is civilly and criminally responsible for his conduct while discharging the duties of his profession, he is in no sense a warrantor or insurer of a favorable result, without an express contract to that effect; Elwell, Malp. 20; 7 C. & P. 81.

Every person who offers his services to the public generally, impliedly contracts with the employer that he is in possession of the necessary ordinary skill and experience which are possessed by those who practice or profess to understand the art or science, and which are generally regarded by those most conversant with the profession as necessary to qualify one to engage in such business successfully. This ordinary skill may differ according to locality and the means of information; Elw. Malp. 22, 201; 3 C. & P. 629; Smothers v. Hanks, 34 Ia. 286, 11 Am. Rep. 141, n.; Dorris v. Warford, 124 Ky. 768, 100 S. W. 312, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1090, 14 Ann. Cas. 602; Rogers v. Kee, 171 Mich. 551, 137 N. W. 260; Hallam v. Means, 82 Ill. 379, 25 Am. Rep. 328; State v. Housekeeper, 70 Md. 162, 16 Atl. 382, 2 L. R. A. 587, 14 Am. St. Rep. 340; Hewitt v. Eisenbart, 36 Neb. 794, 55 N. W. 252; Boon v. Murphy, 108 N. C. 187, 12 S. E. 1038.

It is not the highest order of skill attainable, but that which is possessed by the average of the profession in good standing; Wohlert v. Seibert, 23 Pa. Super. Ct. 213. Skill in diagnosis and treatment should be determined by the rules of his own school; McGraw v. Kerr, 23 Colo. App. 163, 128 Pac. 870. If the treatment of the patient has been honest and intelligent, only ordinary care and skill is required of defendant and errors of judgment will be overlooked; Carpenter v. Blake, 75 N. Y. 21. Experimenting with a patient outside of the rules of practice renders the practitioner liable in damages; McNeveins v. Lowe, 40 Ill. 209. Any one who treats patients as a clairvoyant must be held to the same degree of care as a regular practitioner; Bibber v. Simpson, 59 Me. 181; Nelson v. Harrington, 72 Wis. 591, 40 N. W. 228, 1 L. R. A. 719, 7 Am. St. Rep. 900.

One who holds himself out as a healer of diseases, and accepts employment as such, must be held to the duty of reasonable skill in the exercise of his vocation; failing in this he must be held liable for any damages proximately caused by unskilful treatment of his patient; Nelson v. Harrington, 72 Wis. 591, 40 N. W. 228, 1 L. R. A. 719, 7 Am. St. Rep. 900. Gross negligence may constitute criminal liability; Com. v. Pierce, 138 Mass. 165, 52 Am. Rep. 264; State v. Hardister, 38 Ark. 605, 42 Am. Rep. 5; and an unlicensed practitioner may be guilty of manslaughter; 1 Witth. & Beck. Med. Jur. 79.

The law imposes on a surgeon the duty of being reasonably skilled in his profession, and the exercise of care and prudence in the application of that skill, and if he be wanting in either, to the injury of his patient, he is liable for damages; Rowe v. Lent, 62 Hun 621, 17 N. Y. Supp. 131; although there may be no contractual relation between the patient and the physician; Du Bois v. Decker, 130 N. Y. 325, 29 N. E. 313, 14 L. R. A. 429, 27 Am. St. Rep. 529. If one physician, being unable to attend, sends another in his stead, the former is not liable to one who is injured by the unskilfulness of the latter, since the latter, being engaged in a distinct and independent occupation of his own, is not the servant or agent of the former; Myers v. Holborn, 58 N. J. L. 193, 33 Atl. 389, 30 L. R. A. 345, 55 Am. St. Rep. 606. See 8 East 347; McCandless v. McWha, 22 Pa. 261; Leighton v. Sargent, 27 N. H. 460, 59 Am. Dec. 388; Fleet v. Hollenkemp, 13 B. Monr. (Ky.) 219, 56 Am. Dec. 563.

A specialist must exercise a higher degree of skill and care than an ordinary practitioner; Rann v. Twitchell, 82 Vt. 79, 71 Atl. 1045, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1030; Feeney v. Spalding, 89 Me. 111, 35 Atl. 1027; Baker v. Hancock, 29 Ind. App. 456, 63 N. E. 323, 64 N. E. 38.

What is proper and usual practice in diagnosis and treatment and what constitutes ordinary care can only be shown by expert testimony; McGraw v. Kerr, 23 Colo. App. 163, 128 Pac. 870; Klodek v. Logging Co., 71 Wash. 573, 129 Pac. 99.

Where a physician recommends a method of treatment approved by the standard authorities and consults another physician of intelligence, it cannot be held as a matter of law that he failed to exercise ordinary care; McKee v. Allen, 94 Ill. App. 147. Where there is a difference of opinion among skilful surgeons, a surgeon may exercise his own judgment; Vanhooser v. Berghoff, 90 Mo. 487, 3 S. W. 72; if he keeps within approved methods, he is not liable for a mistake of judgment; Dye v. Corbin, 59 W. Va. 266, 53 S. E. 147; nor where the patient negligently failed to observe his directions or purposely disobeyed them; Geiselman v. Scott, 25 Ohio St. 86; McGraw v. Kerr, 23 Colo. App. 163, 128 Pac. 870; nor where he called in two other competent surgeons who testified that the injury was difficult to detect; English v. Free, 205 Pa. 624, 55 Atl. 777; nor if he requests additional assistance and is refused, even though he made a mistake in treatment; Haering v. Spicer, 92 Ill. App. 449; nor if prevented from reducing a dislocation by the refusal of the patient to submit to an operation; Littlejohn v. Arbogast, 95 Ill. App. 605 (but if the patient is in a condition in which it would be dangerous to break and re-set an arm, and the patient refuses to permit it, the defendant is not relieved of liability for want of ordinary skill; Morris v. Despain, 104 Ill. App. 452).

If an office patient receives careful and skilful treatment and then fails to return to the physician, and in consequence suffers injury, the patient has no right of action; Dashiell v. Griffith, 84 Md. 363, 25 Atl. 1094.

If an arm was unskillfully dressed, resulting in a defective arm, the surgeon would be liable, although the neglect of the patient or those in charge of him made it worse; such neglect affected only the damages; Willmot v. Howard, 39 Vt. 447, 94 Am. Dec. 338; Du Bois v. Decker, 130 N. Y. 325, 29 N. E. 313, 14 L. R. A. 429, 27 Am. St. Rep. 529; McCracken v. Smathers, 122 N. C. 799, 29 S. E. 354.

The fact that the injured limb is defective after treatment is no evidence of negligence; McGraw v. Kerr, 23 Colo. App. 163, 128 Pac. 870; nor is the death of the patient immediately after the operation (amputation of a limb); Staloch v. Holm, 100 Minn. 276, 111 N. W. 264, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 712.

He is liable for negligence where he fails to remove a piece of surgical gauze after an operation; Ruth v. Johnson, 172 Fed. 191, 96 C. C. A. 643. Where a surgical sponge was left in the body of a person operated on, it was held that the surgeon could not rely on the count of sponges by the nurse; he also must exercise care in determining whether any foreign substance remains in the body; Davis v. Kerr, 239 Pa. 351, 86 Atl. 1007, 46 L. R. A. (N. S.) 611.

A physician (X-ray) called in by another physician, to operate, is not required to make a special study of the case or to give advice as to possibility of injury resulting therefrom; Sweeney v. Erving, 228 U. S. 233, 33 Sup. Ct. 416, 57 L. Ed. 815.

The physician's responsibility is the same when he is negligent as when he lacks ordinary skill, although the measure of indemnity and punishment may be different; Elw. Malp. 27; 3 Maule & S.'14; 1 Lew. C. C. 169; Broom, Leg. Max. 168, 169; Rowe v. Lent, 62 Hun 621, 17 N. Y. Supp. 131. See Lewis v. Dwinell, 84 Me. 497, 24 Atl. 945. Where a physician is charged with manslaughter, resulting from a surgical operation performed by him, it is error to charge that if deceased consented to the performance of the operation, defendant must be acquitted; State v. Gile, 8 Wash. 12, 35 Pac. 417.

It is proper in an action for malpractice to show the treatment given after the defendant gave up the case; Bower v. Self, 68 Kan. 825, 75 Pac. 1021.

The rule as to using X-rays is the same as to other cases requiring ordinary care and prudence; Henslin v. Wheaton, 91 Minn. 219, 97 N. W. 882, 64 L. R. A. 126, 103 Am. St. Rep. 504, 1 Ann. Cas. 19.

He cannot perform an operation more serious than the one to which the patient has assented; Pratt v. Davis, 224 Ill. 300, 79 N. E. 562, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 609, 8 Ann. Cas. 197. But when a patient's assent was given to an operation less grave and dangerous to life, and while the person was under an anæsthetic a rupture was found in the right groin, it was held that the operation on the latter was justified; Bennan v. Parsonnet, 83 N. J. L. 20, 83 Atl. 948.

Where a surgeon was employed to operate on a patient's right ear, and also operated on the left ear while the patient was unconscious, it was held to be an assault, though the family consented thereto; Mohr v. Williams, 95 Minn. 261, 104 N. W. 12, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 439, 111 Am. St. Rep. 462, 5 Ann. Cas. 303. A surgeon may operate on a child in an emergency without the parents' consent when told it was impracticable to obtain it; Luka v. Lowrie, 171 Mich. 122, 136 N. W. 1106, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 290; but a surgical operation is ordinarily unlawful when performed without the express or implied consent of the patient; Awde v. Cole, 99 Minn. 361, 109 N. W. 812.

Where the wife of the defendant, being afflicted with a dangerous disease, was carried by him to a distance from his residence and left under the care of the plaintiff as a surgeon, and after the lapse of some weeks the plaintiff performed an operation, soon after which she died, it was held, in an action by the plaintiff against the defendant to recover compensation for his services, that the performance of the operation was within the scope of the plaintiff's authority, if, in his judgment, it was necessary or expedient, and that it was not incumbent on him to prove that it was necessary or proper under the circumstances, or that before he performed it he gave notice to the defendant, or that it would have been dangerous to the wife to wait until notice could be given to the defendant; McClallen v. Adams, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 333, 31 Am. Dec. 140.

If physicians attending a woman deem it necessary for the preservation and prolongation of her life, to perform an operation, they are justified in doing so if she consents, whether her husband consents or not; State v. Housekeeper, 70 Md. 162, 16 Atl. 382, 2 L. R. A. 587, 14 Am. St. Rep. 340.

In England, at common law, a physician could not maintain an action for his fees for anything done as physician either while attending to or prescribing for a patient; but a distinction was taken when he acted as a surgeon or in any other capacity than that of physician, and in such cases an action for fees would be sustained; 1 C. & M. 227, 370; 3 Q. B. 928. But now by 21 & 22 Vict. c. 90, a physician who is registered under the act may bring an action for his fees, if not precluded by any by-law of the college of physicians; 2 H. & C. 92. It has not been denied in this country; Adams v. Stevens, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 451.

In this country, the various states have statutory enactments regulating the practice of medicine. See Witth. & Beck. Med. Jur. An unlicensed physician can not maintain an action for medical attendance and medicines; Bailey v. Mogg, 4 Den. (N. Y.) 60; Haworth v. Montgomery, 91 Tenn. 16, 18 S. W. 399; Holland v. Adams, 21 Ala. 680; contra, Hewitt v. Wilcox, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 154.

In a suit for medical services the plaintiff is presumed to have been licensed; McPherson v. Chendell, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 15. See, also, Chicago v. Wood, 24 Ill. App. 42. An act providing that no person shall practice medicine who has ever been convicted of felony, applies to persons who had been convicted of felony before the passage of the act, and does not conflict with the federal constitution; Hawker v. New York, 170 U. S. 189, 18 Sup. Ct. 573, 42 L. Ed. 1002.

Contracts for contingent compensation are valid; Coughlin v. R. Co., 71 N. Y. 443, 27 Am. Rep. 75; Smith v. Hyde, 19 Vt. 54.

In assumption by a physician for his services, the defendant cannot prove the professional reputation of the plaintiff; Jeffries v. Harris, 3 Hawks (N. C.) 105. Physicians can recover for the services of their students in attendance upon their patients; People v. Monroe, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 200. Partners in the practice of medicine are within the law merchant, which includes the jus accrescendi between traders; Allen v. Blanchard, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 631. An agreement between physicians whereby, for a money consideration, one promises to use his influence with his patrons to obtain their patronage for the other, is not contrary to public policy; Hoyt v. Holly, 39 Conn. 326, 12 Am. Rep. 390. If a physician carries contagious disease into a family, on a suit for services this may be shown to reduce his claim; Piper v. Menifee, 12 B. Monr. (Ky.) 465, 54 Am. Dec. 547. A physician who has been guilty of negligence in the treatment of his patient, resulting in damages to the latter, does not necessarily lose his right to recover any compensation whatever for his services; but the amount of his recovery, if any, depends on the amount of damages suffered because of negligence; Whitesell v. Hill (Ia.) 66 N. W. 894.

Where one who has received personal injury through the negligence of another uses reasonable and ordinary care in the selection of a physician, the damages awarded him will not be reduced because more skillful medical aid was not secured; Collins v. Council Bluffs, 32 Ia. 324, 7 Am. Rep. 200.

Hospital records containing entries by a nurse are not competent evidence; Baird v. Reilly, 92 Fed. 884, 35 C. C. A. 78; nor are city hospital records, though kept by law; Connor v. Ins. Co., 78 Mo. App. 131; nor the temperature chart kept by the bedside to prove facts therein stated; Griebel v. R. Co., 184 N. Y. 528, 76 N. E. 1096. Hospital records are not admissible unless supplemented by the evidence of the person who made them, if such person can be produced; Cashin v. R. Co., 185 Mass. 543, 70 N. E. 930; entries made daily by a physician are admissible to show the state of health of a patient in an asylum; 9 N. J. L. J. 118.

PIA FRAUS. A pious fraud; a fraud considered morally justifiable on account of the ends sought to be promoted.

PICARON. A robber; a plunderer.

PICKETING. Picketing by members of a trade union or strikers, consists in posting members at all the approaches to the works struck against for the purpose of reporting the workman going to or coming from the works; and to use such influence as may be in their power to prevent the workman from accepting work there. Dav. Friend. Soc. 212.

It is the establishment and maintenance of an organized espionage upon the works and upon those going to or coming from them. Otis Steel Co. v. Union No. 218, 110 Fed. 701. It may constitute an intimidation of the employees and patrons of the person whose establishment is picketed; Goldberg, Bowen & Co. v. Stablemen's Union, 149 Cal. 429, 86 Pac. 806, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 460, 117 Am. St. Rep. 145, 9 Ann. Cas. 1219; Otis Steel Co. v. Union No. 218, 110 Fed. 698.

The massing of unnecessary numbers of pickets at a point which must be passed by non-union men is in itself an act of intimidation; though picketing, if confined to gaining information and to peaceful persuasion, is not forbidden by law; Goldfield Consol. Mines Co. v. Union No. 220; 159 Fed. 500. The carrying near a place of business of banners calling upon laborers to remain away from such place has been treated as a form of menace directed against those who might seek employment; Sherry v. Perkins, 147 Mass. 212, 17 N. E. 307, 9 Am. St. Rep. 689.

See LABOR UNION; STRIKE; BOYCOTT.

PICKPOCKET. A thief; one who in a crowd or in other places steals from the pockets or person of another without putting him in fear. This is generally punished as simple larceny.

PICTURE. A frame is part of a picture as used in a carrier's act. L. R. 5 Ex. 90; 39 L. J. Ex. 55; 37 L. J. C. P. 83. See PAINTING; COPYRIGHT; PHOTOGRAPH; FIXTURES.

PIE-POUDRE, PIE POWDER. See COURT OF PIE POWDER.

PIER. A wharf. A structure erected for ferry purposes which was simply a ferry rack and bridge was held not a pier. Stevens v. Rhinelander, 5 Robt. (N. Y.) 285. See DOCK; HARBOR; PORT; RIPARIAN RIGHTS.

PIERAGE. The duty for maintaining piers and harbor.

PIGNORATIO (Lat. from pignorare, to pledge). In Civil Law. The obligation of a pledge. L. 9 D. de pignor. Sealing up (ob-signatio). A shutting up of an animal caught in one's field and keeping it till the expenses and damage have been paid by its master. New Decis. 1, 34, 13.

PIGNORATIVE CONTRACT. In Civil Law. A contract by which the owner of an estate engages it to another for a sum of money and grants to him and his successors the right to enjoy it until he shall be reimbursed, voluntarily, that sum of money. Pothier, Obl.

PIGNORI ACCEPTUM. See BAILMENT.

PIGNORIS CAPTIO (Lat.). In Roman Law. The name given to one of the legis actiones of the Roman law. It consisted chiefly in the taking of a pledge, and was, in fact, a mode of execution. It was confined to special cases determined by positive law or by custom, such as taxes, duties, rents, etc., and is comparable in some respects to distress at common law. The proceeding took place in the presence of a praetor.

PIGNUS (Lat.). In Civil Law. Pledge, or pawn. The contract of pledge. The right in the thing pledged.

"It is derived," says Gaius, "from pugnum, the fist, because what is delivered in pledge is delivered in hand." Dig. 50. 16. 238. 2. This is one of several instances of the failure of the Roman jurists when they attempted etymological explanations of words. The elements of pignus (pig) are contained in the word pan(g)o and its cognate forms. See Smith, Dict. Gr. & Rom. Antiq.

Though pledge is distinguished from mortgage (hypotheca), as being something delivered in hand, while mortgage is good without possession, yet a pledge (pignus) may also be good without possession. Domat, Civ. Law b. iii. tit. 1, § 5; Calvinus, Lex. Pignus is properly applied to movables, hypotheca to immovables; but the distinction is not always preserved. Id.

PILA. That side of money which was called pile, because it was the side on which there was an impression of a church built on piles. Fleta, lib. 1, c. 39.

PILFER. To steal. To charge another with pilfering is to charge him with stealing and is slander; Becket v. Sterrett, 4 Blackf. (Ind.) 499.

PILFERER. One who steals petty things.

PILLAGE. The taking by violence of private property by a victorious army from the citizens or subjects of the enemy. This in modern times is seldom allowed, and then only when authorized by the commanding or chief officer at the place where the pillage is committed. The property thus violently taken belongs, in general, to the common soldiers. It is expressly forbidden under the rules of the Brussels Conference, 1874, which however have never been adopted by the European nations. See Dalloz, Dict. Propriété, art. 3, § 5; Wolff § 1201; Booty; PRIZE; WAR.

PILLORY. A wooden machine, in which the neck of the culprit is inserted.

This punishment has in most of the states been superseded by the adoption of the penitentiary system. See 1 Chitty, Cr. L. 797. The punishment of standing in the pillory, so far as the same was provided by the laws of the United States, was abolished by the act of congress of February 27, 1839, § 5, and in England in 1837.

PILOT. An officer serving on board of a ship during the course of a voyage, and having charge of the helm and of the ship's route. An officer authorized by law who is taken on board at a particular place for the purpose of conducting a ship through a river, road, or channel, or from or into port.

Pilots of the second description are established by legislative enactments at the principal seaports in this country, and have rights, and are bound to perform duties, agreeably to the provisions of the several laws establishing them.

Pilots have been established in all maritime countries. After due trial and experience of their qualifications, they are licensed to offer themselves as guides in difficult navigation; and they are usually, on the other hand, bound to obey the call of a ship-master to exercise their functions; Abb. Sh. 13th ed. 190; Snell v. Rich, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 305; Bussy v. Donaldson, 4 Dall. (U. S.) 206, 1 L. Ed. 802; 5 B. & P. 82; 5 Rob. Adm. 308; Laws of Oleron, art. 23; Act of Congr. of August 7, 1789, § 4; Pardessus, n. 637.

The master of a vessel may decline the services of a pilot, but in that event he must pay the legal fees; Camp v. The Marcellus, 1 Cliff. 492, Fed. Cas. No. 2,347. A pilot who first offers his services, if rejected, is entitled to his fee; The America, 2 Am. Law Rev. 458, Fed. Cas. No. 289; Wilson v. McNamee, 102 U. S. 572, 26 L. Ed. 234.

The pilot is to conduct the navigation, regulate the course of the ship and the management of the sails; 7 Moore, P. C. 171, 134. He is not liable for damages to the vessel unless caused by his failure to use ordinary diligence, i. e., the degree of skill commonly possessed by others in the same employment; Wilson v. Pilots' Ass'n, 57 Fed. 227. A river pilot is bound to be familiar with the channel of the river, and with the various obstructions to navigation, and is liable for damages occasioned by the want of such knowledge, but not for damages occasioned by an error of judgment on his part; The Tom Lysle, 48 Fed. 690. Shipowners are responsible to third parties for obedience to the pilot; his orders ordinarily, are to be implicitly obeyed. In The China, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 53, 19 L. Ed. 67, it was held in admiralty that a steamship is liable for damages arising out of a collision with another steamship, due solely to the negligence of a compulsory pilot. In Ralli v. Troop, 157 U. S. 386, 402, 15 Sup. Ct. 657, 39 L. Ed. 742, the rule of The China was followed; the opinion of the court placing it upon "a distinct principle of the maritime law that the vessel, in whosoever hands she lawfully is, is herself considered as the wrongdoer." (But this responsibility does not include the cargo; id.) The continental cases are in accord, but the English rule holds that the ship is not liable in admiralty; Ralli v. Troop, 157 U. S. 386, 15 Sup. Ct. 657, 39 L. Ed. 742; 2 W. Rob. 10 (and now by statute in England in all cases). In a common law action the owners are not liable in such a case; thus, in Homer Ramsdell Transp. Co. v. La Compagnie Generale Transatlantique, 182 U. S. 406, 21 Sup. Ct. 831, 45 L. Ed. 1155, a steamship, by the negligence of a compulsory pilot, struck a pier; in an action at common law the shipowners were held not liable. And the rule is the same in England; Ralli v. Troop, 157 U. S. 386, 15 Sup. Ct. 657, 39 L. Ed. 742.

Of the judgment of the court in The China, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 53, 19 L. Ed. 67, John C. Gray says (Nature and Sources of the Law 47) that "Judge Holmes [in Com. Law 28] speaks of this decision with more tenderness than it deserves."

The owner remains liable for the ship's management in all things that do not relate to mere navigation; The Oregon, 158 U. S. 186, 15 Sup. Ct. 804, 39 L. Ed. 943.

A compulsory pilot differs from an ordinary employé and may be held liable to the vessel for damages she has been compelled to pay by reason of his negligence; Guy v. Donald, 157 Fed. 527, 85 C. C. A. 291, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1114, 13 Ann. Cas. 947, C. C. A. 4th Cir.

The compulsory pilotage law applies within the three mile limit; The Earnwell, 70 Fed. 331, 17 C. C. A. 136. As to the place where the pilot ceases to be compulsorily in charge on arrival in a harbor, see [1904] P. 52. Where a steamer in need of a pilot disregarded the speaking pilot and it appeared that the speaking pilot was within the three mile limit, the pilot was held entitled to recover his fee; The Earnwell, 70 Fed. 331, 17 C. C. A. 136, 28 U. S. App. 593.

By acts of Aug. 7, 1789, March 2, 1837, each state has authority over pilotage on its navigable waters, though not exclusive; The Clymene, 9 Fed. 164. State laws regulating pilots are valid until congress has legislated on the subject; Olsen v. Smith, 195 U. S. 332, 25 Sup. Ct. 52, 49 L. Ed. 224. Congress has permitted such state regulations and they are valid; Thompson v. Darden, 198 U. S. 310, 25 Sup. Ct. 660, 49 L. Ed. 1064.

A Delaware pilot may recover for services upon the Delaware River and to Philadelphia, although a Pennsylvania act prohibits any one acting as such without a Pennsylvania license; The Clymene, 12 Fed. 346. The state of Delaware cannot exclude pilots of other states, on the Delaware River; The William Law, 14 Fed. 792. A state law may permit or direct a pilot to tender his services beyond the three mile limit.

The usual signal by which a pilot tenders his services is the Union Jack set at the main truck, by day, and "flare-ups" by night; The Ullock, 19 Fed. 207.

There is no inherent right of any citizen to be a pilot; Williams v. Molther, 189 Fed. 700; Olsen v. Smith, 195 U. S. 344, 25 Sup. Ct. 52, 49 L. Ed. 224.

Captains of naval vessels may employ pilots, wherever, in their judgment, it is necessary. Coast pilots shall not be employed except on special authority from the Navy Department. A pilot's presence on board does not relieve the captain of any responsibility.

PILOTAGE. The compensation given to a pilot for conducting a vessel in or out of port. Pothier, Des Avaries, n. 147.

Pilotage is a lien on the ship, when the contract has been made by the master or quasi-master of the ship or some other person lawfully authorized to make it; The Anne, 1 Mas. 508, Fed. Cas. No. 412; see The Pirate, 32 Fed. 486; and the admiralty court has jurisdiction when services have been performed at sea; The Thomas Jefferson, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 428, 6 L. Ed. 358; Bened. Adm. § 289; The Lord Clive, 10 Fed. 135. The statutes of the several states regulating the subject of pilotage are, in view of the numerous acts of congress recognizing and adopting them, to be regarded as constitutionally made, until congress supersedes them; Cooley v. Board of Wardens, 12 How. (U. S.) 312, 13 L. Ed. 996; Re McNeil, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 236, 20 L. Ed. 624.

PIMP. One who provides for others the means of gratifying lust; a procurer; a panderer. The word pimp is not a technical one, nor has it acquired any peculiar or appropriate meaning in the law; and is therefore to be construed and understood according to the common and approved usage of the language; People v. Gastro, 75 Mich. 127, 42 N. W. 937, where the court disapproved the action of the judge at nisi prius who defined the term to mean a man who has intercourse with a loose woman, who usually is supporting him.

The Indiana statutes provide: "Whoever, being a male person, frequents houses of ill-fame or of assignation, or associates with females known or reputed as prostitutes, or frequents gambling-houses with prostitutes, or is engaged in or about a house of prostitution, is a pimp." R. S. (1881) § 2002. See Fahnestock v. State, 102 Ind. 156, 1 N. E. 372, which was an indictment for being a pimp under that statute.

PIMP-TENURE. A very singular and odious kind of tenure mentioned by old writers, "Wilhelmus Hoppeshort tenet dimidiam virgatum terræ per servitium custodiendi sex damisellas, scil. meretrices, ad usum domini regis." 12 Edw. 1.

PIN-MONEY. Money allowed by a man to his wife to spend for her own personal comforts.

It has been conjectured that the term pin-money has been applied to signify the provision for a married woman because anciently there was a tax laid for providing the English queen with pins; Barrington, Stat. 181.

When pin-money is given to but not spent by the wife, on the husband's death it belongs to his estate; 4 Viner, Abr. 133, Baron & Feme (E a. 8); 2 Eq. Cas. Abr. 156; 2 P. Will. 341; 1 Ves. 190, 267; 1 Madd. 489.

In England it was adjudged that a promise to a wife, by the purchaser, that if she would not hinder the bargain for the sale of the husband's lands he would give her ten pounds, was valid, and might be enforced by an action of assumpsit instituted by husband and wife; Rolle, Abr. 21.

In the French law, the term épingles, pins, is used to designate the present which is sometimes given by the purchaser of an immovable to the wife or daughters of the seller to induce them to consent to the sale. This present is not considered as a part of the consideration, but a purely voluntary gift. Dict. de Jur. Epingles.

PINT. A liquid measure, containing half a quart or the eighth part of a gallon.

PIOUS USES. See CHARITABLE USES.

PIPE LINES. A connected series of pipes for the transportation of oil, gas, or water.

A line of pipes running upon or in the earth carrying with it the right to the use of the soil in which it is placed. Dietz v. Transfer Co., 95 Cal. 92, 30 Pac. 380.

The right to construct a pipe line is a public use, as is also that of laying pipes for a proper purpose in the streets of a city. See EMINENT DOMAIN.

A pipe line company for conveying oil is a common carrier bound to receive and transport for all persons alike, all goods entrusted to its care, and is not in any sense, or at any time, an agent for the person committing oil to its care; Giffin v. Pipe Lines, 172 Pa. 580, 33 Atl. 578.

Pipe lines between the states are "common carriers" and under the control of the interstate commerce commission. They may cross an interstate stream without state authority if the United States permits; Hubbard v. Fort, 188 Fed. 987. A statute of Oklahoma prohibiting foreign corporations from building pipe lines across highways and transporting natural gas to points outside the state was held unconstitutional as an interference with interstate commerce and a deprivation of property without due process of law; West v. Gas Co., 221 U. S. 229, 31 Sup. Ct. 564, 55 L. Ed. 716, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1193. The Hepburn act subjecting such companies to the interstate commerce act is not unconstitutional; Pipe Line Cases, 234 U. S. 548, 34 Sup. Ct. 956, 58 L. Ed. —.

A pipe line for the transportation of oil is not rendered a nuisance by the mere fact that its presence enhances the rates of insurance in the neighborhood; Benton v. Elizabeth, 61 N. J. L. 411, 39 Atl. 683, 906.

A pipe line is held to create an additional servitude on a country highway but not on city or borough streets; Sterling's Appeal, 111 Pa. 35, 2 Atl. 105, 56 Am. Rep. 246; McDevitt v. Gas Co., 160 Pa. 372, 28 Atl. 948. The company may remove its pipes and abandon its easement; Clements v. Philadelphia Co., 184 Pa. 28, 38 Atl. 1090, 39 L. R. A. 532.

See Bryan, Nat. Gas; Gas; OIL.

PIPE ROLL. In English Law. The name of a roll in the exchequer, otherwise called the Great Roll.

A measure, containing two hogsheads: one hundred and twenty-six gallons is also called a pipe.

PIPE ROLLS. These were the Great Rolls of the Exchequer and contained the account of the king's profits and rents in all the counties of England. They exist in a continuous series (676 rolls) from 1156 to 1833 (except 1216 and 1403). The Chancellor's Roll from 1255 to 1833 is a duplicate of the Pipe Rolls. A single roll of Henry I, but not complete, is extant. 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 129. The Pipe Rolls are our earliest records; id. 138. They are said to be most instructive as to legal rules and institutions; Brunner, 2 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. H. 24.

PIRACY. A robbery or forcible depredation on the high seas, without lawful authority, done animo furandi, in the spirit and intention of universal hostility. U. S. v. Palmer, 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 610, 4 L. Ed. 471; U. S. v. Smith, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 153, 163, 5 L. Ed. 57; U. S. v. Jones, 3 Wash. C. C. 209, Fed. Cas. No. 15,494. This is the definition of this offence by the law of nations; 1 Kent 183.

It was not a felony at common law. In the 14th century suits in piracy become frequent, but they were for restitution, disregarding the criminal aspect.

"Depredation upon the high seas, without authority from any sovereign." It is not necessary that the motive be plunder or that the depredations be directed against the vessels of all nations indiscriminately. As in robbery upon land, it is only necessary that the spoliation or intended spoliation be felonious, that is, with intent to injure, and without legal authority or lawful excuse; The Ambrose Light, 25 Fed. 408.

All nations and individuals are warranted in seizing pirates. It has been held by many authorities that insurgents who have not been accorded belligerent rights are pirates, although it may be their intention to prey upon no ships except those of their mother country whom they are resisting. The American colonists in the American Revolution were declared to be pirates by Great Britain, and so were the cruisers of the confederate government by the federal government during the American Civil War; Snow, Lect. Int. Law 52.

Piracy has two aspects: As a violation of the common right of nations, punishable under the common law of nations by the seizure and condemnation of the vessel only, in prize courts; as a violation of the municipal law of the place where the offenders are tried; Whart. Cr. L. § 2830; 1 Phil. Int. Law 488. Acts hostile in their nature, done for plunder, hatred, revenge, or mischief, or in the wanton exercise of power, are piratical; Harmony v. U. S., 2 How. (U. S.) 210, 11 L. Ed. 239, where the subject is elaborately discussed.

Property found on board a pirate ship goes to the Crown, of strict right; but the claim of the original owner is admitted, on application; 1 Hagg. Adm. 142. Vessels recaptured from pirates, after whatever length of time, are always restored to the owner on payment of salvage; 4 C. Rob. 3.

Congress may define and punish piracies and felonies on the high seas, and offences against the law of nations; Const. U. S. art. 1, s. 7, n. 10; U. S. v. Bevens, 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 336, 4 L. Ed. 404; U. S. v. Wiltberger, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 76, 5 L. Ed. 37; U. S. v. Smith, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 153, 5 L. Ed. 57; U. S. v. Furlong, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 184, 5 L. Ed. 64. The following are the sections of the Criminal Code:

Every person who on the high seas commits the crime of piracy as defined by the Law of Nations, and is afterward brought into or found in the United States, shall be imprisoned for life; § 290. Every seaman who lays violent hands upon his commander, thereby to hinder and prevent his fighting in the defence of his vessel or the goods entrusted to him, is a pirate and shall be imprisoned for life; § 294. Robbery on shore committed by the crew of a piratical vessel is piracy punishable by imprisonment for life; § 302. Every citizen who commits murder or robbery or act of hostility against the United States or any citizen thereof on the high seas under color of any commission from any foreign prince or state or on pretence of authority from any person, is a pirate punishable by imprisonment for life; § 304. Every subject of a foreign state found upon the sea making war upon the United States or cruising against its vessels or citizens contrary to the provisions of any treaty between the United States and the state of which he is a subject, when by such treaty such acts are declared to be piracy, is guilty of piracy, and shall be imprisoned for life; § 305. Every person who knowingly receives any vessel or other property feloniously taken by any robber or pirate, against the laws of the United States, and any person who, knowing that said pirate has committed any act of piracy or robbery on the land or sea, receives or conceals him, is accessory after the fact, and shall be imprisoned for not more than ten years; § 334. See RECAPTURE.

In Torts. By piracy is understood the plagiarism of a book, engraving, or other work for which a copyright has been taken out; infringement of copyright may be by unfair quotation; by piratical copying; by piratical use other than copying.

Where the violation of the copyright consists of excerpts from plaintiff's book, the court is bound to consider the quantity and quality of the matter appropriated and the extent to which the plaintiff is injured by it and the damage to the defendant by an injunction. It seems that the complainant is not always bound to prove pecuniary damage to entitle him to an injunction. Where the parts of the complainant's book are scattered through the defendant's book and cannot be separated, the whole will be enjoined; Farmer v. Elstner, 33 Fed. 494.

Piratical copying was held to be established in the case of a society directory by proof that out of 2800 names, 39 common errors were found to exist; List Pub. Co. v. Keller, 30 Fed. 772; and by proof that out of 60,000 names there were 67 common errors; Chicago Dollar Directory Co. v. Directory Co., 66 Fed. 977, 14 C. C. A. 213. Two common errors in maps were held sufficient to establish the fact that one map had been copied from the other; Chapman v. Ferry, 18 Fed. 539; in a mercantile agency book, the existence of 15 common errors was held sufficient to establish the use of the complainant's book by the defendant; Jewelers' Mercantile Agency v. Pub. Co., 84 Hun 12, 32 N. Y. Supp. 41. It is not necessary to point out many common errors to establish a presumption of piracy; Jewelers' Mercantile Agency v. Pub. Co., 66 Hun 38, 20 N. Y. Supp. 749. The court does not feel bound to go through the whole of the defendant's book to ascertain the extent of the piracy; 19 L. J. N. S. Ch. 90. In 2 Beav. 6, the court enjoined the defendant who had pirated parts of a topographical dictionary, without waiting until the whole of the pirated parts could be ascertained, and held that if the parts which had been copied could not be separated from those which were original without destroying the use and value of the original matter, the defendant must suffer the consequences.

In List Pub. Co. v. Keller, 30 Fed. 772, it was intimated that the injunction would be modified at the final hearing, if the proofs of the defendant tended to segregate any part of the material which had been made subject to the injunction.

The rule is well settled that although the entire copyrighted work is not copied in the infringement, but only portions, if such portions are so intermingled with the rest of the piratical work that they cannot well be distinguished from it, the entire profits realized by the defendant will be given to the plaintiff: Belford v. Scribner, 144 U. S. 488, 12 Sup. Ct. 734, 36 L. Ed. 514. See 2 Russ. 385; Elizabeth v. Pav. Co., 97 U. S. 126, 24 L. Ed. 1000.

It is the unfair appropriation of the compiler's labor in the case of the syllabus of a legal opinion that constitutes infringement. Identity of language will often prove that the offence was committed, but it is not the sole proof. If the subsequent digester has made an unfair use of any part of a syllabus of his predecessor, the burden is on him to show that there were parts of it that he did not use. Where the defendant's editor, in compiling a digest of reports, digested some 13,300 cases from the complainant's pamphlet reports and a partial comparison of the copyrighted syllabi with the digest showed internal evidence of piracy in some 400 instances, it was held that this indicated a general, systematic, and unfair use of the copyrighted work, coupled with an attempt to disguise such use, and made out a prima facie case, which was not rebutted by the simple denial of the defendant's editors that they had made use of the complainant's syllabi. It was held that the whole work, so far as taken from the complainant's pamphlet reports, should be enjoined, with liberty to defendant to show by further proofs what paragraphs were digested by non-offending editors and to move to have them excluded from the injunction; West Pub. Co. v. Pub. Co., 79 Fed. 756, 25 C. C. A. 648, 35 L. R. A. 400. See COPYRIGHT; MEMORIZATION.

PIRATE. A sea-robber, who, to enrich himself, by subtlety or open force, setteth upon merchants and others trading by sea, despoiling them of their loading, and sometimes bereaving them of life and sinking their ships. Ridley, View pt. 2, c. 1, s. 3. One guilty of the crime of piracy. Merlin, Répert. See, for the etymology of this word, Bac. Abr. Piracy. See PIRACY.

PIRATICALLY. In Pleading. This is a technical word, essential to charge the crime of piracy in an indictment, which cannot be supplied by another word or any circumlocution. Hawk. Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 37, s. 15; Co. 3d Inst. 112; 1 Chitty, Cr. L. *244.

PISCARY. The right of fishing in the waters of another. Bac. Abr.; 5 Com. Dig. 366. See FISHERY.

PISTAREEN. A small Spanish coin. It is not made current by the laws of 'the United States. U. S. v. Gardner, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 618, 9 L. Ed. 556.

PIT. A hole dug in the earth, which was filled with water, and in which women thieves were drowned, instead of being hung. The punishment of the pit was formerly common in Scotland.

PLACE. The word is associated with objects which are, in their nature, fixed and territorial. U. S. v. Bevens, 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 336, 4 L. Ed. 404. See VENUE.

It is applied to any locality, limited by boundaries however large or however small. It may be used to designate a country, state, county, town, or a very small portion of a town. The extent of the locality designated by it must, generally, be determined by the connection in which it is used; Law v. Fairfield, 46 Vt. 432.

Any piece of ground appropriated by its owner or occupier for the time being is a place within the English betting houses act; 51 L. J. M. C. 56; but the ground must be so appropriated and must be an ascertained place; 14 Q. B. D. 588. The habitual standing or using a table in Hyde Park does not make it a place for betting; 19 C. B. N. S. 765; as habitual user is not of the essence of place; 10 Q. B. 102; but a piece of ground bounded on one side by a boarding and on two other sides by stays which support the boarding is a place under 16 & 17 Vic. c. 119, relating to betting; [1896] 1 Q. B. 295. See [1897] 1 Q. B. 579.

A private residence may become a public place when it is used for the purpose of public amusement, recreation, business, or religious worship; White v. State, 39 Tex. Cr. R. 269, 45 S. W. 702, 46 S. W. 825.

PLACE OF AMUSEMENT. A hall containing a stage whereon a nightly programme of music, vocal and instrumental, is rendered is a place of amusement; Gartenstein's License, 4 D. R. (Pa.) 37; and a dance hall is a public amusement. Com. v. Quinn, 164 Mass. 11, 40 N. E. 1043.

The proprietor of a place of public amusement to which he invites the public, charging admission fees thereto, also owes a high degree of care as to the safety of his patrons. The proprietors of a hall were held liable for the giving away of a guard rail against which customers were accustomed to lean; Schofield v. Wood, 170 Mass. 415, 49 N. E. 636; so where the floor of a building used for conducting a fair gave way; Brown v. Agr. Soc., 47 Me. 275, 74 Am. Dec. 484; and where an injury was caused by insecure fastening of a guy rope at a balloon ascension; Peckett v. Beach Co., 44 App. Div. 559, 60 N. Y. Supp. 966; or by the fall of a pole used in an exhibition; Richmond & M. R. Co. v. Moore's Adm'r, 94 Va. 493, 27 S. E. 70, 37 L. R. A. 258.

See NEGLIGENCE.

PLACE OF BUSINESS. The place where a man usually transacts his affairs or business.

When a man keeps a store, shop, counting-room, or office, independently and distinctly from all other persons, that is deemed his place of business; and when he usually transacts his business at the counting-house, office, and the like, occupied and used by another, that will also be considered his place of business, if he has no independent place of his own. But when he has no particular right to use a place for such private purpose, as in an insurance-office, an exchange-room, a banking-room, a postoffice, and the like, where persons generally resort, these will not be considered as the party's place of business, although he may occasionally or transiently transact business there; Bank of Columbia v. Lawrence, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 582, 7 L. Ed. 269; Granite Bank v. Ayers, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 392, 28 Am. Dec. 253; Byles, Bills 296.

It is a general rule that a notice of the non-acceptance or non-payment of a bill, or of the non-payment of a note, may be sent either to the domicile or place of business of the person to be affected by such notice; and the fact that one is in one town and the other in the other will make no difference, and the holder has his election to send to either. A notice to partners may be left at the place of business of the firm or of any one of the partners; Story, Pr. Notes § 312; Dan. Neg. Instr. § 1016. See NOTICE.

PLACE OF CONTRACT. See LEX LOCI.

PLACE OF DELIVERY. The place where goods sold are to be delivered. If no place is specified in the contract they must, generally, be delivered at the place where they are at the time of the sale. Hatch v. Oil Co., 100 U. S. 134, 25 L. Ed. 554.

PLACER. See MINES AND MINING.

PLACET (Fr.). The name of a document in French practice requesting an audience of the court. Outside of Paris the request is made verbally, in Paris the avoué of the plaintiff sends his request to the clerk of the court who puts the case on the list.

PLACITA COMMUNIA (Lat.). Common pleas. All civil actions between subject and subject. 3 Bla. Com. 38, *40; Cowell, Plea. See PLACITUM.

PLACITA CORONÆ (Lat.). Pleas of the crown. All trials for crimes and misdemeanors, wherein the king is plaintiff, on behalf of the people. 3 Bla. Com. 40*; Cowell, Plea.

PLACITA JURIS (Lat.). Arbitrary rules of law. Bac. Law Tr. 73; Bac. Max. Reg. 12.

PLACITUM (Lat. from placere). In Civil Law. Any agreement or bargain. A law; a constitution or rescript of the emperor; the decision of a judge or award of arbitrators. Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Calvinus, Lex; Dupin, Notions sur le Droit.

In Old English Law (Ger. plats, Lat. platea, i. e. fields or streets). An assembly of all degrees of men, where the king presided and they consulted about the great affairs of the kingdom: first held, as the name would show, in the fields or street. Cowell.

So on the continent. Hinc. de Ordine Palatii, c. 29; Bertinian, Annals of France in the year 767; Const. Car. Mag. cap. ix.; Hinc. Epist. 197, 227; Laws of the Longobards, passim.

A lord's court. Cowell.

An ordinary court. Placita is the style of the English courts at the beginning of the record at nisi prius; in this sense, placita are divided into pleas of the crown and common pleas, which see. Cowell.

A trial or suit in court. Cowell; Jacobs.

A fine. Black Book of Exchequer, lib. 2, tit. 13; 1 Hen. I. cc. 12, 13.

A plea. This word is nomen generalissimum, and refers to all the pleas in the case. 1 Saund. 388, n. 6. By placitum is also understood the subdivisions in abridgments and other works, where the point decided in a case is set down separately, and, generally, numbered. In citing, it is abbreviated as follows; Viner, Abr. Abatement pl. 3.

Placitum nominatum is the day appointed for a criminal to appear and plead.

Placitum fractum. A day past or lost to the defendant. 1 Hen. I. c. 59.

PLAGIARISM. The act of appropriating the ideas and language of another and passing them for one's own.

When this amounts to piracy, the party who has been guilty of it will be enjoined when the original author has a copyright. See COPYRIGHT; PIRACY; QUOTATION.

PLAGIARIUS (Lat.). In Civil Law. He who fraudulently concealed a freeman or slave who belonged to another.

The offence itself was called plagium.

It differed from larceny or theft in this, that larceny always implies that the guilty party intended to make a profit, whereas the plagiarius did not intend to make any profit. Dig. 48. 15. 6; Code 9. 20. 9. 15.

PLAGIUM (Lat.). Man-stealing; kidnapping. This offence is the crimen plagii of the Romans. Alison, Cr. L. 280.

PLAIN STATEMENT. One that can be readily understood not merely by lawyers but by all who are sufficiently acquainted with the language in which it is written. Mann v. Morewood, 5 Sandf. (N. Y.) 564. See Webber v. Webber, 79 N. C. 574.

PLAIN TYPE. Large or ordinary sized type, not that of very small size. Potter v. Gilkey, 57 Mo. 235.

PLAINT. In English Law. The exhibiting of any action, real or personal, in writing. The party making his plaint is called the plaintiff.

PLAINTIFF (Fr. pleyntifc). He who complains. He who, in a personal action, seeks a remedy for an injury to his rights. 3 Bla. Com. 25; Hamm. Part.; 1 Chitty, Pl.: 1 Com. Dig. 36, 205, 308.

The legal plaintiff is he in whom the legal title or cause of action is vested.

The equitable plaintiff is he who, not having the legal title, yet is in equity entitled to the thing sued for. For example: when a suit is brought by B. for the use of A., B. the legal, and A. the equitable, plaintiff. This is the usual manner of bringing suits when the cause of action is not assignable at law but is so in equity.

The word plaintiff occurring alone means the plaintiff on record, not the real or equitable plaintiff. After once naming the plaintiff in pleading, he may be simply called the plaintiff. 1 Chitty, Pl. 266; Henry v. Bank, 5 Hill (N. Y.) 523; Stevens v. White, id. 548; 7 Term 50.

PLAINTIFF IN ERROR. A party who sues out a writ of error; and this, whether in the court below he was plaintiff or defendant.

PLAN. The delineation or design of a city, a house or houses, a garden, a vessel, etc., traced on paper or other substance, representing the position and the relative proportions of the different parts.

A plan referred to in a deed describing land as bounded by a way laid down upon a plan may be used as evidence in fixing the locality of such way; Stetson v. Dow, 16 Gray (Mass.) 374; and if a plan is referred to in the deed for description, and in it are laid down courses, distances, and other particulars, it is the same as if they were recited in the deed itself; 3 Washb. R. P. 430.

When houses are built by one person agreeably to a plan, and one of them, with windows and doors in it, is sold to a person, the owner of the others cannot shut up those windows, nor has his grantee any greater right; 1 Price 27; 2 Ry. & M. 24; 2 Saund. 114, n. 4; 1 Mood. & M. 396. See Story v. Odin, 12 Mass. 159, 7 Am. Dec. 46; Hamm. N. P. 202; Com. Dig. Action on the Case for a Nuisance (A). ANCIENT LIGHTS; PLAT; MAP; WINDOWS.

PLANT. The fixtures and tools necessary to carry on any trade or mechanical business. Liberty Co. L. Co. v. Barnes, 77 Ga. 752, 1 S. E. 378. The term does not cover property forming part of a separate business; Maxwell v. Mfg. Co., 77 Fed. 938. As used in the business of a wharfinger, a horse was held part of the plant; 19 Q. B. D. 647; and a legacy of plant and good will was held to pass the house of business held by lease; 8 W. R. 410.

PLANTATIONS. Colonies; dependencies. 1 Bla. Com. 107.

In England, this word, as it is used in stat. 12 Car. II. c. 18, is never applied to any of the British dominions in Europe, but only to the colonies in the West Indies and America; 1 Marsh. Ins. 69.

In its ordinary use it is nearly synonymous with farm, and includes all the land forming the parcel or parcels under culture as one farm, or even what is worked by one set of hands. Attorney General v. State Board, 38 Cal. 291. It has been held that in order to constitute a plantation, the estate should be under the control of one proprietor. Robson v. Du Bose, 79 Ga. 721, 4 S. E. 329. The devise of a plantation passes the stock, implements, utensils, etc., on it; 1 Sim. 435; but plantation stock does not include cotton seed; Purnell v. Dudley, 57 N. C. 203.

PLASTERING. Plastering a building includes lathing. Higgins v. Lee, 16 Ill. 502; Walls v. Bailey, 49 N. Y. 464, 10 Am. Rep. 407.

PLAT. A map of a piece of land, on which are marked the courses and distances of the different lines, and the quantity of land it contains.

Such a plat may be given in evidence in ascertaining the position of the land and what is included, and may serve to settle the figure of a survey and correct mistakes; Alexander v. Lively, 5 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 160, 17 Am. Dec. 50. See Davis v. Rainsford, 17 Mass. 211; McIver v. Walker, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 444, 4 L. Ed. 611.

PLATE. Articles inlaid with enamel or set with precious stones on a foundation of gold or silver are plate within the meaning of the English Customs Act; [1907] 1 K. B. 95. Silver mounted jugs, known as black jacks, were held not to pass under bequest of plate; [1910] W. N. 6.

PLEA. In Equity. A special answer showing or relying upon one or more things as a cause why the suit should be either dismissed, or delayed, or barred. Mitf. Eq. Pl. Jer. ed. 219; Coop. Eq. Pl. 223; Story, Eq. Pl. § 649.

The modes of making defence to a bill in equity are said to be by demurrer, which demands of the court whether from the matter apparent from the bill the defendant shall answer at all; by plea, which resting on the foundation of a new matter offered, demands whether the defendant shall answer further; by answer, which responds generally to the charges of the bill; by disclaimer, which denies any interest in the matters in question; Mitf. Eq. Pl. Jer. ed. 13; Ocean Ins. Co. v. Fields, 2 Sto. 59, Fed. Cas. No. 10,406; Story, Eq. Pl. § 437.

Pleas are said to be pure which rely upon foreign matter to discharge or stay the suit, and anomalous or negative which consist mainly of denials of the substantial matters set forth in the bill; Story, Eq. Pl. §§ 651, 667; 2 Dan. Ch. Pr. 97, 110; Beames, Eq. Pl. 123; Adams, Eq. 236.

Pleas to the jurisdiction assert that the court before which the cause is brought is not the proper court to take cognizance of the matter.

Pleas to the person may be to the person of the plaintiff or defendant. Those of the former class are mainly outlawry, excommunication, popish recusant convict, which are never pleaded in America and very rarely now in England; attainder, which is now seldom pleaded; 2 Atk. 399; alienage, which is not a disability unless the matter respect lands, when the alien may not hold them, or he be an alien enemy not under license; 2 V. & B. 323; infancy, coverture, and idiocy, which are pleadable as at law (see ABATEMENT); bankruptcy and insolvency, in which case all the facts necessary to establish the plaintiff as a legally declared bankrupt must be set forth; 3 Mer. 667; though not necessarily as of the defendant's own knowledge; 4 Beav. 554; 1 Y. & C. 39; want of character in which he sues, as that he is not an administrator; 2 Dick. 510; is not heir; 2 V. & B. 159; 2 Bro. C. C. 143; is not a creditor; 2 S. & S. 274; is not a partner; 6 Madd. 61; as he pretends to be; that the plaintiff named is a fictitious person, or was dead at the commencement of the suit; Story, Eq. Pl. § 727. Those to the person of the defendant may show that the defendant is not the person he is alleged to be, or does not sustain the character given by the bill; 6 Madd. 61; Cas. temp. Finch 334; or that he is bankrupt, to require, the assignees to be joined; Story, Eq. Pl. § 732. These pleas to the person are pleas in abatement, or, at least, in the nature of pleas in abatement.

Pleas to the bill or the frame of the bill object to the suit as framed, or contend that it is unnecessary. These may be—the pendency of another suit, which is analogous to the same plea at law and is governed in most respects by the same principles; Story, Eq. Pl. § 736; 2 My. & C. 602; 1 Mitf. Eq. Pl. Jer. ed. 248; see AUTER ACTION PENDANT; the other suit must be in equity, and not at law; Beames, Eq. Pl. 146; want of proper parties, which goes to both discovery and relief, where both are prayed for; Story, Eq. Pl. § 745; but not to a bill of discovery merely; Mitchell v. Lennox, 2 Paige Ch. (N. Y.) 280; Milligan v. Milledge, 3 Cra. 220, 2 L. Ed. 417; a multiplicity of suits; 1 P. Wms. 428; West v. Randall, 2 Mas. 190, Fed. Cas. No. 17,424; multifariousness, which should be taken by way of demurrer, when the joining or confession of the distinct matters appears from the face of the bill, as it usually does; Story, Eq. Pl.

§ 271. A plea to the jurisdiction which sets up matters affecting the validity of the service, matters showing want of proper citizenship, and also the pendency of a prior suit, is bad for duplicity; Briggs v. Stroud, 58 Fed. 717.

Pleas in bar rely upon a bar created by statute; as, the statute of limitations; 1 S. & S. 4; 3 Sumn. 152; which is a good plea in equity as well as at law, and with similar exceptions; Cooper, Eq. Pl. 253; see LIMITATION, STATUTE OF; the statute of frauds, where its provisions apply; Stevens v. Cooper, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 425, 7 Am. Dec. 499; 4 Ves. 24, 720; 2 Bro. C. C. 559; or some other public or private statute; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 768; matter of record or as of record in some court, as a common recovery; 1 P. Wms. 754; a judgment at law; 2 My. & C. 602; Story, Eq. Pl. § 781, n.; the sentence or judgment of a foreign court or a court not of record; 12 Cl. & F. 368; especially where its jurisdiction is of a peculiar or exclusive nature; 12 Ves. 307; Gains v. Chew, 2 How. (U. S.) 619, 11 L. Ed. 402; with limitation in case of fraud; 1 Ves. 284; Story, Eq. Pl. § 788; or a decree of the same or another court of equity; Neafie v. Neafie, 7 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 1, 11 Am. Dec. 380; 2 S. & S. 464; 2 Y. & C. 43; matters purely in pais, in which case the pleas may go to discovery, relief, or either, both, or a part of either, of which the principal (though not the only) pleas are: Account, stated or settled; Weed v. Smull, 7 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 573; 1 My. & K. 231; accord and satisfaction; 1 Hare 564; award; 2 V. & B. 764; purchase for valuable consideration; Flagg v. Mann, 2 Sumn. 486, Fed. Cas. No. 4,847; 2 Yo. & C. 457; release; 3 P. Wms. 315; lapse of time analogous to the statute of limitations; 1 Yo. & C. 432, 453; 1 Hare 594; Ellison v. Moffatt, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 46; Elmendorf v. Taylor, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 152, 6 L. Ed. 289; title in the defendant; Story, Eq. Pl. § 812.

The same pleas may be made to bills seeking discovery as to those seeking relief; but matter which constitutes a good plea to a bill for relief does not necessarily to a bill for discovery merely. See Story, Eq. Pl. § 816; Mitf. Eq. Pl. Jer. ed. 281. The same kind of pleas may be made to bills not original as to original bills, in many cases, according to their respective natures. Peculiar defences to each may, however, be sometimes urged by plea; Story, Eq. Pl. § 826; Mitf. Eq. Pl. Jer. ed. 288.

Effect of a plea. A plea may extend to the whole or a part, and if to a part only must express which part, and an answer over-rules a plea if the two conflict; 3 Yo. & C. 683; Milligan v. Milledge, 3 Cra. (U. S.) 220, 2 L. Ed. 417. The plea may be accompanied by an answer fortifying it with a protest against waiver of the plea thereby; Story, Eq. Pl. § 695. A plea or argument may be allowed, in which case it is a full bar to so much of the bill as it covers, if true: Mitford, Eq. Pl. Jer. ed. 301; or the benefit of it may be saved to the hearing, which decides it valid so far as then appears, but allows matter to be disclosed in evidence to invalidate it, or it may be ordered to stand for an answer, which decides that it may be a part of a defence; Leacraft v. Dempsey, 4 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 124; but is not a full defence, that the matter has been improperly offered as a plea, or it is not sufficiently fortified by answer, so that the truth is apparent; Orcutt v. Orms, 3 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 459.

While a defendant cannot plead merely the facts averred in the bill of complaint, but must present his objection to their sufficiency by demurrer, yet he may present a good plea by averring along with the facts contained in the bill, other and additional facts, if both together establish a defence to the bill; Missouri P. Ry. Co. v. R. Co., 50 Fed. 151.

A plea which avoids the discovery prayed for is no evidence for defendant, even when under oath and denying a material averment in the bill; Farley v. Kittson, 120 U. S. 303, 7 Sup. Ct. 534, 30 L. Ed. 684.

Pleas are abolished by the new equity rules of the United States supreme court (rule 29). Defenses formerly made by plea may be made in the answer; every point of law going to the whole or a material part of the cause of action in the bill may be disposed of before trial at the discretion of the court.

At Law. The defendant's answer by matter of fact to the plaintiff's declaration, as distinguished from a demurrer, which is an answer by matter of law.

It includes as well the denial of the truth of the allegations on which the plaintiff relies, as the statement of facts on which the defendant relies. In an ancient use it denoted action, and is still used sometimes in that sense: as, "summoned to answer in a plea of trespass;" Steph. Pl. 38. In a popular, and not legal, sense, the word is used to denote a forensic argument. It was strictly applicable in a kindred sense when the pleadings were conducted orally by the counsel. Steph. Pl. App. n. 1.

Pleas are either dilatory, which tend to defeat the particular action to which they apply on account of its being brought before the wrong court, by or against the wrong person, or in an improper form; or peremptory, which impugn the right of action altogether, which answer the plaintiff's allegations of right conclusively. Dilatory pleas are to the jurisdiction of the court, in suspension of the action, or in abatement of the writ. Peremptory pleas are in bar of the action. Steph. Pl. And. ed. 136; 1 Chitty, Pl. 425; Lawes, Pl. 36.

Of the dilatory pleas, the plea to the jurisdiction, if successful, disposes of the case so far as the present court is concerned; the plea in suspension temporarily suspends the progress of the cause, and the plea in abatement, with an effect midway between the other two, if sustained, disposes of the suit as instituted, but leaves the plaintiff free by a new suit, or, more commonly, in modern practice, by amendment, to proceed anew, avoiding the mistake which was the subject of the plea.

Pleas are of various kinds. In abatement. See ABATEMENT. In avoidance, called also, confession and avoidance, which admits, in words, or in effect, the truth of the matters contained in the declaration, and alleges some new matter to avoid the effect of it and show that the plaintiff is, notwithstanding, not entitled to his action. 1 Chitty, Pl. 540; Lawes, Pl. 122.

Pleas in bar deny that the plaintiff has any cause of action. 1 Chitty, Pl. 407; Co. Lit. 303 b. They either conclude the plaintiff by matter of estoppel, show that he never had any cause of action, or, admitting that he had, insist that it is determined by some subsequent matter. Steph. Pl. And. ed. 448; Britt. 92 § 190. They either deny all or some essential part of the averments in the declaration, in which case they are said to traverse it, or, admitting them to be true, allege new facts which obviate and repel their legal effect, in which case they are said to confess and avoid; Steph. Pl. And. ed. 146.

Every allegation made in the pleadings subsequent to the declaration which does not go in denial of what is before alleged on the other side is an allegation of new matter. See Gould, Pl. § 195.

The term pleas in bar is often used in a restricted sense to denote what are with propriety called special pleas in bar. These pleas are of two kinds; the general issue, and special pleas in bar. The general issue denies or takes issue upon all the material allegations of the declaration, thus compelling the plaintiff to prove all of them that are essential to support his action. There is, however, a plea to the action which is not strictly either a general issue or a special plea in bar, and which is called a special issue, which denies only some particular part of the declaration which goes to the gist of the action. It thus, on the one hand, denies less than does the general issue, and, on the other hand, is distinguished from a "special plea in bar" in this,—that the latter universally advances new matter, upon which the defendant relies for his defence, which a special issue never does; it simply denies. Lawes, Pl. 110, 145; Co. Litt. 126 a; Gould, Pl. 5th ed. ch. ii. § 38, ch. vi. § 8. The matter which ought to be so pleaded is now very generally given in evidence under the general issue. 1 Chitty, Pl. 415. A plea which merely amounts to the general issue, though not such in form, is bad; Spencer v. Patten, 84 Md. 414, 35 Atl. 1097.

Special pleas in bar admit the facts alleged in the declaration, but avoid the action by matter which the plaintiff would not be bound to prove or dispute in the first instance on the general issue. Ld. Raym. 88. They are very various, according to the circumstances of the defendant's case: as, in personal action the defendant may plead any special matter in denial, avoidance, discharge, excuse, or justification of the matter alleged in the declaration, which destroys or bars the plaintiff's action; or he may plead any matter which estops or precludes him from averring or insisting on any matter relied upon by the plaintiff in his declaration. The latter sort of pleas are called pleas in estoppel. In real action, the tenant may plead any matter which destroys and bars the demandant's title; as, a general release; Steph. Pl. 115.

The general qualities of a plea in bar are—first, that it be adapted to the nature and form of the action, and also conformable to the count. Co. Litt. 303 a; 285 b; Bac. Abr. Pleas (I); Rolle 216. Second, that it answers all it assumes to answer, and no more. Co. Litt. 303 a; Com. Dig. Pleader (E 1, 36); 1 Saund. 28; 2 B. & P. 427. Third, in the case of a special plea, that it confess and admit the fact. 3 Term 298; 1 Saund. 28, 14; Kennedy v. Strong, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 289. Fourth, that it be single. Co. Litt. 307; Bac. Abr. Pleas (K 1, 2); 2 Saund. 49. Fifth, that it be certain. Com. Dig. Pleader (E 5–11, C. 41). See CERTAINTY; PLEADING. Sixth, it must be direct, positive, and not argumentative. See Fletcher v. Peck, 6 Cra. (U. S.) 126, 3 L. Ed. 162; Spencer v. Southwick, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 314; Seventh, it must be capable of trial. Eighth, it must be true and capable of proof.

The parts of a plea are—first, the title of the court. Second, the title of the term. Third, the names of the parties in the margin. These, however, do not constitute any substantial part of the plea. The surnames only are usually inserted, and that of the defendant precedes the plaintiff's: as, "Roe v. Doe." Fourth, the commencement, which includes the statement of the name of the defendant, the appearance, the defence, see DEFENCE, the actio non, see ACTIO NON. Fifth, the body, which may contain the inducement, the protestation, see PROTESTATION, ground of defence, quæ est eadem, the traverse. Sixth, the conclusion.

Dilatory pleas go to destroy the particular action, but do not affect the right of action in the plaintiff, and hence delay the decision of the cause upon its merits. Gould, Pl. ch. ii. § 33. This class includes pleas to the jurisdiction, to the disability of the parties, and all pleas in abatement. All dilatory pleas must be pleaded with the greatest certainty, must contain a distinct, clear, and positive averment of all material facts, and must in general, enable the plaintiff to correct the deficiency or error pleaded to; And. Steph. Pl. 136. See ABATEMENT; JURISDICTION.

Pleas in discharge admit the demand of the plaintiff, and show that it has been discharged by some matter of fact. Such are pleas of judgment, release, and the like.

Pleas in excuse admit the demand or complaint stated in the declaration, but excuse the non-compliance with the plaintiff's claim, or the commission of the act of which he complains, on account of the defendant's having done all in his power to satisfy the former, or not having been the culpable author of the latter. A plea of tender is an example of the former, and a plea of son assault demesne an instance of the latter.

Foreign pleas go to the jurisdiction; and their effect is to remove the action, from the county in which the venue is originally laid. Carth. 402. Previous to the statute of Anne, an affidavit was required. 5 Mod. 335; Carth. 402; 1 Saund. Pl. 98, n. 1; Viner, Abr. Foreign Pleas; 1 Chitty, Pl. 382; Bacon, Abr. Abatement (R).

Pleas of justification assert that the defendant has purposely done the act of which the plaintiff complains, and in the exercise of his legal rights. 8 Term 78; 3 Wils. 71. No person is bound to justify who is not prima facie a wrong-doer; Cowp. 478; Clark v. Com., 4 Pick. (Mass.) 126; 1 Chitty, Pl. 430.

Pleas puis darrein continuance introduce new matter of defence, which has arisen or come to the plaintiff's knowledge since the last continuance. In most of the states, the actual continuance of a cause from one term to another, or from one particular day in term to another day in the same term, is practically done away with, and the prescribed times for pleading are fixed without any reference to terms of court. Still, this right of a defendant to change his plea so as to avail himself of facts arising during the course of the litigation remains unimpaired; and though there be no continuance, the plea is still called a plea puis darrein continuance,—meaning, now, a plea upon facts arising since the last stage of suit. They are either in bar or in abatement. Matter which arises after purchase or issue of the writ, and before issue joined, is properly pleaded in bar of the further maintenance of the suit; 4 East 502; Yeaton v. Lynn, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 224, 8 L. Ed. 105; Semmes v. Naylor, 12 Gill & J. (Md.) 358; while matter subsequent to issue joined must be pleaded puis darrein continuance; Rowell v. Hayden, 40 Me. 582; Longworth v. Flagg, 10 Ohio 300. Their object is to present matter which has arisen since issue joined, and which the defendant cannot introduce under his pleadings as they exist, for the rights of the parties were at common law to be tried as they existed at the time of bringing the suit, and matters subsequently arising come in as it were by exception and favor. See Jackson v. Rich, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 194.

Among other matters, it may be pleaded that the plaintiff has become an alien enemy; 3 Camp. 152; that an award has been made after issue joined; 2 Esp. 504; Henry v. Porter, 29 Ala. 619; that there has been accord and satisfaction; Watkinson v. Inglesby, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 892; Yeaton v. Lynn, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 231, 8 L. Ed. 105; that the plaintiff has become bankrupt; Wheelock v. Rice, 1 Dougl. (Mich.) 267; 15 East 622; that the defendant has obtained a bankrupt certificate, even though obtained before issue joined; 9 East 82; see 3 B. & C. 23; Sandford v. Sinclair, 3 Den. (N. Y.) 269; that a feme plaintiff has taken a husband; Bull. N. P. 310; Templeton v. Clary, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 288; that judgment has been obtained for the same cause of action; Bowne v. Joy, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 221; 5 Dowl. & R. 175; that payment has been made; Herod v. Snyder, 61 Ind. 453; that letters testamentary or of administration have been granted; 1 Saund. 265, n. 2; or revoked; Com. Dig. Abatement (I 4); that the plaintiff has released the defendant; Jessup v. King, 4 Cal. 331; Campbell v. Reeves, 3 Sneed (Tenn.) 52; Wade v. Emerson, 17 Mo. 267. See Wisheart v. Legro, 33 N. H. 179. But the defendant in ejectment cannot plead release from the lessor of the plaintiff; 4 Maule & S. 300; and the release will be avoided in case of fraud; 4 B. & Ad. 419; Hoitt v. Holcomb, 23 N. H. 535. In ejectment a right to the land obtained by defendant since the commencement of the action, must be set up by a plea puis darrein continuance; Jennings v. Dockham, 99 Mich. 253, 58 N. W. 66.

As a general rule, such matters must be pleaded at the first continuance after they happen or come to the plaintiff's knowledge; Jackson v. McConnell, 11 Johns. (N. Y.) 424; though a discharge in insolvency or bankruptcy of the defendant; Morgan v. Dyer, 9 Johns. (N. Y.) 255; Mechanics' Bank v. Hazard, id. 392; and coverture of the plaintiff existing at the purchase of the suit, are exceptions; Bull. N. P. 310; in the discretion of the court; Morgan v. Dyer, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 161; Wilson v. Hamilton, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 239; 5 Dowl. & R. 521; Nettles v. Sweazea, 2 Mo. 100. Great certainty is required in pleas of this description; Cro. Jac. 261; Vicary v. Moore, 2 Watts (Pa.) 451, 27 Am. Dec. 323. They must state the day of the last continuance, and of the happening of the new matter; Bull. N. P. 309; And. Steph. Pl. 356, n.; Augusta v. Moulton, 75 Me. 551; cannot be awarded after assizes are over; 2 McC. & Y. 350; must be verified on oath before they are allowed; 1 Stra. 493; 1 Const. S. C. 455; and must then be received; 3 Term 554; Stevens v. Thompson, 15 N. H. 410. They stand as a substitute for former pleas; Adler v. Wise, 4 Wis. 159; Culver v. Barney, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 161, and demurrers; 32 E. L. & E. 280; may be pleaded after a plea in bar; Renner v. Marshall, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 215, 4 L. Ed. 74; and if decided against the defendant, the plaintiff has judgment in chief; Renner v. Marshall, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 215, 4 L. Ed. 74.

Sham pleas are those which are known to the pleader to be false, and are entered for the purpose of delay. There are certain pleas of this kind which, in consequence of their having been long and frequently used in practice, have obtained toleration from the courts, and, though discouraged, are tacitly allowed: as, for example, the common plea of judgment recovered, that is, that judgment has been already recovered by the plaintiff for the same cause of action; Steph. Pl. 444, 445. See Caswell v. Bushnell, 14 Barb. (N. Y.) 393. The later practice of courts in regard to sham pleas is to strike them out on motion, and give final judgment for the plaintiff, or impose terms (in the discretion of the court) on the defendant, as a condition of his being let in to plead anew. The motion is made on the plea itself, or on affidavits in connection with the plea.

Pleas in suspension of the action show some ground for not proceeding in the suit at the present period, and pray that the pleading may be stayed until that ground be removed. The number of these pleas is small. Among them is that which is founded on the nonage of the parties, and termed parol demurrer. Steph. Pl. And. ed. 138.

A plea which avers a legal conclusion is bad, as "that a dam is no higher than the statute authorized;" Pumpelly v. Canal Co., 13 Wall. (U. S.) 175, 20 L. Ed. 557.

In ecclesiastical courts, a plea is called an allegation. See ALLEGATION.

PLEA ROLLS. See ROLLS.

PLEAD, TO. To answer the indictment or, in a civil action, the declaration of the plaintiff, in a formal manner. To enter the defendant's defence upon record.

In a popular use, to make a forensic argument. The word is not so used by the legal profession. Steph. Pl. App. n. I; Story, Eq. Pl. § 4, n.

PLEADING. The written allegation of what is affirmed on the one side, or denied on the other, disclosing to the court or jury having to try the cause, the real matter in dispute between the parties. Desnoyer v. Hereux, 1 Minn. 17 (Gil. 1).

In Chancery Practice. It consists in making the formal written allegations or statements of the respective parties on the record to maintain the suit, or to defeat it, of which, when contested in matters of fact, they propose to offer proofs, and in matters of law to offer arguments to the court. Story, Eq. Pl. § 4. The substantial object of pleading is the same, but the forms and rules of pleading are very different, at law and in equity.

The system of pleading in equity was derived partly from the common law system, but chiefly from that of the civil law as administered in the English ecclesiastical courts. The latter is called the civil-law system, not because it ever prevailed among the ancient Romans, but because it has grown out of the latest Roman procedure and prevails generally in those countries which derive their procedure from the Romans. Langdell, Equity Pleading.

See PLEADINGS.

In Common Law Practice. The stating in a logical and legal form the facts which constitute the plaintiff's cause of action or the defendant's ground of defence: it is the formal mode of alleging that on the record which constitutes the support or the defence of the party in evidence. 3 Dougl. 278; Com. Dig. Pleader (A); Bac. Abr. Pleas and Pleading. Pleading is used to denote the act of making the pleadings.

The object of pleading is to secure a clear and distinct statement of the claims of each party, so that the controverted points may be exactly known, examined, and decided, and the appropriate remedy or punishment administered. See Cowp. 682; Dougl. 159. The object is to develop the real issue; Thomas v. Mann, 28 Pa. 522. A pleading must proceed upon some single definite theory, and it must be good upon the theory on which it proceeds; Baker v. Ludlam, 118 Ind. 87, 20 N. E. 648. Good pleading consists in good matter pleaded in good form, in apt time, and due order. Co. Litt. 303. Good matter includes all facts and circumstances necessary to constitute the cause of complaint or ground of defence and no more. It does not include arguments or matters of law. But some matters of fact need not be stated, though it be necessary to establish them as facts. Such are, among others, facts of which the courts take judicial notice; see JUDICIAL NOTICE; facts which the law presumes; as, the innocence of a party, illegality of an act, etc.; 4 Maule & S. 105; Dubois' Ex'rs v. Van Orden, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 105; Weaver v. Nugent, 72 Tex. 272, 10 S. W. 458, 13 Am. St. Rep. 792; Case v. Humphrey, 6 Conn. 130; matters which the other party should plead, as being more within his knowledge; 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 293, n.; 2 H. Bla. 530; Postmaster General v. Cochran, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 415; People v. Edwards, 9 Cal. 286; mere matters of evidence of facts; 9 Co. 96; Hyatt v. McMahon, 25 Barb. (N. Y.) 457; Griffin v. Chubb, 7 Tex. 603, 58 Am. Dec. 85; unnecessary matter: as, a sec- ond breach of condition, where one is sufficient; 1 Saund. 58, n. 1; State v. Bank, 33 Miss. 474; Hand v. Taylor, 4 Ind. 409; Morse v. Eaton, 23 N. H. 415; see DUPLICITY; or intent to defraud, when the facts alleged constitute fraud; McMahan v. Rice, 16 Tex. 335; irrelevant matter; 1 Chitty, Pl. 209. Such matter may be rejected without damage to the plea, if wholly foreign to the case, or repugnant; Thomas v. Roosa, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 462; Wilmarth v. Mountford, 8 S. & R. (Pa.) 124; Raymond v. Sturges, 23 Conn. 134; Magee v. Fisher, 8 Ala. 320; but in many cases the matter must be proved as stated, if stated; Jerome v. Whitney, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 321; U. S. v. Porter, 3 Day (Conn.) 283, Fed. Cas. No. 16,074. The matter must be true and susceptible of proof; but legal fictions may be stated as facts; 2 Burr. 667; 4 B. & P. 140. Facts necessarily implied from direct averments will be treated as having been pleaded; Weaver v. Harlan, 48 Mo. App. 319; Wine-man v. Hughson, 44 Ill. App. 22; and facts and not conclusions should be pleaded; Gerity v. Brady, 44 Ill. App. 203.

The form of statement should be according to the established forms; Co. Litt. 303; 6 East 351; 8 Co. 48 b. This is to be considered as, in general, merely a rule of caution, though it is said the courts disapprove a departure from the well-established forms of pleading; 1 Chitty, Pl. 212. In most of the states, and in England since 1852, many radical changes have been introduced into the law of pleading: still, it is apprehended that a reasonable regard to the old forms will be profitable, although the names of things may be changed. See 3 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 301, n.; Sampson v. Shaeffer, 3 Cal. 196; Cooper v. Benson, 28 Miss. 766; Hill v. Barrett, 14 B. Monr. (Ky.) 83. In general, it may be said that the facts should be stated logically, in their natural order, with certainty, that is, clearly and distinctly, so that the party who is to answer, the court, and the jury may readily understand what is meant; 2 B. & P. 267; Co. Litt. 303; Hunt v. Crane, 33 Miss. 669, 69 Am. Dec. 381; with precision; People v. Dunlap, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 437; and with brevity; Smith v. R. Co., 36 N. H. 458; 1 Chitty, Pl. 212. The facts stated must not be insensible or repugnant; 7 Co. 25; Sherwood v. Stevenson, 25 Com. 431; nor ambiguous or doubtful in meaning; 5 Maule & S. 38; nor argumentative; Co. Litt. 303; Hurst v. Purvis, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 557; nor by way of recital; Ld. Raym. 1413; and should be stated according to their legal effect and operation; Steph. Pl. And. ed. 366; Johnson v. Carter, 16 Mass. 443.

The time within which pleas must be filed is a matter of local regulation, depending upon the court in which the action is brought. The order of pleading different matters is of importance as affecting the defendant, who may oppose the plaintiff's suit in various ways. The order is as follows:

First, to the jurisdiction of the court.

Second, to the disability, etc., of the person: first, of the plaintiff; second, of the defendant.

Third, to the count or declaration.

Fourth, to the writ: first, to the form of the writ,—first, matter apparent on the face of it, secondly, matters dehors; second, to the action of the writ.

Fifth, to the action itself in bar.

This is said to be the natural order of pleading, because each subsequent plea admits that there is no foundation for the former; Shaw v. Usher, 41 Me. 102; Cole v. Ackerman, 7 Gray (Mass.) 38; Gardner v. James, 5 R. I. 235; Symons v. Northern, 49 N. C. 241; Alliston v. Lindsey, 12 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 656. An exception exists where matter is pleaded puis darrein continuance; see PLEA; and where the subject-matter is one over which the court has no jurisdiction, a failure to plead to the puis cannot confer jurisdiction; Wright v. Guy, 10 S. & R. (Pa.) 229; Horton v. Wheeler, 17 Tex. 52.

The science of pleading, as it existed at common law, has been much modified by statutory changes; but, under whatever names it is done,—whether under rules of court, or of the legislative power, by the parties, the court, or the jury,—it is evident that, in the nature of things, the end of pleading must be attained, namely, the production of one or more points of issue, where a single fact is affirmed by one party and denied by the other. By pleading at the common law, this was done by the parties; in the civil law, by the court.

In England, pleadings in actions are now governed by the provisions of the Judicature Act, ord. xix., which made a number of changes in the old common-law methods. See JUDICATURE ACTS.

Up to judgment pleadings are construed most strongly against the pleader, and unknown, unrecited facts are not assumed in his favor; Hughes v. Murdock, 45 La. Ann. 935, 13 South. 182. See Loehr v. Murphy, 45 Mo. App. 519; Bogenschutz v. Smith, 84 Ky. 330, 1 S. W. 578.

But it is said that they must be construed reasonably, and not with such strictness as to refuse to adopt the natural construction because a particular fact might have been more distinctly alleged, although its existence is reasonably to be presumed from the averments; Lockhart v. Leeds, 195 U. S. 427, 25 Sup. Ct. 76, 49 L. Ed. 263.

"It would be subversive of all sound practice, and tend largely to defeat the ends of justice, if the court should refuse to accept a fact as settled which is distinctly alleged in the bill and admitted in the answer;" Jones v. Morehead, 1 Wall. (U. S.) 165, 17 L. Ed. 662.

Pleadings are not to be treated as allegations of the truth of the facts stated for all purposes, but only for that case; Parke, B. in 2 Exch. 665.

"Technical forms of pleading in equity are abolished" by the new equity rules of the supreme court (rule 18) unless "otherwise provided by statute or by the rules themselves." See 226 U. S. 649, 33 Sup. Ct. xix.

In Criminal Practice the rules of pleading are the same as in civil practice. There is, however, less liberty of amendment of the indictment. The order of the defendant's pleading is as follows: First, to the jurisdiction; second, in abatement; third, special pleas in bar: as, autrefois acquit, autrefois attain, autrefois convict, pardon; fourth, the general issue.

PLEADING, SPECIAL. By special pleading is meant the allegation of special or new matter, as distinguished from a direct denial of matter previously alleged on the opposite side. Gould, Pl. c. 1, s. 18. See SPECIAL PLEADING.

PLEADINGS. In Chancery Practice. The written allegations of the respective parties in the suit. The pleadings in equity are less formal than those at common law.

The parts of the pleadings are—the bill, which contains the plaintiff's statement of his case, or information, where the suit is brought by a public officer in behalf of the sovereign; the demurrer, by which the defendant demands judgment of the court, whether he shall be compelled to answer the bill or not; the plea, whereby he shows some cause why the suit should be dismissed or barred; the answer, which, controverting the case stated by the bill, confesses and avoids it; or traverses and denies the material allegations in the bill, or, admitting the case made by the bill, submits to the judgment of the court upon it, or relies upon a new case or upon new matter stated in the answer, or upon both; disclaimer, which seeks at once a termination of the suit by the defendants, disclaiming all right and interest in the matter sought by the bill; Story, Eq. Pl. § 546; Mitf. Eq. Pl. by Jer. 13, 106; Cooper, Eq. Pl., 108; Ocean Ins. Co. v. Fields, 2 Sto. 59, Fed. Cas. No. 10,406.

In Common Law Practice. The statements of the parties, in legal and proper manner, of the causes of action and grounds of defence. The result of pleading. They were formerly made by the parties or their counsel, orally, in open court, under the control of the judge. They were then called the parole; 3 Bia. Com. 293.

The parts of the pleadings may be arranged under two heads: The regular, which occur in the ordinary course of a suit; and the irregular or collateral, which are occasioned by errors in the pleadings on the other side.

The regular parts are—the declaration or count; the plea, which is either to the jurisdiction of the court, or suspending the action, as in the case of a parol demurrer, or in abatement, or in bar of the action, or in replevin, an avowry or cognizance; the replication, and, in case of an evasive plea, a new assignment, or, in replevin, the plea in bar to the avowry or cognizance; the rejoinder, or, in replevin, the replication to the plea in bar; the sur-rejoinder, being in replevin the rejoinder; the rebutter; the sur-rebutter; Viner, Abr. Pleas and Pleading (C); Bac. Abr. Pleas and Pleadings (A); pleas puis darrein continuance, when the matter of defence arises pending the suit.

The irregular or collateral parts of pleading are stated to be—demurrers to any part of the pleadings above mentioned; demurrers to evidence given at trials; bills of exceptions; pleas in scire facias; and pleas in error. Viner, Abr. Pleas and Pleadings (C).

In Admiralty, the proceedings might go on, by turns, as long as the mode of pleadings require it. The successive pleadings, after the replication, were called duplication, triplication, and quadruplication, and so on; but they are now obsolete; Bened. Adm. § 482.

In Criminal Practice, the pleadings are—first, the indictment; second, the plea; and the other pleadings as in civil practice.

PLEAS OF THE CROWN. In English Law. A phrase employed to signify criminal causes in which the king is a party. Formerly it signified royal causes for offences of a greater magnitude than mere misdemeanors. Pleas of the crown, were so called because the sovereign is supposed by law to be the person injured by every wrong done to the community. 4 Bla. Com. 2.

These were left to be tried in the courts of the barons; whereas the greater offences, or royal causes, were to be tried in the king's courts, under the appellation of pleas of the crown. 1 Robertson, Hist. Charles V. 48.

PLEAS ROLL. In English Practice. A record which contains the declaration, plea, replication, rejoinder, and other pleadings, and the issue. Eunom. Dial. 2, § 29, p. 111.

PLEBEIAN. One who is classed among the common people, as distinguished from the nobles.

PLEBISCITUM (Lat.). In Roman Law. A law established by the people (plebs), on the proposal of a popular magistrate, as a tribune. Calvinus, Lex.; Mackeldey, Civ. Law §§ 27, 37. The term is used in France to express a popular vote (plébiscite).

PLEDGE. A bailment of personal property as security for some debt or engagement.

The word is also applied to the res or personal property forming the subject-matter of the bailment. Pawn was synonymous with pledge at common law, but modern usage tends to restrict these words to the bailment of tangible chattels for money advanced, and has introduced the term collateral security, or simply collateral, to designate the subject-matter of a pledge given as security for an engagement other than a simple borrowing of money, and particularly when the subject-matter consists of incorporeal chattels such as stocks, bonds, or choses in action.

A pledge or pawn (Lat. pignus), according to Story, is a bailment of personal property as security for some debt or engagement. Story, Bailm. § 286, which see for the less comprehensive definitions of Sir Wm. Jones, Lord Holt, Pothier, etc. Domat broadly defines it as an appropriation of the thing given for the security of an engagement. But the term is commonly used as Sir Wm. Jones defines it: to wit, as a bailment of goods by a debtor to his creditor, to be kept till the debt is discharged. Jones, Bailm. 117; 2 Ld. Raym. 909; Pothier, De Naut. art. prelim. 1; Code Civ. 2071; Domat b. 3, tit. 1, § 1; La. Civ. Code 3100; Doak v. Bank, 28 N. C. 309. The pledgee secures his debt by the bailment, and the pledgor obtains credit or other advantage. See 1 Pars. Contr. 591.

A legal obligation, made by the deposit with the pledgee of personalty as security for a debt or other engagement, with an implied power of sale on default, the pledgor retaining the general ownership, subject to the lien of the pledgee. Tennent v. Ins. Co., 133 Mo. App. 345, 112 S. W. 754.

In Louisiana there are two kinds of pledges: the pawn and the antichresis. The former relates to movable securities, and the latter to immovables. If a creditor have not a right to enter on the land and reap the fruits, the security is not an antichresis; Hagan v. Sompeyrac, 3 La. 157. A pledge of negotiable paper is not valid against third parties without transfer from debtor to creditor; Charbonnet v. Toledano, 2 La. 387; Casey v. Cavaroc, 96 U. S. 467, 24 L. Ed. 779; Casey v. Schneider, 96 U. S. 496, 24 L. Ed. 790.

Pledge is distinguished from mortgage because the essential feature of pledge is transfer of possession, while the essential feature of mortgage is transfer of title only; Casey v. Cavaroc, 96 U. S. 467, 24 L. Ed. 779 (see MORTGAGE). The same distinction exists at the civil law between pignus and hypotheca; Story, Bailm. § 286. In modern transactions title is often transferred under a pledge, but this arises from the nature of the collateral security, and is not a necessity of the relation. In a mortgage, at common law, the property on non-payment of the debt passes wholly to the mortgagee. In a pledge, the property is sold, and only so much of the proceeds as will pay his debt passes to the pledgee. A mortgage is a conditional conveyance of property, which becomes absolute unless redeemed at a specified time. A pledge is not strictly a conveyance at all, nor need any day of redemption be appointed for it. A mortgagee can sell and deliver the thing mortgaged, subject only to the right of redemption. A pledgee cannot sell and deliver the thing pledged until the debt is due and payment denied (though he can assign his contract, and with it the collateral security, or pledge).

Subject of pledge. Any personal property capable of delivery or transfer may be pledged, except for the peculiar rules of maritime law which are applicable to shipping, and except, also, that on the ground of public policy the common law (apart from statutory prohibitions which are frequent) does not permit the pay and emoluments of officers and soldiers to be pledged; 1 H. Bl. 627; 4 Term 248. Hence, probably, a fishing bounty could not be pledged, nor any form of government pension or bounty given for the personal benefit of the donee.

Not only goods and chattels and money, but also negotiable paper, may be put in pledge; Appleton v. Donaldson, 3 Pa. 381; Goldsmidt v. First Methodist Church, 25 Minn. 202; Joliet I. & S. Co. v. Brick Co., 82 Ill. 548, 25 Am. Rep. 341; Alexandria, L. & H. R. Co. v. Burke, 22 Gratt. (Va.) 262. So may choses in action, patent rights, coupon bonds, and manuscripts of various sorts; 2 Taunt. 268; Jarvis v. Rogers, 15 Mass. 389; Fisher v. Bradford, 7 Greenl. (Me.) 28; Wilson v. Little, 2 N. Y. 443, 51 Am. Dec. 307; Morris C. & B. Co. v. Fisher, 9 N. J. Eq. 667, 64 Am. Dec. 423. So may bonds secured by a mortgage on personal property and corporate franchises; White Mountains R. R. v. Iron Co., 50 N. H. 57; and coupon bonds; Stewart v. Lansing, 104 U. S. 505, 26 L. Ed. 866; Morris Canal & Banking Co. v. Fisher, 9 N. J. Eq. 667, 64 Am. Dec. 423; and chattel mortgages of every description; and policies of life insurance; Collins v. Dawley, 4 Colo. 138, 34 Am. Rep. 72; Stout v. Mill. Co., 13 Fed. 803; lease may be taken in pledge; Dewey v. Bowman, 8 Cal. 145; L. R. 10 Eq. 92; for leases are but chattels real; or a mortgage of real estate, which, before foreclosure, is to be ranked with personal property; Campbell v. Parker, 9 Bosw.

(N. Y.) 322. Incorporeal things could probably be pledged immediately, under the civil law, and so in the Scotch law, or, at all events, by assignment; 1 Domat b. 3, tit. 1, § 1; Pothier, de Naut. n. 6; 2 Bell, Com. 23. In the civil law, property of which the pledgor had neither present possession nor title could be pledged,—though this was rather a contract for pledge, called a hypothecation. The pledge became complete when the property was acquired by the pledgor. The same rule holds in our law, where a hypothecary contract gives a lien which attaches when the property is vested; 1 Hare 549; Macomber v. Parker, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 175; Parshall v. Eggert, 54 N. Y. 18; Goodenow v. Dunn, 21 Me. 86; Huntington v. Sherman, 60 Conn. 463, 22 Atl. 769. And it has been held that a pledge may be made to secure an obligation not yet risen into existence; Wolf v. Wolf, 12 La. Ann. 529. In an agreement to pledge a vessel not then completed, the intent of the parties governs in determining when the property passes; Bonsey v. Amee, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 236; 24 E. L. & E. 220.

Buying and selling through a broker on deposit of a "margin" with him is held in New York to create the relation of pledgor and pledgee; so that, on the pledgor's failure to keep his "margin" good, the pledgee or broker cannot sell the stock, except upon the pledge formalities, for repayment of his advances and commissions; Markham v. Jaudon, 41 N. Y. 235; and the rule has been adopted in other states; Brewster v. Van Liew, 119 Ill. 554, 8 N. E. 842; Skiff v. Stoddard, 63 Conn. 198, 26 Atl. 874, 28 Atl. 104, 21 L. R. A. 102.

Delivery of possession is essential to a pledge. Unless the pledgee take and retain possession there is no pledge; Christian v. R. Co., 133 U. S. 243, 10 Sup. Ct. 260, 33 L. Ed. 589; Beeman v. Lawton, 37 Me. 543; Moors v. Reading, 167 Mass. 322, 45 N. E. 760, 57 Am. St. Rep. 460; Textor v. Orr, 86 Md. 392, 38 Atl. 939; Williams v. Gillespie, 30 W. Va. 586, 5 S. E. 210; Deligny v. Creditors, 48 La. Ann. 488, 19 South. 614. The intent to pledge is not a pledge; Hook v. Ayers, 80 Fed. 978, 26 C. C. A. 287.

If possession be given to a third person for the pledgee such person must know of the trust and accept the obligation it imposes; Succession of Lanaux, 46 La. Ann. 1036, 15 South. 708, 25 L. R. A. 577. But a constructive delivery is all that is required, that is, such delivery as the nature or situation of the goods admits. Hence goods in transit or in store will pass by transfer of the bill of lading or warehouse receipt; Douglas v. Bank, 86 Ky. 176, 5 S. W. 420, 9 Am. St. Rep. 276; Forbes v. R. Co., 133 Mass. 154; Heilbron v. Trust Co., 13 Wash. 645, 43 Pac. 932; Citizens' Banking Co. v. Peacock, 103 Ga. 171, 29 S. E. 752; Friedman v. Peters, 18 Tex. Civ. App. 11, 44 S. W. 572.

If incorporeal property is pledged, a symbolical delivery suffices; Little v. Berry (Ky.) 113 S. W. 902. A pledgee of automobiles, not taking possession within less than four months before the pledgor goes into bankruptcy, loses his lien as against the bankrupt trustee; Bank of North America v. Car Co., 235 Pa. 194, 83 Atl. 622. But an owner carrying stock on margin may, if the broker becomes bankrupt, get back his stock, on paying for it, or the proceeds, if sold; In re Bolling, 147 Fed. 786, affirmed Kean v. Dickinson, 152 Fed. 1022, 82 C. C. A. 667.

A change of the location of bulky articles is not in all cases necessary, but it is sufficient if the best means available to give notice of the change of possession are made use of; Ayers v. McCandless, 147 Pa. 49; such as posting signs on, or marking, the goods; Wilson v. Hill, 17 Nev. 401, 30 Pac. 1076; or appointing an agent to take charge, which agent may be an employé of the pledgor; Sumner v. Hamlet, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 76; Combs v. Tuchelt, 24 Minn. 423. Delivery of a larger quantity than the amount pledged with the right in pledgee to select the pledge, is good; Weld v. Cutler, 2 Gray (Mass.) 195; Crofoot v. Bennett, 2 N. Y. 258; and so where the pledgee is put and kept in possession of a quantity in excess of the pledged amount, allowing the pledgor to add to, or subtract from, the mass, but maintaining the quantity of the pledge, the pledge is good; Fidelity L. & S.-D. Co. v. Iron Co., 81 Fed. 439. But there cannot be a valid pledge of a portion of a mass, there being no segregation, and the pledgor retaining the whole; Collins v. Buck, 63 Me. 459. When goods are in the hands of an agent of the pledgor an order on him to hold for the use of the pledgee, accepted by him, constitutes a delivery; First Nat. Bank v. Harkness, 42 W. Va. 156, 24 S. E. 548, 32 L. R. A. 408.

In the case of commercial paper, stocks, bonds, and securities, which together constitute by far the most important division of pledges, or collateral securities, and of choses in action, delivery of possession is essential, but to make the delivery effective assignment is necessary, and assignment is transfer of title. As both title and possession are transferred, the distinction between mortgage and pledge ceases to be of much practical importance—the title to the collateral depends not on the principal obligation, but on the mode of transfer; Thomson-Houston Electric Co. v. Electric Co., 65 Fed. 341, 12 C. C. A. 643. But there is a distinction between the position of the pledgee in relation to the pledgor and in relation to third persons. His position cannot be described as simply that of a trustee, because he holds the collateral primarily for his own benefit, which affects his relation to the pledge; Plucker v. Teller, 174 Pa. 529, 34

Atl. 208, 52 Am. St. Rep. 825. So far as the pledgor is concerned the question of the title of the pledgee is determined by the intention of the parties; as to third parties he is practically owner. Thus a pledgee of stock may transfer it to his own name; Smith v. Bank, 82 Tex. 368, 17 S. W. 779; though this is not necessary; Tombler v. Ice Co., 17 Tex. Civ. App. 596, 43 S. W. 896; otherwise in Vermont; French v. White, 78 Vt. 89, 62 Atl. 35, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 804, 6 Ann. Cas. 479; Jones, Pledges § 151; and so far as the corporation is concerned he is the owner of it; Boyd v. Mills, 149 Pa. 363, 24 Atl. 287. The legal title to a pledged note or chose in action is in him; Withers v. Sandlin, 36 Fla. 619, 18 South. 856; Luter v. Roberts (Tex.) 39 S. W. 1002. He occupies the position of a bona fide holder for value, except when the pledge is for an existing debt; Moore v. Ensley, 112 Ala. 228, 20 South. 744; and though an assignee of a pledgee have notice of equities, he is not bound by them if his assignor, the pledgee, had not; Louisville Trust Co. v. R. Co., 75 Fed. 433, 22 C. C. A. 378. His title to an accommodation note is good, notwithstanding equities between maker and payee; McCrady v. Jones, 36 S. C. 136, 15 S. E. 430; and he has the rights of a bona fide holder against the corporation, when the collateral is a certificate of stock which proves to have been fraudulently issued; Fifth Avenue Bk. v. R. Co., 137 N. Y. 231, 33 N. E. 378, 19 L. R. A. 331, 33 Am. St. Rep. 712. See Stock. A pledgee's lien on stock held for a debt is prior to the statutory lien of the corporation thereon if the debt was incurred prior to the debt to the corporation and if the latter had notice of the pledgee's lien; Curtice v. Bank, 110 Fed. 830.

Where a bankrupt trustee finds in the estate certificates for shares of a particular stock, subject to the demand of the customer for whom shares of that stock were bought by the bankrupt, the customer is entitled to the same, though the certificates may not be the identical ones purchased for him; if there are enough shares of such stock to satisfy the legal demand of such customer, those certificates will be presumed to be the certificates held by the bankrupt for such customer. It is the bankrupt's duty to use his own funds to replace such securities with others of the same kind, and in doing so he does not deplete the estate against his other creditors; the presumption is that such certificates were paid for out of his own funds to replace those of his customer and not that he embezzled the latter; Gorman v. Littlefield, 229 U. S. 19, 33 Sup. Ct. 690, 57 L. Ed. 1047.

He is bound by anything which should amount to notice that the pledgor is without authority to pledge; Gottberg v. Bank, 131 N. Y. 595, 30 N. E. 41; Clemens v. Heckscher, 185 Pa. 476, 40 Atl. 80; Commercial Bank v. Hurt, 99 Ala. 130, 12 South. 568, 19 L. R. A. 701, 42 Am. St. Rep. 38; Thurber v. Bank, 52 Fed. 513; 20 Can. S. C. R. 481. But in dealing with one in possession of the securities and having the apparent right to dispose of them he will be protected, though the pledge be a fraud on the real owner; Nelson v. Owen, 113 Ala. 372, 21 South. 75. Of course if the true owner has been deprived of possession by what amounts to embezzlement he can recover from the pledgee; O'Herron v. Gray, 168 Mass. 573, 47 N. E. 429, 40 L. R. A. 498, 60 Am. St. Rep. 411. And a pledgee from one who has no authority either to sell or pledge acquires no lien on the property as against the true owner; Patton v. Joliff, 44 W. Va. 88, 28 S. E. 740. As holder of a note to which there is a valid defence against the payee he is protected, but only to the extent of his interest, i. e. to the amount which he has advanced; Wright v. Hardie, 88 Tex. 653, 32 S. W. 885. See Haas v. Bank, 41 Neb. 754, 60 N. W. 85.

Factors and Agents. A factor cannot, at common law, pledge his principal's goods; and the principal may recover them from the pledgee's hands; 6 Maule & S. 1; [1893] 1 Q. B. 62; Hoffman v. Noble, 6 Metc. (Mass.) 68, 39 Am. Dec. 711; Buckley v. Packard, 20 Johns. (N. Y.) 421; Benny v. Pegram, 18 Mo. 191, 59 Am. Dec. 298; Warner v. Martin, 11 How. (U. S.) 209, 226, 13 L. Ed. 667; Thurber v. Bank, 52 Fed. 513; and this is so whether entrusted with the goods themselves or with the symbol of them, as a bill of lading; Allen v. Bank, 120 U. S. 20, 7 Sup. Ct. 460, 30 L. Ed. 573. But the Factors' Acts in England, to remedy the intolerable condition which would exist if an unknown owner were permitted to repudiate transactions of a factor, have provided that a pledge by a factor having a power of sale shall be valid. Similar acts have been passed in many of the states. See AGENTS; FACTOR; FACTORS' ACTS.

Co-Pledgees. A pledgee may hold a pledge for another pledgee also, and it will be a good pledge to both; Levy v. Winter, 43 La. Ann. 1049, 10 South. 198. If the pledge be not large enough for both debts after sale, and no other arrangement be made, the prior pledgee will have the whole of his debt paid before any part of the proceeds is applied to the subsequent pledge. If there is no priority of time, they will divide ratably. But an agreement between the parties will always determine the right of two or more pledgees; Marshall v. Bryant, 12 Mass. 321. Where possession is given to one of three pledgees, to hold for all three, the other two have a constructive possession, which is equally good, for the purpose of sharing, with an actual possession. Hence the mere manual possession of one pledgee will not give a right to discharge the whole debt of the holder and a part only of that of his copledgee's. So, by the rule of constructive possession, if the holder should lose the pledge by his own negligence, he would be liable to his co-pledgees out of actual possession, as well as to his pledgor.

Substituted collateral is held on the same terms as that originally pledged, the surrender of that given up being sufficient consideration for the new deposit; Hoffman v. Schoyer, 143 Ill. 598, 28 N. E. 823; Midland Nat. Bank v. Ry. Co., 132 Mo. 492, 38 S. W. 521, 53 Am. St. Rep. 505; Blydenstein v. Security & T. Co., 67 Fed. 469, 15 C. C. A. 14. Collateral deposited on a demand by the pledgee for additional "margin" would probably be held to be security given for an existing debt. The point does not appear to have been decided. When the pledgee changes the form of the collateral he continues to hold under the terms of the pledge, e. g. where he forecloses a mortgage and buys in the land; Lathrop v. Adkisson, 87 Ga. 339, 13 S. E. 517. See McArthur v. Magee, 114 Cal. 126, 45 Pac. 1068; Montague v. R. Co., 124 Mass. 242; Dalton v. Smith, 86 N. Y. 176; Hopkins v. Hemm, 159 Ill. 416, 42 N. E. 848.

But see infra under sub-title Remedies of Pledgee.

Other debts. A pledge cannot, in general, be held for any other debt than that which it was given to secure, except on the special agreement and consent of the parties; 6 Ves. 226; Armstrong v. McLean, 153 N. Y. 490, 47 N. E. 912; Hallowell v. Bank, 154 Mass. 359, 28 N. E. 281, 13 L. R. A. 315; Cross v. Brown (R. I.) 33 Atl. 370. (The civil and Scotch law are otherwise; 2 Bell, Com. 22.) Unless the intention is clear to the contrary it will be held that this special agreement applies only to subsequent debts; Clymer v. Patterson, 52 N. J. Eq. 188, 27 Atl. 645; and the court was equally divided where a custom of brokers was set up to justify the application to existing debts; Bacon's Adm'r v. Bacon's Trustees, 94 Va. 686, 27 S. E. 576. Where a judgment has been paid the parties may lawfully agree that it shall remain as collateral for a new loan made, or to be made; Merchants N. Bk. v. Mosser, 161 Pa. 469, 29 Atl. 1.

The renewal of the note or obligation of pledge does not affect the pledgee's rights in regard to the collaterals, it is a mere extension of the original contract; Case v. Fant, 53 Fed. 41, 3 C. C. A. 418, 10 U. S. App. 415; Colebr. Collat. Secur. § 14.

Assignment by the pledgee is valid, in the absence of an agreement to the contrary, and carries with it all the collaterals pledged as security. The pledgor is not injured thereby, his right to redeem remaining unimpaired; Drake v. Cloonan, 99 Mich. 121, 57 N. W. 1098, 41 Am. St. Rep. 586; Waddle v. Owen, 43 Neb. 489, 61 N. W. 731; Hallack L. & Mfg. Co. v. Gray, 19 Colo. 149, 34 Pac. 1000. The pledgor may transfer his right to a third party, who may bring trover against the pledgee if the latter, after tender of the amount of the debt, refuse to deliver the pledge; Bush v. Lyon, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 52; L. R. 1 Q. B. 585; In re Ashton's Appeal, 73 Pa. 153; Belden v. Perkins, 78 Ill. 449.

Conversion. If the pledgee assign the debt without the collateral he loses his lien on the latter, and the pledgor can recover it. If he assign the collateral, except by exercising whatever right of sale he has under the pledge, he is liable to the pledgor, who has an immediate right of action, without tendering the amount due, for the conversion, though the defendant can offset the debt due him; Smith v. Savin, 69 Hun 311, 23 N. Y. Supp. 568. If he hold negotiable paper he has no right to sell it, but should wait until its maturity and then collect it; Goldsmidt v. First Methodist Church, 25 Minn. 202; Joliet I. & S. Co. v. Brick Co., 82 Ill. 548, 25 Am. Rep. 341; Alex. L. & H. R. Co. v. Burke, 22 Gratt. (Va.) 262; Wheeler v. Newbould, 16 N. Y. 392; but a court may under certain circumstances order a judicial sale of it; Cleghorn v. Trust Co., 57 Minn. 341, 59 N. W. 320, 47 Am. St. Rep. 615. See Blood v. Loan Co., 164 Pa. 95, 30 Atl. 362; Boldewahn v. Schmidt, 89 Wis. 444, 62 N. W. 177; Dimock v. Bank, 55 N. J. L. 296, 25 Atl. 926, 39 Am. St. Rep. 643; Manning v. Shriver, 79 Md. 41, 28 Atl. 899. Treating the pledge as his own property in disregard of his obligation to the pledgor is a conversion; Sheridan v. Presas, 18 Misc. 180, 41 N. Y. Supp. 451.

Shares of stock have no individuality, no earmarks. The certificates are merely evidence of ownership, muniments of title, like title deeds. Therefore a pledgee of stocks need not preserve a careful separation of certificates connected with each transaction, but complies with his obligation by holding at all times a sufficient number of shares to answer the pledge when called on; Hubbell v. Drexel, 11 Fed. 115; Smith v. Bank, 82 Tex. 368, 17 S. W. 779. The right to re-pledge for his own debt was not enjoyed by a common-law pledgee, but where a custom of brokers justifies re-pledging securities of customers, it is not unlawful; Skiff v. Stoddard, 63 Conn. 198, 26 Atl. 874, 28 Atl. 104, 21 L. R. A. 102; [1893] 2 Ch. Div. 120. No usage will justify such re-pledging of the collateral as to put it out of the power of the pledgee to return it on payment of his debt; that would be to destroy the contract; German Sav. Bk. v. Renshaw, 78 Md. 475, 28 Atl. 281. If a broker re-hypothecate for a larger amount than the pledgor's debt to him, for his own benefit, he is guilty of conversion; Douglas v. Carpenter, 17 App. Div. 329, 45 N. Y. Supp. 219. See, as to pledgees of shares, In re Argus Printing Co., 1 N. D. 434, 48 N. W. 347, 12 L. R. A. 781, 26 Am. St. Rep. 639.

Re-delivery to pledgee. Possession is of the very essence of the pledge, and if possession be re-delivered by the pledgee, or with his consent, without more, the pledge is extinguished. The exceptions to the rule are where the pledgor holds as the pledgee's agent, or where the pledge is re-delivered for a temporary purpose only, e. g. for sale, or for collection or suit by the pledgor; Easton v. Bank, 127 U. S. 532, 8 Sup. Ct. 1297, 32 L. Ed. 210; [1895] App. Cas. 56; Winslow v. Iron Co. (Tenn.) 42 S. W. 698; Leahy v. Simpson's Adm'r, 60 Mo. App. 83; Cooley v. Ry. Co., 53 Minn. 327, 55 N. W. 141, 39 Am. St. Rep. 609. Such possession by the pledgor will not defeat the pledge.

Property. The pledgee has at common law a special property in the pledge, and is entitled to the exclusive possession of it during the time and for the objects for which it is pledged. If a wrong-doer take the pledge from him, he is not thereby ousted from his right. His special property is enough for him to support replevin or trover against the wrong-doer. He has, moreover, a right of action, because he is responsible to his pledgor for proper custody of the bailment. The pledgor, also, may have his action against the wrong-doer resting it on the ground of his general property. A judgment for either pledgor or pledgee is a bar against a similar action by the other; 2 Bla. Com. 395; 1 B. & Ald. 59; Lyle v. Barker, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 457. See White v. Webb, 15 Conn. 302; Thayer v. Hutchinson, 13 Vt. 504, 37 Am. Dec. 607.

The pledgee may bring replevin or trover against the pledgor if the latter remove the pledge before paying the debt and thus injure the pledgee's rights, on the ground that the owner has parted with his absolute right of disposing of the chattel until he has redeemed it from its state of pledge; 2 Taunt. 268; Walcott v. Keith, 22 N. H. 196; Minott v. Elliott, 2 McCord (S. C.) 126. He recovers only the value of his special property as against the pledgor, or one who derives title from him; Brownell v. Hawkins, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 491; but the value of the whole property as against a stranger, and the balance beyond the special property, he holds for the owner; White v. Webb, 15 Conn. 302.

If the owner brings the action and recovers the whole damages, including those for deprivation of possession, it must be with the consent of the pledgee.

A creditor of the pledgor can only take his interest, and must pay the debt before securing the pledge. It is now settled that the pledgor's general property in the pledge may be sold on execution, and the purchaser or assignee of the pledgor succeeds to the pledgor's rights and may himself redeem. At common law, a pledge could not be taken in execution; 1 Ves. 278; Srodes v. Caven, 3 Watts (Pa.) 258; Pomeroy v. Smith, 17

Plek. (Mass.) 85; Averill v. Irish, 1 Gray (Mass.) 254; Dowler v. Cushwa, 27 Md. 354; Briggs v. Walker, 21 N. H. 72. On an extent, the king takes a pawn on paying the pawnee's debt; 2 Chit. Prerog. 285.

Where securities have been pledged by assignment and delivery, it would seem that the property vests in the pledgee, who in suit upon them can recover their full value; Morgan v. Lake View Co., 97 Wis. 275, 72 N. W. 872. It has been held, however, that the pledgor does not entirely lose his right to protect his interests and can proceed against the maker of notes transferred by him as collateral; O'Kelly v. Ferguson, 49 La. Ann. 1230, 22 South. 783; and that when the pledgee refuses to proceed for collection he can proceed in equity against the pledgee and the maker; Baker v. Burkett, 75 Miss. 89, 21 So. 970. A bill which discloses that complainant has pledged the stock for which he sues is not demurrable on the ground that it fails to show payment in full of the debt for which the stock was pledged, because a pledgor always has an interest sufficient to enable him to maintain a suit; Smith v. Lee, 77 Fed. 779. Where a pledgee of securities has wrongfully re-hypothecated them, and the owner secures them by paying the debt for which they were re-hypothecated, a judgment recovered by the pledgor against the original pledgee for the conversion does not vest the title to the securities in the pledgee; Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. Schiff, 78 Fed. 216.

Ordinary care. The pledgee is bound to take ordinary care of the pledge, and is liable only for neglect of such care, the bailment being for the mutual benefit of the parties; Cooper v. Simpson, 41 Minn. 46, 42 N. W. 601, 4 L. R. A. 194, 16 Am. St. Rep. 667; Damon v. Waldteufel, 99 Cal. 234, 33 Pac. 903. Where he is to do work upon the pledge and incur expenditure he must use reasonable diligence to secure the best net results, and account, showing that expenses for which allowance is claimed were reasonable and necessary; Second N. Bk. v. Sproat, 55 Minn. 14, 56 N. W. 254; where he is to sell, paying himself out of the proceeds, he will be liable for carelessness in properly keeping the pledge, and for failing to sell until the market has fallen; Anderson v. Carothers, 18 Wash. 520, 52 Pac. 229. If the pledge is lost, and the pledgee has not failed to exercise ordinary care, he may still recover his debt. Such losses often result from casualty, superior force, or intrinsic defect against which a man of ordinary prudence would not have effectually guarded himself. If a pledgor find it necessary to employ an agent, and exercise ordinary care in the selection, he will not be liable for the latter's neglect or misconduct; Commercial Bank v. Martin, 1 La. Ann. 344, 45 Am. Dec. 87; Exeter Bank v. Gordon, 8 N. H. 66; St. Losky v. Davidson, 6 Cal. 643;

Plymouth Co. Bk. v. Gilman, 9 S. D. 278, 68 N. W. 735, 62 Am. St. Rep. 868. Loss or depreciation in value of the thing pledged, through negligence of the pledgee, does not operate to extinguish pro tanto the debt secured; Cooper v. Simpson, 41 Minn. 46, 42 N. W. 601, 4 L. R. A. 194, 16 Am. St. Rep. 667; but the pledgee is liable to the pledgor for the depreciation in value of the property pledged after a tender of the amount due and a refusal of the pledgee to deliver; Loughborough v. McNevin, 74 Cal. 250, 14 Pac. 369, 15 Pac. 773, 5 Am. St. Rep. 435.

Loss by theft is prima facie evidence of a want of ordinary care, and the bailee must rebut the presumption. The facts in each case regulate the liability. Theft is only evidence, in short, and not absolute presumption, of negligence. Perhaps the only safe rule is that, where the pledgee pleads loss by theft as ground for not performing his duty, to excuse himself he must show that the theft could not have been prevented by ordinary care on his part. If the bailor should assert in his declaration that the pledge was lost by the bailee's fault, he would be compelled to prove the charge as laid.

The holder of collateral security, by accepting it, binds himself to use reasonable diligence in protecting it; Northwestern N. Bk. v. Mfg. Co., 71 Fed. 113, 17 C. C. A. 638. Thus, by negligently releasing the indorser he becomes chargeable with the amount of a note; Chemical N. Bk. v. Armstrong, 50 Fed. 798; if he refuse to sue on a note the pledgor may file a bill to have the note collected and credited on the debt; Baker v. Burkett, 75 Miss. 89, 21 South. 970; by failure to use due diligence to collect accounts assigned he becomes responsible for the resulting losses; Montague v. Stelts, 37 S. C. 200, 15 S. E. 968, 34 Am. St. Rep. 736; he must account for the real value of an insurance policy surrendered to the company for its cash value without notice to the pledgor; Manton v. Robinson (R. I.) 37 Atl. 8. But as assignee of a policy of life insurance he is not obliged to pay premiums unless he has engaged to do so; Killoran v. Sweet, 72 Hun 194, 25 N. Y. Supp. 295; though authorized to sell collateral in the event of its depreciation he is not bound to do so, nor liable if he fails; Howell v. Dimock, 15 App. Div. 102, 44 N. Y. Supp. 271; by taking notes secured on property he incurs no obligation to sue for the property, and if he does so, at the request of the pledgor, he incurs no obligation to take charge of it, and advance expenses upon it; Bank v. Pulley Co., 97 Tenn. 308, 37 S. W. 8; when only required to collect a sufficient sum on a note to pay the debt, and then to turn it over to the pledgor, after collecting such sum, he is not liable for failure to take prompt steps to collect the residue at maturity; Clark v. Cullen (Tenn.) 44 S. W. 204. But he is responsible as bailee after, as well as before, the maturity of the debt; Butler v. Greene, 49 Neb. 280, 68 N. W. 496.

Pledgee's expenses. Whatever reasonable expense is necessarily incurred by the pledgee in keeping and caring for the property pledged, and protecting it against liens and taxes and assessments, and asserting title to it, or rendering it available, is a fair charge against the property pledged; Furness v. Bank, 147 Ill. 570, 35 N. E. 624; Bank v. Frese, 116 Cal. 9, 47 Pac. 783; Gregory v. Pike, 67 Fed. 837, 15 C. C. A. 33. For any unusual care he may get compensation from the pledgor, if it were not contemplated by the parties or is implied in the nature of the bailment; 2 Salk. 522; 1 Pars. Contr. 593. He may collect his expenses and costs out of a note held as collateral; Hickson Lumber Co. v. Pollock, 139 N. C. 174, 51 S. E. 855.

Use. The reasonable use of a pledge is allowed to a pledgee, according to Lord Holt, Sir Wm. Jones, and Story, provided it be of no injury or peril to the bailment. The reason given by Story is precise, namely, that where use of the pledge is beneficial to it, or cannot depreciate it, the consent of the pledgor to such use may be fairly presumed; but not otherwise. Still, the word peril is somewhat broad. If the pawn be in its nature a charge upon the pawnee,—as a horse or a cow,—he may use it, moderately, by way of recompense. The pawnee is answerable in damages for an injury happening while he is using the pawn. Still, though he use it tortiously, he is only answerable by action. His pledgee's lien is not thereby forfeited; Thompson v. Patrick, 4 Watts (Pa.) 414. A pledgee can exercise a horse, but not loan it for hire. The rule is, that if he derive any profits from the pledge they must be applied to the debt; Houton v. Holliday, 6 N. C. 111, 5 Am. Dec. 522. A sewing machine that is pledged cannot be used; McArthur v. Howett, 72 Ill. 358.

Redemption. The pledgor may redeem at any time until his right to do so has been foreclosed by judicial decree, or by sale. He has his whole lifetime in which to redeem, and the right survives to his representatives; Perry v. Craig, 3 Mo. 516. Failure to pay the debt at maturity works no forfeiture; Hyams v. Bamberger, 10 Utah 3, 36 Pac. 202. If the pledgee fail to deliver on tender, the pledgor may maintain trover, or if special ground be shown, may proceed in equity; Nelson v. Owen, 113 Ala. 372, 21 South. 75.

Remedies of pledgee. The contract of pledge is security for a debt or engagement, that is to say it is a secondary or subordinate contract, and the pledgee may enforce the primary contract, or may proceed upon any one of several collateral securities, or may proceed upon all together, unless restricted by his engagement with the pledgor, though he can have but one satisfaction of the debt. It is a settled principle of equity that a creditor holding collaterals is not bound to apply them before enforcing his direct remedies against the debtor; Lewis v. U. S., 92 U. S. 618, 23 L. Ed. 513; Jennings v. Loeffler, 184 Pa. 318, 39 Atl. 214; Burnham v. Windram, 164 Mass. 313, 41 N. E. 305; Barnes v. Bradley, 56 Ark. 105, 19 S. W. 319; Childs v. Carlstein Co., 76 Fed. 86. Even where the pledgee wrongfully claims that he is the owner of the goods, the pledgor cannot recover them without a tender of the debt; 67 L. T. 642; and the levy of an attachment by the pledgee on the pledge in the hands of the pledge-holder is not a waiver of the pledge; Marshall v. Otto, 59 Fed. 249; Guenther v. Cary (Ky.) 34 S. W. 232. But one personal obligation cannot constitute collateral security for another obligation of the same debtor, hence if he hold bonds of a corporation as collateral for its note he cannot, if the pledgor become insolvent, claim both on the notes and the bonds; International Trust Co. v. Cattle Co., 3 Wyo. 803, 31 Pac. 408, 19 L. R. A. 640; In re Waddell-Entz Co., 67 Conn. 324, 35 Atl. 257.

Formerly on default the pledgee had no power to realize upon his pledge, in the absence of agreement, except by securing a judicial decree; Glanv. lib. x. c. 6; 5 Bligh N. S. 136; Hart v. Ten Eyck, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 100; Wadsworth v. Thompson, 3 Gilman (Ill.) 423; Luckett v. Townsend, 3 Tex. 119, 49 Am. Dec. 723. While this might in some cases still be necessary (see Cleg-horn v. Trust Co., 57 Minn. 341, 59 N. W. 320, 47 Am. St. Rep. 615), it is now generally conceded that on default the pledgee may sell after demand for payment and reasonable notice to pledgor. The pledge must be sold at public auction, and if it be divisible, only enough must be sold to pay the debt.

Generally an agreement is entered into when the pledge is made which provides what remedies the pledgee shall have in case of default, and the agreement of the parties will be sustained if not fraudulent or contrary to public policy; Hyatt v. Argenti, 3 Cal. 151; Hunter v. Hamilton, 52 Kan. 195, 34 Pac. 782. Thus the pledgor may waive notice; Williams v. Trust Co., 133 N. Y. 660, 31 N. E. 29; or authorize the pledgee to sell at public or private sale without advertisement or notice, at his discretion; Smith v. Lee, 84 Fed. 557; but the sale must be in good faith; Leahy v. Lobdell & Co., 80 Fed. 665, 26 C. C. A. 75. The fact that the price realized was small will not affect the purchaser's title; Wheelwright v. Transp. Co., 56 Fed. 164. But a merely colorable and pretended sale of the pledged property by the pledgee does not affect the rights of the pledgor as against one not standing in the position of a bona fide purchaser; Norton v. Baxter, 41

Minn. 146, 42 N. W. 865, 4 L. R. A. 305, 16 Ann. St. Rep. 679. The pledgee may in anticipation of default make a valid contract to sell the collateral when the default occurs; Taft v. Church, 162 Mass. 527, 39 N. E. 283. But a stipulation for a forfeiture to pledgee in case of default is void; Vickers v. Battershall, 84 Hun 496, 32 N. Y. Supp. 314; and a court of equity will scrutinize carefully an agreement for transfer of ownership, and set it aside if it appear to have been obtained under a harsh contract, brought about by the position of vantage occupied by the pledgee; Ritchie v. McMullen, 79 Fed. 522, 25 C. C. A. 50.

The pledgee of a note may collect it when due, and of a mortgage, may foreclose it; Union Trust Co. v. Hasseltine, 200 Mass. 414, 86 N. E. 777, 16 Ann. Cas. 123; he may collect dividends on pledged stocks; id.; but a pledged note cannot be sold until maturity; see 14 Harv. L. Rev. 462.

Though a pledge authorizes a sale, in case of default, at public or private sale without notice, a public sale without public notice is invalid, though in such case notice to the pledgor is not essential; Tennent v. Ins. Co., 133 Mo. App. 345, 112 S. W. 754; where a broker advanced the entire price of shares bought for a customer, a notice to him to take up the stock or furnish a margin, or the stock would be sold, is defective if it contain no notice of the time and place of the sale (there being no agreement dispensing with notice) and a sale thereupon made on the "curb" constitutes a conversion; Content v. Banner, 184 N. Y. 121, 76 N. E. 913, 6 Ann. Cas. 106.

Mere delay by the pledgee in enforcing his rights against the collateral security does not make him liable for the loss of the security; Loeb v. Bank, 88 Ark. 108, 113 S. W. 1017; but where the holder of a note pledges it, the pledgee is liable if guilty of laches, if by seasonable legal proceedings he might have collected it; Meyer Bros. v. Colvin, 122 La. 153, 47 South. 447.

Where an agreement pledging securities to a trustee for the payment of interest on certificates provided that in case of default the trustee might institute such proceedings as counsel might advise, the trustee was entitled on default to resort to a court of equity, although the agreement provided a mode of enforcement without the intervention of a court; Land Title & Trust Co. v. Asphalt Co., 121 Fed. 192.

A pledgee as such has such an equitable interest therein as will entitle him to be heard in equity concerning the protection of his interests therein; Gorman-Wright Co. v. Wright, 134 Fed. 363, 67 C. C. A. 345.

In the absence of an agreement permitting it, the pledgee cannot buy the pledge; Appleton v. Turnbull, 84 Me. 72, 24 Atl. 592; Easton v. Bank, 127 U. S. 532, 8 Sup. Ct.

1297, 32 L. Ed. 210; though his purchase is voidable merely, at the election of the pledgor, and not void; Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. R. Co., 54 Fed. 759, 4 C. C. A. 561; First N. Bk. v. Rush, 85 Fed. 539, 29 C. C. A. 333. But on procuring a decree of foreclosure in a proceeding in equity to which he has made the pledgor a party, he can sell, and buy in, taking an indefeasible title; Anderson v. Olin, 145 Ill. 168, 34 N. E. 55.

It is almost an universal rule that a pledgee is precluded from buying at a sale of the property pledged; Lord v. Hartford, 175 Mass. 320, 56 N. E. 609. When the thing pledged is a mortgage, he may foreclose the mortgage for breach of condition, and such foreclosure is valid against the mortgagee; Smith v. Bunting, 86 Pa. 116. And if the mortgagee, who is also the pledgor, is joined in the foreclosure sale, his right to redeem from the pledgee will likewise be extinguished; Bloomer v. Sturges, 58 N. Y. 168. On the same principle, the pledgee may, with the pledgor's express authority, buy the property at the mortgage sale, with the result that the mortgagee's claim is transferred to the proceeds; Jennings v. Wyzanski, 188 Mass. 285, 74 N. E. 347. But with these qualifications the weight of authority supports the principle that the only effect of the sale is the substitution of the land for the mortgage in the hands of the assignee, who takes the legal title subject to a trust in favor of the pledgor; In re Estate of Gilbert, 104 N. Y. 200, 10 N. E. 148; Montague v. R. Co., 124 Mass. 242; contra, Anderson v. Messinger, 146 Fed. 929, 77 C. C. A. 179, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1094.

When corporate bonds, pledged to secure claims against the company, are sold at public auction and bought in by the pledgee the latter is entitled to be paid the full value of the bonds, and not merely the amount for which they were pledged; Atlantic Trust Co. v. Irr. Co., 86 Fed. 975.

Consult Wigmore, The Pledge Idea, 10 Harv. L. Rev. 1, 389; Denis; Jones, Pledges; Colebrooke, Collateral Securities; Story, Bailments; Schouler, Bailments. See MORTGAGE; SALE; HYPOTHECATION; LIEN.

PLEDGE. One to whom a thing is pledged.

PLEDGES. In Pleading. Those persons who became sureties for the plaintiff's prosecution of the suit. Their names were anciently appended at the foot of the declaration. In time it became purely a formal matter, because the plaintiff was no longer liable to be amerced for a false claim, and the fictitious persons John Doe and Richard Roe became the universal pledges, or they might be omitted altogether; 1 Tidd, Pr. 455; Archb. Civ. Pl. 171; or inserted at any time before judgment; they are now omitted.

PLEDGOR. The party who makes a pledge.

PLEGII DE RETORNO HABENDO. Pledges to return the subject of distress, should the right be determined against the party bringing the action of replevin. 3 Steph. Com. 422, n.

PLEGIIS ACQUIETANDIS, WRIT DE. The name of an ancient writ in the English law, which lies where a man becomes pledge or surety for another to pay a certain sum of money at a certain day; after the day, if the debtor does not pay the debt, and the surety be compelled to pay, he shall have this writ to compel the debtor to pay the same. Fitzh. N. B. 321.

PLENA FORISFACTURA. See FORISFACTURA.

PLENA PROBATIO. In Civil Law. A term used to signify full proof, in contradistinction to semi-plena probatio, which is not merely a suspicion, but such evidence as produces a reasonable belief though not complete evidence. Tait, Ev. 273; Code 4. 19. 5. etc.; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 119.

PLENARTY. In Ecclesiastical Law. Signifies that a benefice is full. See AVOIDANCE.

PLENARY. Full; complete.

In the courts of admiralty, and in the English ecclesiastical courts, causes or suits in respect of the different course of proceedings in each are termed plenary or summary. Plenary, or full and formal, suits are those in which the proceedings must be full and formal; the term summary is applied to those causes where the proceedings are more succinct and less formal. 2 Chitty, Pr. 481.

PLENE ADMINISTRAVIT (Lat. he has fully administered). A plea in bar entered by an executor or administrator, by which he affirms that he had not in his possession at the time of the commencement of the suit, nor has had any time since, any goods of the deceased to be administered; when the plaintiff replies that the defendant had goods, etc., in his possession at that time, and the parties join issue, the burden of the proof will be on the plaintiff. See Fowler v. Sharp, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 323; 1 B. & Ald. 254; 11 Viner, Abr. 349; 12 id. 185; 3 Saund. (a) 315, n.

PLENE ADMINISTRAVIT PRÆTER (Lat. he has fully administered except). A plea by which a defendant executor or administrator admits that there is a residue remaining in his hands unadministered.

PLENE COMPUTAVIT (Lat. he has fully accounted). A plea in an action of account render, by which the defendant avers that he has fully accounted. Bac. Abr. Accompt (E). This plea does not admit the liability of the defendant to account. Whelen v. Watmough, 15 S. & R. (Pa.) 153.

PLENIPOTENTIARY. Possessing full powers; as, a minister plenipotentiary is one authorized fully to settle the matters connected with his mission, subject, however, to the ratification of the government by which he is authorized. See MINISTER.

PLENUM DOMINIUM (Lat.). The unlimited right which the owner has to use his property as he deems proper, without accountability to any one.

PLEVIN. A warrant, or assurance.

PLIGHT. An old English word, used sometimes for the estate with the habit and quality of the land. Co. Litt. 221. It extends to a rent-charge and to a possibility of dower. Id.

PLIMSOLL'S MARK. See LOAD LINE.

PLOUGH ALMS. The ancient payment of a penny to the church from every ploughland. 1 Mon. Aug. 256.

PLOUGH-BOTE. An allowance made to a rural tenant of wood sufficient for ploughs, harrows, carts, and other instruments of husbandry.

PLOUGH-LAND. In Old English Law. An uncertain quantity of land. According to some opinions, it contains one hundred and twenty acres. Co. Litt. 69 a.

PLOUGH SILVER. Money formerly paid by some tenants in lieu of service to plough the lord's land.

PLUNDER. The capture of personal property on land by a public enemy, with a view of making it his own. The property so captured is called plunder. See, for a full discussion of the subject, U. S. v. Stone, 8 Fed. 246; Carter v. Andrews, 16 Pick. (Mass.) 9; CAPTURE; BOOTY; PRIZE.

PLUNDERAGE. The embezzlement of goods on board of a ship.

The rule of the maritime law in such cases is that the whole crew shall be responsible for the property thus embezzled, because there must be some negligence in finding out the depredator; Lewis v. Davis, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 17; Knap v. The Eliza and Sarah, 1 Pet. Adm. 200, Fed. Cas. No. 7,873; Mariners v. Kensington, 1 Pet. Adm. 239, Fed. Cas. No. 9,085; 4 B. & P. 347.

PLURIES (Lat. many times). A writ issued subsequently to a first and second (alias) of the same kind, which have proved ineffectual. The name is given to it from the word pluries in the Latin form of the writ: "We command you, as we have often (pluries) commanded you before," which distinguishes it from those which have gone before. Pluries is variously translated, in the modern forms of writs, by "formerly," "more than once," "often." The next writ to the pluries is called the second pluries; and so on. 3 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 283; App. 15; Nat. Brev. 33.

PLY. A hackney carriage ples for hire if it solicits passengers in a railway station. 1 L. R. 6 Q. B. 351.

POACHING. Unlawfully entering land in night-time, armed, with intent to destroy game. 1 Russ. Crimes 469; 2 Steph. Comm. 20.

There is an interesting title on the early English game laws in Jacob, Law Dict.

POCKET JUDGMENT. A statute-merchant which was enforceable at any time after non-payment on the day assigned, without further proceedings.

POCKET SHERIFF. In English Law. A sheriff appointed by sole authority of the crown, not being one of the three nominated by the judges in the exchequer. 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 342.

PÆNA. "Originally signified the price or composition by which crime was expiated." James C. Carter, The Law, &c. 42.

PÆNA CORPORALIS. Corporal punishment.

PÆNA PILLORALIS. Punishment of the pillory. Fleta, lib. 1, ch. 38, § 11.

POINT. In Practice. A proposition or question arising in a case.

It is the duty of a judge to charge the jury on every point of law properly arising out of the issue which is propounded to him by counsel. But where the conclusion of a point does not necessarily flow from the premise contained in the first part of it, it is not error for the court to refuse to affirm it; Bascom v. Mfg. Co., 182 Pa. 427, 38 Atl. 510.

POINT RESERVED. A point or question of law, which the court, not being fully satisfied how to decide, in the trial of a cause, rules in favor of the plaintiff, but subject to revision on a motion for a new trial. If, after argument, it be found to have been ruled correctly, the verdict is supported; if otherwise, it is set aside. Tr. & H. Pr. § 708. It must be a pure question of law; the facts on which it is based must appear on the record, distinctly stated; and it must be a point which is decisive of the case. The verdict must be in favor of the plaintiff, and the defendant then moves for a new trial and judgment non obstante veredicto. See NON OBSTANTE VEREDICTO.

Statements of fact and of the law applicable thereto submitted to a trial judge with a request that he so charge the jury. See BRIEF; PAPER BOOK; CHARGE; INSTRUCTION.

POISON. In Medical Jurisprudence. Any substance which, when taken into the living organism, is capable of causing impairment or cessation of function. Blyth, Poisons.

The history of poisoning, and many remarkable early instances of a wide-spread use of poisons, are recorded in works on medical jurisprudence. See these, and also, especially, Taylor, Poisons; Archb. Cr. Pract. Waterman's ed. 940; Whart. & Stillé, Med. Jur.; 1 Beekman, Hist. Jur. 74. The classification proposed by Mr. Taylor (Med. Jur. §§ 71, 74, 78) is as follows:—

IRRITANTS.	{	MINERAL	{	NON-	{	Acids, Alka-
				METALLIC		lies and their Salts.
				METALLIC		(Arsenic).
				VEGETABLE—		(Croton Oil).
				ANIMAL—		(Cantharides).
NARCOTICS.	{		{	CEREBRAL	{	(Morphia).
				SPINAL		(Strychnia).
				CEREBRO-SPINAL		(Conia, Aconitina).
GASEOUS.						(Carbon Monoxide, Chlorine).

Irritant poisons, when taken in ordinary doses, occasion speedily violent vomiting and purging, preceded, accompanied, or followed by intense pain in the abdomen, commencing in the region of the stomach. The irritant effect of many poisons is a like feature, exerted upon various organs of excretion or secretion. The corrosive poisons, as distinguished from those in a more limited sense termed irritant, generally produce their results more speedily, and give chemical indications; but every corrosive poison acts as an irritant in the sense here adopted.

Narcotic poisons act chiefly on the brain or spinal marrow. Either immediately or some time after the poison has been swallowed, the patient suffers from headache, giddiness, paralysis, stupor, delirium, insensibility, and, in some instances, convulsions. Many narcotic poisons, of course, give rise to symptoms peculiar to themselves.

The effects of one class are, however, sometimes produced by the other,—more commonly as secondary, but sometimes even as primary symptoms.

The evidence of poisoning as derived from symptoms is to be looked for chiefly in the suddenness of their occurrence; this is perhaps the most reliable of all evidence derived from symptoms in cases of criminal poisoning; see Taylor, Pois. 107; Christison, Pois. 42; though none of this class of evidence can be considered as furnishing anything better than a high degree of probability: the regularity of their increase; this feature is not universal, and exists in many diseases; uniformity in their nature; this is true in the case of comparatively few poisons; the symptoms begin soon after a meal; but sleep, the manner of administration, or certain diseases, may affect this rule in the case of some poisons; when several partake at the same time of the same poisoned food, all suffer from similar symptoms; 2 Park. C. C. 235; Taylor, Pois. 118; the symptoms first appearing while the body is in a state of perfect health; Archb. Cr. Pl. Waterman ed. 948.

Appearances which present themselves on post-mortem examinations are of importance in regard to some classes of irritant poisons; see The Hersey Case, Mass. 1861; Palmer's Case, Taylor, Poisons 697; 17 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 145; but many poisons leave no traces which can be so discovered.

Chemical analysis often results in important evidence, by discovering the presence of poison, which must then be accounted for; but a failure to detect it by no means proves that it has not been given. Christison, Poisons 61, 62.

The evidence derived from circumstances differs in nothing in principle from that in case of commission of other crimes.

Homicide by poisoning is generally either accidental, so as not to amount to murder, or deliberate: yet it has been held that there may be a verdict of murder in the second degree under an indictment for poisoning; State v. Dowd, 19 Conn. 388. The doctrine of principal and accessory is also modified to some extent in its application to cases of poisoning; 2 Mood. Cr. Cas. 120; 9 C. & P. 356; 9 Co. 81. To constitute an administering of poison, it is not necessary that there should be a delivery by hand; 4 C. & P. 356; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 651.

Intent to kill need not be specifically alleged in an indictment for murder by poison; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 346; 3 Cox, C. C. 300; 8 C. & P. 418; Com. v. Hersey, 2 Allen (Mass.) 173. Where a wholesale dealer supplied a poisonous drug in place of a harmless drug ordered, he was held liable in damages to the customer who bought it from the retailer and suffered injury from taking it; Thomas v. Winchester, 6 N. Y. 397, 57 Am. Dec. 455.

Many of the states have statutes inflicting severe penalties upon the administering of poisons with a malicious intent. See Archb. Cr. Pr. Waterman's ed. 942; Hicks v. Com., 86 Va. 223, 9 S. E. 1024, 19 Am. St. Rep. 891.

Practicing physicians, who are graduates of a medical college, are competent to testify as experts on the subject of arsenical poisoning, although it is not shown that they have had actual experience in poison cases; Siebert v. People, 143 Ill. 571, 32 N. E. 431.

As to gas poison, see 15 Med. Leg. J. 276.

POLE. A measure of length, equal to five yards and a half. See MEASURE.

POLES. The erection of poles in a street or on the sidewalk is an obstruction of the highway, and, like all other obstructions, is only justified when done under authority of law; People v. Tel. Co., 31 Hun (N. Y.) 596; Keasbey, Electric Wires. Where authorized, they must be erected in such manner as to cause the least interference with public travel and this condition is implied even if it were not expressed in the authority given; id.; in a proper case it is left to the jury to determine the question of damage; 15 N. J. L. J. 50; Wolfe v. Tel. Co., 33 Fed. 320; see Roberts v. Tel. Co., 77 Wis. 589, 46 N. W.

800, 20 Am. St. Rep. 143; but the rule of reasonable care does not require the company to provide against all contingencies of accident or inconvenience; Sheffield v. Tel. Co., 36 Fed. 164. It has been justly said that the question of damage arising from the obstruction of a highway by poles, depends largely on the extent of the right of the public which is under the control of the legislature, and subject to the exercise of its discretion in legalizing new uses of the highway; Keasbey, Electric Wires 157.

The question most discussed with respect to poles, has been whether their erection is a legitimate use of the street, and whether it imposes a new servitude on the land of the abutting owner. The substitution of electricity for horse power is said not to be a change of use; Keasbey, Electric Wires 106; but a different view was taken by the New Jersey supreme court; 15 N. J. L. J. 39, 45.

That they are an additional burden: Postal Telegraph-Cable Co. v. Eaton, 170 Ill. 513, 49 N. E. 365, 39 L. R. A. 722, 62 Am. St. Rep. 390 (telegraph on highway); Goddard v. R. Co., 202 Ill. 362, 66 N. E. 1066 (electric on highway); Bronson v. Tel. Co., 67 Neb. 111, 93 N. W. 201, 60 L. R. A. 426, 2 Ann. Cas. 639 (poles on street or highway); Andreas v. Electric Co., 61 N. J. Eq. 69, 47 Atl. 555 (electric on highway); Brown v. Electric Co., 138 N. C. 533, 51 S. E. 62, 69 L. R. A. 631, 107 Am. St. Rep. 554 (electric on railway); *Donovan v. St. Rep. 908 (county roads).

That they are not an additional burden: Magee v. Overshiner, 150 Ind. 127, 49 N. E. 951, 40 L. R. A. 370, 65 Am. St. Rep. 358 (telephone in city); McCann v. Tel. Co., 115 Tenn. 416, 90 S. W. 620, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 323, 112 Am. St. Rep. 856, 5 Ann. Cas. 838 (telephone in city); Lowther v. Bridgeman, 57 W. Va. 306, 50 S. E. 410 (rural telephone); Kirby v. Tel. Co., 17 S. D. 362, 96 N. W. 3, 2 Ann. Cas. 152 (telephone in city).

nized, the courts will regulate strictly the manner in which the privilege is used. An injunction has been granted against the erection of broken or unsightly poles; Forstythe v. Tel. Co., 12 Mo. App. 494; so the poles must be set with as little damage as possible and the cutting off trees to clear the way for them, will be a ground for recovering damages; Dailey v. State, 51 Ohio St. 348, 37 N. E. 710, 24 L. R. A. 724, 46 Am. St. Rep. 578; Memphis Bell Tel. Co. v. Hunt, 16 Lea (Tenn.) 456, 1 S. W. 159, 57 Am. Rep. 237; Tissot v. Tel. Co., 39 La. Ann. 996, 3 South. 261, 4 Am. St. Rep. 248.

The poles and fixtures of a telephone company erected along the highway by permission of the locality are chattels and may be seized and sold on execution, as they do not become part of the realty; Readfield Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Cyr, 95 Me. 287, 49 Atl. 1047; but the poles and wires of an electric light plant have been held appurtenances to the realty on which the operating plants were built; Capital City Gas Light Co. v. Ins. Co., 51 Ia. 31, 50 N. W. 579; Fechet v. Drake, 2 Ariz. 239, 12 Pac. 694; Badger Lumber Co. v. Power Co., 48 Kan. 182, 29 Pac. 476, 15 L. R. A. 652, 30 Am. St. Rep. 301. In another case they were held not fixtures to the land on which the electric light is generated or appurtenant thereto for the purpose of taxation as real estate, though they could not be assessed as personal property because not within the enumeration of the statute; Newport Illuminating Co. v. Tax Assessors, 19 R. I. 632, 36 Atl. 426, 36 L. R. A. 266.

POLICE. That species of superintendence by magistrates which has principally for its object the maintenance of public tranquillity among the citizens. The officers who are appointed for this purpose are also called the police.

The word police has three significations. The first relates to the measures which are adopted to keep order, the laws and ordinances on cleanliness, health, the markets, etc. The second has for its object to procure to the authorities the means of detecting even the smallest attempts to commit crime, in order that the guilty may be arrested before their plans are carried into execution and delivered over to the justice of the country. The third comprehends the laws, ordinances, and other measures which require the citizens to exercise their rights in a particular form.

Police has also been divided into administrative police, which has for its object to maintain constantly public order in every part of the general administration; and judiciary police, which is intended principally to prevent crimes by punishing the criminals. Its object is to punish crimes which the administrative police has not been able to prevent.

Policemen have only statutory powers; Martin v. Houck, 141 N. C. 317, 54 S. E. 291, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 576. See BARGAR, Riot Law. See PENSION.

POLICE JURY. In Louisiana. A name given to certain officers who collectively exercise jurisdiction in certain cases of police: as, levying taxes, regulating roads, etc.

POLICE POWER. The powers of government inherent in every sovereignty. License Cases, 5 How. (U. S.) 583, 12 L. Ed. 256; In re Allyn's Appeal, 81 Conn. 534, 71 Atl. 794, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 630, 129 Am. St. Rep. 225. First used by Marshall, C. J., in Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. 443, 6 L. Ed. 678.

The power vested in the legislature to make such laws as they shall judge to be for the good of the commonwealth and its subjects. Bacon v. Walker, 204 U. S. 311, 27 Sup. Ct. 289, 51 L. Ed. 499. It is much easier to realize the instances and sources of this power than to mark its boundaries or prescribe limits to its exercise; id. The general police power is reserved to the states, subject to the limitation that it may not trespass on the rights and powers vested in the national government; In re Heff, 197 U. S. 488, 25 Sup. Ct. 506, 49 L. Ed. 848.

The power to govern men and things, extending to the protection of the lives, limbs, health, comfort, and quiet of all persons and the protection of all property within the state. Thorpe v. R. Co., 27 Vt. 149, 62 Am. Dec. 625. Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U. S. 11, 25 Sup. Ct. 358, 49 L. Ed. 643, 3 Ann. Cas. 765.

The authority to establish such rules and regulations for the conduct of all persons as may be conducive to the public interest. People v. Budd, 117 N. Y. 14, 22 N. E. 670, 682, 5 L. R. A. 559, 15 Am. St. Rep. 460. Police power extends to what is for the greatest welfare of the state, and is not confined merely to the suppression of what is offensive, disorderly or unsanitary. Bacon v. Walker, 204 U. S. 311, 27 Sup. Ct. 289, 51 L. Ed. 499.

It embraces the whole system of internal regulation by which the state seeks not only to preserve the public order and to prevent offences against itself, but also to establish for the intercourse of citizens with citizens, those rules of good manners and good neighborhood which are calculated to prevent the conflict of rights and to insure to each the uninterrupted enjoyment of his own, so far as it is reasonably consistent with the right enjoyment of rights by others; Cooley, Const. Lim. 572.

Most of the law on this subject has been the growth of the nineteenth century and the latter half of it. The earliest instances of the exercise of this power were found when houses were destroyed to prevent the spread of fire. The right to take a man's property in such cases was called the law of overruling necessity. There are also some very early instances of sanitary legislation. An act of parliament in 1388 imposed a penalty for throwing animal filth or refuse into rivers, and one of 1489 prohibited the slaughtering of cattle in the cities. Laws regulating wharfingers, millers, common carriers, innkeepers, chimney sweeps, auctioneers, ferry-keepers and drovers have been common for many centuries before the term was used.

Among former exercises of the police power which have become obsolete, may be mentioned laws restraining extravagance in dress, punishing heresy, interfering with the worship of particular churches or sects, and restraining speculation, or combinations to control a product and by withholding it, increase the price thereof; Tiedm. Pol. Pow. § 96 a; although in some of the states there are statutory provisions forbidding the cornering of grain, they are repetitions of old laws as to forestalling and engrossing; id.; Booth v. Illinois, 184 U. S. 425, 22 Sup. Ct. 425, 46 L. Ed. 623.

This right must be clearly distinguished from the administration of criminal law and from police regulations and police authority, nor should it be confused with eminent domain, as has sometimes been done, or with the power of taxation. It is distinct from both of these. It is more despotic and broader in its action than the right of eminent domain, caring for the public health and morals of the community, restraining individuals from interfering with them, and when it is found necessary to take private property under the police power, no compensation need be given the owner unless expressly provided by statute; Philadelphia v. Scott, 81 Pa. 80, 22 Am. Rep. 738; Keller v. Corpus Christi, 50 Tex. 614, 32 Am. Rep. 613; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Illinois, 200 U. S. 561, 26 Sup. Ct. 341, 50 L. Ed. 596, 4 Ann. Cas. 1175; New Orleans G. L. Co. v. Drainage Commission, 197 U. S. 453, 25 Sup. Ct. 471, 49 L. Ed. 831; Carthage v. Frederick, 122 N. Y. 268, 25 N. E. 480, 10 L. R. A. 178, 19 Am. St. Rep. 490. It is the application of the personal right or principle of self-preservation of the body politic; Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 378; to its exercises there are no limits except the restrictions contained in the written constitution; 1 Thayer, Const. L. 720; Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U. S. 11, 25 Sup. Ct. 358, 49 L. Ed. 643, 3 Ann. Cas. 765; McLean v. Arkansas, 211 U. S. 539, 29 Sup. Ct. 206, 53 L. Ed. 315.

The confusion of police power with the power of taxation usually arises in cases where the police power has affixed a penalty to a certain act, or required licenses for certain occupations to be taken out and a sum paid therefor. But this is in no sense taxation, but an attempt to levy a tax which might be open to the constitutional objection of lack of equality. The admitted right to regulate includes the implied power to license or tax; Brown v. Maryland, 12 Wheat. (U. S.) 419, 6 L. Ed. 678; In re Rahrer, 140 U. S. 545, 11 Sup. Ct. 865, 35 L. Ed. 572. See LICENSE; Gundling v. Chicago, 177 U. S. 183, 20 Sup. Ct. 633, 44 L. Ed. 725; Phillips v. Mobile, 208 U. S. 472, 28 Sup. Ct. 370, 52 L. Ed. 578.

Each law relating to the police power involves the questions: First, is there a threatened danger? Second, does the regulation involve a constitutional right? Third, is the regulation reasonable? People v. Smith, 108 Mich. 527, 66 N. W. 382, 32 L. R. A. 853, 62 Am. St. Rep. 715. See Health Department v. Church, 145 N. Y. 32, 39 N. E. 833, 27 L. R. A. 710, 45 Am. St. Rep. 579.

It extends to all the great public needs; Camfield v. U. S., 167 U. S. 518, 17 Sup. Ct. 864, 42 L. Ed. 260; includes the enforcement of commercial conditions such as the protection of bank deposits and checks drawn against them, by compelling co-operation among banks in order to protect depositors of failed banks; Noble State Bk. v. Haskell, 219 U. S. 104, 31 Sup. Ct. 186, 55 L. Ed. 112, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1062, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 487; Assaria State Bk. v. Dolley, 219 U. S. 121, 31 Sup. Ct. 189, 55 L. Ed. 123.

An ulterior public advantage may justify a comparatively insignificant taking of private property for what, in its immediate purpose, is a private use; Bacon v. Walker, 204 U. S. 311, 27 Sup. Ct. 289, 51 L. Ed. 499; Noble State Bk. v. Haskell, 219 U. S. 104, 31 Sup. Ct. 186, 55 L. Ed. 112, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1062, Ann. Cas. 1912A, 487.

The distinction between an incidental injury to rights of private property resulting from the exercise of this power, and the taking within the meaning of the constitution of private property for public use, is recognized in Northern Transp. Co. v. Chicago, 99 U. S. 635, 25 L. Ed. 336 (involving a claim for damages directly resulting from the construction by the city of Chicago of a tunnel under the Chicago river, whereby, for a very long time, the plaintiff was prevented from using its docks, and other property for purposes of business); Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 8 Sup. Ct. 273, 31 L. Ed. 205 (relating in part to the lawful prohibition by the state of the use of private property in a particular way, whereby its value was materially diminished, if not destroyed); New York & N. E. R. Co. v. Bristol, 151 U. S. 556, 14 Sup. Ct. 437, 38 L. Ed. 269 (involving the question whether a railroad company could be required to remove a grade crossing and to establish another at a different place); Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Chicago, 166 U. S. 226, 17 Sup. Ct. 581, 41 L. Ed. 979 (whether it was a condition of the exercise by the state of its authority to regulate the use of private property, that the owner should be indemnified for the injury resulting from the exercise of such authority); Gibson v. U. S., 166 U. S. 269, 17 Sup. Ct. 578, 41 L. Ed. 996 (in which the owner of a farm on an island in the Ohio river, at which there was a landing, sought to recover compensation for injury done to it by the construction by the United States of a dyke for the purpose of concentrating the flow in the main channel of the river); Seranton v. Wheeler, 179 U. S. 141, 21 Sup. Ct. 48, 45 L. Ed. 126 (involving the question whether the United States was required to compensate an owner of land fronting on a navigable river when his access to the shore was permanently obstructed by a pier erected for the purpose of improving navigation); Mills v. U. S., 46 Fed. 738, 12 L. R. A. 673 (where an improvement by the United States of the Savannah river resulted in so raising the water in that river as to flood the adjacent rice fields, that were ordinarily and naturally drained in the river, and rendering it necessary that expense be incurred to provide new drainage from those fields into a back river). These cases are all cited in the opinion in New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Interstate Com. Commission, 200 U. S. 361, 26 Sup. Ct. 272, 50 L. Ed. 515.

The rights insured to private corporations by their charters and the manner of their exercises are subject to such new regulations as from time to time may be made by the state; Hammond Packing Co. v. Arkansas, 212 U. S. 322, 29 Sup. Ct. 370, 53 L. Ed. 530, 15 Ann. Cas. 645; but these regulations must not conflict with the charter, nor take from the corporation any of its essential rights and privileges; Cooley, Const. Lim. 718; Sloan v. R. R., 61 Mo. 24, 21 Am. Rep. 397; Attorney General v. R. Co., 35 Wis. 425; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 161 U. S. 695, 16 Sup. Ct. 714, 40 L. Ed. 849.

A municipal corporation may regulate the speed of railroad trains within its limits; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Haggerty, 67 Ill. 113; (but only in the streets and public grounds of the municipality; State v. Jersey City, 29 N. J. L. 170); require the railroad to fence its tracks; Thorpe v. R. Co., 27 Vt. 156, 62 Am. Dec. 625; regulate the grade of the railroad and prescribe how the railroads may cross each other and apportion expenses of making necessary crossings between the corporations owning the roads; Pittsburg & C. R. Co. v. R. Co., 77 Pa. 173; it may require the railroad company to repair and maintain a safe viaduct over a street; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Nebraska, 170 U. S. 57, 18 Sup. Ct. 513, 42 L. Ed. 948; Northern P. R. Co. v. Minnesota, 208 U. S. 583, 28 Sup. Ct. 341, 52 L. Ed. 630; regulate crossings in a populous city; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Nebraska, 170 U. S. 58, 18 Sup. Ct. 513, 42 L. Ed. 948; limit the charges by the railroad company; Stone v. Trust Co., 116 U. S. 307, 6 Sup. Ct. 334, 388, 1191, 29 L. Ed.

636; prevent extortion on their part by unreasonable charges, favoritism, or discrimination; Georgia R. & Bank. Co. v. Smith, 129 U. S. 174, 9 Sup. Ct. 47, 32 L. Ed. 377; forbid consolidation of competing lines; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 161 U. S. 697, 16 Sup. Ct. 714, 40 L. Ed. 849; make the company liable for fires; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Mathews, 165 U. S. 1, 17 Sup. Ct. 243, 41 L. Ed. 611; require salaries and expenses of a state commission to be borne by the railroad corporations within the state; Charlotte, C. & A. R. Co. v. Gibbes, 142 U. S. 386, 12 Sup. Ct. 255, 35 L. Ed. 1051; require locomotive engineers to be licensed after examination as to competency; Smith v. Alabama, 124 U. S. 465, 8 Sup. Ct. 564, 31 L. Ed. 508; require the examination of railroad employes for color blindness; Nashville, C. & St. L. Ry. v. Alabama, 128 U. S. 96, 9 Sup. Ct. 28, 32 L. Ed. 352; regulate the speed of trains at highway and other crossings; Rockford, R. I. & St. L. R. Co. v. Hillmer, 72 Ill. 235; require a bell to be rung or a whistle blown before crossing highways at grade, and flagmen to be stationed at dangerous crossings; Toledo, W. & W. R. Co. v. Jacksonville, 67 Ill. 37, 16 Am. Rep. 611; impose a penalty on conductors for failing to cause their trains to stop five minutes at every station; Davidson v. State, 4 Tex. App. 545, 30 Am. Rep. 166; require them to stop at county seats; Gladson v. Minnesota, 166 U. S. 427, 17 Sup. Ct. 627, 41 L. Ed. 1064; direct the printing upon railroad tickets of any condition limiting the liability of a railroad company in type of a specified size, and provide for the redemption by the company of tickets sold but not used; Fry v. State, 63 Ind. 552, 30 Am. Rep. 238.

A state may regulate insurance business and forbid unjust and oppressive conditions; Com. v. Vrooman, 164 Pa. 306, 30 Atl. 217, 25 L. R. A. 250, 44 Am. St. Rep. 603; require returns from insurance companies; Eagle Ins. Co. v. Ohio, 153 U. S. 446, 14 Sup. Ct. 868, 38 L. Ed. 778; direct companies operating electric conductors to file maps and plans; New York v. Squire, 145 U. S. 175, 12 Sup. Ct. 880, 36 L. Ed. 666; forbid the running of freight trains on Sunday; Hennington v. Georgia, 163 U. S. 299, 16 Sup. Ct. 1086, 41 L. Ed. 166; require prompt delivery of telegraph messages; Western U. Tel. Co. v. James, 162 U. S. 650, 16 Sup. Ct. 934, 40 L. Ed. 1105. It may regulate the use of public highways and their alteration; Cooley, Const. Lim. 725; require the owners of urban property to construct and keep in repair sidewalks in front of it; Woodbridge v. Detroit, 8 Mich. 309; Hart v. Brooklyn, 36 Barb. (N. Y.) 226; regulate bicycle riding on highways; State v. Yopp, 97 N. C. 477, 2 S. E. 458, 2 Am. St. Rep. 305; control and regulate the use of navigable waters (subject to the commerce powers of congress);

Cooley, Const. Lim. 729; prescribe the maximum charges of a business affected by the public interest; Munn v. People, 69 Ill. 80; id., 94 U. S. 113, 24 L. Ed. 77; Brass v. North Dakota, 153 U. S. 391, 14 Sup. Ct. 857, 38 L. Ed. 757; Central Union Tel. Co. v. State, 118 Ind. 194, 19 N. E. 604, 10 Am. St. Rep. 114 (where a telephone company was held to be a business affected with a public interest); Covington & L. Turnpike Co. v. Sandford, 164 U. S. 578, 17 Sup. Ct. 198, 41 L. Ed. 560. It may regulate plumbing; State v. Gardner, 58 Ohio St. 599, 51 N. E. 136, 41 L. R. A. 689, 65 Am. St. Rep. 785.

In the exercise of its police power, a state may not invade the domain of the national government; Passenger Cases, 7 How. (U. S.) 572, 12 L. Ed. 702; and the states may pass no laws conflicting with existing regulations by the federal government on the subjects intrusted to it; Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Husen, 95 U. S. 465, 24 L. Ed. 527; Brimmer v. Rebman, 138 U. S. 78, 11 Sup. Ct. 213, 34 L. Ed. 862. The power of congress to regulate commerce was never intended to prevent the states from legislating on all subjects relating to the health, life, and safety of their citizens, though the legislation might indirectly affect the commerce of the country; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 161 U. S. 701, 16 Sup. Ct. 714, 40 L. Ed. 849; but since the range of a state's power comes very near to the field committed by the constitution to congress, it is the duty of courts to guard against any needless intrusion; Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Husen, 95 U. S. 465, 24 L. Ed. 527.

While sustaining the power of congress to regulate commerce among the states, the supreme court has steadily adhered to the principle that the states possess, because they have never surrendered, the power to protect the public health, morals and safety by any legislation appropriate to that end which does not encroach upon the rights guaranteed by the national constitution nor come in conflict with acts of Congress; Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Haber, 169 U. S. 628, 18 Sup. Ct. 488, 42 L. Ed. 878. The line of distinction may well be illustrated by the case of laws for the inspection of articles of food brought into a state; the legislature may prescribe how animals may be killed to be used for food and may fix the time and places and manner of such killing; State v. Davis, 72 N. J. L. 345, 61 Atl. 2; and provide for the inspection of hides and animals; Limburger v. Barker, 17 Tex. Civ. App. 602, 43 S. W. 616. But a state inspection law must not substantially hamper or burden the constitutional right to make and to receive an interstate shipment; Vance v. W. A. Vandercook Co., 170 U. S. 438, 18 Sup. Ct. 674, 42 L. Ed. 1100; and a statute requiring, as a condition of sales of meats in a state, that all animals from which such meats are taken shall have been inspected in that state before being slaughtered, is in violation of the commercial clause of the constitution of the United States and void; Minnesota v. Barber, 136 U. S. 313, 10 Sup. Ct. 862, 34 L. Ed. 455. See Schmidt v. People, 18 Colo. 78, 31 Pac. 498.

An act regulating the domestic sale of food for animals is within the police power, even though it may affect incidentally interstate commerce; Savage v. Jones, 225 U. S. 501, 32 Sup. Ct. 715, 56 L. Ed. 1182; Standard Stock Food Co. v. Wright, 225 U. S. 540, 32 Sup. Ct. 784, 56 L. Ed. 1197.

State quarantine laws, prohibiting the entry of persons or cargoes which might bring contagious diseases, are constitutional; and the national government also has jurisdiction in quarantine to prohibit improper immigrants and injurious traffic between the states; Morgan's Louisiana S. S. Co. v. Board of Health, 118 U. S. 464, 6 Sup. Ct. 1114, 30 L. Ed. 237; Crutcher v. Kentucky, 141 U. S. 47, 11 Sup. Ct. 851, 35 L. Ed. 649. Cattle infected with pleuro-pneumonia, dangerous persons, Chinese, coolies, contract laborers, and rags may be kept out of the country; Morgan's Louisiana S. S. Co. v. Redmon, 134 Wis. 89, 114 N. W. 137, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 229, 126 Am. St. Rep. 1003, 15 Ann. Cas. 408; an ordinance requiring all property owners to remove snow from sidewalks in State v. Jackman, 69 N. H. 318, 41 Atl. 347, 42 L. R. A. 438. So of an act requiring the labelling of packages of butter with the weight thereof; Ex parte Dietrich, 149 Cal. 104; regulating employment agencies; Spokane v. Macho, 51 Wash. 322, 98 Pac. 755, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 263, 130 Am. St. Rep. 1100; Ex parte Dickey, 144 Cal. 234, 77 Pac. 924, 66 L. R. A. 928, 103 Am. St. Rep. 82, 1 Ann. Cas. 428; prohibiting the killing of game by a particular kind of weapon; In re Marshall, 102 Fed. 323; the operation of stone quarries within a city; In re Kelso, 147 Cal. 609, 82 Pac. 241, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 796, 109 Am. St. Rep. 178; providing for the asexualization of the feeble minded, epileptics, certain criminals who are confined in state reformatories and charitable institutions, because not applying to all epileptics within the state; Smith v. Board of Examiners of Feeble Minded (N. J.) 88 Atl. 963.

A state may require an owner of a ferry boat, living in another state, to take out a license for the bar on such boat when plying between the two states; Harrell v. Speed, 113 Tenn. 224, 81 S. W. 840, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 639, 106 Am. St. Rep. 814, 3 Ann. Cas. 260; and a United States statute which prohibits introducing liquors into the "Indian country" will not apply to lands held by Indians within a state, who are citizens of the United States; U. S. v. Sutton, 165 Fed. 253. Fish-nets used in violation of a constitutional statute cannot be recovered by the owner from the officer who lawfully seized them; Daniels v. Homer, 139 N. C. 219, 51 S. E. 992, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 997.

The Wisconsin eugenic marriage law (1913), prohibiting the issuing of a marriage license to any male applicant who does not produce a physician's certificate stating that he is free from venereal diseases, was held unconstitutional in Peterson v. Widule (Dist. Ct. of Milwaukee, Wis.), on the ground that it violated the constitutional provision recognizing the inherent right of all persons to life and liberty, and forbidding control of, or interference with, rights of conscience.

"Whether the prohibited act or omission shall be made a criminal offence, punishable under the general laws, or subject to punishment under municipal by-laws, or, on the other hand, the party be deprived of all remedy for any right which, but for the regulation, he might have had against other persons, are questions which the legislature must decide." Cooley, Const. Lim. 745.

The determination by the legislature as to what is a proper exercise of its police power is subject to the supervision of the courts; Mugler v. Kansas, 123 U. S. 623, 8 Sup. Ct. 273, 31 L. Ed. 205; Lawton v. Steele, 152 U. S. 137, 14 Sup. Ct. 499, 38 L. Ed. 385; Dobbins v. Los Angeles, 195 U. S. 223, 25 Sup. Ct. 18, 49 L. Ed. 169.

A police regulation may be good even though it incidentally affects interstate commerce; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 161 U. S. 701, 16 Sup. Ct. 714, 40 L. Ed. 849; New York v. Hesterberg, 211 U. S. 31, 29 Sup. Ct. 10, 53 L. Ed. 75; Asbell v. Kansas, 209 U. S. 251, 28 Sup. Ct. 485, 52 L. Ed. 778, 14 Ann. Cas. 1101; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Mill Co., 218 U. S. 406, 31 Sup. Ct. 59, 54 L. Ed. 1088, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 220, 21 Ann. Cas. 815; but it may not interfere directly with interstate commerce; Rhodes v. Iowa, 170 U. S. 412, 18 Sup. Ct. 664, 42 L. Ed. 1088; Vance v. W. A. Vandercook Co., 170 U. S. 438, 18 Sup. Ct. 674, 42 L. Ed. 1100; West v. Gas Co., 221 U. S. 229, 31 Sup. Ct. 564, 55 L. Ed. 716, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1193. Congress may authorize an exercise of the police power by a state, which without such authority would be unconstitutional as an interference with interstate commerce; In re Rahrer, 140 U. S. 545, 11 Sup. Ct. 865, 35 L. Ed. 572; and restrictive sales of goods may be prohibited, even though it should affect the sale or rental of patented articles; In re Opinion of the Justices, 193 Mass. 605, 81 N. E. 142.

Expert testimony is not admissible to show the desirability of legislation providing an eight hour day in mines; Cantwell v. Missouri, 199 U. S. 602, 26 Sup. Ct. 749, 50 L. Ed. 329, affirming 179 Mo. 245, 78 S. W. 569.

POLICY. The instrument whereby insurance is made by an underwriter in favor of an assured, expressed, implied, or intended, against some risk, peril, or contingency, in reference to some subject.

The written or printed form to which the contract has been reduced, and which evidences the agreement or contract between the parties. It may be either a specialty or simple contract. 1 Joyce, Ins. § 145.

It must show expressly, or by implication, in whose favor it is made. It may be upon a valuable property, interest, or contingency, or be a gaming or wagering policy on a subject in which the assured has no interest, or against risks in respect to which the assured has no interest except what arises from the contract itself.

An interest policy is one where the insured has a real, substantial, assignable interest in the thing insured. Sawyer v. Ins. Co., 37 Wis. 539.

An open policy is one on which the value is not fixed, but is left to be definitely determined in case of loss. 1 Phill. Ins. §§ 4, 6, 7; Snowden v. Guion, 101 N. Y. 458, 5 N. E. 322; Snell v. Ins. Co., 4 Dall. (U. S.) 430, 1 L. Ed. 896. By an "open policy" is also sometimes meant one in which an aggregate amount is expressed in the body of the policy, and the specific amounts and subjects are to be indorsed from time to time; Douville v. Ins. Co., 12 La. Ann. 259; Trustees First B. Church v. Ins. Co., 19 N. Y. 305; E. Carver Co. v. Ins. Co., 6 Gray (Mass.) 214; it may also mean one kept open for new subscriptions, or one on a cargo kept open for new subjects of insurance; 1 Joyce, Ins. § 156.

A valued policy is one where a value has been set on the ships or goods insured, and this value inserted in the policy in the nature of liquidated damages. In such a policy the value of the subject is expressly agreed; Schaefer v. Ins. Co., 33 Md. 109; Cox, M. & Co. v. Ins. Co., 3 Rich. (S. C.) 331, 45 Am. Dec. 771; or is, as between the parties, the amount insured. Under an open policy in case of loss, the insured must prove the true value of the property, while under a valued policy, the sum agreed upon is conclusive, except in case of fraud; 3 Camp. 319; Coolidge v. Ins. Co., 15 Mass. 341; Lycoming Ins. Co. v. Mitchell, 48 Pa. 372; May, Ins. § 30; 12 T. L. R. 97.

A mixed policy is one which is open as to certain property and valued as to other property. Riley v. Ins. Co. 2 Conn. 368.

A wager policy is a pretended insurance, founded on an ideal risk, where the insured has no interest in the thing insured, and can therefore sustain no loss by the happening of any of the misfortunes insured against. These policies are strongly reprobated; 3 Kent 225.

A floating policy is one which applies to goods of a class or kind, which, from its fluctuating, changing nature, differs as to specific articles. Hoffman & P. v. Ins. Co., 32 N. Y. 405, 88 Am. Dec. 337.

In the absence of any insurable interest of the beneficiary, the law will presume that a policy was taken out for the purpose of a wager, or speculation; U. B. Mut. Aid Soc. v. McDonald, 122 Pa. 324, 15 Atl. 439, 1 L. R. A. 238, 9 Am. St. Rep. 111.

The insured must be held to a knowledge of the conditions of his policy, and the fact that he had never seen it does not help him any more than the fact that he had not read it, where there is no adequate reason shown why he could not have seen it had he so desired, and the company had not kept it from him through any fault or fraud; Cleaver v. Ins. Co., 71 Mich. 414, 39 N. W. 571, 15 Am. St. Rep. 275; Morrison v. Ins. Co., 69 Tex. 353, 6 S. W. 605, 5 Am. St. Rep. 63.

Records and documents expressly referred to in the policy are, in effect, for the purpose of the reference, a part of the contract; Howard F. Ins. Co. v. Bruner, 23 Pa. 50; 23 E. L. & E. 514; Cushman v. Ins. Co., 70 N. Y. 72; Southern M. L. Ins. Co. v. Montague, 84 Ky. 653, 2 S. W. 443, 4 Am. St. Rep. 218; Standard L. & A. Ins. Co. v. Martin, 133 Ind. 376, 33 N. E. 105.

All prior negotiations are presumed to be merged in the written contract, and the policy itself, in the absence of fraud, duress, or mistake, must be looked to to ascertain the intent of the parties; Higginson v. Dall, 13 Mass. 96. Where the form of the policy is not prescribed by statute, it should contain, either by itself, or by reference to other papers, the exact agreement between the parties, set forth therein in clear, precise, and unambiguous terms, and should embody all the requirements of a valid insurance contract. Where the terms are plain and unambiguous, parol evidence is inadmissible to vary or control them; Keim v. Ins. Co., 42 Mo. 38, 97 Am. Dec. 291; Walton v. Ins. Co., 116 N. Y. 317, 22 N. E. 443, 5 L. R. A. 677; but if it is ambiguous, extrinsic evidence is admissible, not to contradict or change the contract, but to develop and explain its true meaning; Tesson v. Ins. Co., 40 Mo. 33, 93 Am. Dec. 293. Conversations had between the parties at the time have been held admissible; Gray v. Harper, 1 Sto. 574, Fed. Cas. No. 5,716; when parties have, by certain acts of their own, placed a construction on doubtful terms of the contract, this construction will be adopted by the court against them.

The language of the policy must be construed with reference to the subject-matter and the nature of the property to which it is applied, and with a view to the objects and intentions of the parties, as the same may be gathered from the whole instruments; Allegre's Adm'rs v. Ins. Co., 2 Gill & J. (Md.) 136, 20 Am. Dec. 424; Ripley v. Ins. Co., 30 N. Y. 136, 86 Am. Dec. 362; De Graff v. Ins. Co., 38 Minn. 501, 38 N. W. 696, 8 Am. St. Rep. 685; and the whole policy with all its parts should be construed together as one entire contract; Chrisman v. Ins. Co., 16 Or. 283, 18 Pac. 466. A special clause in a policy which creates an exception to a general clause governs the latter; Bowman v. Ins. Co., 27 Mo. 152. When susceptible of more than one interpretation, the contract should be construed in favor of the assured; Kratzenstein v. Assur. Co., 116 N. Y. 54, 22 N. E. 221, 5 L. R. A. 799; Northwestern M. L. Ins. Co. v. Hazelett, 105 Ind. 212, 4 N. E. 582, 55 Am. Rep. 192; Healey v. Acc. Ass'n, 133 Ill. 556, 25 N. E. 52; 9 L. R. A. 371, 23 Am. St. Rep. 637; De Graff v. Ins. Co., 38 Minn. 501, 38 N. W. 696, 8 Am. St. Rep. 685; Watertown F. Ins. Co. v. Cherry, 84 Va. 72, 3 S. E. 876; Western & A. P. L. v. Ins. Co., 145 Pa. 346, 22 Atl. 665, 27 Am. St. Rep. 703; Imperial F. Ins. Co. v. Coos County, 151 U. S. 452, 14 Sup. Ct. 379, 38 L. Ed. 231.

The written part of the policy controls that part which is printed; 4 East 136; Plinsky v. Ins. Co., 32 Fed. 47; Benedict v. Ins. Co., 31 N. Y. 389. A special indorsement exempting from liability for partial loss will control; Chadsey v. Guion, 97 N. Y. 333.

In respect to forfeiture, that construction of a policy which will sustain rather than forfeit the contract is applicable; McMaster v. Ins. Co., 183 U. S. 25, 22 Sup. Ct. 10, 46 L. Ed. 64.

A stipulation that, if any representations made by the applicant are untrue, the policy shall be void is reasonable; Deming I. Co. v. Ins. Co., 16 Okl. 1, 83 Pac. 918, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 607. Incontestable clauses are good although the insured was not in good health when the policy was delivered, against an express condition in the policy; Mutual R. F. L. Ass'n v. Austin, 142 Fed. 398, 73 C. C. A. 498, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1064; but they do not prevent the defence of lack of insurable interest; Bromley's Adm'r v. Ins. Co., 122 Ky. 402, 92 S. W. 17, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 747, 121 Am. St. Rep. 467, 12 Ann. Cas. 685; or of fraud in procuring the policy; Reagan v. Ins. Co., 189 Mass. 555, 76 N. E. 217, 2 L. R. A. (N. S.) 821, 109 Am. St. Rep. 659, 4 Ann. Cas. 362.

Although a fire is raging in an adjacent building and at the time of expiration of the policy a loss is inevitable, if in fact no fire breaks out at such expiration, there can be no recovery; Rochester G. Ins. Co. v. Peaslee-G. Co., 120 Ky. 752, 87 S. W. 1115, 27 Ky. L. R. 1155, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 364, 9 Ann. Cas. 324. But if the fire has already begun in the building, insurance for the loss of merchandise may be recovered, although the fire did not actually reach the merchandise within the life of the policy; Rochester G. Ins. Co. v. Peaslee-G. Co., 120 Ky. 752, 89 S. W. 3, 28 Ky. L. Rep. 130, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 364, 9 Ann. Cas. 324.

A policy may take effect on actual or constructive delivery; New England F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Robinson, 25 Ind. 537; Bragdon v. Ins. Co., 42 Me. 259; Sheldon v. Ins. Co., 25 Conn. 207, 65 Am. Dec. 565; Jackson v. Ins. Co., 5 Gray (Mass.) 52; and may be retrospective, provided there is no concealment or misrepresentation by either party; Hallock v. Ins. Co., 26 N. J. L. 268.

Where eighteen policies are ready for delivery, but one of the buildings is destroyed by fire just before delivery, but after the agreement with the agent, there is no existing contract; German Ins. Co. v. Dowman, 115 Fed. 481.

A policy returned by the applicant to the company because it does not correspond with his application is not cancelled, especially where the company has insisted that it is all right; Waters v. Annuity Co., 144 N. C. 663, 57 S. E. 437, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 805. A company is not bound to return unearned premiums in order to bring about a cancellation of the policy; Davidson v. Ins. Co., 74 N. J. L. 487, 65 Atl. 996, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 884, 12 Ann. Cas. 1065; contra, Glen F. Ins. Co. v. Michael, 167 Ind. 659, 74 N. E. 964, 79 N. E. 905, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 708; and where a standard policy provides for the return of the unearned premiums, the insured may waive such condition by his voluntary and unconditional surrender of the policy upon receiving notice of cancellation by the company; Buckley v. Ins. Co., 188 N. Y. 399, 81 N. E. 165, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 889.

A renewal reinstates the original contract with all its terms and also incorporates into it the new terms expressed in the renewal application and representations contained therein become part of the contract; Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. McFague, 49 N. J. L. 587, 9 Atl. 766, 60 Am. Rep. 661.

Every policy, whether marine, against fire, or on life, specifies or imports parties, and specifies the subject or interest intended to be insured, the premium or other consideration, the amount insured, the risks and perils for which indemnity is stipulated, and the period of the risk, or the terminus a quo and ad quem. The subject-matter is usually more minutely described in a separate paper—called an application; Beach, Ins. § 352. See APPLICATION. May, Ins. § 29.

The duration of the risk, under a marine insurance, or one on inland navigation, is either from one geographical terminus to another, called a "Voyage Policy," or from a specified time, called a "Time Policy;" that of a fire policy is for a specified time; one on life is either for life or a term of years, months, etc. It is a leading principle, as to the construction of a policy of insurance, that its distinguishing character as a contract of indemnity is to be favored; which is in conformity with the common maxim, ut res valeat magis quam pereat; Brown v. Ins. Co., 18 N. Y. 385; Kingsley v. Ins. Co., 8 Cush. (Mass.) 393; Smith v. Ins. Co., 17 Pa. 253, 55 Am. Dec. 546; 29 E. L. & E. 111, 215; Moore v. Ins. Co., 16 Mo. 98; Sheldon & Co. v. Ins. Co., 22 Conn. 235, 58 Am. Dec. 420; Fireman's Ins. Co. v. Powell, 13 B. Mon. (Ky.) 311; Indianapolis Ins. Co. v. Mason, 11 Ind. 171; Atwood v. Ins. Co., 28 N. H. 234; Gloucester Ins. Co. v. Younger, 2 Curt. C. C. 322, Fed. Cas. No. 5,487; Sayles v. Ins. Co., 2 Curt. C. C. 610, Fed. Cas. No. 12,422; Philbrook v. Ins. Co., 37 Me. 137; Schenck v. Ins. Co., 24 N. J. L. 447; Peoria M. & F. Ins. Co. v. Lewis, 18 Ill. 553; Wilson v. Ins. Co., 4 R. I. 159. See Connecticut Mut. Life Ins. Co. v. Schaefer, 94 U. S. 457.

In marine insurance the contract has necessarily more implied reference to customs and usages than most other contracts; or, in other words, a larger proportion of the stipulations are not specifically expressed in the instrument; 1 Phill. Ins. § 119; whence it has been thought to be an imperfect, obscure, confused instrument; Yeaton v. Fry, 5 Cra. (U. S.) 342, 3 L. Ed. 117; 1 Burr. 347. But the difficulty in giving it a practical construction seems to arise more from the complication of the circumstances necessarily involved than from any remediable defects in its provisions and phraseology. New provisions are, however, needed, from time to time, to adapt the contract to new circumstances.

A mistake in filling up a policy may be corrected by order of a court of equity; 5 B. & P. 322; 1 Wash. C. C. 415; Oliver v. Ins. Co., 2 Curt. C. C. 277, Fed. Cas. No. 10,498. If by accident, inadvertence, or mistake, the terms of the contract are not fully set forth in a policy, it may be reformed so as to express the real agreement; Thompson v. Ins. Co., 136 U. S. 287, 10 Sup. Ct. 1019, 34 L. Ed. 408.

A marine policy is assignable without the consent of the insurers; May, Ins. § 377; while a fire policy is not; Aetna F. Ins. Co. v. Tyler, 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 385, 30 Am. Dec. 90; Simeral v. Ins. Co., 18 Ia. 319; 4 Bro. P. C. 431; 9 L. T. N. S. 688. An outstanding and valid life policy is held to be assignable without the insurer's consent, provided the sale is bona fide and not a device to evade the law; St. John v. Ins. Co., 13 N. Y. 31, 64 Am. Dec.

529; Provident L. I. & I. Co. v. Baum, 29 Ind. 236; Campbell v. Ins. Co., 98 Mass. 381; American L. & H. Ins. Co. v. Robertshaw, 26 Pa. 189; Robinson v. Cator, 78 Md. 72, 26 Atl. 959. But see, contra, Franklin L. Ins. Co. v. Hazzard, 41 Ind. 116, 13 Am. Rep. 313. See, generally, Johnson v. Alexander, 9 L. R. A. 660; Joyce, Insurance. A pre-existing debt is a sufficient consideration for an assignment of insurance policies after loss of the property insured; Glover v. Lee, 140 Ill. 102, 29 N. E. 680. When a policy of insurance expressly stipulates that no assignment shall be valid without the consent of the company, an assignment without such consent is without effect; Moise v. Life Ass'n, 45 La. Ann. 736, 13 South. 170; Hewins v. Baker, 161 Mass. 320, 37 N. E. 441; and it is avoided by an assignment for the benefit of creditors; Dube v. Ins. Co., 64 N. H. 527, 15 Atl. 141, 1 L. R. A. 57; but if made subsequently to the loss, it is valid, regardless of the conditions; Nease v. Ins. Co., 32 W. Va. 283, 9 S. E. 233; Star U. L. Co. v. Finney, 35 Neb. 214, 52 N. W. 1113. Where the insured and beneficiary assign one-half their interest upon consideration that the assignee shall pay the premiums, neither the assignee nor the beneficiary can recover on the policy; Metropolitan L. A Pennsylvania act providing that fire or life policies which contain a reference to an application therefor, or a reference to the constitution, by-laws or other rules of the company, shall contain or have attached thereto a copy of such application or rules, otherwise the application, rules, &c., shall not be received in evidence nor considered a part of the policy, is constitutional; New Era L. Ins. Co. v. Musser, 120 Pa. 384, 14 Atl. 155; but the company cannot prevent the admission of the application in evidence; Norristown T. Co. v. Ins. Co., 132 Pa. 385, 19 Atl. 270.

A standard form of policy is provided by statute in many states. A statute providing for a standard policy without fixing its terms or conditions and leaving them to be fixed by the insurance commissioner is unconstitutional as a delegation of legislative power; it seems that the legislature could prescribe a form; O'Neil v. Ins. Co., 166 Pa. 72, 30 Atl. 943, 26 L. R. A. 715, 45 Am. St. Rep. 650; Dowling v. Ins. Co., 92 Wis. 63, 65 N. W. 738, 31 L. R. A. 112.

A method of gambling by betting as to what numbers will be drawn in a lottery. State v. Carpenter, 60 Conn. 97, 22 Atl. 497.

POLICY, PUBLIC. See PUBLIC POLICY; RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

POLITICAL. Pertaining to policy, or the administration of the government. Political rights are those which may be exercised in the formation and administration of the government: they are distinguished from civil rights, which are the rights which a man enjoys as regards other individuals, and not in relation to the government. A political corporation is one which has principally for its object the administration of the government, or to which the powers of government, or a part of such powers, have been delegated. See Winspear v. Dist. Tp., 37 Ia. 544; People v. Morgan, 90 Ill. 563.

POLITICAL OFFENDER. A political offender if accused of what is prima facie an extraditable crime cannot be legally surrendered, if the offence is of a political character, that is if it is incidental to, and forms part of, a political disturbance; [1891] 1 Q. B. 149; [1896] 1 Q. B. 108. See EXTRADITION.

POLITICAL PARTIES. See ELECTION; NOMINATION.

POLITICAL QUESTION. One over which the courts decline to take cognizance in view of the line of demarkation between the judicial branch of the government, on one hand, and the executive and legislative branches, on the other. Parker v. State, 133 Ind. 178, 32 N. E. 836, 33 N. E. 119, 18 L. R. A. 567.

Questions expressly reserved by the constitution to either the executive or the legislature, and questions which, by necessary implication of the constitution, are so reserved—that is, questions the decision of which by the judiciary would obviously embarrass the action of the legislative and executive within their respective spheres, or which, owing to the superior sources of knowledge of the other two branches, the courts are ill qualified to decide. 22 Harv. L. R. 132.

The following have been held political questions:

As to who is the sovereign of a certain country; Pearcy v. Stranahan, 205 U. S. 257, 27 Sup. Ct. 545, 51 L. Ed. 793; the jurisdiction of different sovereignties; State v. Wagner, 61 Me. 178; Pearcy v. Stranahan, 205 U. S. 257, 27 Sup. Ct. 545, 51 L. Ed. 793; whether a state is republican in its form of government; State v. Summers (S. D.) 144 N. W. 730; as to the status of Indian tribes; Farrell v. U. S., 110 Fed. 942, 49 C. C. A. 183; whether a state constitution was duly ordained by the people; and where it has been promulgated and recognized as in force by the executive and legislative departments and accepted by the people, the legality of its adoption cannot be brought in question in a federal court; Brickhouse v. Brooks, 165 Fed. 534; whether the initiative and referendum provisions in the Oregon constitution so alter its form of government as to make it no longer republican; Pacific S. Tel. Co. v. Oregon, 223 U. S. 118, 32 Sup. Ct. 224, 56 L. Ed. 377; whether a law is necessary within the initiative and referendum provision of the constitution, excepting from its provision for referendum laws which are necessary for the immediate preservation of the public peace, health or safety; Kadderly v. Portland, 44 Or. 118, 74 Pac. 710, 75 Pac. 222; whether or not property held as public property is necessary for the public use; Monroe v. Johnson, 106 La. 350, 30 South. 840; as to how long Cuba may rightfully be occupied by the United States; Neely v. Henkel, 180 U. S. 109, 21 Sup. Ct. 302, 45 L. Ed. 448.

The courts will not declare an act to be a tort in violation of the law of nations or of a treaty, when the executive, congress and the treaty-making power have all adopted it; O'Reilly De Camara v. Brooke, 209 U. S. 45, 28 Sup. Ct. 439, 52 L. Ed. 676.

Courts will treat as subject to their jurisdiction any territory claimed by the political department; Harrold v. Arrington, 64 Tex. 233.

A mere assertion of property rights will not give jurisdiction over a political question, where the assertion is merely added for the purpose of conferring jurisdiction; Georgia v. Stanton, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 50, 18 L. Ed. 721; and the court refused to take jurisdiction of a suit, the real object of which was to settle the right of succession between Indian princes, although nominally brought to test the title to property; 12 Calcutta W. N. 777 (Calcutta High Court, 1908). But it is held that municipal courts may determine the title to property within their jurisdiction, even though a political question is involved; 12 Moore, Ind. App. 523.

It is within the province of the political department to provide the mode in which imperfect rights of property under treaties (such as that by which territory was ceded by Mexico to the United States) may be secured, and the courts have no jurisdiction to enforce such rights except as delegated to them by congress; U. S. v. Sandoval, 167 U. S. 278, 17 Sup. Ct. 868, 42 L. Ed. 168.

Such questions frequently arise when there is an attempt to enjoin an incumbent of either the legislative or executive departments from performing some act which he claims the right to perform by virtue of his office, or to compel him to perform some act which he declines or refuses to perform; Parker v. State, 133 Ind. 178, 32 N. E. 836, 33 N. E. 119, 18 L. R. A. 567.

• POLITICS. Everything that concerns the government of the country. 2 Ves. Sr. 156.

POLL. A head. Hence poll-tax is the name of a tax imposed upon the people at so much a head.

To poll a jury is to require that each juror shall himself declare what is his verdict.

This may be done, at the instance of either party, at any time before the verdict is recorded, according to the practice in some states. See People v. Goodwin, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 188, 9 Am. Dec. 203. In some states it lies in the discretion of the judge; Martin v. Maverick, 1 McCord (S. C.) 24; State v. Allen, 1 McCord (S. C.) 525, 10 Am. Dec. 687; Beale v. Hall, 22 Ga. 431. A defendant has a right to a poll of the jury to ascertain whether each member concurs in the verdict but the exact words used by the juror in answering are immaterial, if they indicate clearly the assent of the individual mind to the verdict; Com. v. Buccieri, 153 Pa. 535, 26 Atl. 228. Where a court directs a verdict, a party is not entitled to have the jury polled; Donoghue v. R. Co., 57 Mich. 13, 49 N. W. 512.

In Massachusetts it is not the right of the party, even in a capital case, to poll the jury; Com. v. Costley, 118 Mass. 1.

In Conveyancing. See DEED POLL.

POLL-TAX. A capitation tax; a tax assessed on every head, i. e. on every male of a certain age, etc., according to statute. Webst. Dict. See TAXATION.

POLLICITATION. In Civil Law. An offer not yet accepted by the person to whom it is made. Langd. Contr. § 1.

It differs from a contract, inasmuch as the latter includes a concurrence of intention in two parties, one of whom promises something to the other, who accepts, on his part, such promise. Grotius l. 2, c. 2; Pothier, Obl. pt. 1, c. 1, s. 1, art. 1, § 2.

POLLS. The place where electors cast in their votes.

POLLUTION OF WATERS. A riparian proprietor is required to refrain from erecting upon the banks of a water course any works which will pollute the water and thereby create a nuisance; 9 Co. 59; 5 B. & Ald. 1; Attorney-General v. Steward, 20 N. J. Eq. 416; Call v. Buttrick, 4 Cush. (Mass.) 345; [1897] Ch. D. 96.

It is the right of the owner of land through which a stream flows, to have the natural flow free from pollution, as also from diversion or obstruction; and for an interference with this right an action will lie; Richmond Mfg. Co. v. De Laine Co., 10 R. I. 106, 14 Am. Rep. 658; Holsman v. Bleaching Co., 14 N. J. Eq. 335; [1893] App. Cas. 691. An injury to the purity of the water which affects the riparian owner is considered an injury of the same character as an obstruction or diversion of the water; Dwight Printing Co. v. Boston, 122 Mass. 583. So one who pollutes his neighbor's spring is liable therefor; Ball v. Nye, 99 Mass. 582, 97 Am. Dec. 56; Kinnaird v. Oil Co., 89 Ky. 468, 12 S. W. 937, 7 L. R. A. 451, 25 Am. St. Rep. 545; 29 Ch. D. 115; and so is one who deposits filth or noxious matter on his own premises from which it percolates through the soil; Good v. Altoona City, 162 Pa. 493, 29 Atl. 741, 42 Am. St. Rep. 840; Robinson v. Coal Co., 57 Cal. 412, 40 Am. Rep. 118; 29 Ch. D. 115; Decatur G. L. & C. Co. v. Howell, 92 Ill. 19; Wilson v. New Bedford, 108 Mass. 261, 11 Am. Rep. 352; Perrine v. Taylor, 43 N. J. Eq. 128, 12 Atl. 769.

Sources of the pollution of water for which it has been held that an action would lie, are: fouling by the discharge into it of muriatic acid; 7 H. & P. 160; sulphuric acid; 5 Ch. D. 769; vitriol, having a corrosive effect on boilers; Merrifield v. Lombard, 13 Allen (Mass.) 16, 90 Am. Dec. 172; dye wares or dye liquors, madder, indigo, potash, etc.; 16 Jur. N. S. 75; MacNamara v. Taft, 196 Mass. 597, 83 N. E. 310, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1044; heated water, which affects a stream injuriously; 3 B. & Ad. 304; 2 K. & J. 264; blood from a slaughter-house; Attorney-General v. Steward, 20 N. J. Eq. 415; Woodyear v. Schaefer, 57 Md. 1, 40 Am. Rep. 419; setting up hog-pens, or lime-pits; Hazeltine v. Case, 46 Wis. 391, 1 N. W. 66, 32 Am. Rep. 715; Y. B. Hen. II. b. 6; Smiths v. McConathy, 11 Mo. 517; the erection of a cess-pool, placing near the water oil or manure; Kinnaird v. Oil Co., 89 Ky. 478, 12 S. W. 937, 7 L. R. A. 451, 25 Am. St. Rep. 545; placing the carcass of a dead animal in the water; State v. Wahl, 35 Kan. 608, 11 Pac. 911.

It is not always actionable to discharge into a stream waste or impure matter, but it is a question for the jury whether such use of it is, under the circumstances, reasonable, and as a general rule the same consideration would control as in case of obstructions of the water generally. It is necessary to take into consideration the character of the stream, its natural uses and the importance of the use proposed to be made of it by the party complained of and the extent and character of the injury to the other party. See Ang. Watere. § 140 d.

One of the rights of a riparian owner by reason of his location upon the banks of a stream is to make use of the water to such extent as he can without creating a nuisance to his neighbors or to the public. This right includes the casting of a certain amount of pollution into the stream; 1 Farnham, Waters 288; Missouri v. Illinois, 200 U. S. 496, 26 Sup. Ct. 268, 50 L. Ed. 572, which held that a nuisance must be shown before such act will be forbidden. It is held that the legislature may forbid such pollution without infringing the constitutional rights of the riparian owners, although no injury to the public health or comfort is shown; Durham v. Mills, 141 N. C. 615, 54 S. E. 453, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 321; State v. Paper Co., 63 N. J. Eq. 111, 51 Atl. 1019.

A riparian proprietor cannot use the water in such manner as to pollute the atmosphere, and it is no defence to an action for so doing that the injury was public in its character as affecting an entire community and that it was a subject of criminal indictment; Story v. Hammond, 4 Ohio 376; and if such a condition of things cannot be remedied by action, equity will interfere to abate the nuisance; Carlisle v. Cooper, 21 N. J. Eq. 576; in all these cases where the injury is continuous and irreparable so that an action for damages is not an adequate remedy, an injunction will be granted. See INJUNCTION. For a collection of cases in which injunctions have been granted, see Amer. & Eng. Dec. in Eq. 648, 653.

That one in possession of real estate may recover damages for wrongful pollution of a spring without showing title to the property is held in Long v. R. Co., 128 Ky. 26, 107 S. W. 203, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1063, 16 Ann. Cas. 673.

The weight of authority is in favor of the doctrine that an action by the lower riparian owner will lie for the pollution of the stream by a discharge into it of refuse water from a mine, and that such action may be enjoined; Beach v. Zinc Co., 54 N. J. Eq. 65, 33 Atl. 286, where it was expressly held that it was no defence, that the pollution was a natural and necessary result of mining operations prosecuted in the ordinary way. In this case the defendant was not a riparian owner. The decree was affirmed by the court of appeals where Garrison, J., thus stated the conclusion: "A non-riparian mine-owner may not artificially cause the injurious discoloration of a natural water course, if, by the use of practicable means within his knowledge and under his control, he may carry on his mining operations without injury to the right of others,—a paraphrase of the maxim, "Sic utere tuo ut alienum non lædas."

The contrary doctrine was held in Pennsylvania in the case of Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Sanderson, 113 Pa. 126, a decision which was criticised and expressly disapproved in the above case; and there were two Pennsylvania cases contra, Sanderson v. Coal Co., 86 Pa. 401, 27 Am. Rep. 711, and Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Sanderson, 94 Pa. 302, 39 Am. Rep. 785, which were overruled in the third case by a bare majority of the court. Referring to Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Sanderson, Lord Shand, in [1893] App. Cas. 691, says: "This circumstance and the grounds of the judgment seem to me to be sufficient to deprive the case of any real weight." One other case seems in a measure to follow the Pennsylvania case; Barnard v. Sherley, 135 Ind. 547, 34 N. E. 600, 35 N. E. 117, 24 L. R. A. 568, 41 Am. St. Rep. 454; where it was held that one who sinks an artesian well on his own land, and uses the water to bathe the patients in a sanitarium erected by him on said premises, is not liable to injunction and damages for allowing the water, after such use, to flow into a stream which crosses the land of an adjoining owner, and is the only natural and available outlet." Of this case it is remarked: "There were, however, many features to distinguish this from the Sanderson case, so that the adoption of the language of the latter was unnecessary. In the first place, the pollution was slight; in the second, before the water reached the plaintiff's premises, it was further defiled by passing through a city; either of which would tend to defeat the claim, apart from all other considerations;" 3 Eng. & Am. Dec. in Eq. 652, by Henry Budd.

The same writer draws attention to the fact that "even in Pennsylvania, the doctrine of the Sanderson case is carefully limited to the natural drainage of the mine water; and any other means of getting rid of it will be enjoined;" id., citing Getting v. Imp. Co., 7 Kulp (Pa.) 493. See, also, Long v. Trexler, 8 Atl. 620. It has been intimated that even the Pennsylvania doctrine upholding the right to pollute a water course with mine water does not apply to streams from which a municipal water supply is taken; Com. v. Russell, 172 Pa. 506, 33 Atl. 709; and a contrary decision was rendered by a lower court in Union Water Co. v. Oil Co., 21 Pittsb. L. J. (N. S.) 159.

In an action to recover damages for fouling a stream so as to constitute a nuisance, it is no defence that plaintiff's own acts contributed to the injury; Bowman v. Humphrey, 132 Ia. 234, 109 N. W. 714, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1111, 11 Ann. Cas. 131; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Smith, 64 Fed. 679, 12 C. C. A. 384, 27 L. R. A. 131.

The right of the lower riparian proprietor to have the use of the stream unimpaired, must be adjusted with due regard to the rights possessed by the upper riparian owner to use the stream for the proper purposes, such as casting sewage or waste therein; Prentice v. Geiger, 74 N. Y. 341; Haskell v. New Bedford, 108 Mass. 208; Hayes v. Waldron, 44 N. H. 580, 84 Am. Dec. 105; and the necessary result of the legitimate use of a stream for irrigation, manufacturing, and domestic purposes, will have a tendency, with the natural increase of population, to render the stream more impure; see Merrifield v. Worcester, 110 Mass. 221, 14 Am. Rep. 592; Pennsylvania Coal Co. v. Sanderson, 113 Pa. 126, 6 Atl. 453, 57 Am. Rep. 445; and the courts will not interfere by injunction with extensive manufacturing enterprises until satisfied from all the circumstances that there is no adequate remedy at law, and that the failure to interfere will result in irreparable injury; New Boston C. & M. Co. v. Water Co., 54 Pa. 164. That a creamery or tannery or other industrial plant is a perfectly legitimate enterprise, or one of great convenience and benefit, is not a defence to an action for polluting a stream, but it may still be a nuisance for which an action will lie, though the utmost care has been taken to avoid all just cause of complaint; Ilauck v. Pipe Line Co., 153 Pa. 366, 26 Atl. 644, 20 L. R. A. 642, 34 Am. St. Rep. 710.

The pollution, by a properly constructed city sewer, of a stream which is the natural drainage of the land on which the city is built, gives no right of action to a lower riparian owner whose mill property, constructed and operated before the building of the city, is injured thereby; Richmond v. Test, 18 Ind. App. 482, 48 N. E. 610. A plaintiff was held entitled to recover damages where sewers constructed by a city, polluted a stream and the foul water found its way to the two springs of the plaintiff, and he was unable to obtain pure water by digging wells, the whole underground supply being polluted; Good v. Altoona City, 162 Pa. 493, 29 Atl. 741, 42 Am. St. Rep. 840. As a general thing the circumstances of each case must be considered by the court and the conflicting interests, carefully and judiciously weighed, and no general rule can be framed which will afford a rule to be applied by the courts in all cases as matter of law. The right to deposit in the stream must be settled as a question of reasonable use in the same way that courts deal with questions of diversion or obstruction; Red River Roller Mills v. Wright, 30 Minn. 249, 15 N. W. 167, 44 Am. Rep. 191; as to many uses of the water, either by common consent or other obvious considerations, settled rules have been established; Redfield, C. J., in Snow v. Parsons, 28 Vt. 459, 67 Am. Dec. 723; many of these cases may be found collected in Gould, Waters § 220.

The legislature may authorize the commissioner of public works of a city to take such measures as may be necessary to protect the city's water supply from pollution; Kelley v. New York, 89 Hun 246, 35 N. Y. Supp. 1109. It may empower a local board to prevent boating on a great pond in which there are no private rights of property; Sprague v. Minon, 195 Mass. 581, 81 N. E. 284. The right to protect the water supply includes the right to prevent the casting of sewage into the stream; Missouri v. Illinois, 180 U. S. 208, 21 Sup. Ct. 331, 45 L. Ed. 497.

Where a municipal corporation was authorized by statute to construct sewers and discharge sewerage into the tide water it was held liable for damages, caused by the sewerage destroying the plaintiff's oysters, although the damage involved no physical taking of property; Huffmire v. Brooklyn, 22 App. Div. 406, 48 N. Y. Supp. 132.

One who had permission to use the water of a canal was held entitled to recover damages from a third person, who fouled the water so that the plaintiff's boilers were injured, the action of the defendant having been without any authority; 2 H. & N. 476; in a case in the Exchequer Chamber, although the judgment was reversed on other grounds, there was no dissent from the doctrine of the court below, "that he had no right to cause dirty water to flow on his neighbors' land without some special right to do so," but it was left doubtful whether the mere permission of the riparian owner to take the water out of the stream was sufficient to authorize the action against the wrong-doer either for diverting or fouling; 3 H. & N. 675.

Neither a municipality nor an individual can acquire a prescriptive right to pollute a stream when the pollution constitutes a public nuisance; Miles City v. State Board of Health, 39 Mont. 405, 102 Pac. 696, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 589; Platt Bros. & Co. v. Waterbury, 72 Conn. 531, 45 Atl. 154, 48 L. R. A. 691, 77 Am. St. Rep. 335; Birmingham v. Land, 137 Ala. 538, 34 South. 613; more particularly when the stream has been appropriated by statute for a municipal water supply; Martin v. Gleason, 139 Mass. 183, 29 N. E. 664. But where it is not a public nuisance, a prescriptive right may be obtained by an upper riparian as against a lower riparian owner; Alabama Consol. C. & I. Co. v. Turner, 145 Ala. 639, 39 South. 603, 117 Am. St. Rep. 61; Morris C. & B. Co. v. Paper Co., 71 N. J. Eq. 481, 64 Atl. 746; 16 Can. S. C. 575; so of a city as against a lower riparian owner; Smith v. Sedalia, 152 Mo. 283, 53 S. W. 907, 48 L. R. A. 711, where the deposit of city sewage was held not to be a public nuisance. The prescription period begins only from the time when an injury had been sustained by the complaining party; Lockwood Co. v. Lawrence, 77 Me. 297, 52 Am. Rep. 763; and the right of pollution is limited by the user during the period of acquiring the prescriptive right; L. R. 2 Ch. App. 478; Bloomington v. Costello, 65 Ill. App. 407.

Notwithstanding the length of time a city has discharged sewage into a stream, the state may regulate or forbid it; Miles City v. State Board of Health, 39 Mont. 405, 102 Pac. 696, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 589.

See, as to pollution by municipalities, Platt v. Waterbury, 72 Conn. 531, 45 Atl. 154, 48 L. R. A. 691, 77 Am. St. Rep. 335; State v. Concordia, 78 Kan. 250, 96 Pac. 487, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1050, and notes.

Where a drain laid by property owners of a public street under permission from the city opens into a natural stream, and thereafter, without express license from the city, is used as a sewer to discharge sewage into the stream, to the injury of a lower riparian owner, the drain is a nuisance and the city is liable for not abating it; Mansfield v. Bristol, 76 Ohio St. 270, 81 N. E. 631, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 806, 118 Am. St. Rep. 852, 10 Ann. Cas. 767.

The pollution of streams has been the subject of extended legislation in England, which is embodied in the Rivers Pollution Prevention Act, 1876; see Haworth on Rivers Pollution.

A state board of health may forbid citizens drinking polluted water; State Board v. St. Johnsbury, 82 Vt. 276, 73 Atl. 581, 32 L. R. A. (N. S.) 766, 18 Ann. Cas. 496.

POLYANDRY. The state of a woman who has several husbands.

Polyandry is legalized only in Thibet. It is inconsistent with the law of nature. See LAW OF NATURE.

POLYGAMY. The act or state of a person who, knowing that he has two or more wives, or that she has two or more husbands, marries another.

It differs from bigamy. Com. Dig. Justices (S 5); Co. 3d Inst. 88.

But bigamy is now commonly used even where polygamy would be strictly correct; 1 Russ. Cr. 186, n. On the other hand, polygamy is used where bigamy would be strictly correct; Mass. Gen. Stat. 1860, p. 817.

Every person having a husband or wife living, who marries another, whether married or single, in a territory or other place over which the United States has exclusive jurisdiction, is guilty of bigamy, and shall be punished by a fine of not more than five hundred dollars, and by imprisonment for a term of not more than five years; R. S. § 5352 (Crim. Code, § 313); Miles v. U. S., 103 U. S. 304, 26 L. Ed. 481.

An act of congress of March 3, 1887, was passed for the express purpose of the suppression of polygamy in Utah Territory. It expressly annuls the act of territorial legislation which contravenes its purposes and provided for winding up the corporation in the territory, known as the Church of Jesus Christ of the Latter Day Saints, and required the attorney-general to take proceedings for that purpose. The act contains elaborate provisions for adjusting property interests involved in this change, and providing severe penalties for violation of its provisions; U. S. R. S. 1 Supp. 568. This act was held constitutional; Church of Jesus Christ of L. D. S. v. U. S., 136 U. S. 1, 10 Sup. Ct. 792, 34 L. Ed. 478; where it was also held that the pretence of religious belief cannot deprive congress of the power to prohibit polygamy and all other open offences against the enlightened sentiment of mankind.

See BIGAMY; RELIGION; LASCIVIOUS COHABITATION.

POLYGARCHY. A term used to express a government which is shared by several persons.

POND. A body of stagnant water; a pool. See Call. Sew. 103.

Any one has a right to erect a fish-pond; the fish in it are considered as real estate, and pass to the heir, and not to the executor;

Ow. 20. Where land bounding on a lake or pond is conveyed, the grant extends only to the water's edge if it is a natural pond (some cases hold to low-water mark; Waterman v. Johnson, 13 Pick. [Mass.] 261); but to the middle of the stream if it is artificial; Ang. Wat. Cours. § 41. See 3 Washb. R. P. 5th ed. *633.

By the common law, fresh water lakes and ponds, except the great navigable lakes, belong to the owners of the soil adjacent, who own the soil usque ad filum aque; Hardin v. Jordan, 140 U. S. 371, 11 Sup. Ct. 808, 838, 35 L. Ed. 428. See Attorney General v. Pond Aqueduct, 133 Mass. 364. See LAKE.

That the public authorities have no statutory right to lease ponds which are in private ownership will not prevent a lease by them from forming the basis of a prescriptive title in the public; Attorney General v. Ellis, 198 Mass. 91, 84 N. E. 430, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1120.

PONE. (Lat. ponere, to put). In English Practice. An original writ issuing out of chancery, for the purpose of removing a plaint from an inferior court into the superior courts at Westminster. The word signifies "put": put by gages, etc. The writ is called from the words it contained when in Latin, Pone per vadium et salvos plegios, etc.; put by gage and safe pledges, etc. See Fitzh. N. B. 60, 70 a; Digby, Hist. R. P. 71. The writ of certiorari is now used in its place.

PONENDIS IN ASSISIS. An old writ directing a sheriff to empanel a jury for an assize or real action. Whart. Law Lex.

PONENDUM IN BALLIUM. A writ commanding that a prisoner be bailed in cases bailable. Whart. Law Lex.

PONENDUM SIGILLUM. A writ requiring justices to put their seals to a bill of exceptions, according to Stat. West. 2, 13 Ed. I. c. 31. Whart. Law Lex.

PONERE (Lat.). To put. The word is used in the old law in various connections, in all of which it can be translated by the English verb "put." See Glanv. lib. 2, c. 3.

PONIT SE (Lat. puts himself). In English Criminal Practice. When the defendant pleads "not guilty," his plea is recorded by the officer of the court, either by writing the words "po se," an abbreviation of the words ponit se super patriam (puts himself upon his country), or, as at the central criminal court, non cul. 2 Den. C. C. 392. See ARRAIGNMENT.

PONTAGE. A contribution towards the maintenance, rebuilding, or repairs of a bridge. The toll taken for this purpose also bears this name. Obsolete. Fleta, lib. 4, c. 1, § 16.

PONTIBUS REPARANDIS. An old writ directed to the sheriff commanding him to charge one or more to repair a bridge. Cowell; Reg. Orig. fol. 153.

POOL. A small lake of standing water.

By the grant of a pool, it is said both the land and water will pass; Co. Litt. 5. Undoubtedly the right to fish, and probably the right to use hydraulic works, will be acquired by such grant; Bullen v. Runnels, 2 N. H. 259, 9 Am. Dec. 55; Co. Litt. 5; Bac. Abr. Grants (H 3); Com. Dig. Grant (E 5); Jackson v. Halstead, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 216; Cro. Jac. 150. See LAKE.

A combination of stakes, the money derived from which goes to the winner. Com. v. Ferry, 146 Mass. 203, 15 N. E. 484. See GAMING; HORSE RACE.

A commercial term used to indicate a contract between two competing railroad companies, whereby they agree to divide all their earnings over and above the amounts required for the payment of operating expenses. See RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

As a business term the word "pool," as used in the phrase "real estate pool," means no more than that certain individuals are engaged in dealing in real estate as a commodity of traffic. Kilbourn v. Thompson, 103 U. S. 195, 26 L. Ed. 377.

POOLING AGREEMENT. See RESTRAINT OF TRADE; RATES.

POOL SELLING. See GAMING.

POOR. Destitute; helpless and in extreme want; Rhine v. Sheboygan, 82 Wis. 352, 52 N. W. 444; so completely destitute of property as to require assistance from the public; State v. Osawkee Tp., 14 Kan. 421, 19 Am. Rep. 99. In charities the poor need not be (though they generally are) the sole or especial object; 1 Jarm. Wills 217; but a trust for the benefit of poor boys was held not confined to those who required parish relief; 31 L. J. Ch. 810. See CHARITABLE USES; LEGACY; PAUPER.

POOR DEBTORS. By the constitution of the several states and territories, or by the laws which exist for the relief of poor debtors, it is provided in general terms that there shall be no imprisonment for debt. But this is usually qualified by provisions for the arrest of debtors in certain enumerated cases of fraud. The statutes in the different states are very similar, and as a rule, require the creditor to make affidavit that the debtor is about to remove some of his property out of the jurisdiction of the court with intent to defraud his creditors, or that, for the same reason, he is about to dispose or has disposed of his property, or that he is fraudulently concealing it; or that the debt, concerning which suit is brought, was fraudulently contracted. Such in general is the law in most of the states and territories.

Imprisonment for debt has been generally prohibited by constitutional provision. In some states it is conditioned upon the debtor delivering up his property for the benefit of his creditors. It was substantially abolished in England in 1869.

It may be stated generally that the object of such statutes is to induce the defendant to pay the debt, give security, or take advantage of the insolvent laws or of some enactments made especially for the relief of poor debtors. It follows therefore that in most of the states a person under arrest for debt may obtain his release in any of these ways. A poor debtor is usually compelled to resort to one of the two last mentioned, and, although the proceedings differ in the different states, yet as a rule he is released upon delivering his property to a trustee, or taking oath that he has not more than ten or twenty dollars above the amount exempted by statute in the particular state in which he is confined.

Statutes authorizing imprisonment of one who obtains food and lodging without paying therefor, with intent to defraud, are constitutional; Ex parte Milecke, 52 Wash. 312, 100 Pac. 743, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 259, 132 Am. St. Rep. 968; Ex parte King, 102 Ala. 182, 15 South. 524; State v. Yardley, 95 Tenn. 546, 32 S. W. 481, 34 L. R. A. 656. They are usually held to impose the penalty, not because of or for the purpose of collecting the debt, but because of the fraud; State v. Benson, 28 Minn. 424, 10 N. W. 471; State v. Yardley, 95 Tenn. 546, 32 S. W. 481, 34 L. R. A. 656; State v. Engle, 156 Ind. 339, 58 N. E. 698.

POOR LAW BOARD. A government board appointed by statute 10 & 11 Vict. c. 109, to take the place of poor law commissioners, who had general management of the poor and the funds for their relief. The poor law board is now superseded by the local government board, established under 34 & 35 Vict. c. 70; 3 Steph. Com. 49.

POOR RATE. A rate levied by church authorities for the relief of the poor.

POPE. The bishop of Rome and head of the Roman Catholic church. He is elected by certain officers called cardinals, and remains in power during life. In the 9th Collocation of the Authentics it is declared the bishop of Rome hath the first place of sitting in all assemblies, and the bishop of Constantinople the second. Ridley, Civ. & Eccl. L. pt. 1, c. 3, § 10.

"It does not appear necessary that a Pope be selected either from the ranks of the Cardinals or that he be in Orders." 1 Halleck, Int. L., Baker's ed. 104.

The Catholic powers concede the precedence to the Pope as the visible head of the church; but Russia and Turkey and the Protestant states of Europe consider him only as the bishop of Rome, and a sovereign prince, although since September 20, 1870, he has been dispossessed of substantially all his territory. By the Italian decree of May 13, 1871, he is guaranteed his sovereign rights and other immunities by Italy, but he has refused to accept this decree. He maintains diplomatic relations with France and some other Catholic states; id. 118.

Though deprived of the territorial dominion which he once enjoyed, he holds, as sovereign pontiff and head of the Roman Church, an exceptional position. Though, in default of territory, he is not a temporal sovereign, he is in many respects treated as such. He has the right of active and passive legation, and his envoys of the first class, his apostolic nuncios, are specially privileged. Nevertheless he does not make war, and the conventions which he concludes with states are not called treaties but concordats. 1 Moore, Dig. Int. L. 39, cited in Ponce v. Church, 210 U. S. 318, 28 Sup. Ct. 737, 52 L. Ed. 1068.

See ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH.

POPULAR ACTION. An action given by statute, to any one who will sue for the penalty. A qui tam action. Dig. 47. 23. 1.

POPULAR SENSE. The sense in which a subject is understood by those conversant therewith. 1 Ex. D. 248, adopted in Westerland v. Min. Co., 203 Fed. 599, 121 C. C. A. 627.

POPULAR USE. The occasional and precarious enjoyment of property by the members of society in their individual capacity, without the power to enforce such enjoyment according to law. Gilmer v. Lime Point, 18 Cal. 238.

POPULISCITUM (Lat.). An act of the commons; same as plebiscitum. Ainsworth, Dict.

A law passed by the whole people assembled in comitia centuriata, and at the proposal of one of the senate, instead of a tribune, as was the case with a plebiscitum. Tayl. Civ. Law 178; Mackelvey, Civ. Law § 26.

PORCH. A portico; a shelter in front of a door. Attorney General v. Ayer, 148 Mass. 584, 20 N. E. 451.

PORT. A place to which the officers of the customs are appropriated, and which includes the privileges and guidance of all members and creeks which are allotted to them. 1 Chitty, Com. Law 726; Postlewaith, Com. Dict. According to Dalloz, a port is a place within land, protected against the waves and winds and affording to vessels a place of safety. By the Roman law a port is defined to be locus conclusus quo importantur merces et unde exportantur. Dig. 50. 16. 59. See Packwood v. Walden, 7 Mart. N. S. (La.) 81. In the revenue laws it is synonymous with district, when the limits of the port and district are the same; Ayer v. Thacher, 3 Mas. 153, Fed. Cas. No. 684. As used in the R. S. § 4347 it means any place from which merchandise may be shipped.

A port differs from a haven, and includes something more. First, it is a place at which vessels may arrive and discharge or take in their cargoes. Second, it comprehends a ville, city, or borough, called in Latin caput corpus, for the reception of mariners and merchants, for securing the goods and bringing them to market, and for victualling the ships. Third, it is impressed with its legal character by the civil authority. Hale, de Portibus Mar. c. 2; 1 Hargr. Tracts 46, 73; Bac. Abr. Prerogative (D 5); Com. Dig. Navigation (E); Co. 4th inst. 148; 2 Chitty, Com. L. 2; Dig. 50. 16. 59; 43. 12. 1. 13; 47. 10. 15. 7; 39. 4. 15.

The exact meaning of the term was considered by Lord Esher, M. R., in 15 Q. B. D. 580. He held that it was not usually the legal port as defined by acts of Parliament, but, "a place of safety for the ship and goods, whilst the goods are being loaded and unloaded"; that there never would be a port in the ordinary business sense of the word, unless there was some element of safety in it for the ship and goods, and that nothing was more certain to be such a port than a natural port; that a natural port was "a place in which the conformation of the land with regard to the sea is such that, if you get your ship within certain limits, she is in a place of safety for loading and unloading"; that any place at which the loading and unloading took place might safely be inferred to be within "the port," as understood by the parties; that beyond the place of loading and unloading, the port would extend to any further space over which the court authorities were in the habit of exercising "port discipline."

In L. R. 4 Ex. 238, 245, Byles, J., said: "The passage from Lord Hale, de Portibus Maris (ch. 2, p. 46), shows that the limits of a port may depend on the existence of wharves, quays, buildings, and other conveniences. It may accordingly, from time to time, vary and increase with the increase of population and of buildings. Lord Hale further says: "The port of London anciently extended to Greenwich in the time of Edward I. and Gravesend is a member of it. The extent of a port therefore after a lapse of years may become a question of fact."

In the same case below the meaning of "port" generally was considered by Martin, B.; L. R. 3 Ex. 330, 345. See HOME PORT; DOMESTIC PORT.

PORT OF DELIVERY. This is sometimes used to distinguish the port of unlading or destination, from any port at which the vessel touches for other purposes. The Two Catherinees, 2 Mas. 319, Fed. Cas. No. 14,288.

PORT OF DEPARTURE. As used in the United States statutes requiring a ship to procure a bill of health from the consular officer at the place of departure, it is not the last port at which the ship stops while bound for the United States, but the port from which she cleared. The Dago, 61 Fed. 986, 10 C. C. A. 224.

PORT OF DESTINATION. As used in a time policy, the phrase has been held to mean any foreign port to which the vessel may be destined during the voyage, as well as her home port, and to include any usual stopping place for lading or unlading cargoes. Cole v. Ins. Co., 12 Gray (Mass.) 501, 74 Am. Dec. 609.

PORT OF DISCHARGE. The place where the substantial part of the cargo is discharged has been held to be such, although done with the intent to complete the discharge at another basin. Bramhall v. Ins. Co., 104 Mass. 510, 6 Am. Rep. 261. Some cargo must be discharged to make the port of destination the port of discharge; U. S. v. Barker, 5 Mas. 404, Fed. Cas. No. 14,516. See, further, Kimball v. The Anna Kimball, 2 Cliff. 4, Fed. Cas. No. 7,772.

PORT RISK. A risk upon a vessel whilst she is lying in port and before she has taken her departure on another voyage. Nelson v. Ins. Co., 71 N. Y. 459.

PORT TOLL. The toll paid for bringing goods into a port.

PORTATICA (L. Lat.). In English Law. The generic name for port duties charged to ships. Hargr. Law Tracts 64.

PORTER. The name of an ancient English officer who bore or carried a rod before the justices. The door-keeper of the English parliament also bears this name.

One who is employed as a common carrier to carry goods from one place to another in the same town is also called a porter. Such person is, in general, answerable as a common carrier. Story, Bailm. § 496.

PORTGREVE (from Sax. gerefa, reeve or bailiff, and port). A chief magistrate in certain maritime towns. The chief magistrate of London was anciently so called, as appears from a charter of king William I. Instead of this portgreve of London, the succeeding king appointed two bailiffs, and afterwards a mayor. Camden, Hist. 325.

PORTION. That part of a parent's estate, or the estate of one standing in loco parentis, which is given to a child. 1 Vern. 204. See 8 Com. Dig. 539; 16 Viner, Abr. 432; 1 Belt, Suppl. Ves. 34, 58, 303; 2 id. 46; Appeal of Lewis, 108 Pa. 137; Holly v. State, 54 Ala. 240.

The part, share, or division, made for a child by the parent. Dickison v. Dickison, 138 Ill. 541, 28 N. E. 792, 32 Am. St. Rep. 163.

PORTION DISPONIBLE. In French Law. The part of a person's estate which he may bequeath to others than his natural heirs. A parent having one legitimate child may dispose of one-half only of his property; leaving two, one-third only; and leaving three or more, one-fourth only; and it matters not whether the disposition is inter vivos, or by will. See LEGITIME.

PORTIONIBUS. Is properly employed to mean a portion of the tithes of one parish claimed by the rector of another parish. 4 Cl. & F. 1.

PORTORIA (Lat.). In Civil Law. Duties paid in ports on merchandise. Code 4. 61. 3. Taxes levied in old times at city gates. Tolls for passing over bridges. Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Spelman, Gloss.

PORTO RICO. By the ratification of the treaty of peace with Spain, Porto Rico became subject to the legislative power of Congress, but, pending the action of Congress, and the necessary delay in establishing civil government, there was no inter regnum, and the authority to govern the territory ceded by the treaty was, by the law applicable to conquest and cession, under the military control of the president as commander-in-chief; Santiago v. Noguera, 214 U. S. 260, 29 Sup. Ct. 608, 53 L. Ed. 989. The purpose of the organic act of April 12, 1900, was to give local self-government, conferring an autonomy similar to that of the states; Gromer v. Dredging Co., 224 U. S. 362, 32 Sup. Ct. 499, 56 L. Ed. 801; Porto Rico v. Rosaly Y Castillo, 227 U. S. 270, 33 Sup. Ct. 352, 57 L. Ed. 507.

Since April 11, 1899, Porto Rico has been de facto and de jure American territory. Its history and its legal and political institutions up to its annexation are matters which must be recognized, as are the ancient laws and institutions of many of our states, when matters come before it from their several jurisdictions. The court will take judicial notice of the Spanish law as far as it effects our insular possessions. It is pro tanto no longer foreign law; Ponce v. Church, 210 U. S. 296, 28 Sup. Ct. 737, 52 L. Ed. 1068.

While it has not for all purposes been incorporated into the United States, it is not foreign territory; De Lima v. Bidwell, 182 U. S. 1, 21 Sup. Ct. 743, 45 L. Ed. 1041; nor are its citizens aliens; American R. Co. v. Didricksen, 227 U. S. 145, 33 Sup. Ct. 224, 57 L. Ed. 456, following Gonzales v. Williams, 192 U. S. 1, 24 Sup. Ct. 171, 48 L. Ed. 317. Its organization is in most essentials that of a territory; American R. Co. v. Didricksen, 227 U. S. 145, 33 Sup. Ct. 224, 57 L. Ed. 456, following New York v. Bingham, 211 U. S. 468, 29 Sup. Ct. 190, 53 L. Ed. 286.

When Spain's sovereignty was withdrawn, the Spanish Governor-General and all other officers of the crown of Spain whose authority consisted in the exercise of the royal prerogatives delegated to them, ceased to exercise such authority, and the powers possessed by them under the royal decree of 1878 in regard to the formation of corporations did not pass to the authority of the United States; Moore, Int. Law § 93.

By the act of April 12, 1900, in relation to the government of Porto Rico, the commissioner of navigation was empowered to make such regulations, subject to the approval of the secretary of the treasury, as he might deem expedient for the nationalization of all vessels owned by the inhabitants on the date of the exchange of the ratifications of the treaty of cession, and which continued to be so owned up to the time of such nationalization, and for their admission to all the benefits of the coasting trade of the United States.

The power to dispose permanently of the public lands and property rests in congress and, in the absence of a statute conferring such power, cannot be exercised by the executive; 1 Moore, Int. L. § 93.

The title of the Roman Catholic church in Porto Rico to churches erected and dedicated to religious uses, is not affected by the fact that some of the funds for building or repairing them were public funds appropriated by the municipality of Ponce, where such appropriations were made without reservation or restriction; Ponce v. Roman Catholic Church, 210 U. S. 296, 28 Sup. Ct. 737, 52 L. Ed. 1068.

See PHILIPPINES; MILITARY OCCUPATION.

PORTRAIT. A picture of a person painted from life or from reasonable materials, if there are such, from which a likeness can be framed; or a picture painted after a man's death and meant to represent him. If there is nothing affording the materials for the portrait, it is completely an ideal one and cannot properly be called a portrait; Lord Lyndhurst, in 14 L. J. Ch. 73.

PORTSALES. Auctions were anciently so called, because they took place in ports.

PORTSOKA, or PORTSOKEN. Any place within the jurisdiction of a city. Cowell.

PORTUGAL. A republic of Europe. The revolution occurred October 5, 1910, and the new government was formed immediately afterwards. The executive is vested in a president and a responsible cabinet of seven members. The legislature consists of two chambers.

The Código Civil Português was established in 1868. The law is administered in about one hundred and twenty public law courts and a high court of appeal at Lisbon. There are three high courts at Lisbon and there are also three other high courts in other districts. Some cases are tried before a jury.

POSITIONS. In pleading in ecclesiastical courts, the numbered paragraphs of a detailed statement, prepared by each of the parties, of the facts in support of his pleadings. Langdell, Eq. Pl.

POSITIVE. Express; absolute; not doubtful. This word is frequently used in composition.

POSITIVE CONDITION. One in which the thing which is the subject of it must happen: as, if I marry. It is opposed to a negative condition, which is where the thing which is the subject of it must not happen: as, if I do not marry.

POSITIVE EVIDENCE. That which, if believed, establishes the truth or falsehood of a fact in issue, and does not arise from any presumption. It is distinguished from circumstantial evidence. 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3057.

POSITIVE FRAUD. See FRAUD.

POSITIVE LAW. Law actually ordained or established, under human sanctions, as distinguished from the law of nature or natural law, which comprises those considerations of justice, right, and universal expediency that are announced by the voice of reason or of revelation. Municipal law is chiefly, if not essentially, positive; while the law of nations has been deemed by many of the earlier writers as merely an application of the law of nature. That part of the law of nations which rests on positive law may be considered in a threefold point of view:—1. The universal voluntary law, or those rules which become law by the uniform practice of nations in general, and by the manifest utility of the rules themselves; 2. The customary law, or that which, from motives of convenience, has, by tacit but implied agreement, prevailed, not necessarily among all nations, nor with so permanent a utility as to become a portion of the universal voluntary law, but enough to have acquired a prescriptive obligation among certain states so situated as to be mutually benefited by it. 1 Taunt. 241; 3. The conventional law, or that which is agreed between particular states by express treaty, a law binding on the parties among whom such treaties are in force. 1 Chitty, Com. Law 28. See LAW.

POSSE (Lat.). To be able. This word is used substantively to signify a possibility. For example, such a thing is in posse, that is, such a thing may possibly be. When the thing is in being, the phrase to express it is, in esse.

POSSE COMITATUS (Lat.). The power of the county.

The sheriff, or other peace officer, has authority by the common law, while acting under the authority of the writ of the United States, commonwealth, or people, as the case may be, and for the purpose of preserving the public peace, to call to his aid the posse comitatus; 1 Bla. Com. 343.

But with respect to writs which issue in the first instance to arrest in civil suits, or on mesne process, the sheriff is not bound to take the posse comitatus to assist him in the execution of them; though he may, if he pleases, on anticipated, or actual resistance to the execution of the process; Co. 2d Inst. 193; Co. 3d Inst. 161; Coyles v. Hurtin, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 85; State v. Allison, 47 N. C. 339.

Although the sheriff is not bound upon a capias ad respondendum to take the posse comitatus, it has been held to be his duty to do so if he has any reason to anticipate resistance; nor can it be said to be a hardship on the sheriff that he should be bound to provide against resistance; 12 Jurist 1052; Winst. 144. And likewise with reference to a capias ad satisfaciendum; Abbott v. Holland, 20 Ga. 598; and he cannot, in an action for escape, plead that the prisoner was rescued; id.

Having the authority to call in the assistance of all citizens, he may equally require that of any individual; but to this general rule there are some exceptions; persons of infirm health, or who lack understanding, minors under the age of fifteen years, women, and perhaps some others, it seems, cannot be required to assist the sheriff, and are, therefore, not considered as a part of the power of the county; Viner, Abr. Sheriff (B).

A refusal on the part of an individual lawfully called upon to assist the officer in putting down a riot is indictable; 1 Carr. & M. 314. In this case will be found the form of an indictment for this offence.

Although the sheriff is acting without authority, yet it would seem that any person who obeys his command, unless aware of that fact, will be protected; McMahan v. Green, 34 Vt. 69, 80 Am. Dec. 665.

An individual not called upon by the sheriff to lend his aid does so at his peril; Kirbie v. State, 5 Tex. App. 60. In a case where the defendant assisted a sheriff's officers in executing a writ of replevin without their solicitation, the court held him justified in so doing; 2 Mod. 244; see Williams v. Bunker, 78 Me. 373, 5 Atl. 882; Reed v. Rice, 2 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 44, 19 Am. Dec. 122; Bac. Abr. Sheriff (N); Comfort v. Com., 5 Whart. (Pa.) 437.

The employment of the army in this way is forbidden; Act of June 18, 1878.

See SHERIFF; PEACE; MARTIAL LAW.

POSSESSED. This word is applied to the right and enjoyment of a termor, or a person having a term, who is said to be possessed, and not seised. Bac. Tr. 335; Dy. 369. It is sometimes synonymous with "seised"; Flowers v. Flowers, 89 Ga. 632, 15 S. E. 834, 18 L. R. A. 75.

"Possessed" is a variable term in the law, and has different meanings as it is used in different circumstances. It sometimes implies a temporary interest in lands; as we say a man is possessed, in contradistinction to being seised. It sometimes implies the corporal having; as we say a man is seised and possessed. But it sometimes implies no more than that one has a property in a thing; that he has it as owner; that it is his; Thompson v. Moran, 44 Mich. 603, 7 N. W. 180.

POSSESSIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. The detention of a thing: divided into—first, natural, or the naked detention of a thing, without intention to acquire ownership; second, civil, or the detention of a thing to which one has a right, or with intention of acquiring ownership. Hein. Elem. Jur. Civ. § 1288; Mackeldey, Civ. Law § 210.

In Old English Law. Possession; seisin. Law Fr. & Lat. Dict.; 2 Bla. Com. 227; Bracton, lib. 2, c. 17; Cowell, Possession. But seisina cannot be of an estate less than freehold; possessio can. Slater v. Rawson, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 450.

POSSESSIO FRATRIS (Lat. the brother's possession). A technical phrase applied in the English law relating to descents, to denote the possession by one in such privity with a person as to be considered the person's own possession.

By the common law, the ancestor from whom the inheritance was taken by descent must have had actual seisin of the lands, either by his own entry, or by the possession of his own or his ancestor's lessee for years, or by being in the receipt of rent from the lessee of the freehold. But there are qualifications as to this rule, one of which arises from the doctrine of possessio fratris. The possession of a tenant for years, guardian, or brother is equivalent to that of the party himself, and is termed possessio fratris; Littl. sect. 8; Co. Litt. 15 a; 3 Wills. 516; 7 Term 386.

In Connecticut, Delaware, Georgia, Massachusetts, New Jersey, New York, Ohio, Pennsylvania, Rhode Island, South Carolina, and Virginia, the real and personal estates of intestates are distributed among the heirs without any reference or regard to the actual seisin of the ancestor; Reeve, Desc. 377; Hillhouse v. Chester, 3 Day (Conn.) 166, 3 Am. Dec. 265; Gardner v. Collins, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 59, 7 L. Ed. 347; In Maryland, New Hampshire, North Carolina, and Vermont, the doctrine of possessio fratris, it seems, is recognized; Chirac v. Reinecker, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 625, 7 L. Ed. 538. Reeve, Desc. 377; 4 Kent 384.

POSSESSION. The detention or enjoyment of a thing which a man holds or exercises by himself, or by another who keeps or exercises it in his name.

By the possession of a thing we always conceive the condition in which not only one's own dealing with the thing is physically possible, but every other person's dealing with it is capable of being excluded. Thus, the seaman possesses his ship, but not the water in which it moves, although he makes each subserve his purpose.

It expresses the closest relation that can exist between a corporeal thing and the person who possesses it, implying an actual, physical contact, as by sitting or standing upon a thing; Bryan v. Spivey, 109 N. C. 57, 13 S. E. 766.

Actual possession exists where the thing is in the immediate occupancy of the party. Simpson v. Blount, 14 N. C. 34.

Constructive possession is that which exists in contemplation of law, without actual personal occupation. Hubbard v. Austin, 11 Vt. 129. And see 2 Bla. Com. 116.

There is no word more ambiguous in its meaning than possession. It is invariably used to describe actual possession and constructive possession, which are often so shaded into one another that it is difficult to see where one ends and the other begins; National Safe Deposit Co. v. Stead, 232 U. S. 58, 34 Sup. Ct. 209, 58 L. Ed. —.

"Possession is the occupation of anything with the intention of exercising the rights of ownership in respect to it." Hunter, Rom. Law 209. Natural possession (naturalis possessio) implies mere physical contact with a thing, apart from all attempted exercise of rights with respect to it. Taylor, Jurispr. 545. The lower degree of control was known to the later civilians as detentio. Id. 544.

In order to complete a possession, two things are required: that there be an occupancy, apprehension, or taking; that the taking be with an intent to possess (animus possidendi): hence persons who have no legal wills, as children and idiots, cannot possess or acquire possession; Pothier; Etienne. See 1 Mer. 358. But an infant of sufficient understanding may lawfully acquire the possession of a thing; Mitch. R. E. 259.

Proof of the possession of property is commonly said to be prima facie evidence of title to it; and this is so with respect to land, in which case it has been held that proof of possession is sufficient evidence of title to maintain an action against a powder company for damages caused by an explosion; Hazard Powder Co. v. Volger, 58 Fed. 152, 7 C. C. A. 130. This particular phrase that possession is prima facie evidence of title has been very much criticised by Sir F. Pollock, who says that "it would be less intelligible at first sight, but not less correct to say that in the developed system of common-law pleading and procedure as it existed down to the middle of this century, proof of title was evidence only of a right to possess." Poll. Torts 317. Under the common-law forms of action, possession was of the utmost importance and was rather to be considered than ownership. "An owner in possession was protected against disturbance, but the rights of an owner out of possession were obscure and weak. To this day it continues so with regard to chattels. For many purposes the true owner of goods is the person, and the only person, entitled to immediate possession." Poll. Torts 316.

Commenting on the suggestion sometimes made that there is no doctrine of possession in our law, the same author says: "The reason of this appearance, an appearance capable of deceiving even learned persons, is that possession has all but swallowed up ownership; and the rights of a possessor, the one entitled to possess, have all but monopolized the very name of property." Id. 317.

"Legal possession does not necessarily coincide either with actual physical control . . . or with the right to possess (constantly called property in our books), and it need not have a rightful origin." Id. 318. "The common law, when it must choose between denying legal possession to the persons apparently in possession and attributing it to a wrongdoer, generally prefers the latter course. In Roman law there is no such general tendency, though the results are often similar." Id. 319.

Judge Holmes considers possession a conception only less important than contract, and he contends that the English system is far more civilized than the Roman. He seeks to answer the question which presents so much difficulty to German philosophers: "Why is possession protected by the law when the possessor is not also an owner?" His reply is that "possession is to be protected because a man by taking possession of an object has brought it within the sphere of his will; he has extended his personality into or over that object." Holmes, Com. Law 207. "Rights of ownership are substantially the same as those incident to possession. . . . The owner is allowed to exclude all and is accountable to no one; the possessor is allowed to exclude all but one and is accountable to no one but him." Id. 246. See Holmes, Common Law, Lect. 6; Pollock, Torts, 5th ed. ch. 9; F. W. Maitland in 1 Law Quart. Rev. 324; 2 id. 481.

A very high degree of legal protection is accorded to one lawfully in possession and, whether its origin is rightful or not, a stranger cannot be heard in opposition to it. The true owner may be heard, but an intruder never. It is said, however, that the bald proposition that possession is a good title against a wrongdoer is inaccurate, if stated entirely without a qualification, and that the true limits of the bare possessor's right to recover damages for interference with his possession are: 1. If the defendant cannot show who the true owner is, the bare possessor may recover the same measure of damages as if he were the true owner, whether he is liable over to the owner or not. 2. Where the true owner is shown, the bare possessor cannot recover the value of the goods taken or the diminution in their value, or for injury, unless he is liable over to the owner. 3. Whether the true owner be shown or not, the possessor may recover damages for the taking or trespass, nominal or substantial, as the taking is or is not attended with aggravation. 7 Law Quart. Rev. 242.

Possession in the Roman law is the subject of an extended discussion by J. M. Lightwood in 3 Law Quart. Rev. 32, who takes issue with Judge Holmes' treatment of that subject, as to which he says, that although the differences between the two systems are very striking, Judge Holmes treats the civilians with scant respect, although "the knowledge he shows of their rights proves that he has himself by no means neglected them and we shall not be far wrong in following his practice rather than his precept."

Sir F. Pollock (Genius of Com. Law 120) states a few "comprehensive principles as to possession in the common law in their simplest form: 1. Possession in fact is such actual exclusive control as the nature of the thing admits. 2. Possession in law, the right which is protected by possessory remedies, generally follows possession in fact, but does not necessarily cease when possession in fact ceases. The chief exception to this rule is that a servant in charge of his master's goods has not possession in law. 3. Possession in law continues until determined in some way which the law definitely recognizes, beyond the mere absence or failure of a continuing intent to possess. 4. Possession in law is a commencement of title; in other words the possessor can deal with the thing as an owner against all persons not having a better title and this protection extends to persons deriving title from him in good faith. 5. When possession in fact is so contested that no one can be said to have actual effective control, possession in law follows the better title. It is true that every one of these principles, in its application to the complex facts of life, may call for careful and even subtle elaboration. But I am free to maintain that in themselves they are adequate and rational. We take the line of making legal possession coincide with apparent control so far as possible; the Roman law takes the opposite line of unwillingness to separate legal possession from ownership or what we call 'general property'; and I venture to think our way both the simpler and the better."

Failure to take possession is sometimes considered a badge of fraud, in the transfer of personal property. See SALE; MORTGAGE.

Possession of real property will be presumed to accompany ownership until the contrary is proved; and constructive possession consequent upon legal ownership is sufficient as against mere trespassers; Gonzales v. Ross, 120 U. S. 605, 7 Sup. Ct. 705, 30 L. Ed. 801. Long continued possession and use of real property creates a presumption of lawful origin; Bradshaw v. Ashley, 180 U. S. 59, 21 Sup. Ct. 297, 45 L. Ed. 423; and this presumption need not rest upon belief that a conveyance was in point of fact executed; Fletcher v. Fuller, 120 U. S. 534, 7 Sup. Ct. 667, 30 L. Ed. 759.

When it is not based on legal right, but secured by violence and maintained with force and arms, possession cannot furnish the basis of a right; Lyle v. Patterson, 228 U. S. 211, 33 Sup. Ct. 480, 57 L. Ed. 804.

Securities of a decedent, which he had kept in a safe-deposit box, to which he alone had access, are not "in the possession or under the control" of the safe-deposit company; People v. Mercantile Safe-Deposit Co., 159 App. Div. 98, 143 N. Y. Supp. 849, contra, National S.-D. Co. v. Stead, 250 Ill. 584, 95 N. E. 973, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 430.

See ADVERSE POSSESSION; LIMITATIONS.

In Louisiana. Civil possession exists when a person ceases to reside in a house or on the land which he occupied, or to detain the movable which he possessed, but without intending to abandon the possession. It is the detention of a thing by virtue of a just title and under the conviction of possessing as owner. La. Civ. Code, art. 3392, 3394.

Natural possession is that by which a man detains a thing corporeal; as, by occupying a house, cultivating ground, or retaining a movable in his possession. Natural possession is also defined to be the corporeal detention of a thing which we possess as belonging to us, without any title to that possession, or with a title which is void. La. Civ. Code, art. 3391, 3393.

Possession applies properly only to corporeal things, movables and immovables. The possession of incorporeal rights, such as servitudes and other rights of that nature, is only a quasi-possession, and is exercised by a species of possession of which these rights are susceptible. Id. art. 3395.

Possession may be enjoyed by the proprietor of the thing or by another for him: thus, the proprietor of a house possesses it by his tenant or farmer.

To acquire possession of a property, two things are requisite: the intention of possessing as owner; the corporeal possession of the thing. Id. art. 3399.

Possession is lost with or without the consent of the possessor. It is lost with his consent—when he transfers this possession to another with the intention to divest himself of it; when he does some act which manifests his intention of abandoning possession: as, when a man throws into the street furniture or clothes of which he no longer chooses to make use. Id. art. 3411. A possessor of an estate loses the possession against his consent—when another expels him from it, whether by force in driving him away, or by usurping possession during his absence, and preventing him from re-entering; when the possessor of an estate allows it to be usurped and held for a year, without during that time having done any act of possession or interfered with the usurper's possession. Id. art. 3412.

In Criminal Law. In some states it is made a criminal offence to have possession of burglars' tools with intent to use them for the purpose for which they were intended. Under such a statute it was held that it is sufficient to allege in the information possession with the intent to break open places of deposit in general and take property, without specifying any particular place or property. Scott v. State, 91 Wis. 552, 65 N. W. 61.

See RECENT POSSESSION OF STOLEN PROPERTY.

In International Law. As indicating political control, a possession means the same as a colony. It was so used in the treaty of 1897, between the United States and Great Britain, which failed to receive the approval of the senate.

The Roman law doctrine of possession, or occupation, has been of immense importance in international law; by it anything without an owner might be taken possession of (occupation) by any one who desired to keep it. Grotius, to some extent at least, applied the doctrine to the partition of the New World by European nations. Taylor, Jurispr. § 48.

POSSESSION MONEY. An allowance to one put in possession of goods taken under writ of fiery facias. Holthouse, Dict.

POSSESSION, WRIT OF. See HABERE FACIAS POSSESSIONEM.

POSSESSOR. He who holds, detains, or enjoys a thing, either by himself or his agent, which he claims as his own.

In general, the possessor of personal chattels is presumed to be the owner; and in case of real estate he has a right to receive the profits until a title adverse to his possession has been established, leaving him subject to an action for the mesne profits.

POSSESSORY ACTION. In Old English Law. A real action, in which the plaintiff, called the demandant, sought to recover the possession of land, tenements, and hereditaments. On account of the great nicety required in its management, and the introduction of more expeditious methods of trying titles by other actions, it has been laid aside. Finch, Laws 257.

In admiralty law the term is still in use. See PETITIONS.

In Louisiana. An action by which one claims to be maintained in the possession of an immovable property, or of a right upon or growing out of it, when he has been disturbed; or to be reinstated to that possession, when he has been divested or evicted. Preston v. Zabriskie, 2 La. 227.

POSSIBILITY. An uncertain thing which may happen. Lilly, Reg. A contingent interest in real or personal estate. 1 Madd. 549.

Possibilities are near, as when an estate is limited to one after the death of another; or remote, as that one man shall be married to a woman, and then that she shall die and he be married to another. 1 Fonbl. Eq. n. e.; Viner, Abr.; 2 Co. 51 a.

Possibilities are also divided into—a possibility coupled with an interest. This may, of course, be sold, assigned, transmitted, or devised. Such a possibility occurs in executory devises, and in contingent, springing, or executory uses. See Bodenhamer v. Welch, 89 N. C. 81.

A bare possibility, or hope of succession. This is the case of an heir apparent during the life of his ancestor. It is evident that he has no right which he can assign, devise, or even release. See Chal. R. P. 66.

A possibility or mere contingent interest, as, a devise to Paul if he survive Peter. Dane, Abr. c. 1, a. 5, § 2, and the cases there cited. See PERPETUITY.

POSSIBLE. Liable to happen or come to pass, capable of existing or of being conceived or thought of; capable of being done; not contrary to the nature of things. Topeka City Ry. Co. v. Higgs, 38 Kan. 383, 16 Pac. 667, 5 Am. St. Rep. 754. It is sometimes equivalent to practicable or reasonable; Palmer v. Ins. Co., 44 Wis. 208. An undertaking to supply an article as soon as possible is construed to mean with all reasonable promptitude, regard being had to the manufacturer's means of business, and his orders already in hand; 26 L. J. C. P. 73; 4 Q. B. D. 670.

POST (Lat.). After. When two or more alienations or descents have taken place between an original intruder and the tenant or defendant in a writ of entry, the writ is said to be in the post, because it states that the tenant had not entry unless after the ouster of the original intruder. 3 Bla. Com. 182. Persons claiming under the propositus by feofment or inheritance were said to be "in the per," while those claiming in any other manner, e. g. the limitation of a use, as tenant in dower, etc., were said to be "in the post." Except in case of the heir, the distinction is that persons in the per take by the act of the party at common law unassisted by statute, while persons in the post take by operation of law without any act of the party or by his act aided by statute; 4 L. Quart. Rev. 362. See ENTRY, WRIT OF.

A military establishment where a body of troops is permanently fixed. Caldwell's Case, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 268, 22 L. Ed. 114; a military post is synonymous with military station. U. S. v. Phisterer, 94 U. S. 219, 24 L. Ed. 116.

POST CONQUESTUM. After the Conquest. Words inserted in the king's title by King Edward I., and constantly used in the time of Edward III. Toml.

POST-DATE. To date an instrument a time after that on which it is made. See DATE.

POST DIEM (Lat.). After the day; as, a plea of payment post diem, after the day when the money became due. Com. Dig. Pleader (2 W. 29).

POST DISSEISIN. In English Law. The name of a writ which lies for him who, having recovered lands and tenements by force of a novel disseisin, is again disseised by a former disseisor. Jacob, Law Dict.

POST ENTRY. In Maritime Law. An entry made by a merchant upon the importation of goods, after the goods have been weighed, measured, or gauged, to make up the deficiency of the original or prime entry. The custom of making such entries has arisen from the fact that a merchant in making the entry at the time of importation is not or may not be able to calculate exactly the duties which he is liable to pay: he therefore makes an approximately correct entry, which he subsequently corrects by the post entry. See Chitty, Com. L. 746.

POST FINE. A duty formerly paid to the king for a fine acknowledged in his court.

POST LITEM MOTAM (Lat.). After the commencement of the suit.

Declarations or acts of the parties made post litem motam are presumed to be made with reference to the suit then pending, and, for this reason, are not evidence in favor of the persons making them; while those made before an action has been commenced, in some cases, as when a pedigree is to be proved, may be considered as evidence; 4 Camp. 401.

POST-MARK. A stamp or mark put on letters in the postoffice.

Post-marks are evidence of a letter's having passed through the postoffice; 2 Camp. 620; 2 B. & P. 316; New Haven Co. Bk. v. Mitchell, 15 Conn. 206. But they are not evidence per se without proof; 1 Campb. 215; 16 M. & W. 124.

See LETTER; POSTAL SERVICE.

POST MORTEM (Lat.). After death: as, an examination post mortem is an examination made of a dead body to ascertain the cause of death; an inquisition post mortem is one made by the coroner.

It is the duty of the coroner, after death by violence, to cause a post mortem examination to be made by a competent medical authority. A physician thus employed may, at common law, maintain an action against the county for trouble and labor expended in such examination; Gibson, C. J., in Com. v. Harman, 4 Pa. 269.

A father may maintain an action against one to whom he has intrusted his child for treatment, for an autopsy performed upon it after death; Burney v. Children's Hospital, 169 Mass. 57, 47 N. E. 401, 38 L. R. A. 413, 61 Am. St. Rep. 273. A widow may recover damages in a similar case for the unlawful dissection of the body of her dead husband; Larson v. Chase, 47 Minn. 307, 50 N. W. 238, 14 L. R. A. 85, 28 Am. St. Rep. 370. "The right is to the possession of the corpse in the same condition it was in when death supervened. It is the right to what remains when the breath leaves the body, and not merely to such a hacked, hewed, and mutilated corpse as some stranger, an offender against the criminal law, may choose to turn over to an afflicted relative;" Foley v. Phelps, 1 App. Div. 551, 37 N. Y. Supp. 471; other authorities to the same general effect are Renihan v. Wright, 125 Ind. 536, 25 N. E. 822, 9 L. R. A. 514, 21 Am. St. Rep. 249; Young v. College of Physicians, 81 Md. 358, 32 Atl. 177, 31 L. R. A. 540. See DEAD BODY.

POST-NATUS (Lat.). Literally, after born; it is used by the old law writers to designate the second son. See PUISNE; POST-NATI.

POST NOTES. A species of bank-notes payable at a distant period, and not on demand. In re Dyott's Estate, 2 W. & S. (Pa.) 463. A kind of bank-notes intended to be transmitted at a distance by post. See Medomak Bank v. Curtis, 24 Me. 36.

POST-NUPTIAL. Something which takes place after marriage: as, a post-nuptial settlement, which is a conveyance made generally by the husband for the benefit of the wife.

A post-nuptial settlement may be either with or without consideration. The former is valid even against creditors, when in other respects it is untainted with fraud; Picquet v. Swan, 4 Mas. 443, Fed. Cas. No. 11,133; Gore v. Waters, 2 Bail. (S. C.) 477. The latter, when made without consideration, if bona fide, and the husband be not involved at the time, and it be not disproportionate to his means, taking his debts and situation into consideration, is valid; Picquet v. Swan, 4 Mas. 443, Fed. Cas. No. 11,-

133. See ANTE-NUPTIAL CONTRACT; SETTLEMENT; VOLUNTARY CONVEYANCE.

POST-OBIT (Lat.). An agreement by which the obligor borrows a certain sum of money and promises to pay a larger sum, exceeding the lawful rate of interest, upon the death of a person from whom he has some expectation, if the obligor be then living. Boynton v. Hubbard, 7 Mass. 119; 6 Madd. 111; 5 Ves. 57; 19 id. 628. See CATCHING BARGAIN; EXPECTANCY; MACEDONIAN DECREE.

POSTOFFICE. A government office for the receipt and delivery of the mail.

The power to establish postoffices does not enable the postmaster-general to bind the government by leasing a postoffice for twenty years when there is no appropriation therefor; Chase v. U. S., 155 U. S. 489, 15 Sup. Ct. 174, 39 L. Ed. 234.

The top of a letter-box is not an authorized depository for mail matter; 17 Op. A. G. 524.

A repair shop though designated as a station is not a branch postoffice or station; Knox v. U. S., 30 Ct. Cl. 59.

Where goods are sent by mail the postoffice is the agent of the buyer and not the seller; [1898] A. C. 200; and when they are delivered by the seller to the postoffice the title vests in the buyer; id. 204.

No person shall furnish any private conveyance for letters or packets, or in any manner cause or provide for the conveyance of the same by regular trips or at stated periods over any post route or between places between which the mail is carried. See Blackham v. Gresham, 16 Fed. 609.

All waters, canals, and plank roads are post routes during the time the mail is carried thereon, and all railroads in operation are post roads; R. S. § 3964; all public roads and highways are post roads; Act of March 1, 1884. See U. S. v. R. Co., 160 U. S. 1, 40, 16 Sup. Ct. 190, 40 L. Ed. 319.

See POSTAL SERVICE.

POST ROADS. See POSTOFFICE.

POSTAGE. The money charged by law for carrying and delivering mail matter.

The rates of postage between places in the United States are fixed by law; the rates of postage upon foreign letters are fixed by arrangements entered into by the postmaster-general, in pursuance of authority vested in him by congress for that purpose.

The vice president and members and members-elect of, and delegates and delegates-elect to, congress may send "any mail matter" free, not exceeding four ounces, "upon official or departmental business." Act of April 28, 1904.

Reading matter in raised characters for the blind, up to 10 pounds in a single volume or in packages not exceeding four pounds and containing no advertisements or other matter, unsealed, and when sent by blind institutions or public libraries as a loan and on return, are free. Act of March 27, 1904.

POSTAGE-STAMPS. The act of congress approved March 3, 1847, section 11, and the act of congress of March 3, 1841, sections 3, 4, provide that, to facilitate the transportation of letters in the mail, the postmaster-general be authorized to prepare postage-stamps, which when attached to any letter or packet shall be evidence of the payment of the postage chargeable on such letter. The same sections declare that any person who shall falsely or fraudulently make, utter, or forge any post-stamp, with the intent to defraud the postoffice department, shall be deemed guilty of felony, and be punished by a fine not exceeding five hundred dollars, or by imprisonment not exceeding five years, or by both such fine and imprisonment. And if any person shall use or attempt to use, in prepayment of postage, any postage-stamp which shall have been used before for like purposes, such person shall be subject to a penalty of fifty dollars for every such offence; to be recovered in the name of the United States, in any court of competent jurisdiction. See, also, Act of Mar. 3, 1851, 9 Stat. at L. 589; Act of Aug. 31, 1852, 10 Stat. at L. 141; 1 Supp. R. S. p. 249, § 28. Postmasters and other postal employes are forbidden to dispose of postage-stamps, stamped envelopes, or postal cards except for cash, or sell or dispose of them for any larger or less sum than the values indicated on their faces; 1 Supp. R. S. p. 187.

Postage stamps belonging to the United States are personal property and may be the subject of larceny; Jolly v. U. S., 170 U. S. 402, 18 Sup. Ct. 624, 42 L. Ed. 1085.

POSTAL SAVINGS DEPOSITARIES. The act of congress of June 25, 1910, created a board of trustees (the post-master general, the secretary of the treasury, and the attorney-general) to establish such depositaries. Deposits may be made by any person of ten years or over, in his or her name, or by a married woman in her own name and free from her husband's control. Deposits may be made of $1 or multiples thereof; but not to exceed $100 in any calendar month. Any person may purchase for 10 cents a card to which may be attached "postal savings stamps"; when these with the stamps amount to $1 or multiple thereof, including the card, the card and stamp may be added to the deposit. Interest at the rate of 2 per cent. a year is paid, but not on fractions of a dollar. No balance shall exceed $500.

Deposits may be withdrawn, in whole or in part, on demand. A depositor surrenders his deposit in sums of $20, $40, $60, $80, and $100, and multiples of $100 and of $500, and receives United States bonds of corresponding denominations, bearing interest at 2½ per cent. per annum, payable half-yearly and redeemable at the pleasure of the United States after one year, and payable in gold at the end of twenty years.

By § 16 "the faith of the United States is solemnly pledged to the payment" of the deposits.

See Wanamaker, Postal Savings Banks.

POSTAL SERVICE. That relating to the mails, their transmission and delivery.

The act of July 26, 1892, provides that after a general advertisement for the transportation of the mails, the postmaster-general may secure any mail service that may become necessary, and the contract shall be made with the lowest bidder. Where a contract is awarded to the lowest bidder, it can be changed only in the manner provided in §§ 3957-3959; Cosgrove v. U. S., 31 Ct. Cl. 332.

The compensation of mail contractors is fixed by contract and by law of congress. The postmaster-general may make deduction for failure to perform services, and may also deduct the price of the trip in all cases where the trip is not performed; Otis v. U. S., 24 Ct. Cl. 61. Compensation for additional services in carrying the mail is not to be in excess of the exact proportion which the original compensation bears to the original services; Allman v. U. S., 131 U. S. 31, 35, 9 Sup. Ct. 632, 33 L. Ed. 51. The original letting, and not any subsequent increase of service or pay, is made the standard of limitation under § 3960; 17 Op. Atty. Gen. 166. If an allowance is made under false representations or by mistake, the money paid can be recovered; U. S. v. Barlow, 132 U. S. 271, 10 Sup. Ct. 77, 33 L. Ed. 346; U. S. v. Carr, 132 U. S. 644, 10 Sup. Ct. 182, 33 L. Ed. 483; U. S. v. Voorhees, 135 U. S. 550, 10 Sup. Ct. 841, 34 L. Ed. 258; and money received under an expedited schedule as payment for additional horses and men and never used, though allowed in the order of expedition, was held bound to be subject to being refunded to the United States; U. S. v. Barlow, 132 U. S. 271, 10 Sup. Ct. 77, 33 L. Ed. 346. The clause providing that the compensation should not be in excess of the exact proportion does not prevent its being less; 19 Op. Atty. Gen. 147.

Most of the criminal legislation of congress rests upon no express grant of power, but upon the power to make all laws necessary and proper for carrying into execution the powers conferred; Ordron. Const. Leg. 559. The power to establish postoffices and post roads includes the power to punish offences committed against its administration, by whatever name it may be known; U. S. v. Jenther, 13 Blatch. 335, Fed. Cas. No. 15,476; U. S. v. Kirby, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 482, 19 L. Ed. 278; forbid the use of the mails to carry matter which disseminates crime and immorality; In re Rapier, 143 U. S. 110, 12 Sup. Ct. 374, 36 L. Ed. 93.

The right of congress to establish postoffices and post roads authorizes all measures necessary to secure the safe and speedy transmission of the mails and a prompt delivery of their contents; congress may prescribe what shall be carried and what shall be excluded; U. S. v. Musgrave, 160 Fed. 700; Public Clearing House v. Coyne, 194

U. S. 506, 24 Sup. Ct. 789, 48 L. Ed. 1092; and the size, weight, shape and character of the contents of every mailable package; limit the superscription, and declare a violation of its regulations to be a public offense and fix the punishment therefor. The unrestricted use of the mails is not one of the fundamental rights guaranteed by the constitution; Warren v. U. S., 183 Fed. 718, 106 C. C. A. 156, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 800. In Lewis Pub. Co. v. Morgan, 229 U. S. 288, 33 Sup. Ct. 867, 57 L. Ed. 1190, the provisions in § 2 of the post office appropriation act of 1912 regarding publications and conditions under which they can be carried in the mails were construed, and it was held that these provisions are intended simply to supplement existing legislation relative to second-class mail matter, and not as an exercise of legislative power to regulate the press, curtail its freedom or to deprive one not complying therewith of all right to use the mail service.

Opening a letter which had been in the postoffice, before delivery to the person to whom it was directed, with the intent to pry into his correspondence, is an offence against the postal laws, even though the letter was not sealed at the time; U. S. v. Pond, 2 Curt. 265, Fed. Cas. No. 16,067; and though it come from a criminal and is supposed to contain improper information; Andrews v. U. S., 162 U. S. 420, 16 Sup. Ct. 798, 40 L. Ed. 1023; but in order to constitute an offence against the postal laws the letter must have been in the custody of the postmaster or his agents; The Louisiana Lottery Cases, 20 Fed. 625.

Obstructing mails. The United States may enjoin obstructions to highways used in interstate commerce and in transporting the mails; Re Debs, 158 U. S. 564, 15 Sup. Ct. 900, 39 L. Ed. 1092. This applies to obstructions upon railroads and electric railways, and includes employes who suddenly desert their work; id.; U. S. v. Thomas, 55 Fed. 380; U. S. v. Woodward, 44 Fed. 592. See LABOR UNION.

Arresting a letter carrier on an indictment for murder is not obstructing the mail; U. S. v. Kirby, 7 Wall. (U. S.) 482, 19 L. Ed. 278. A state statute which necessarily interferes with speedy and uninterrupted carriage of the mails cannot be considered as a reasonable police regulation; Illinois C. R. Co. v. Illinois, 163 U. S. 142, 16 Sup. Ct. 1096, 41 L. Ed. 107. A state cannot prohibit or render penal the use of the mails between the states to effectuate the importation of liquor; R. M. Rose Co. v. State, 133 Ga. 353, 65 S. E. 770, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 443.

Committing an unprovoked assault upon a postmaster, the necessary result whereof was an obstruction and retarding of the passage of the mail, is an offence, unless the act was independent and disconnected from the postoffice and matters pertaining thereto; U. S. v. Claypool, 14 Fed. 127.

A person having a lien against horses for their keeping cannot enforce the same in such a manner as to stop the mail in a stage coach drawn by such horses, if it be actually in transitu; U. S. v. Barney, 3 Hughes 545, Fed. Cas. No. 14,525. It is an offence under the statute to stop a mail train although one had obtained a judgment and writ of execution from a state court against the railway company; U. S. v. De Mott, 3 Fed. 478. A forcible obstruction of interstate commerce and the transportation of the mails by the creation of a boycott among the members of the American Railway Union against the Pullman Car Company will be restrained by injunction; In re Debs, 158 U. S. 564, 15 Sup. Ct. 900, 39 L. Ed. 1092.

It is not an offence to restrain the driver of a mail coach from driving through a crowded city at such a rate as seriously to endanger the lives of the citizens; U. S. v. Hart, Fed. Cas. No. 15,316, Pet. C. C. 390. Restricting the speed of trains to six miles an hour by city ordinance does not obstruct the mails; 5 Op. Atty. Gen. 554.

Larceny and robbery. Embezzlement or destruction of mail matter by an employé in any department of the postal service is an offence against the postal laws. This statute has been held to create two distinct offences; viz.: (1) the embezzlement of a letter carried in the United States mail, and (2) the stealing of its contents; and one may be punished separately for each offence; U. S. v. Taylor, 37 Fed. 200; U. S. v. Atkinson, 34 Fed. 316. Under the statute no one can be convicted who is not an employé of the postoffice department; U. S. v. Nott, 1 McLean, 499, Fed. Cas. No. 15,900. One who steals from the mail, whether an employé or not, commits an offence against the postal laws; U. S. v. Gruver, 35 Fed. 59; and in taking or abstracting articles or receiving them when so taken, with the object of opening, secreting, destroying, embezzling, or stealing the same constitutes the offence; U. S. v. Jolly, 37 Fed. 108.

Sending letters to the customers of a corporation, urging them not to handle its products on account of labor troubles, is an offence against the postal laws; U. S. v. Raish, 163 Fed. 911.

Under U. S. Cr. Code, § 215, a "scheme to defraud" by the use of the mails may be found in any plan to get money or property of others by deceiving them as to the substantial identity of the thing they are to receive in exchange; this deception may be by implication, as well as by expressed words. There must be an underlying intent to defraud; mere expressions of honest opinion as to quality or future performance or "puffing" is not enough, if within reasonable bounds; Harrison v. U. S., 200 Fed. 662, 119 C. C. A. 78.

Among such schemes to defraud are: Selling worthless corporate stock; Wilson v. U. S., 190 Fed. 427, 111 C. C. A. 231; running a bucket shop under the pretense of doing real trading; Foster v. U. S., 178 Fed. 165, 101 C. C. A. 485; running a fake marriage bureau; Grey v. U. S., 172 Fed. 101, 96 C. C. A. 415; getting consignments without intent to remit; McConkey v. U. S., 171 Fed. 829, 96 C. C. A. 501; carrying on financial schemes impossible of performance; Walker v. U. S., 152 Fed. 111, 81 C. C. A. 329.

As to the use of decoy letters, see that title.

As to courts interfering with post office rulings, see U. S. v. Cortelyou, 28 App. D. C. 570, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 166.

As to using the mails for improper or non-mailable matter, see LIBEL; LIBERTY OF THE PRESS; LOTTERY; OBSCENITY.

POSTAL UNION. A treaty made at Berne in October, 1874, for the regulation of rates of postage and other matters connected with the postoffice between England and various other countries. See 38 & 39 Vict. c. 22; 1 Hall. Int. L. 286. Several international conferences have since been held on the subject: Paris, 1878; Lisbon, 1885; Vienna, 1891; Washington, 1897; Rome, 1906.

POSTEA (Lat. afterwards). In Practice. The indorsement, on the nisi prius record, purporting to be the return of the judge before whom a cause is tried, of what has been done in respect of such record.

It states the day of trial, before what judge, by name, the cause is tried, and also who is or was an associate of such judge; it also states the appearance of the parties by their respective attorneys, or their defaults, and the summoning and choice of the jury, whether those who were originally summoned, or those who were tales, or taken from the standers-by; it then states the finding of the jury upon oath, and, according to the description of the action, and the assessment of the damages, with the occasion thereof, together with the costs.

These are the usual matters of fact contained in the postea; but it varies with the description of the action. See Lee, Dict. Postea; 2 Lilly, Abr. 337; 16 Viner, Abr. 465; Bacon, Law Tr. 127.

When the trial is decisive, and neither the law nor the facts can afterwards be controverted, the postea is delivered by the proper officer to the attorney of the successful party, to sign his judgment; but it not unfrequently happens that after a verdict has been given there is just cause to question its validity: in such case the postea remains in the custody of the court. Eunomus, Dial. 2, § 33, p. 116.

POSTERIORES (Lat.). This term was used by the Romans to denote the descendants in a direct line beyond the sixth degree. It is still used in making genealogical tables.

POSTERIORITY. Being or coming after. It is a word of comparison, the correlative of which is priority: as, when a man holds lands from two landlords, he holds from his ancient landlord by priority, and from the other by posteriority. Co. 2d Inst. 392.

These terms, priority and posteriority, are also used in cases of liens: the first are prior liens, and are to be paid in the first place; the last are posterior liens, and are not entitled to payment until the former have been satisfied.

POSTERITY. All the descendants of a person in a direct line to the remotest generation. Breckinridge v. Denny, 8 Bush. (Ky.) 527.

POSTHUMOUS CHILD. One born after the death of its father; or, when the Cæsean operation is performed, after that of the mother. The doctrine is universally adopted throughout the United States, that posthumous children inherit in the same manner as if born during the father's life; and this relates back to the conception of the child, if it is born alive; 3 Washb. R. P. *412; Jenkins v. Freyer, 4 Paige (N. Y.) 52; Barker v. Pearce, 30 Pa. 173, 72 Am. Dec. 691. The court will allow a longer time than nine months for the birth of the child, when the opinion of physicians, or circumstances warrant it; 2 Greenl. Cruise, R. P. 140.

When a father makes a will without providing for a posthumous child, the will is generally considered as revoked pro tanto; 3 Washb. R. P. 699, 412; 4 Kent 412, 521, 525; Shotts v. Poe, 47 Md. 513, 28 Am. Rep. 486; Wilson v. Ott, 160 Pa. 433, 28 Atl. 848; where it is governed by statute.

In most of the states there are statutes providing that in case of future estates or remainders limited to heirs, issue, or children of any person, posthumous children take as if living at the death of the parent without the limitation of an estate to support contingent remainders; and most of such statutes also provide that the future estate limited to take effect on the death of a person without heirs, etc., is defeated by the birth of a posthumous child. In a few states the time within which such child must be born is limited to ten months after the death of the father. See Belton v. Summer, 31 Fla. 139, 12 South. 371, 21 L. R. A. 146; LEGACY; EN VENTRE SA MÈRE.

POSTLIMINIUM (Lat. from post, after, and limen, threshold). A fiction of the civil law, by which persons or things taken by the enemy were restored to their former status on coming again under the power of the nation to which they formerly belonged. Calvinus, Lex.; 1 Kent 108. It is also recognized by the law of nations. But movables are not entitled to the benefit of this rule, by strict law of nations, unless promptly recaptured. If recaptured after twenty-four hours they vest in the recaptor, subject, amongst most nations, to revert in the owner, upon payment of military salvage; Risley, Law of War 143.

The rule does not affect property which is brought into a neutral territory; 1 Kent 108. It is so called from the return of the person or thing over the threshold or boundary of the country from which it was taken.

When an enemy's military occupation comes to an end, the legal state of things previously existing is deemed to have been in continuous existence during the occupation. Postliminium applies to territory, to private immovable property, and to every kind of property that may not lawfully be seized. But property, public or private, that has been lawfully taken by an enemy, is not subject to the fiction. Acts done once and for all, within an invader's competence to perform, hold good. There is no postliminium as regards lawful prize, though it is said there may be by recapture; which, if it occur before capture is complete, may have effects like those of postliminium, though the latter fiction does not include any idea of salvage; Risley, Law of War 143.

The jus postliminii in international law is derived from a similar term in the Roman law by which persons and property captured by an enemy and then recaptured are restored to their original owner. The term now applies almost exclusively to property both real and personal which when recaptured does not belong to the recaptor but to the original owner. Snow, Int. Law 116.

It is important to observe the distinction between the effects of postliminium according to municipal law and those according to international law. Municipal law determines the conditions upon which private property shall revert to its former owners when it is brought again within the power of the state of which its former owners are citizens. International law determines the general international status of territory, persons and property which, having been under the control of the enemy, come again under the control of their original sovereign. II Opp. §§ 279-284.

POSTLIMINY. See POSTLIMINIUM.

POSTMAN. A senior barrister in the court of exchequer, who has precedence in motions; so called from place where he sits. 2 Bla. Com. 28; Wharton, Dict. A letter-carrier. Webster, Dict.

POSTMASTER. An officer who keeps a postoffice, attending to the receipt, forwarding, and delivery of letters and other matter passing through the mail.

Postmasters must reside within the delivery district for which they are appointed. For those offices where the salary or compensation is less than a thousand dollars a year, the postmaster-general appoints; where it is more, the president. Postmasters are divided into four classes, exclusive of the postmaster at New York, according to the amount of salary; those of the first class receiving three thousand or more, those of the fourth less than one thousand; 1 Supp. R. S. 110, 417. They must give bond to the United States; see U. S. v. Le Baron, 19 How. (U. S.) 73, 15 L. Ed. 525; which remains in force, for suit upon violation, during the term; Boody v. U. S., 1 W. & M. 150, Fed. Cas. No. 1,636; for three, formerly two, years after the expiration of the term of office; R. S. § 3838; Jones v. U. S., 7 How. (U. S.) 681, 12 L. Ed. 870. See R. S. § 3836.

Where an office is designated as a money-order office, the bond of the postmaster shall contain an additional condition for the faithful performance of all duties and obligations in connection with the money-order business; R. S. § 3834.

The presumption that public officers do their duty applies to the duty of postmasters to report a contractor's delinquencies; U. S. v. Carr, 132 U. S. 644, 10 Sup. Ct. 182, 33 L. Ed. 483.

Every postmaster is required to keep an office in the place for which he may be appointed; and it is his duty to receive and forward by mail, without delay, all letters, papers, and packets as directed, to receive the mails, and deliver, at all reasonable hours, all letters, papers, and packets to the persons entitled thereto.

Every person who, without authority from the postmaster-general, sets up any office bearing the title of postoffice is liable to a penalty of $500 for each offence; R. S. § 3829.

A postmaster is liable for all losses occasioned by his own default in office; 5 Burr. 2709; 2 Kent 474; Story, Bailm. § 463; see Raisler v. Oliver, 97 Ala. 710, 12 South. 238, 38 Am. St. Rep. 213; but in order to make him liable for negligence, it must appear that the loss or injury sustained was in consequence of such negligence; Dunlop v. Munroe, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 242, 3 L. Ed. 329; Wiggins v. Hathaway, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 632. He is bound only to the exercise of due diligence in the care of matter deposited in the post-office; U. S. v. Thomas, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 337, 21 L. Ed. 89. See 1 Ld. Raym. 646, where the question is elaborately discussed.

A postmaster is liable for the acts of his clerks or servants who were not regularly appointed and sworn as his assistants; Christy v. Smith, 23 Vt. 663; Fitzgerald v. Burrill, 106 Mass. 446. He is not responsible for their secret delinquencies; though, perhaps, he is answerable for want of attention to the official conduct of his subordinates; Schroyer v. Lynch, 8 Watts (Pa.) 453; but see Raisler v. Oliver & Co., 97 Ala. 710, 12 South. 238, 38 Am. St. Rep. 213. An attempt to induce a postmaster to sell stamps on credit is in violation of a statute providing against the attempt to influence any officer of the United States to a violation of his lawful duties; In re Palliser, 136 U. S. 257, 10 Sup. Ct. 1034, 34 L. Ed. 514. A postmaster is liable for the full value of a registered letter embezzled, regardless of the liability of the government to the sender of the letter; Gibson v. U. S., 208 Fed. 534.

POSTMASTER-GENERAL. The chief officer of the postoffice department of the executive branch of the government of the United States.

His duties, in brief, are, among other things, to establish postoffices and appoint postmasters at convenient places upon the post-roads established by law; to give instructions for conducting the business of the department; to provide for the carriage of the mails; to obtain from the postmasters balances due, with accounts and vouchers of expenses; to pay the expenses of the department; see U. S. v. Bank, 15 Pet. (U. S.) 377, 10 L. Ed. 774; to prosecute offences, and, generally, to superintend the business of the department in all the duties assigned to it. He is assisted by four assistants and a large corps of clerks,—the four assistants being appointed by the president. He must make reports annually to congress, relating chiefly to the financial management of the department, with estimates of the expenses of the department for the ensuing year. R. S. § 413. He is a member of the cabinet. See R. S. §§ 388-414; DEPARTMENT; OFFICER.

POSTNATI (Lat.). Those born after. Applied to American and British subjects born after the separation of England and the United States; also to the subjects of Scotland born after the union of England and Scotland. They were held to be natural-born subjects of the king of England; Calvin's Case, 2 St. Tr. 559. Those born after an event, as opposed to antenati, those born before. 2 Kent 56; Cumington v. Springfield, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 395. See ANTENATI.

POSTPONE. To put off; to delay; to continue or adjourn, as to postpone a hearing.

POSTULATIO (Lat.). In Roman Law. The name of the first act in a criminal proceeding.

A person who wished to accuse another of a crime appeared before the prætor and requested his authority for that purpose, designating the person intended. This act was called postulatio. The postulant made oath (calumnium jurabat) that he was not influenced by a spirit of calumny, but acted in good faith with a view to the public interest. The prætor received this declaration, at first made verbally, but afterwards in writing, and called a libel. The postulatio was posted up in the forum, to give public notice of the names of the accuser and the accused. A second accuser sometimes appeared and went through the same formalities.

Other persons were allowed to appear and join the postulant or principal accuser. These were said postulare subscriptionem, and were denominated subscriptores. Cic. in Cæcil. Divin. 15. But commonly such persons acted concurrently with the postulant, and inscribed their names at the time he first appeared. Only one accuser, however, was allowed to act; and if the first inscribed did not desist in favor of the second, the right was determined, after discussion, by judges appointed for the purpose. Cic. in Verr. 1. 6. The preliminary proceeding was called divinatio, and is well explained in the oration of Cicero entitled Divinatio. See Aulus Gellius, Att. Noct. lib. 11. cap. 4.

The accuser having been determined in this manner, he appeared before the prætor, and formally charged the accused by name, specifying the crime. This was called nominis et criminis delatio. The magistrate reduced it to writing, which was called inscriptio, and the accuser and his adjuncts, if any, signed it, subscribent. This proceeding corresponds to the indictment of the common law.

If the accused appeared, the accuser formally charged him with the crime. If the accused confessed it, or stood mute, he was adjudged to pay the penalty. If he denied it, the inscriptio contained his answer, and he was then in reatu (indicted, as we should say), and was called reus, and a day was fixed, ordinarily after an interval of at least ten days, according to the nature of the case, for the appearance of the parties. In the case of Verres, Cicero obtained one hundred and ten days to prepare his proofs; although he accomplished it in fifty days, and renounced, as he might do, the advantage of the remainder of the time allowed him.

At the day appointed for the trial, the accuser and his adjuncts or colleagues, the accused, and the judges, were summoned by the herald of the prætor. If the accuser did not appear, the case was erased from the roll. If the accused made default, he was condemned. If both parties appeared, a jury was drawn by the prætor or judez questionis. The jury was called jurati homines and the drawing of them sortitio, and they were taken from a general list made out for the year. Either party had a right to object to a certain extent to the persons drawn; and then there was a second drawing called subsortitio, to complete the number.

In some tribunals quæstiones (the jury) were editi (produced) in equal number by the accuser and the accused, and sometimes by the accuser alone, and were objected to or challenged in different ways, according to the nature of the case. The number of the jury also varied according to the tribunal (quæstio): they were sworn before the trial began. Hence they were called jurati.

The accusers, and often the subscriptores, were heard, and afterwards the accused, either by himself or by his advocates, of whom he commonly had several.

After the pleadings were concluded, the prætor or the judez questionis distributed tablets to the jury, upon which each wrote, secretly, either the letter A. (absolvo), or the letter C. (condemno), or N. L. (non liquet). These tablets were deposited in an urn. The president assorted and counted the tablets. If the majority were for acquitting the accused, the magistrate declared it by the words fecisse non videtur, and by the words fecisse videtur if the majority were for a conviction. If the tablets marked N. L. were so many as to prevent an absolute majority for a conviction or acquittal, the cause was put off for more ample information, ampliatio, which the prætor declared by the word amplius.

The forms observed in the comitia centuriata and comitia tributa were nearly the same, except the composition of the tribunal and the mode of declaring the vote.

POSTULATIO ACTIONIS (Lat.). In Civil Law. Demand of an action (actio) from the prætor, which some explain to be a demand of a formula, or form of the suit; others, a demand of leave to bring the cause before the judge. Taylor, Civ. Law 80; Calvinus, Lex. Actio.

POT-DE-VIN. In French Law. A sum of money frequently paid at the moment of entering into a contract, beyond the price agreed upon.

It differs from arrha in this that it is no part of the price of the thing sold, and that the person who has received it cannot by returning double the amount, or the other party by losing what he has paid, rescind the contract; 18 Toullier, n. 52.

POTENTATE. One who has a great power over an extended country; a sovereign.

By the naturalization laws of the United States, an alien is required, before he can be naturalized, to renounce all allegiance and fidelity to any foreign prince, potentate, state, or sovereign whatever.

POTENTIALLY. In possibility, not in act, not positively; in efficacy, not in actuality. Cole v. Kerr, 19 Neb. 556, 26 N. W. 598.

POTESTAS (Lat.). In Civil Law. Power; authority; domination; empire. Imperium, or the jurisdiction of magistrates. The power of the father over his children, patria potestas. The authority of masters over their slaves, which makes it nearly synonymous with dominium. See Inst. 1. 9. 12; Dig. 2. 1. 13. 1; 14. 1; 14. 4. 1. 4.

POUND. A place, enclosed by public authority, for the temporary detention of stray animals. Gilmore v. Holt, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 258; Brightman v. Grinnell, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 14.

Animals may not be impounded unless they are suffered by the owner to run at large, within the strict construction of the statute; Adams v. Nichols, 1 Aik. (Vt.) 316; if the impounding is illegal, they can be recovered by the owner; Morse v. Reed, 28 Me. 481; Mellen v. Moody, 23 Vt. 674. If it is legal, the owner must pay the costs imposed; Mahler v. Holden, 20 Ill. 363; and the pound-keeper need not deliver over the animals until all legal charges are paid; Folger v. Hinckley, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 263; Keith v. Bradford, 39 Vt. 34; the impounder has the right to use the same force to maintain his possession as a sheriff has to protect his possession under legal process; Barrows v. Fassett, 36 Vt. 625.

Where the proper officer finds cattle running at large in public streets, he may pursue them upon private property; Mosher v. Jewett, 63 Me. 84; but when a man finds strange cattle in his field, he is not bound to impound or retain them for the owner, but may drive them off into the highway; Stevens v. Curtis, 18 Pick. (Mass.) 227; if, however, he impounds, he must feed and water them properly, according to the usage of the country and good husbandry; Adams v. Adams, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 384; he must proceed strictly according to the statute, or he will be a trespasser; Fitzwater v. Stout, 16 Pa. 22; notice must be given before the impounded animal can be sold; Newhouse v. Hatch, 126 Mass. 304; and such notice must state the legal charges; Pickard v. Howe, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 198. Laws authorizing the impounding and sale of stock without notice or judicial investigation are held to be unconstitutional as authorizing a sale of private property without due process of law; Rockwell v. Nearing, 35 N. Y. 302; Rose v. Hardie, 98 N. C. 44, 4 S. E. 41; Anderson v. Locke, 64 Miss. 283, 1 South. 251; but it has been held that such laws are valid under the police power; Wilcox v. Hemming, 58 Wis. 144, 15 N. W. 435, 46 Am. Rep. 625. See ANIMAL; ESTRAY; RUNNING AT LARGE.

Weights. See WEIGHTS.

Money. The sum of twenty shillings. Previous to the establishment of the federal currency, the different states made use of the pound in computing money: it was of different value in the several states.

Pound Sterling is a denomination of money of Great Britain. It is of the value of a sovereign (q. v.). In calculating the rates of duties, the pound sterling shall be taken as of the value of four dollars and eighty-six cents and six and one-half mills, and the pound sterling of Ireland at four dollars and ten cents; U. S. R. S. § 3565.

POUND-BREACH. The offence of breaking a pound in order to take out the cattle impounded. 3 Bla. Com. 146. The writ de parco fracto, or pound-breach, lies for recovering damages for this offence; also case. Id. It is also indictable.

POUND-KEEPER. An officer charged with the care of a pound, and of animals confined there.

POUNDAGE. The amount allowed to the sheriff, or other officer, for commissions on the money made by virtue of an execution. This allowance varies in different states and to different officers.

POURPARLER. In French Law. The conversations and negotiations which have taken place between the parties in order to make an agreement. These form no part of the agreement. Pardessus, Dr. Com. 142.

POURSUIVANT. A follower; a pursuer. In the ancient English law, it signified an officer who attended upon the king in his wars, at the council-table, exchequer, in his court, etc., to be sent as a messenger. A poursuivant was, therefore, a messenger of the king.

POVERTY AFFIDAVIT. An affidavit furnished by a party to a suit that he is not able to furnish security for costs. Cole v. Hoeburg, 36 Kan. 263, 13 Pac. 275. In the United States courts, an affidavit of poverty for the purpose of avoiding the giving of a cost bond, may be filed after the granting, on notice to plaintiff, of an order for such bond; McDuffee v. R. Co., 82 Fed. 865.

POWER. The right, ability, or faculty of doing something.

The distinction between "power" and "right," whatever may be its value in ethics, in law is very shadowy and unsubstantial. He who has legal power to do anything has the legal right; Com. v. McManus, 143 Pa. 64, 21 Atl. 1018, 22 Atl. 761, 14 L. R. A. 89.

Technically, an authority by which one person enables another to do some act for him. 2 Lilly, Abr. 339.

Derivative Powers are those which are received from another. This division includes all the powers technically so called. They are of the following classes:—

Coupled with an interest, being a right or authority to do some act, together with an interest in the subject on which the power is to be exercised. Marshall, C. J., Hunt v. Rousmanier, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 203, 5 L. Ed. 589; and the interest coupled with a power in order to make it irrevocable, must be an interest in the thing itself; Missouri v. Walker, 125 U. S. 342, 8 Sup. Ct. 929, 31 L. Ed. 769.

A power of this class survives the person creating it, and, in case of an excess in execution, renders the act valid so far as the authority extends, leaving it void as to the remainder only. It includes powers of sale conferred on a mortgagee.

Naked, being a right of authority disconnected from any interest of the donee in the subject-matter. Bloomer v. Waldron, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 365. In the case of a naked power not coupled with an interest the law requires that every prerequisite to the exercise of that power should precede it; Williams v. Peyton, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 77, 4 L. Ed. 518; Deputron v. Young, 134 U. S. 256, 10 Sup. Ct. 539, 33 L. Ed. 923. A naked power given to several persons cannot be executed by the survivors; 16 Beav. 233.

Inherent Powers. Those which are enjoyed by the possessors of natural right, without having been received from another. Such are the powers of a people to establish a form of government, of a father to control his children. Some of these are regulated and restricted in their exercise by law, but are not technically considered in the law as powers.

Powers under the Statute of Uses. An authority enabling a person, through the medium of the statute of uses, to dispose of an interest in real property, vested either in himself or another person.

Methods of causing a use, with its accompanying estate, to spring up at the will of a given person. Will. R. P., 16th ed. 333; 2 Washb. R. P. 300.

The right to designate the person who is to take a use. Co. Litt. 271 b, Butler's note, 231, § 3, pl. 4.

A right to limit a use. 4 Kent 334.

An authority to do some act in relation to lands, or the creation of estates therein, or of charges thereon, which the owner granting or reserving such power might himself lawfully perform.

Powers are distinguished as—

Appendant. Those which the donee is authorized to exercise out of the estate limited to him, and which depend for their validity upon the estate which is in him. 2 Washb. R. P. 304. A life-estate limited to a man, with a power to grant leases in possession, is an example. 1 Cal. Cas. 15; Sugd. Pow. 107; Burton, R. P. § 179.

Of appointment. Those which are to create new estates. Distinguished from powers of revocation.

Collateral. Those in which the donee has no estate in the land. 2 Washb. R. P. 305.

General. Those by which the donee is at liberty to appoint to whom he pleases.

In gross. Those which give a donee, who has an estate in the land, authority to create such estates only as will not attach on the interest limited to him or take effect out of his own interest. Wilson v. Troup, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 236, 14 Am. Dec. 458. Tudor, Lead. Cas. 293.

Of revocation. Those which are to divest or abridge an existing estate. Distinguished from those of appointment; but the distinction is of doubtful exactness, as every new appointment must divest or revoke a former use. Sanders, Uses 154.

As to the effect of the insertion of a power of revocation, either single or in connection with one of appointment, see Styles 389; 2 Washb. R. P. 307.

Special. Those in which the donee is restricted to an appointment to or among particular objects only. 2 Washb. R. P. 307.

See a classification by Jessel, M. R., in 15 Ch. 228.

The person bestowing a power is called the donor; the person on whom it is bestowed is called the donee.

The person who receives the estate by appointment is called the appointee; the donee of the power is sometimes called the appointor.

The creation of a power may be by deed or will; 2 Washb. R. P. 314; by grant to a grantee, or reservation to the grantor; 4 Kent 319; and the reservation need not be in the same instrument, if made at the same time; 1 Sugd. Pow. 158; by any form of words indicating an intention; 2 Washb. R. P. 315. The doubt whether a power is created or an estate conveyed can, in general, exist only in cases of wills; 2 Washb. R. P. 316; and in any case is determined by the intention of the grantor or devisor, as expressed in or to be gathered from the whole will or deed; Ladd v. Ladd, 8 How. (U. S.) 10, 12 L. Ed. 967; Sharpsteen v. Tillou, 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 651; Walker v. Quigg, 6 Watts (Pa.) 87, 31 Am. Dec. 452. It must be limited to be executed, and must be executed, within the period fixed by the rules against perpetuities; 5 Bro. P. C. 592; 13 Sim. 393.

The interest of the donee is not an estate; 2 Prest. Abstr. 275; but is sufficient to enable the donee to act, if the intention of the donor be clear, without words of inheritance; 1 P. Wms. 171; Wilson v. Troup, 7 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 34; see Co. Litt. 271 b, Butler's note 231; and may coexist with the absolute fee in the donee; 10 Ves. 255; 4 Greenl. Cruise, Dig. 241, n. As a general rule a power to sell does not include a power to mortgage; Bloomer v. Waldron, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 361; Willis v. Smith, 66 Tex. 31, 17 S. W. 247; Norris v. Woods, 89 Va. 873, 17 S. E. 552; but where it is for raising a particular charge, and the estate itself is settled or devised subject to that charge, then it may be proper under the circumstances to raise the money by mortgage, and the court will support it as a conditional sale; 1 De G. M. & G. 645; Sugd. Powers 425; and sale generally means a cash sale; 4 Kent 331; Ives v. Davenport, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 373. See infra. It is held that a general power to appoint makes the property so to be disposed of assets of the estate of the donee of the power for the payment of his debts; Olney v. Balch, 154 Mass. 318, 23 N. E. 258; Clapp v. Ingraham, 126 Mass. 200, following 3 De G., M. & G. 976; but not in New York (under statute) either as to real or personal property; In re Moehring, 154 N. Y. 423, 48 N. E. 818.

As to exercising the power. If it be simply one in which no person is interested but the donee, it is a matter of election on his part whether to exercise it or not; 1 Sugd. Pow. 158; see infra; but if coupled with a trust in which other persons are interested, equity will compel an execution; Story, Eq. Jur. § 1062; Hunt v. Ennis, 2 Mas. 251, Fed. Cas. No. 6,889.

A power to appoint by will, conferred on a life tenant, does not empower him to devise the land for the payment of his own debts; Balls v. Dampman, 69 Md. 390, 16 Atl. 16, 1 L. R. A. 545. But a power conferred by will to invest or use includes the power to sell; Crawford v. Wearn, 115 N. C. 540, 20 S. E. 724.

The execution must be in the manner prescribed, by the proper person, see APPOINTMENT, and cannot be by an assignee; 2 Washb. R. P. 321; unless authorized by the limitation; 4 Cruise, Dig. 211; or unless an interest be coupled with the power; Wilson v. Troup, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 236, 14 Am. Dec. 458; Hunt v. Rousmanier, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 203, 5 L. Ed. 589; nor by a successor, as on the death of an executor; Tainter v. Clark, 13 Metc. (Mass.) 220. As to whether a sale by a donee who has also an estate in the land is held to be an execution of the power, see 2 Washb. R. P. 325; Tudor, Lead. Cas. 306; 5 B. & C. 720; 6 Co. 18; 16 Pa. 25. The exercise of a power must refer to the power to be executed, or actually dispose of the subject of it by identifying it; In re Neill's Estate, 222 Pa. 145, 70 Atl. 942; but not if the act cannot take effect but by virtue of the power; Allison v. Kurtz, 2 Watts (Pa.) 185. In order to exercise a testamentary power, a will must, at common law, contain a sufficient reference to the power to show an intention to exercise it. The use of the verb "appoint," especially when coupled with the express inclusion, in a general gift, of "all property over which I have a power of appointment," would undoubtedly be a sufficient reference in the case of a general power; L. R. 17 Ir. 436, 443.

At common law an estate created by the execution of a power takes effect as if created by the original deed, yet for some purposes (here taxation under an express statute) the execution of the power is considered the source of title; Chanler v. Kelsey, 205 U. S. 466, 27 Sup. Ct. 550, 51 L. Ed. 882 (Holmes and Moody, JJ., dissenting).

A power to sell gives authority to sell for cash only, and does not uphold a mere exchange; Woodward v. Jewell, 140 U. S. 253, 11 Sup. Ct. 784, 35 L. Ed. 478; Hampton v. Moorhead, 62 Ia. 91, 17 N. W. 202; Perry, Trusts § 769; or mortgage; Morris v. Watson, 15 Minn. 212 (Gil. 165); Wood v. Goodridge, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 117, 52 Am. Dec. 771; Willis v. Smith, 66 Tex. 31, 17 S. W. 247; contra, McCreary v. Bomberger, 151 Pa. 323, 24 Atl. 1066, 31 Am. St. Rep. 760; Campbell v. Home Ass'n, 163 Pa. 626, 30 Atl. 222, 26 L. R. A. 117, 43 Am. St. Rep. 818; and see Kent v. Morrison, 153 Mass. 137, 26 N. E. 427, 10 L. R. A. 756, 25 Am. St. Rep. 616.

Whether a power to sell includes a power to mortgage depends on the intent of the donor. If no absolute power appears on the face of the power, the presumption may vary according to the character of the estate created, the purpose of the power and the status of the devise; 20 H. L. Rev. 568.

A power of sale in a trust deed is not revoked by the death of the grantor; Frank v. Mtg. Co., 86 Miss. 103, 38 South. 340, 70 L. R. A. 135, 4 Ann. Cas. 54.

A power of sale in a mortgage may be executed, although no payment has been made for twenty years; House v. Carr, 185 N. Y. 453, 78 N. E. 171, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 510, 113 Am. St. Rep. 936, 7 Ann. Cas. 185.

Where three executors, given power to sell real estate, have accepted the trust, one alone cannot execute the power; Wright v. Dunn, 73 Tex. 293, 11 S. W. 330; and in a devise to two sisters to sell if they desired, the power can only be exercised by their joint deed and is lost by the death of either of them; Glover v. Stillson, 56 Conn. 316, 15 Atl. 752. A power given by will cannot be delegated, but an appointment under it need not allude to the power; Hood v. Haden, 82 Va. 588.

Where an exact execution is impossible under authority of court, it may be executed as near as may be (cy-près) to carrying out the donor's intention; 4 Ves. 681; 5 Sim. 632; Warner v. Howell, 3 Wash. C. C. 12, Fed. Cas. No. 17,184.

It must be made at a proper time, and, where several powers are given over different parts of the same estate, in proper succession; 1 Co. 174; 1 W. Bla. 281.

Equity will compel the donee to execute a power where it is coupled with a trust in which other persons are interested; Story, Eq. Jur. § 1062; and to correct a formal defect in the manner of execution; 2 P. Wms. 489, 622; Hunt v. Ennis, 2 Mas. 251, Fed. Cas. No. 6,889.

Three classes of cases have been held sufficient demonstrations of an intended exercise of a power: 1. Where there has been some reference in the will, or other instrument, to the power; 2. or a reference to the property, which is the subject on which it is to be executed; 3. or when the provisions in the will or other instrument, executed by the donee of the power, would otherwise be ineffectual or a mere nullity, in other words it would have no operation, except as an execution of the power; Lee v. Simpson, 134 U. S. 590, 10 Sup. Ct. 631, 33 L. Ed. 1038. See Warner v. Ins. Co., 109 U. S. 366, 3 Sup. Ct. 221, 27 L. Ed. 962; White v. Hicks, 33 N. Y. 392; Funk v. Eggleston, 92 Ill. 538, 34 Am. Rep. 136.

The suspension or destruction of a power may sometimes happen by a release by the donee, by an alienation of his estate, by his death, and by other circumstances.

An appendant power may be suspended by a conveyance of his interest by the donee; 4 Cruise, Dig. 221; Cro. Car. 472; 4 Bingh. n. c. 734; Wilson v. Troup, 2 Cow. (N. Y.) 237, 14 Am. Dec. 458; and may be extinguished by such conveyance; 2 B. & Ald. 93; 10 Ves. 246; or by a release; 1 Russ. & M. 431, 436, n.; 1 Co. 102 b; 2 Washb. R. P. 308.

As to illusory appointments under a power, see that title.

A power in gross may be released to one having the freehold in possession, reversion, or remainder, and not by any other act of the donee; Tud. Lead. Cas. 294; Burt. R. P. § 176; Chance, Pow. § 3172; Hardr. 416; 1 P. Wms. 777; an infant may execute a power in gross; 7 Ch. D. 728.

A collateral power cannot be suspended or destroyed by act of the donee; F. Moo. 605; 5 Mod. 457; such a power may be executed by an infant; 4 Kent 342. And see 1 Russ. & M. 431; Tainter v. Olark, 13 Metc. (Mass.) 220.

Impossibility of immediate vesting in interest or possession does not suspend or extinguish a power; 2 Bingh. 144. A power of sale in a mortgage for condition broken is not revoked by the mortgagor's death;

Way v. Mullett, 143 Mass. 49, 8 N. E. 881; Reilly v. Phillips, 4 S. D. 604, 57 N. W. 780. In general, a power of sale is exhausted by a single exercise of power; Simmons v. Baynard, 30 Fed. 532.

A power may be executed by a married woman; 4 Kent 342; but she will not be compelled to exercise a power of appointment of which she is donee for the benefit of her creditors; 17 Q. B. D. 521.

As to whether the donee of a power of appointment can covenant to exercise it in a particular way, see 18 L. Q. R. 112.

See article on "Power Coupled with an Interest" by James Lowndes, in 12 Harv. L. Rev. 262; see also 19 id. 287; as to whether a power to sell is a power to mortgage, see 19 Harv. L. Rev. 62, where the negative is stated as the ordinary rule; as to whether a power of sale includes power to give an option, see Tregdon v. Williams, 144 N. C. 192, 56 S. E. 865, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 867.

See EXECUTIVE POWERS; JUDICIAL POWERS; LEGISLATIVE POWERS; APPOINTMENT.

POWER OF ATTORNEY. An instrument authorizing a person to act as the agent or attorney of the person granting it. It is often called letter of attorney.

A general power authorizes the agent to act generally in behalf of the principal.

A special power is one limited to particular acts.

It may be by parol or under seal. 1 Pars. Contr. 94. It is held that, ex vi termini, it indicates a sealed instrument; Cutler v. Haven, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 490. The attorney cannot, in general, execute a sealed instrument so as to bind his principal, unless the power be under seal; 2 B. & P. 338; 5 B. & C. 355; Stetson v. Patten, 2 Greenl. (Me.) 358, 11 Am. Dec. 111. See Bank of Columbia v. Patterson, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 299, 3 L. Ed. 351; Darst v. Roth, 4 Wash. C. C. 471, Fed. Cas. No. 3,582; Randall v. Van Vechten, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 60, 10 Am. Dec. 193; Damon v. Granby, 2 Pick. (Mass.) 345.

Powers of attorney are strictly construed; Wood v. Goodridge, 6 Cush. (Mass.) 117, 52 Am. Dec. 771; Mechanics' Bank v. Bank, 5 Wheat. (U. S.) 326, 5 L. Ed. 100; 8 M. & W. 806. General terms used with reference to a particular subject-matter are presumed to be used in subordination to that matter; 7 B. & C. 278; Kelley v. Lindsey, 7 Gray (Mass.) 287. See, as to a power to collect a debt; Barlow v. Reno, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 252; to settle a claim; 5 M. & W. 645; Miller v. Edmonston, 8 Blackf. (Ind.) 291; to make an adjustment of all claims; Rossiter v. Rossiter, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 494, 24 Am. Dec. 62; Taylor v. Robinson, 14 Cal. 399; to accept bills; 7 B. & C. 278.

Where a power of attorney is executed in a foreign country in the language of that country, the intention of the writer is to be ascertained by evidence of competent translators and experts, including, if necessary, lawyers of the country, as to the meaning of the language used; and if, according to such evidence, the intention appears to be that the authority shall be acted upon in other countries, the extent of the authority in any country in which the authority is acted upon must be determined by the law of that country; [1891] 1 Q. B. 79.

Third parties dealing with an agent on the basis of a written letter of attorney are not prejudiced by any private instructions from the principal to the agent, unless such instructions are in some way referred to in the letter; 3 Term 757; Earp v. Richardson, 81 N. C. 5; Silliman v. R. Co., 27 Gratt. (Va.) 119. Where an agent is acting under such a written letter, it is the duty of third persons to examine the instrument; Story, Ag. § 72. A failure to do this precludes a recovery unless the claim is based on fraud; Schimmelpennich v. Bayard, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 264, 7 L. Ed. 138; Whart. Ag. § 227; Appeal of Weise, 72 Pa. 351; Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Poe, 53 Md. 28. When a power of attorney is to a partnership as such, a deed executed in the partnership name by one of the partners is good; Frost v. Cattle Co., 81 Tex. 505, 17, S. W. 52, 26 Am. St. Rep. 831.

A power of attorney to convey lands is immediately revoked by the death of the principal, and deeds subsequently made by the attorney are void; McClaskey v. Barr, 50 Fed. 712; and upon the death of some of the donors of a power of attorney, it is revoked as to them if not as to all; Hanrick v. Patrick, 119 U. S. 156, 7 Sup. 147, 30 L. Ed. 390.

If a power of attorney is part of a contract and is a security for the payment of money or the performance of an act, it is irrevocable, whether so expressed or not; Wood v. Kerkeslager, 225 Pa. 296, 74 Atl. 174.

See PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

PRACTICABLE, PRACTICABLY. Practicable is that which may be done, practiced, or accomplished, that which is performable, feasible, possible; and the adverb practically means in a practical manner. Streeter v. Streeter, 43 Ill. 165.

Reasonably practicable, when used in directing the observance of a set of affirmative and negative rules, will usually apply to the negative; 16 Q. B. D. 340.

Where a statute provides that persons having in charge animals affected with a contagious disease shall notify the police of the fact with all practicable speed, it was held to be necessary that the person shall have knowledge of the animal's being diseased before it becomes neglect to give notice; L. R. 8 C. P. 322.

PRACTICE. The form, manner, and order of conducting and carrying on suits or prosecutions in the courts through their various stages, according to the principles of law and the rules laid down by the respective courts. In its ordinary meaning it is to be distinguished from the pleadings. The term applies to a distinct part of the proceedings of the court. 10 Jur. N. S. 457. In a popular sense, the business which an attorney or counsellor does: as, A B has a good practice.

A settled, uniform, and long-continued practice, without objection, is evidence of what the law is; and such practice is based on principles which are founded in justice and convenience; 2 Russ. 19, 570; 2 Jac. 232; 1 Y. & J. 167, 168; 2 C. & M. 55; Ram, Judgm. c. 7.

With respect to criminal practice, it has been remarked by a learned judge that even where the course of practice in criminal law has been unfavorable to parties accused, and entirely contrary to the most obvious principles of justice and humanity, as well as those of law, it has been held that such practice constituted the law, and could not be altered without the authority of parliament. Per Maule, J., Scott, N. C. 599.

PRACTICE COURT. In English Law. A court formerly attached to the court of king's bench, which heard and determined common matters of business and ordinary motions for writs of mandamus, prohibition, etc. It was usually called the bail court. It was held by one of the puisne justices.

PRACTICES. A succession of acts of a similar kind or in a like employment. Webst.

PRACTICING. A retired lawyer who tries a case for a neighbor gratuitously, is not a practicing lawyer subject to a penalty for practicing without having paid the license tax. "The term practicing implies something more than a single act or effort." McCargo v. State (Miss.) 1 South. 161; State v. Bryan, 98 N. C. 644, 4 S. E. 522.

PRACTITIONER. He who is engaged in the exercise or employment of any art or profession.

PRÆCEPTORS (Lat.). Heretofore masters in chancery were so called, as having the direction of making out remedial writs. Fleta 76; 2 Reeve, Hist. Eng. Law 251. A species of benefice, so called from being possessed by the principal templars (præceptores templi), whom the chief master by his authority created. 2 Mon. Ang. 543.

PRÆCIPE, PRECIPE (Lat.). A slip of paper upon which the particulars of a writ are written. It is lodged in the office out of which the required writ is to issue. Wharton, Dict. A written order to the clerk of a court to issue a writ.

It is a part of the record; the writ of service, if it fail to follow it, may be amended to conform; Wilkinson v. North East Borough, 215 Pa. 486.

PRÆCIPE IN CAPITE. A writ out of chancery for a tenant holding of the crown in capite, viz., in chief. Magna Char. c. 24.

PRÆCIPE QUOD REDDAT (Lat.). Command him to return. An original writ, of which præcipe is the first word, commanding the person to whom it is directed to do a thing or to show cause why he has not done it. 3 Bla. Com. 274; Old N. B. 13. It is as well applied to a writ of right as to other writs of entry and possession.

PRÆCIPE QUOD TENEAT CONVENTIONEM. The writ which commenced the action of covenant in fines, which are abolished by 3 & 4 Wm. IV. c. 74.

PRÆCIPITIUM. The punishment of casting headlong from some high place.

PRÆCIPUT CONVENTIONNEL. In French Law. Under the régime en communauté, when that is of the conventional kind, if the survivor of husband and wife is entitled to take any portion of the common property by a paramount title and before partition thereof, this right is called by the somewhat barbarous title of the conventional præciput, from præ, before, and capere, to take. Brown.

PRÆDIA (Lat.). In Civil Law. Lands. Prædia stipendiaria, provincial lands belonging to the people.

Prædia tributaria, provincial lands belonging to the emperor.

Prædia volentia, certain things movable which were ranked among immovable things. 2 Bla. Com. 428.

It indicates a more extensive domain than fundus. Calvinus, Lex.

PRÆDIA BELLI (Lat.). Booty. Property seized in war. See BOOTY.

PRÆDIAL. That which arises immediately from the ground: as, grain of all sorts, hay, wood, fruits, herbs, and the like.

Prædial larceny is the larceny of things attached to the land. 4 Journ. of Soc. of Comp. Leg. N. S. 135.

PRÆDIUM DOMINANS (Lat. the ruling estate). In Civil Law. The name given to an estate to which a servitude is due; it is called the ruling estate.

PRÆDIUM RUSTICUM (Lat. a country estate). In Civil Law. By this is understood all heritages which are not destined for the use of man's habitation; such, for example, as lands, meadows, orchards, gardens, woods, even though they should be within the boundaries of a city.

PRÆDIUM SERVIENS (Lat.). In Civil Law. The name of an estate which suffers or yields a service to another estate.

PRÆDIUM URBANUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. By this term is understood buildings and edifices intended for the habitation and use of man, whether they be built in cities or whether they be constructed in the country.

PRÆFECTI APOSTOLICI. Officers of the same character as the Vicarius Apostolicus (q. v.), but without the power of exercising episcopal functions. 2 Phill. Int. L. 529.

PRÆFECTUS URBIS. An officer who had the superintendence of the city and its police with jurisdiction extending one hundred miles from the city and power to decide both civil and criminal cases. Whart.

PRÆFECTUS VIGILUM (Lat.). In Roman Law. The chief officer of the night-watch. His jurisdiction extended to certain offences affecting the public peace, and even to larcenies. But he could inflict only slight punishments.

PRÆMUNIRE (Lat.). A statute of 27 Edw. III. which prohibited citations to the court of Rome; by it penalties were enacted against all subjects who should "draw any out of the realm in plea, whereof the cognizance pertaineth to the king's court" and who should fail to appear before the king and his council, or in his chancery, or before the justices to answer for the contempt committed. This was the origin of the offence afterwards known as præmunire from the words of the writ præmunire facias, requiring the sheriff to warn the accused to appear and answer. Taswell-Langmead, Engl. Constit. Hist. 323.

The penalties of præmunire were subsequently applied to other offences of various kinds, as the molestation of possessors of abbey lands, the assertion that the houses of parliament have a legislative authority without the sovereign or the sending subjects of the realm into parts beyond the seas. Whart. Law Dict.; Jacob.

It is said by Jacob to be a corruption of præmoneri, to be forewarned, citing Du Cange. He also points out that there had been but one prosecution for præmunire in the state trials (2 Hargr. St. Tr. 263).

PRÆNOMEN. In Civil Law. See COGNOMEN.

PRÆSTITA ROLLS. In these were entered the sums of money which issued out of the royal treasury, by way of imprest, advance, or accommodation, in the 12th year of King John; also roll of the 7th, and one of the 14th, 15th and 16th years of the same reign. See RECORD COMMISSION (1844).

PRÆSUMPTIO HOMINIS. A presumption based upon what is probable in human experience, whereby, from a given fact or state of facts, another fact or state of facts may be naturally inferred. Morey, Rom. L. 411.

PRÆSUMPTIO JURIS (Lat.). In Roman Law. A deduction from the existence of one fact as to the existence of another, which admits of proof to the contrary. A rebuttable presumption. An intendment of law which holds good until it is weakened by proof or a stronger presumption. Best, Pres. 29.

PRÆSUMPTIO JURIS ET DE JURE (Lat.). In Roman Law. A deduction drawn, by reason of some rule of law, from the existence of one fact as to the existence of another, so conclusively that no proof can be admitted to the contrary. A conclusive presumption.

PRÆTOR. In Roman Law. A municipal officer of Rome, so called because (præiret populo) he went before or took precedence of the people.

The consuls were at first called prætors. Liv. Hist. iii. 55. The word prætor means literally a general and is a title of honor accorded to the consuls in the first centuries of the republic. The prætor was really a third consul who was specially intrusted, not with the military command, but with the administration of justice. This is the reason why, in point of rank (and in the number of his lictors), he was inferior to the consul, though, on principle, his power was consular; Sohm, Inst. Rom. L. 48, n. 1. He was a sort of minister of justice, invested with certain legislative powers, especially in regard to the forms or formalities of legal proceedings. Ordinarily, he did not decide causes as a judge, but prepared the grounds of decision for the judge, and sent to him the questions to be decided between the parties. The judge was always chosen by the parties, either directly, or by rejecting, under certain rules and limitations, the persons proposed to them by the prætor. Hence the saying of Cicero (pro Cluentio 43) that no one could be judged except by a judge of his own choice. There were several kinds of officers called prætors. See Vicat, Voc.

Before entering on his functions, he published an edict announcing the system adopted by him for the application and interpretation of the laws during his magistracy. The edict issued by the prætor on his taking office was called the edictum perpetuum. It was said that these edicts were of great authority. They were called the jus honorarium because those who bear honors in the state, that is the magistrate, have given it their sanction; Inst. 1. 2. 7; Howe, Stud. Civ. L. 10; the fact that the circumstances and habits of thought, untrammelled as they were under this system, led to the exercise by the prætor of equitable functions and extension of the narrow limits of the old civil law, was a potent factor in the judge-made law which replaced the ancient technical and rigid system by one more flexible. The lex Cornelia (B. C. 67) forbade a prætor to depart during his term from the edict promulgated by him at its beginning. The edicts of preceding prætors were collected and condensed by Salvius Julianus, who had filled the office during the time of Hadrian; this was a final edictum perpetuum, and it was known distinctively by that title. It is doubtful whether after that annual edicts were issued; Sand. Inst. Just. 11; Sohm, Rom. L. § 14; Mack. Rom. L. § 47.

The authority of the prætor extended over all jurisdictions, and was summarily expressed by the words do, dico, addico, i. e. do I give the action, dico I declare the law, I promulgate the edict, addico I invest the judge with the right of judging. There were certain cases which he was bound to decide himself, assisted by a council chosen by himself,—perhaps the decemvirs. But the greater part of causes brought before him he sent either to a judge, an arbitrator, or to recuperatores, or to the centumvirs, as before stated. The prætor had no power to legislate, but he might grant or refuse an action; Sohm, Rom. L. 52. Under the empire, the powers of the prætor passed by degrees to the prefect of the prætorium or the prefect of the city; so that this magistrate, who at first ranked with the consuls, at last dwindled into a director or manager of the public spectacles or games.

The prætor urbanus was a special officer appointed to administer justice in the city; afterwards (about 242 B. C.) the increase of business made it necessary to appoint a second prætor, who was called a prætor peregrinus to whom were assigned all cases in which either or both of the parties were foreigners. Prætores tutelares were special magistrates nominated in Rome and vested with the power of appointing tutors which right had previously been exercised by the prætor urbanus.

A prætor fideicommissarius was a magistrate specially appointed to have jurisdiction of fideicommissa.

The prætor fiscalis had special jurisdiction of cases affecting the public treasury.

PRAGMATIC SANCTION. A solemn ordinance or decree of a sovereign dealing with matters of primal importance and regarded as constituting a part of the fundamental law of the land. It originated in the Byzantine Empire; in later European history it was especially used to designate an ordinance of Charles VI, emperor of Germany, issued April, 1713, to settle the succession on his daughter, Maria Theresa. It was ratified by the Great Powers. On the death of the emperor, it was repudiated by Prussia, France and others, which led to the War of the Austrian Succession. Int. Encycl.

In Civil Law. The answer given by the emperors on questions of law, when consulted by a corporation or the citizens of a province or of a municipality, was called a pragmatic sanction. Leçons El. du Dr. Civ. Rom. § 53. See RESCRIPT.

PRAIRIE. An extensive tract of land destitute of trees, covered with coarse grass, and usually characterized by a deep, fertile soil; a meadow or tract of grassland; especially a so called "natural meadow." Interstate G. C. Co. v. Kline, 51 Kan. 23, 32 Pac. 628.

PRATIQUE, or PRATIC. Intercourse; the communication between a ship and the port in which she arrives; hence, a license to hold intercourse and trade with the inhabitants of a place, especially after quarantine, or certificate of non-ineffectiveness. Cent. Dict.

PRAYER. In Equity Practice. The request in a bill that the court will grant the aid which the petitioner desires. That part of the bill which asks for relief. The word denotes, strictly, the request, but is very commonly applied to that part of the bill which contains the request.

OF PROCESS. That part of the bill which asks that the defendant may be compelled to appear and answer the bill, and abide the determination of the court upon the subject.

It must contain the names of all the parties; 1 P. Wms. 593; Brasher's Ex'rs v. Van Cortlandt, 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 245; Coop. Eq. Pl. 16; Bisph. Eq. § 9; although they are out of the jurisdiction; 1 Beav. 106; Mitt. Eq. Pl. 164. The ordinary process asked for is a writ of subpoena; Story, Eq. Pl. § 44; and in case a distringas against a corporation; Coop. Eq. Pl. 16; or an injunction; 2 S. & S. 219; 1 Sim. 50; is sought for, it should be included in the prayer.

Under the supreme court equity rule 25 (February, 1913) the prayer for special relief only is provided for and it may be in the alternative; 198 Fed. xxv.

FOR RELIEF, is general, which asks for such relief as the court may grant; or special, which states the particular form of relief desired. A special prayer is generally inserted, followed by a general prayer, 4 Madd. 408; Hobson v. McArthur, 16 Pet. (U. S.) 195, 10 L. Ed. 930; Danforth v. Smith, 23 Vt. 247; Spivey v. Frazee, 7 Ind. 661; Kelly's Heirs v. McGuire, 15 Ark. 555; a general prayer if omitted, may be added by amendment or amended bill; McCrum v. Lee, 38 W. Va. 583, 18 S. E. 757. Unless the general prayer is added, if the defendant fails in his special prayer he will not be entitled to any relief; 1 Ves. 426; Mt. Vernon Bank v. Stone, 2 R. I. 129, 57 Am. Dec. 709; except in case of charities and bills in behalf of infants; 18 Ves. 325; Colton v. Ross, 2 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 396, 22 Am. Dec. 648.

A general prayer is sufficient for most purposes; and the special relief desired may be prayed for at bar; 4 Madd. 408; Story, Eq. Pl. § 41; Busby v. Littlefield, 31 N. H. 193; Taylor v. Ins. Co., 9 How. (U. S.) 390, 13 L. Ed. 187; Holmes v. Fresh, 9 Mo. 201; Shields v. Trammell, 19 Ark. 62; Kelly v. Payne, 18 Ala. 371; Danforth v. Smith, 23 Vt. 247; but where a special order and provisional process are required, founded on peculiar circumstances, a special prayer therefor is generally inserted; 6 Madd. 218; Eastman v. Ramsey, 3 Ind. 419. A prayer for general relief is sufficient to support any decree warranted by the allegations of the bill; Walker v. Converse, 148 Ill. 622, 36 N. E. 202; but under such a prayer a party cannot recover a claim distinct from that demanded by the bill; Pickens v. Knisely, 29 W. Va. 1, 11 S. E. 932, 6 Am. St. Rep. 622.

Such relief, and such only, will be granted, either under a special prayer, whether at bar; 2 Ves. 299; Walker v. Devereau, 4 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 229; Scudder v. Young, 25 Me. 153; Cameron v. Abbott, 30 Ala. 416; or in the bill; Denison v. League, 16 Tex. 399; Miller v. Saunders, 18 Ga. 492; Dela-ware & H. C. Co. v. Coal Co., 21 Pa. 131; or under a general prayer, as the case as stated will justify; Melvin v. Robinson, 42 N. C. 80; Cook v. Bronaugh, 13 Ark. 183; Taylor v. Ins. Co., 9 How. (U. S.) 390, 13 L. Ed. 187; and a bill framed apparently for one purpose will not be allowed to accomplish another, to the injury of the defendant; Denison v. League, 16 Tex. 399; Livingston's

Ex'rs v. Van Rensselaer's Adm'rs, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 63.

And, generally, the decree must conform to the allegations and proof; Crocket v. Lee, 7 Wheat. (U. S.) 522, 5 L. Ed. 513; Stuart v. Bank, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 496; Langdon v. Roane's Adm'r, 6 Ala. 518, 41 Am. Dec. 60; Beers v. Botsford, 13 Conn. 146. But a special prayer may be disregarded, if the allegations warrant relief under the general prayer: Kelly's Heirs v. McGuire, 15 Ark. 555; May v. Lewis, 22 Ala. 646; the relief granted must be consistent with the special prayer; Simmons v. Williams, 27 Ala. 507; Delaware & H. C. Co. v. Coal Co., 21 Pa. 131; Ruff v. Summers, 4 Des. Eq. (S. C.) 530; Wilkin v. Wilkin, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 111.

PREAMBLE. An introduction prefixed to a statute, reciting the intention of the legislature in framing it, or the evils which led to its enactment. It is no part of the law; Erie & N. E. R. v. Casey, 26 Pa. 287. Contra, [1891] A. C. 543. It is no more than a recital of some inconveniences, which does not exclude any other, for which a remedy is given by the enacting part of the statute. Resort cannot be had to the preamble of a statute to ascertain the intention of an act unless there is an ambiguity in the enacting part. Effect should be given to a preamble to the extent that it shows what the legislature intended, and if the words of enactment have a meaning which does not go beyond that preamble, or which may come up to the preamble, in either case that meaning should be preferred to one which shows an intention of the legislature which would not answer the purposes of the preamble or would go beyond them. To that extent only is the preamble material; 8 App. Cas. 388. The clear language of an act cannot be cut down by a reference to the preamble; 29 Ch. D. 950. It may explain what is of doubtful meaning, but will not limit what is clear; Tripp v. Goff, 15 R. I. 299, 3 Atl. 591; Wilson v. Spaulding, 19 Fed. 304.

A preamble is said to be the key of a statute, to open the minds of the makers as to the mischiefs which are to be remedied and the objects which are to be accomplished by the provisions of the statute; Co. 4th Inst. 330; Green v. Neal, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 301, 8 L. Ed. 402. In modern legislative practice, preambles are much less used than formerly, and in some of the states are rarely inserted in statutes. In the interpretation of a statute, though resort may be had to the preamble, it cannot limit or control the express provisions of the statute; Dwarris, Stat. 504; Wilberf. Stat. Law 277. Nor can it by implication enlarge what is expressly fixed; 1 Story, Const. b. 3, c. 6; Bynum v. Clark, 3 McCord (S. C.) 298, 15 Am. Dec. 633; Jackson v. Gilchrist, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 89.

A preamble reciting the existence of public outrages, provision against which is made in the body of the act, is evidence of the facts it recites. See 4 Maule & S. 532; 2 Russ. Cr. 720.

The facts recited in a preamble of a private statute are not evidence, as between the person for whose benefit the act passed and a third person; Parmelee v. Thompson, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 80; but the statement of legislative reasons in the preamble will not affect the validity of an act; Lothrop v. Stedman, 42 Conn. 583, Fed. Cas. No. 8,519.

See STATUTE; INTERPRETATION.

A recital inserted in a contract for the purpose of declaring the intention of the parties.

PREBEND. In Ecclesiastical Law. The stipend granted to an ecclesiastic, in consideration of officiating in the church. It is in this distinguished from a canonicate, which is a mere title and may exist without stipend. The prebend may be a simple stipend, or a stipend with a dignity attached to it, in which case it has some jurisdiction belonging to it. 2 Burn, Eccl. Law 88; 1 Term 401; 1 Wils. 206; 7 B. & C. 113; 8 Bingh. 490; Jacob, L. Dict.

PRECARIÆ. Day works which the tenants of certain manors were bound to give their lords in harvest time. Cowell.

PRECARIOUS. The affairs of an executor are precarious only when conducted with such recklessness as in the opinion of prudent and discreet men endangers their security. Shields v. Shields, 60 Barb. (N. Y.) 56.

PRECARIOUS RIGHT. The right which the owner of a thing transfers to another, to enjoy the same until it shall please the owner to revoke it.

If there is a time fixed during which the right may be used, it is then vested for that time, and cannot be revoked until after its expiration. Wolff, Inst. § 333.

PRECARIUM (Lat.). The name of a contract among civilians, by which the owner of a thing, at the request of another person, gives him a thing to use as long as the owner shall please. Pothier, n. 87. See Cro. Jac. 235; Orser v. Storms, 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 687, 18 Am. Dec. 543; Bac. Abr. Bailment (C); Story, Bailm. §§ 127, 253 b.

A tenancy at will is a right of this kind.

PRECATORY WORDS. Expressions in a will praying or requesting that a thing shall be done. A trust created by such words, which are more like words of entreaty and permission, than of command or certainty.

Examples of such words, which the courts have held sufficient to constitute a trust, are "wish and request," "have fullest confidence," "heartily beseech," and the like; Rap. and Lawr. L. Dict.

Although recommendatory words used by a testator, of themselves, seem to leave the devisee to act as he may deem proper, giving him a discretion, as when a testator gives an estate to a devisee, and adds that he hopes, recommends, has a confidence, wish, or desire that the devisee shall do certain things for the benefit of another person, yet courts of equity have formerly construed such precatory expressions as creating a trust; 8 Ves. Ch. 380; Bac. Abr. Legacies (B); Warner v. Bates, 98 Mass. 274; Van Amee v. Jackson, 35 Vt. 173; Murphy v. Carlin, 113 Mo. 112, 20 S. W. 786, 35 Am. St. Rep. 699. See, contra, In re Pennock's Estate, 20 Pa. 268, 59 Am. Dec. 718; 2 Story, Eq. Jur. § 1069; Eberhardt v. Perolin, 49 N. J. Eq. 570, 25 Atl. 510; Bacon v. Ransom, 139 Mass. 117, 29 N. E. 473; Bisph. Eq. 73.

But this construction will not prevail when either the objects to be benefited are imperfectly described, or the amount of property to which the trust should attach is not sufficiently defined; 1 Bro. C. C. 142; 1 Sim. 556.

While the expression of confidence, if the context shows that a trust is intended, may create a trust, yet, if upon the whole will the confidence is merely that the legatee will do what is right in disposing of the property, a trust is not imposed; 4 Kent 305; [1895] 2 Ch. 370; In re Gardner, 140 N. Y. 122, 35 N. E. 439; Boyle v. Boyle, 152 Pa. 108, 25 Atl. 494, 34 Am. St. Rep. 629; Durant v. Smith, 159 Mass. 229, 34 N. E. 190. The words in the fullest confidence were held to create a trust; 1 Turn. & R. 143.

The current of decision in England with regard to precatory words is said to be now to restrict the practice which deduces a trust from the expression of a wish, etc., regarding property absolutely bequeathed; Burnes v. Burnes, 137 Fed. 781, 70 C. C. A. 357; L. R. 10 Eq. Cas. 267; Foose v. Whitmore, 82 N. Y. 406, 37 Am. Rep. 572.

A trust will not be created where the testator shows an intention to leave property absolutely; 27 Ch. Div. 394. See Appeal of Paisley, 70 Pa. 153; Gilbert v. Chapin, 19 Conn. 351. The leaning of the courts is against the implication of a trust; 1 Jarm. Wills 365. It is a question of what was the intention, not of what particular word was used; [1895] 2 Ch. 370. But it was held that a testamentary gift with added words of entreaty or recommendation, or expressing a hope or confidence will constitute a trust; Loring v. Loring, 100 Mass. 340; McRee's Adm'rs v. Means, 34 Ala. 349. See the cases in 1 Jarm. Wills 385, on this subject.

"The true rule, upon principle, and according to the weight of more recent authorities, is said to be that the whole will must be examined to determine whether the words used were to impose an obligation or to give the devisee full discretion." 4 Kent 305, note b, citing 8 Ch. D. 540; Howard v. Carusi, 109 U. S. 725, 3 Sup. Ct. 575, 27 L. Ed. 1089; Barrett v. Marsh, 126

Mass. 213; Bohn v. Barrett's Ex'r, 79 Ky. 378.

Vagueness in the object tends to show that no trust was intended. See L. R. 8 Eq. 673. It has been held that precatory words are prima facie imperative, and create a trust; Nunn v. O'Brien, 83 Md. 200, 34 Atl. 244; Colton v. Colton, 127 U. S. 300, 8 Sup. Ct. 1164, 32 L. Ed. 138.

Precatory words do not always create a trust. The question in every case is one of intention. Expressions per se sufficient to create a trust may be deprived of that effect by a context especially declaring or by implication showing no trust was intended. The question in all cases is, was the direction imperative? The real question to be determined when such words are used is whether the confidence, hope, or wish expressed is meant to govern the donee, or whether it was a mere indication of that which the testator thinks would be a reasonable or suitable use of the property conveyed, leaving the matter ultimately to the decision of the donee; 1 Jarm. Wills 406, n.

When property is given by will absolutely and without restriction, a trust is not to be lightly imposed, upon mere words of recommendation and confidence; but if the objects of the supposed trust are definite and the property clearly pointed out, if the relations between the testator and the supposed beneficiary are such as to indicate a motive on the part of the one to provide for the other, and if the precatory clause warrants the inference that it is peremptory, then it may be held that a trust is created; Colton v. Colton, 127 U. S. 300, 8 Sup. Ct. 1164, 32 L. Ed. 138, where there was a gift to the wife, followed by the words: "I recommend to her the care and protection of my mother and sister, and request her to make such gift and provision for them as in her judgment will be best;" it was held that the mother and sister took a beneficial interest.

There is a simple, sure and familiar form of gift to raise a trust—to the legatee in trust for the beneficiary—and the failure to use it indicates an intention to avoid the creation of a trust. Words of desire, request, recommendation or confidence addressed by a testator to a legatee whom he has the power to command, create no trust, unless (1) the intent to make the desire, etc., imperative upon the legatee, leaving him no option, clearly appears; (2) the subject-matter of the wish is certain, and (3) the beneficiaries are clearly designated; Burnes v. Burnes, 137 Fed. 781, 70 C. C. A. 357; citing Colton v. Colton, 127 U. S. 300, 8 Sup. Ct. 1164, 32 L. Ed. 138; Warner v. Bates, 98 Mass. 277.

"Precatory trusts" is nothing more than a misleading nickname. A clear gift to one for his own benefit shall not be cut down by subsequent words which may operate as an expression of a desire without disturbing the previous devise; [1897] 2 Ch. 12, C. A., per Rigby, L. J.

PRECEDENCE. The right of being first placed in a certain order,—the first rank being supposed the most honorable.

In this country no precedence is given by law to men.

Nations, in their intercourse with each other, do not admit any precedence: hence, in their treaties, it is the usage for the powers to alternate, both in the preamble and in the signatures, so that each power occupies, in the copy intended to be delivered to it, the first place. Sometimes signatures are made in alphabetical order of the states which are parties to the act, the French alphabet being adopted for that purpose. 2 Hall. Int. L. 122.

In some cases of officers, when one must of necessity act as the chief, the oldest in commission will have precedence: as, when the president of a court is not present, the associate who has the oldest commission will have a precedence; or if their commissions bear the same date, then the oldest man.

In the army and navy there is a regular order of precedence. See RANK.

For rules of precedence in England, see Whart. Law Dict.; Encycl. Br.

PRECEDENT CONDITION. See CONDITION PRECEDENT.

PRECEDENTS. Legal acts or instruments which are deemed worthy to serve as rules or models for subsequent cases.

The word is similarly applied in respect to judicial and legislative action. In the former use, precedent is the word to designate an adjudged case which is actually followed or sanctioned by a court in subsequent cases. An adjudged case may be of any degree of weight, from that of absolute conclusiveness down to the faintest presumption: and one which is in fact disregarded is said never to have become a precedent. In determining whether an adjudication is to be followed as a precedent, the following considerations are adverted to. First, the justice of the principle which it declares, and the reasonableness of its application. Hob. 270. If a precedent is to be followed because it is a precedent, even when decided against an established rule of law, there can be no possible correction of abuses, because the fact of their existence would render them above the law. It is always safe to rely upon principles. See 16 Vin. Abr. 499; 2 J. & W. 318; 2 P. Wms. 258; 2 Bro. C. C. 86; Cooke v. Crawford, 1 Tex. 11, 46 Am. Dec. 93; 2 Evans, Poth. 377, where the author argues against the policy of making precedents binding when contrary to reason. "The reason and spirit of cases make law: not the letter of particular precedents." 3 Burr. 1364, per Lord Mansfield. See, also, Gresl. Eq. Ev. 300; Anderson v. Jackson, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 402, 8 Am. Dec.

330; Cro. Jac. 527; People v. Clute, 50 N. Y. 451, 10 Am. Rep. 508. Ram, Judgments, gives an excellent statement of the circumstances which affect the value of precedents.

"The reports of judicial decisions contain the most certain evidence and the most authoritative and precise application of the rules of the common law. Adjudged cases become precedents for future cases resting upon analogous facts and brought within the same reasons. . . . A solemn decision upon a point of law arising in any given case becomes an authority in a like case, because it is the highest evidence which we can have of the law applicable to the subject, and the judges are bound to follow that decision so long as it stands unreversed, unless it can be shown that the law was misunderstood or misapplied in that particular case. . . . The language of Sir William Jones (Bailments 46) is exceedingly forcible on this point. 'No man,' says he, 'who is not a lawyer would ever know how to act; and no man who is a lawyer would, in many instances, know what to advise, unless courts were bound by authority as firmly as the pagan deities were supposed to be bound by the decrees of fate.'" 1 Kent, Com. 473.

According to Lord Talbot, it is "much better to stick to the known general rules than to follow any one particular precedent which may be founded on reasons unknown to us." Cas. t. Talb. 26. Blackstone, 1 Com. 70, says that a former decision is, in general, to be followed, unless "manifestly absurd or unjust;" and in the latter case it is declared, when overruled, not that the former sentence was bad law, but that it was not law. If an adjudication is questioned in these respects, the degree of consideration and deliberation upon which it was made; 4 Co. 94; the rank of the court, as of inferior or superior jurisdiction, which established it, and the length of time during which it has been acted on as a rule of property, are to be considered. The length of time which a decision has stood unquestioned is an important element; since where a rule declared to be law, even by an inferior tribunal, has been habitually adopted and acted upon by the community, and becomes thus imbedded in the actual affairs of men, it is frequently better to enforce it as it is, instead of allowing it to be re-examined and unsettled. It is said that in order to give precedents binding effect there must be a current of decision; Cro. Car. 528; Cro. Jac. 386; 8 Co. 163; Sauer v. Steinbauer, 10 Wis. 370; and even then, injustice in the rule often prevails over the antiquity and frequency of its adoption, and induces the court to overrule it. But this is to be very cautiously done where it is a rule of property, or wherever a departure from it would unjustly affect vested rights; Lindsay v.

Lindsay, 47 Ind. 286; Bates v. Relyea, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 340.

"The only use of authorities, or decided cases, is the establishment of some principle which the judge can follow out in deciding the case before him. . . . Where a case has decided a principle, although I myself do not concur in it, and although it has been only the decision of a tribunal of co-ordinate jurisdiction, I have felt bound to follow it where it is of respectable age and has been used by lawyers as settling the law, leaving to the appellate court to say that a case is wrongly decided, if the appellate court should so think." 13 Ch. D. 712, per Jessel, M. R.

"Without minutely examining all the cases, or saying whether I do or do not agree with them, it is sufficient for me to abide by the principle established by them; the principle is the thing which we are to extract from cases, and to apply it in the decision of other cases." 7 Term 148, per Lord Kenyon, C. J.

"Now, I have often said, and I repeat it, that the only thing in a judge's decision binding as an authority upon a subsequent judge is the principle upon which the case was decided; but it is not sufficient that the case should have been decided on a principle, if that principle is not itself a right principle, or one not applicable to the case; and it is for a subsequent judge to say whether or not it is a right principle, and, if not, he may himself lay down the true principle. In that case the prior decision ceases to be a binding authority or guide for any subsequent judge, for the second judge who lays down the principle in effect reverses the decision." 13 Ch. D. 785, per Jessel, M. R.

The same judge is quoted in 23 L. Q. Rev. 88, as saying: "If a case lays down a principle, it is a guide to other judges, but a mere decision where you cannot find out the principle is of no use at all."

"If one authority were produced to me, and my own opinion were the other way, I would not follow that authority; but if the authorities are numerous, I admit that I must be bound." L. R. 19 Eq. 460, per Jessel, M. R.

"It is the principle of the decision by which we are bound, not a mere rule that in exactly the same circumstances we are to arrive at the same conclusions. Therefore to say that the decisions are wrong in point of principle, if that principle was clearly laid down, does not relieve us from the obligation of following the principle of the decision, because the whole theory of our system is that the decision of a superior court is binding on an inferior court and on a court of co-ordinate jurisdiction, in so far as it is a statement of the law which the court is bound to accept." James, L. J., in L. R. 7 Ch. Ap. Ca. 750.

"Courts should be careful not to overrule decisions which, not being manifestly erroneous and mischievous, have stood for some time unchallenged, and from their nature and the effect which they may reasonably be supposed to have produced upon the conduct of a large portion of the community, as well as of parliament itself, in matters affecting rights of property, may fairly be treated as having passed into the category of established and recognized law." 15 Ch. D. 336, per Thesiger, L. J.

"Where an old case is contrary to the principles of the general law, the court of appeal ought not to shrink from overruling it even after a considerable lapse of time. But when an old decided case has made the law on a particular subject, the court of appeal ought not to interfere with it, because people have considered it as establishing the law and have acted upon it." 9 Q. B. D. 352, per Jessel, M. R., cited by Lord Esher, M. R., in 22 Q. B. D. 619. See also 12 Q. B. D. 318. In [1909] 1 Ir. R. 172, the court after some deliberation felt itself bound to follow a case decided in 1726.

"Where there is a decision which has stood for more than two hundred years in respect of a subject-matter constantly arising in practice, the court does not overrule it unless absolutely obliged to do so. . . . Even if the court did not agree with the decision, it would not overrule it." [1895] 2 Q. B. 665. Where a dictum of law has been accepted, and is likely to have affected divers contracts and dealings between man and man, and if not followed, many transactions done on the faith of it would be disturbed, the court will follow the dictum; 26 Ch. D. 821. But where a decision had not stood wholly unquestioned the court need not feel bound to follow it merely because it has stood for twelve years without being authoritatively overruled; 27 Ch. D. 154.

"Where the decision is really one as to the jurisdiction of another court there is no reason why, at any distance of time, a superior court may not overrule it." 13 Q. B. D. 591, per Brett, M. R.

"Speaking for myself, I do not pay much attention to the dicta of modern judges, as I consider it my duty to decide for myself. This, of course, does not apply to decisions of modern judges, nor to old recognized dicta by eminent judges." 23 Ch. D. 49, per Jessel, M. R. See, also, 23 Ch. D. 127; [1891] 3 Ch. 370.

Decisions on the constructions of instruments, if the words are similar, are not strictly binding; L. R. 10 Ch. App. 397, with footnote giving the judgment of Jessel, M. R., in the court below; or if the "instruments are couched in somewhat similar language;" 22 Ch. D. 488; and this is true even of the decisions of the appeal court; 23 Ch. D. 111.

In 25 Q. B. D. 57, Lord Esher drew a distinction between "fundamental propositions of law," which could be changed only by parliament, and "the evidence of the existence of such a proposition," which was within the disposition of the court.

In 44 L. T. 440, Jessel, M. R., stated that he had frequently differed from the courts of co-ordinate jurisdiction, and the same was said by Brett, L. J., in 10 Q. B. D. 328, in reference to a decision in the Exchequer Chamber, where the judges were equally divided; and it was said by Brett, M. R., in 13 Q. B. D. 355, that a court of law is not justified in overruling the decisions of another court of co-ordinate jurisdiction, citing Jessel, M. R., in 13 Ch. D. 130.

In L. J. N. S. 57 Ch. D. 157, Kekewich, J., said: "I think that the proper and safe course is to follow a decision of a court of co-ordinate jurisdiction, unless some cogent reason is given to the contrary."

"For us to reverse the judgment of a lord chancellor would require a tremendous case—a case of a clear error." 12 Ch. D. 47, per James, L. J. While the decisions of the lord chancellor, at all events sitting alone, are not absolutely binding, yet the greatest weight ought to be given to them, and unless manifestly wrong, they ought not to be overruled; 12 Ch. D. 54, per Thesiger, L. J. The old lord chancellors overruled one another, and sometimes they overruled their own decisions without the slightest trouble; 21 Ch. D. 346, Jessel, M. R.

It is said that the house of lords has the same power that every other tribunal has in subsequently applying the law laid down by it to other cases; 5 H. L. Cas. 63. The observations made by the members beyond the ratio decidendi which is propounded and acted upon in giving judgment, although they may be entitled to respect, are only to be followed in so far as they may be considered agreeable to sound reason and to prior authorities. But the house of lords, as a tribunal, is bound by its own precedents which it will not overrule, and the doctrine on which the judgment of the house is founded must be universally taken for law, and can only be altered by act of parliament; 3 H. L. Cas. 391; 8 id. 391; 9 id. 338; L. R. 8 C. P. 313. This doctrine was again laid down, after argument, in [1898] A. C. 375.

In [1898] A. C. 375, 381, Halsbury, L. C. said: "A decision of this house upon a question of law is conclusive, and nothing but an act of parliament can set right that which is alleged to be wrong in a judgment of this house." See 15 Law Quart. Rev. 340. If two cases in the house of lords are not to be reconciled, the more recent ought to prevail; 5 App. Cas. 798; 7 id. 294, 302.

The judicial committee of the privy council is not bound by its own precedents; see 4 Moore, P. C. 63; but where a decision of the privy council has been reported to the queen, and been sanctioned and embodied in an order in council, it becomes the decree or order of the final court of appeal, and every subordinate tribunal to whom the order is addressed should carry it into execution; 6 App. Cas. 483.

A series of decisions based upon grounds of public policy however eminent the judges by whom they were delivered, cannot possess the same binding authority as decisions which deal with and formulate principles which are purely legal; Lord Watson in L. R. [1894] A. C. 553.

The supreme court of the United States has overruled its own precedents in some instances, notably on the question of the extent of admiralty jurisdiction and in the legal tender cases.

It has been said that the judgment of an equally divided court has no weight as a precedent; Bridge v. Johnson, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 372; Kalamazoo v. Crawford, 154 Mich. 58, 117 N. W. 572, 16 Ann. Cas. 110; Hanifen v. Armitage, 117 Fed. 846; see cases in 7 Am. & Engl. Encycl. of Pr. 44; so held of a judgment of the supreme court; Kinney v. Conant, 166 Fed. 720, 92 C. C. A. 410; and does not even settle the question of law; Bridge v. Johnson, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 372; but a judgment affirmed by a divided court in the house of lords is a binding precedent; 9 H. L. Cas. 338.

Instances of a lower court disregarding the decision of a higher court will be found in L. R. 2 Eq. 335, where a case formerly decided by Lord Westbury was disregarded because he had decided it in ignorance of a statute, and in L. R. 3 Ch. 420, where the lord chancellor made a ruling as to the abatement of legacies, which was nothing more than a blunder, and was subsequently disregarded by the vice-chancellors.

It is the duty of the court to reconcile decisions and, in order to enforce the correct doctrine, to determine which rest upon the right principle and to overrule or qualify those conflicting therewith; White, C. J., in Ex parte Harding, 219 U. S. 363, 31 Sup. Ct. 324, 55 L. Ed. 252, 37 L. R. A. (N. S.) 392.

"General expressions in any opinion are to be taken in connection with the case in which those expressions are used. If they go beyond the case, they may be respected, but ought not to control the judgment in a subsequent suit where the very point is presented for decision." Cohens v. Virginia, 6 Wheat. (U. S.) 399, 5 L. Ed. 257. Per Marshall, C. J., quoted in U. S. v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S. 679, 18 Sup. Ct. 456, 42 L. Ed. 890; Harriman v. Securities Co., 197 U. S. 291, 25 Sup. Ct. 493, 49 L. Ed. 739.

A judicial decision is an authority only in connection with the facts of the cause, and not for a position referred to by way of illustration of what is not decided because not involved in the case; Jones-L. Co. v. R. Co., 148 N. C. 580, 62 S. E. 701.

The opinion must be read as a whole in view of the facts on which it is based. The facts are the foundation of the entire structure, which cannot with safety be used without reference to the facts; U. S. v. Wong Kim Ark, 169 U. S. 649, 679, 18 Sup. Ct. 456, 42 L. Ed. 890.

" . . . There are two observations of a general character which I wish to make, and one is to repeat what I have often said before, that every judgment must be read as applicable to the particular facts proved, or assumed to be proved, since the generality of the expressions which may be found there are not intended to be expositions of the whole law, but governed and qualified by the particular facts of the case in which such expressions are to be found. The other is that a case is only an authority for what it actually decides. I entirely deny that it can be quoted for a proposition that may seem to follow logically from it. Such a mode of reasoning assumes that the law is necessarily a logical code, whereas every lawyer must acknowledge that the law is not always logical at all." Per Lord Halsbury, L. C., in [1901] A. C. 506.

"A proposition assumed or decided by the court to be true, and which must be so assumed or decided in order to establish another proposition which expresses the conclusion of the court, is as effectually passed upon and settled in that court as the very matter directly decided." Trustees of School Dist. No. 28 v. Stocker, 42 N. J. L. 115.

"It is a mistaken opinion that nothing is decided in a case except the result arrived at. All the propositions assumed by the court to be within the case, and all the questions presented and considered, and deliberately decided by the court, leading up to the final conclusion reached are as effectually passed upon as the ultimate questions solved." Brown v. R. Co., 102 Wis. 137, 77 N. W. 748, 78 N. W. 771, 44 L. R. A. 579. "Nothing is obiter, strictly so called, except matters not within the questions presented—mere statements or observations . . . the result of turning aside for the time to some collateral matter by way of illustration;" id. "Whatever is necessarily implied in the former decision is deemed to have been actually decided." Pray v. Hegeman, 98 N. Y. 351, 358.

"It is difficult to see why, in a philosophical point of view, the opinion of the court is not as persuasive on all points which were so involved in the cause that it was the duty of counsel to argue them, and which were deliberately decided by the court, as if the decision had hung upon but one point." Buchner v. R. Co., 60 Wis. 264, 19 N. W. 56.

Decisions in cases where the point in question might have been raised but was not are of much weight since they show the general understanding of the law by the bench and bar; Bank of U. S. v. Deveaux, 5 Cr. 61, 88, 3 L. Ed. 38.

That a federal court has never been asked to issue a certiorari to review a ruling by an executive of the United States suggests the want of power to issue such writs to such officers; Degge v. Hitchcock, 229 U. S. 162, 33 Sup. Ct. 639, 57 L. Ed. 1135. See also Western Union Tel. Co. v. Schriver, 141 Fed. 538, 72 C. C. A. 596, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 678.

It has been said that no decision can amount to a precedent unless made after full argument; Celluloid Mfg. Co. v. Tower, 26 Fed. 451; but this can hardly be taken to be broadly true. Doubtless this fact would lessen the weight of a case cited from another jurisdiction.

In a dissenting opinion in Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Ellis, 165 U. S. 168, 17 Sup. Ct. 255, 41 L. Ed. 666, Gray, J., expressed regret that an important precedent for interference with the legislation of the several states should be established in a case argued on behalf of appellant only.

The court is not bound, on a question of jurisdiction, by a prior case in which jurisdiction was entertained without any suggestion as to the want of it; New v. Oklahoma, 195 U. S. 252, 25 Sup. Ct. 68, 49 L. Ed. 182; Tefft, Weller & Co. v. Munsuri, 222 U. S. 114, 32 Sup. Ct. 67, 56 L. Ed. 118.

Decisions of the federal supreme court are binding upon state courts upon questions of due process of law; Liddell v. Landau, 87 Ark. 438, 112 S. W. 1085; on federal statutes; Mires v. R. Co., 134 Mo. App. 379, 114 S. W. 1052; questions of interstate commerce; State v. Glasby, 50 Wash. 598, 97 Pac. 734, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 797; State v. Davis, 50 Wash. 704, 97 Pac. 737; and bankruptcy; Stuart v. Bank, 137 Wis. 66, 117 N. W. 820, 16 Ann. Cas. 821.

The construction of federal statutes by the supreme court of the United States should control future decisions of state courts; U. S. Exp. Co. v. People, 195 Ill. 155, 62 N. E. 825; though not in accord with previous decisions in that state; Lyon v. Clark, 124 Mich. 100, 82 N. W. 1058, 83 N. W. 694. (After the decision of this case it appeared that the supreme court of the United States had reversed certain federal decisions, whereupon the Michigan case was reheard and the former decision reversed; Lyon v. Clark, 124 Mich. 105, 82 N. W. 1058, 83 N. W. 694). So in construing the federal constitution; In re Letcher, 145 Cal. 563, 79 Pac. 65; State v. Warner, 165 Mo. 399, 65 S. W. 584, 88 Am. St. Rep. 422.

Advisory opinions of the judges given to state officers are held not to be precedents; Taylor v. Place, 4 R. I. 324; they are not binding upon the department that asked for them; State v. Cleveland, 58 Me. 573. Opinions of the judges asked for by the house of lords are said not to be binding; McQueen, App. Jurisd. of H. of L. 39.

See 24 Am. L. Rev. 369; 7 Harv. L. Rev. 153; OPINIONS OF THE JUDGES.

Judges of the same court should not overrule decisions of each other, especially upon questions involving rules of property and practice, except for the most cogent reasons; Plattner Imp. Co. v. Harvester Co., 133 Fed. 376, 66 C. C. A. 438.

Mr. Powell (Appellate Proceedings) develops at some length the thought that two of the most important ideas and principles in judicial proceedings are essentially of modern origin. These are the force and effect of precedent, and the aid afforded by appellate proceedings in the correction of errors and the perfecting of the law. Neither of these ideas were known to the ancients, or recognized in the civil law, and they were almost entirely disregarded in the courts of continental Europe until the present day.

"Judicial precedent is not simply part of the law in a general sense . . . but it is a part of our law in a sense, and with effects, which are distinctively and most strikingly peculiar. The doctrine, as established, is shortly this: that a decision by a court of competent jurisdiction of a point of law lying so squarely in the pathway of judicial judgment that the case could not be adjudged without deciding it, is not only binding upon the parties to the cause in judgment, but the point, so decided, becomes, until it is reversed or overruled, evidence of what the law is in like cases, which the courts are bound to follow, not only in cases precisely like the one which was first determined, but also in those which, however different in their origin or special circumstances, stand, or are considered to stand, upon the same principles." Dillon, Laws and Jurisp. 231.

"Indirectly, the reports embody also the results of the researches, studies, experience, and ability of the bar during the same period, since of these the judges have had the advantage in the argument of the causes so decided. Indeed the doctrine of judicial precedent implies that the point of the decision whereof such force is attributed should have been argued by opposing counsel." Id. 233.

The fortuitous and irregular growth of case law is the necessary result of the rule of its existence, that no point can become the subject of a judicial decision until it actually arises for judgment. So that it is left, as has been observed, to "the casual exigencies of litigation to determine what parts of it shall be filled up and what left incomplete," with the result that "all kinds of curious little questions receive elaborate answers, while great ones remain in a provoking state of uncertainty." Pollock, Essays, Jurispr. and Ethics, ch. iii.

Concerning the true office and use of adjudged cases, the views of Mr. Justice Miller are expressed in a letter which is published in a note to lecture ix. of Judge Dillon's work already referred to. After adverting to the difficulty experienced by a judge in the use of judicial decisions, he groups the cases into three classes: 1. Those which must be decided by principles not disputed, in which citations are of little value, because the duty of the judge is confined to the application of principles in a particular case. 2. Those which construe the constitutions and statutes, as to which the decisions of the highest court of the government which adopted them, are generally conclusive. 3. Those depending upon general principles of law or equity which must be determined, if there is a conflict of decision, by the weight of authority, and in which the citation of adjudged cases is most useful.

Allusion is also made to the fact that the opinions of certain judges, even when dissenting or obiter, carry special weight apart from the courts in which they were delivered.

O. W. Holmes, Jr. (Common Law 35), considers that the development of the law, by this system, results, to some extent, in a paradox both in form and substance. "In form its growth is logical. The official theory is that each new decision follows syllogistically from existing precedents," but they "survive in the long run after the use they once served is at an end and the reason for them has been forgotten. The result of following them must often be failure and confusion from a merely logical point of view." On the other hand, he considers that the growth of the law, in substance, is legislation in the sense that "the secret root from which it draws all the juices of life" is really to be found in the consideration of what is "expedient for the community concerned" on "more or less definitely understood views of public policy," not less so because the "unconscious result of instinctive preferences and inarticulate convictions." When the law is administered with ability and experience, even if ancient rules are maintained, they will be fitted with new reasons, so that both form and substance are changed by the transplanting.

Expressions by the supreme court (obiter) as to what the law would be on facts essentially different from those in issue are not controlling on a lower court; U. S. v. R. Co., 170 Fed. 542, 95 C. C. A. 623.

In deciding a question of the law of nations the decisions of foreign courts will be respected; Thirty Hogsheads of Sugar v. Boyle, 9 Cra. 191, 3 L. Ed. 701; decisions of courts of England, France, Spain or Holland upon general mercantile law are authorities in this country; Steinmetz v. Currie, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 270, 1 L. Ed. 132.

As to the value of American decisions in English courts, Lord Cockburn, C. J., said in 5 C. P. D. 303: "I am glad to think that

In laying down the rule we had the advantage of the assistance afforded to us by the decisions of the American courts and the opinions of American jurists, whom accident has caused to anticipate us on this question. And, although the decisions of the American courts are, of course, not binding on us, yet the sound and enlightened views of American lawyers in the administration and development of the law—a law, except so far as altered by statutory enactment, derived from a common source with our own—entitle their decisions to the utmost respect and confidence on our part." But Halsbury, C., has said that American decisions are not "authorities" in English courts; 42 Ch. D. 321, 330, where he deprecated the practice of citing them as such.

In [1896] 1 Ch. 763, the reporter says in the headnote "Van Horne v. Fonda, 5 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 388, not followed," as to which it is suggested that an English case first considering an established American doctrine could scarcely ignore the leading American case; 10 Harv. L. Rev. 179.

Few modern writers agree with the older theory formulated by Blackstone, that the courts are "not delegated to pronounce a new law, but to maintain and expound the old one;" 1 Bla. Com. 69; but see Lieber, Hermeneutics, Ham. ed. 312. The tendency is strongly to accept the view that it is a "childish fiction employed by our judges that judiciary or common law is not made by them, but is a miraculous something made by nobody; existing from eternity and merely declared from time to time by the judges;" 2 Aust. Lect. Jurisp. 655. The same view is elaborated by Sir Henry Maine who makes judicial decision the beginning of all law, and contends that the distinction between case law and code law is only one of form, and that both are, properly speaking, written, not unwritten, law. Anc. Law, ch. 1.

"I cannot understand how any person who has considered the subject can suppose that society could possibly have gone on if judges had not legislated, or that there is any danger whatever in allowing them that power which they have in fact exercised to make up for the negligence or incapacity of the avowed legislature. That part of the law of every country which was made by judges has been far better made than that part which consists of statutes enacted by the legislature." 1 Aust. Lect. Jurisp. 224. See Holland, Jurisp. 56.

Mr. Carter, in his lectures on The Law remarks that "a precedent is but authenticated custom" (p. 65) and that "a judicial precedent is not law per se, but evidence of it only. The real law is custom" (p. 84).

But it has also been said that the application of an existing principle to a new state of facts is not judicial legislation. To call it such is to assert that the existing body of law consists practically of the statutes and decided cases and to deny that the principles (of which these cases are ordinarily said to be evidence) existed at all. 4 Harv. L. Rev. 213.

In a recent opinion it is said that "the modern, and we believe laudable, tendency of courts is to abandon the old and technical forms, to abbreviate litigation, to get at the heart of a case and decide it without delay"; Vandalia Coal Co. v. Lawson, 43 Ind. App. 226, 87 N. E. 47, on a bill to prevent multiplicity of actions.

Decisions of Spanish courts after 1898 on Spanish law applicable to possessions ceded by Spain are entitled to great consideration, but do not bind the local courts; Cordova v. Folgueras y Rijos, 227 U. S. 375, 33 Sup. Ct. 350, 57 L. Ed. 556.

On the Continent, under the civil law, a judge is at liberty to disregard the decisions of a higher court. In Scotland the position assigned to judicial precedents seems to be intermediate between that occupied by them on the Continent of Europe and that in England; John C. Gray, 9 H. L. R. 34.

As to federal courts following the decisions in another circuit, see COMITY.

As an instance of following precedent, reference is made to an observation of Lord Ellenborough in 17 C. B. N. S. 791: "I am by no means disposed to extend the comity which has been shown to these sentences of foreign admiralty courts. I shall die, like Lord Thurlow, in the belief that they never ought to have been admitted. The doctrine in their favor rests on an authority in Shower, which does not fully support it, and the practice of receiving them often leads, in its consequences, to the greatest injustice." See 3 Smith, Lead. Cas. 2045; JUDGE-MADE LAW.

Written forms of procedure which have been sanctioned by the courts or by long professional usage, and are commonly to be followed, are designated precedents. Steph. Pl. 392. And this term, when used as the title of a law-book, usually denotes a collection of such forms.

PRECEPARTIUM. The continuance of a suit by consent of both parties. Cowell.

PRECEPT (Lat, precipio, to command). A writ directed to the sheriff, or other officer, commanding him to do something.

PRECES PRIMARIÆ, OR PRIMÆ. A right of the crown to name to the first prebend that becomes vacant after the accession of the sovereign, in every church of the kingdom. This right was exercised by the crown of England in the reign of Edward I. 2 Steph. Com. 670, n.

PRECINCT. The district for which a high or petty constable is appointed is, in England, called a precinct. Wilcox, Const. xii. See Brooks v. Norris, 124 Mass. 172.

Precinct is used, in certain legislation in Wyoming, relatively to assessing taxes on railroad property, as a general word and not a technical one, and indicates any district marked out and defined. It further signifies a district inferior to a county and superior to a township. Union P. R. Co. v. Cheyenne, 113 U. S. 524, 5 Sup. Ct. 601, 28 L. Ed. 1098.

In Pennsylvania and other states it is used to indicate a subdivision of a city for election purposes.

PRECIPUT. In French Law. An object which is ascertained by law or the agreement of the parties, and which is first to be taken out of property held in common by one having a right, before a partition takes place.

The preciput is an advantage or a principal part to which some one is entitled precipium jus, which is the origin of the word preciput. Dalloz, Dict.; Pothier, Obl. By preciput is also understood the right to sue out the preciput.

PRECISE. When the terms "clear, precise, explicit, unequivocal, and indubitable," are used by the courts to define the requisite proof of a fact, it is meant that the witnesses shall be credible, that the facts are distinctly remembered by them, that details are narrated exactly, and that their statements are true. Spencer v. Colt, 89 Pa. 314.

PRECLUDI NON (Lat.). In Pleading. A technical allegation contained in a replication which denies or confesses and avoids the plea.

It is usually in the following form: "And the said A B, as to the plea of the said C D, by him secondly above pleaded, says that he, the said A B, by reason of anything by the said C D in that plea alleged, ought not to be barred from having and maintaining his aforesaid action thereof against the said C D, because he says that," etc. 2 Wils. 42; 1 Chitty, Pl. 573; Steph. Pl. 398.

PRECONTRACT. An engagement entered into by a person which renders him unable to enter into another; as, a promise or covenant of marriage to be had afterwards. When made per verba de præsenti, it is in fact a marriage, and in that case the party making it cannot marry another person. Bish. Mar. & D. § 53; 1 Bish. Mar. Div. & Sep. § 280, 1891. See PROMISE OF MARRIAGE.

PREDECESSOR. One who has preceded another.

This term is applied in particular to corporations who are now no longer such, and whose rights have been vested in their successor; the word ancestor is more usually applicable to common persons. The predecessor in a corporation stands in the same relation to the successor that the ancestor does to the heir.

One who has filled an office or station before the present incumbent.

PREDICATE. To affirm logically.

PREDOMINANT. Something greater or superior in power and influence to others with which it is connected or compared. Matthews v. Bliss, 22 Pick. (Mass.) 53.

PRE-EMPTION. In International Law. The right of pre-emption is the right of a nation to detain the merchandise of strangers passing through her territories or seas, in order to afford to her subjects the preference of purchase. 1 Chitty, Com. Law 103; 2 Bla. Com. 287.

According to general modern usage the doctrine of pre-emption, as applied in time of war rests upon the distinction between articles which are contraband (q. v.) universally, and those which are contraband only under the particular circumstances of the case. The carrying of the former class entails the penalty of confiscation, either of ship or cargo or both. The latter class, while confiscable according to strict law, are sometimes merely subjected to the milder belligerent right of pre-emption, which is regarded as a fair compromise between the right of the belligerent to seize, and the claim of the neutral to export his native commodities, though immediately subservient to the purpose of hostility; 3 Phill. Int. L. 450; 1 C. Rob. 241. The right of pre-emption is said to be rather a waiver of a greater right than a right itself; an indulgence to the neutral rather than a right of the belligerent; Ward, Contraband 196.

This right is sometimes regulated by treaty. In the treaty made between the United States and Great Britain, November 19, 1794, ratified in 1795, it was provided, after mentioning that the usual munitions of war, and also naval materials, should be confiscated as contraband, that, "whereas the difficulty of agreeing on precise cases in which alone provisions and other articles not generally contraband may be regarded as such, renders it expedient to provide against the inconveniences and misunderstandings which might thence arise, it is further agreed that whenever any such articles so being contraband according to the existing laws of nations shall for that reason be seized, the same shall not be confiscated, but the owners thereof shall be speedily and completely indemnified; and the captors, or, in their default, the government under whose authority they act, shall pay to the masters or owners of such vessel the full value of all articles, with a reasonable mercantile profit thereon, together with the freight, and also the damages incident to such detention." According to the practice of the British prize court, a profit of ten per cent. has been usually allowed to the proprietor of the goods seized, for the purposes of pre-emption; 3 Phill. Int. L. 451.

See NEUTRALITY.

PRE-EMPTION RIGHT. The right given to settlers upon the public lands to purchase them at a limited price in preference to others.

It gave a right to the actual settler who was a citizen of the United States, or who had filed a declaration of intention to become such, and had entered and occupied without title, to obtain a title to a quarter-section at the minimum price fixed by law, upon entry in the proper office and payment, to the exclusion of all other persons. It is an equitable title; McAfee's Heirs v. Keirn, 7 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 780, 45 Am. Dec. 331; Pettigrew v. Shirley, 9 Mo. 683; U. S. v. Fitzgerald, 15 Pet. (U. S.) 407, 10 L. Ed. 785; and does not become a title at law to the land till entry and payment; Craig v. Tappin, 2 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 78; Brown v. Throckmorton, 11 Ill. 529. It may be transferred by deed; Delaunay v. Burnett, 4 Gilman (Ill.) 454; and descends to the heirs of an intestate; Hunt v. Wickliffe, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 201, 7 L. Ed. 397.

No person is entitled to more than one pre-emption right to public land; and where a party has filed a declaration, he cannot file another for another tract, or for an addition to the first tract; Sanford v. Sanford, 139 U. S. 642, 11 Sup. Ct. 666, 35 L. Ed. 290.

A person cannot acquire by his occupation only of unsurveyed lands of the United States, a right of pre-emption to them; Buxton v. Traver, 130 U. S. 232, 9 Sup. Ct. 509, 32 L. Ed. 920. The word heirs as used in R. S. § 2269, which provides for the issuance of a patent to the heirs of a deceased pre-emptor, includes illegitimate children, when such can inherit it from their father in the state where he was domiciled and the land located; Hutchinson Inv. Co. v. Caldwell, 152 U. S. 65, 14 Sup. Ct. 504, 38 L. Ed. 356.

By act of March 3, 1891, the pre-emption laws were repealed, saving the rights of claims already initiated; 1 R. S. Sup. 942; and bona fide pre-emption claimants were permitted to transfer any part of their land for church, cemetery, and school purposes and for the right of way of railroads, canals and irrigation and drainage works.

See LANDS, PUBLIC.

PRE-EXISTING. Pre-existing debt includes all debts previously contracted whether they have become payable or not. In re Fletcher, 136 Mass. 340.

PREFER. To bring any matter before a court: as,—A. preferred a charge of assault against B.

To apply or move: thus,—“to prefer for costs.” Abb. Law Dict.

PREFERENCE. The paying or securing to one or more of his creditors, by an insolvent debtor, the whole or a part of their claim, to the exclusion of the rest. The right which a creditor has acquired over others to be paid first out of the assets of his debtor; as, when a creditor has obtained a judgment against his debtor which binds the latter's land, he has a preference.

A failing creditor, if an individual or partnership, may at common law prefer any one creditor to the exclusion of others; Wilder v. Winne, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 285; Clarke v. White, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 178, 9 L. Ed. 1046; York County Bk. v. Carter, 38 Pa. 446, 80 Am. Dec. 494. See Sartwell v. North, 144 Mass. 192, 10 N. E. 824. Knowledge of insolvency does not render a preference invalid, except under some statute; Merillat v. Hensley, 221 U. S. 333, 31 Sup. Ct. 575, 55 L. Ed. 758, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 370, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 497.

At common law, unless prohibited by statute, a corporation whether insolvent or not, had a right to pay a creditor, whether a director, officer, stockholder or outsider; Coats v. Donnell, 94 N. Y. 168; 2 Moraw. Corp. § 802. As to preference by failing corporations, there are now two doctrines; one that the assets are a trust fund for the benefit of all creditors pro rata and no preference can be given to any creditor; Consolidated Tank-Line Co. v. Varnish Co., 45 Fed. 7; Beach v. Miller, 130 Ill. 162, 22 N. E. 464, 17 Am. St. Rep. 291; Haywood v. Lumber Co., 64 Wis. 639, 26 N. W. 184; Rouse v. Bank, 46 Ohio St. 493, 22 N. E. 293, 5 L. Bishop*, 76 Mich. 634, 43 N. W. 645. The other that a corporation has the same power in dealing with the assets and preferring creditors as an individual has under similar circumstances; Garrett v. Plow Co., 70 Ia. 697, 29 N. W. 395, 59 Am. Rep. 461; Allis v. Jones, 45 Fed. 148; Pyles v. Furniture Co., 30 W. Va. 123, 2 S. E. 909; Planters' Bk. v. Whittle, 78 Va. 737; Farwell Co. v. Sweetzer, 10 Colo. App. 421, 51 Pac. 1012; Cowan v. Glass Co., 184 Pa. 1, 38 Atl. 1075. In the absence of statutory prohibition it has been held a corporation may convey its property to a creditor upon condition that he pay himself and return the surplus; Catlin v. Bank, 6 Conn. 233.

It has been held that a failing corporation may prefer its own stockholders; Reichwald v. Hotel Co., 106 Ill. 439; but not its own directors; Sicardi v. Oil Co., 149 Pa. 148, 24 Atl. 163; Smith v. Putnam, 61 N. H. 632; Howe, B. & Co. v. Tool Co., 44 Fed. 231; Beach v. Miller, 130 Ill. 162, 22 N. E. 464, 17 Am. St. Rep. 291; Haywood v. Lumber Co., 64 Wis. 639, 26 N. W. 184; Lippincott v. Carriage Co., 25 Fed. 577; but see, contra, Garrett v. Plow Co., 70 Ia. 697, 29 N. W. 395, 59 Am. Rep. 461; Foster v. Mill Co., 92 Mo. 79, 4 S. W. 260; it is held that it may prefer its directors and its creditors on whose claims its directors are sureties; Nappanee Canning Co. v. R. M. & Co., 159 Ind. 614, 64 N. E. 870, 1115, 59 L. R. A. 199.

After suspension and insolvency no preference will be allowed; Richards v. Ins. Co., 43 N. H. 263; Olney v. Land Co., 16 R. I. 597, 18 Atl. 181, 5 L. R. A. 361, 27 Am. St. Rep. 767. The directors may advance money to a corporation in difficulties and secure themselves by mortgage of its property; Twin-Lick Oil Co. v. Marbury, 91 U. S. 587, 23 L. Ed. 328; Mullaughy Sav. Bk. v. Schott, 135 Ill. 655, 26 N. E. 640, 25 Am. St. Rep. 401. If the preferred creditor be one of its officers, he must show that the preference was fair and conscionable and not collusive for the mere purpose of preference; Cowan v. Glass Co., 184 Pa. 1, 38 Atl. 1075. The liquidation in good faith of debts due to directors with the hope of continuing business, is not invalid; Dutcher v. Bank, 59 N. Y. 5. Judge Thompson takes very strong ground against the right of a corporation to prefer any creditor, but especially an officer, or stockholder; Thompson, Corp. § 6492; 32 Am. L. Rev. 138. The opposite ground is taken on principle in 2 No. W. L. Rev. by Prof. Harriman. In New York, by statute, a failing corporation cannot transfer any of its property to an officer, director or stockholder.

In some states assignments which attempt to create a preference are void and the assignment is for the equal benefit of all creditors. In other states they are allowed. Preferences are usually invalidated by bankrupt acts. By the bankrupt act of July 1, 1898, as amended Feb. 5, 1903, and June 25, 1910, it was provided as follows:

(a) A person shall be deemed to have given a preference if, being insolvent, he has, within four months before the filing of the petition, or after the filing of the petition and before the adjudication, procured or suffered a judgment to be entered against himself in favor of any person or made a transfer of any of his property, and the effect of the enforcement of such judgment or transfer will be to enable any one of his creditors to obtain a greater portion of his debt than any other of such creditors of the same class. Where the preference consists of a transfer, such period of four months shall not expire until four months after the date of the recording or registering of the transfer, if by law such recording or registering is required.

(b) If a bankrupt shall have procured or suffered a judgment to be entered against him in favor of any person or have made a transfer of any of his property, and if at the time of the transfer, or of the entry of the judgment or of the recording or registering of the transfer, if by law recording or registering thereof is required, and being within four months before the filing of the petition in bankruptcy, or after the filing thereof and before the adjudication, the bankrupt be insolvent, and the judgment or transfer then operate as a preference, and the person receiving it or to be benefited thereby, or his agent, shall then have reasonable cause to believe that the enforcement of such judgment or transfer would effect a preference, it shall be voidable by the trustee and he may recover the property or its value from such person. Concurrent jurisdiction is in the bankruptcy court and the proper state court.

(c) If a creditor has been preferred and afterward in good faith gives the debtor further credit without security of any kind for property which becomes part of the debtor's estates, the amount of such new credit remaining unpaid at the time of the adjudication in bankruptcy may be set off against the amount which would otherwise be recoverable from him.

(d) If a debtor, in contemplation of the filing of a petition by or against him, shall pay money or transfer property to his attorney for services to be rendered, the transaction shall be re-examined by the court and held valid to the extent of a reasonable amount and the excess may be recovered by the trustee.

To constitute a preference it must appear that, at the time, the debtor was insolvent, that he intended a preference, and that the transferee had reasonable ground to believe that a preference was intended; In re Leech, 171 Fed. 625, 96 C. C. A. 424; In re First N. Bk., 155 Fed. 100, 84 C. C. A. 16; there must be a parting with the bankrupts' property for the benefit of the creditor and a subsequent diminution of his estate; Continental & Commercial T. & S. Bk. v. Trust Co., 229 U. S. 435, 33 Sup. Ct. 829, 57 L. Ed. 1268; N. Bk. of Newport v. Bank, 225 U. S. 178, 32 Sup. Ct. 633, 56 L. Ed. 1042.

There is a difference between intent to defraud and intent to prefer—the former is malum per se and the latter malum prohibitum and only to the extent forbidden; Van Iderstine v. Discount Co., 227 U. S. 575, 33 Sup. Ct. 343, 57 L. Ed. 652.

The mere knowledge of the creditor that the debtor could not pay all his debts unless he could collect all his accounts is not notice of insolvency; Off v. Hakes, 142 Fed. 364, 73 C. C. A. 464; nor is the mere fact that a debtor is financially embarrassed; J. W. Butler Paper Co. v. Goebel, 143 Fed. 295, 74 C. C. A. 433. In the case of a partnership, it must be shown that the firm and the partners themselves were insolvent when the payments were made; Tumlin v. Bryan, 165 Fed. 166, 91 C. C. A. 200, 21 L. R. A. (N. S.) 960.

It is reasonable ground to believe that a preference was intended, if the creditor knew facts which would put a prudent man on inquiry and that would have shown that the transfer was preferential in its effect; In re W. W. Mills Co., 162 Fed. 42; but where a young woman with no business experience who had her money with a bankrupt firm, of which her uncle was the head, received a check for her deposit in full, with a statement that the firm could no longer use her money; it was held that she had no reasonable cause to believe it a preference; Wright v. Sampter, 152 Fed. 196.

The entry of a judgment and issuing execution, under an irrevocable power of attorney to confess judgment, given by the debtor to the creditor, upon a promissory note dated years before the petition in bankruptcy, may nevertheless be a preference; Wilson v. Nelson, 183 U. S. 191, 22 Sup. Ct. 74, 46 L. Ed. 147; a mortgage given within four months of the petition without the mortgagee's knowledge of the mortgagor's insolvency is not voidable under section 67e; Coder v. Arts, 213 U. S. 223, 29 Sup. Ct. 436, 53 L. Ed. 772, 16 Ann. Cas. 1008. An attempt to prefer is not necessarily an attempt to defraud, nor is a preferential transfer always a fraudulent one. The fraud depends upon the motive, and under § 67e, actual fraud must be shown; id. It is a preference for a creditor to procure a purchaser for the bankrupt stock and business where such purchaser assumes the bankrupt's indebtedness to such creditor; Off v. Hakes, 142 Fed. 364, 73 C. C. A. 464.

Payments by a merchant in the usual course of business on a running account and new sales succeeding payments, to the net benefit of the estate, and the seller having no reason to believe an intention to prefer, are not preferences; Jaquith v. Alden, 189 U. S. 78, 23 Sup. Ct. 649, 47 L. Ed. 717; so of a creditor who had a claim on open account, and who had no knowledge of the debtor's insolvency; Wild & Co. v. Trust Co., 214 U. S. 292, 29 Sup. Ct. 619, 53 L. Ed. 1003. A bona fide transfer of securities to secure a loan to one who immediately thereafter became bankrupt is not an illegal preference if the vender had no knowledge of an intention to prefer, even though he knew the money was to be used to pay debts; Van Iderstine v. Discount Co., 227 U. S. 575, 33 Sup. Ct. 343, 57 L. Ed. 652.

A bank doing business with a customer who becomes insolvent may accept his money if it has no reasonable cause to believe that a preference will be given; Studley v. Bank, 229 U. S. 523, 33 Sup. Ct. 806, 57 L. Ed. 1313. A bank, not a creditor, loaned money on mortgage to an insolvent corporation; the money was used to pay debts; it was not a preference; Grinstead v. Trust Co., 190 Fed. 546, 111 C. C. A. 398.

A customer has such interest in securities carried for him by a broker that a delivery to him after insolvency is not necessarily a preference; Sexton v. Kessler, 225 U. S. 90, 32 Sup. Ct. 657, 56 L. Ed. 995. A broker, if he uses securities belonging to his customer, is bound to use his own funds to replace them with others of the same kind, and in so doing he does not deplete his estate against his other creditors; Gorman v. Littlefield, 229 U. S. 19, 33 Sup. Ct. 690, 57 L. Ed. 1047. A broker paying excess margins to a customer held, in the circumstances, not giving a preference; Richardson v. Shaw, 209 U. S. 365, 28 Sup. Ct. 512, 52 L. Ed. 835, 14 Ann. Cas. 981.

See BANKRUPT LAWS.

PREFERENCE SHARES. Shares of a corporation or a joint-stock company entitling their holders to a preferential dividend and sometimes to priority on the division of the assets. See Stock.

PREFERENTIAL DEBTS. Preferential debts, in bankruptcy, are those prior to all others; as, wages of a clerk, servant, or workman, rates due and taxes. Brett, Comm. 890.

PREFERRED. This word is relative; it refers to something else, and it means that the thing to which it is attached, whatever that may be, has some advantage over another thing of the same character, which, but for this advantage, would be like the others. State v. R. Co., 16 S. C. 530.

PREFERRED CLAIMS. See MORTGAGE; RECEIVER.

PREFERRED CREDITOR. A creditor whom the debtor has directed shall be paid before other creditors. See PREFERENCE.

PREFERRED STOCK. See Stock.

PRÉFET. In French Law. A chief officer invested with the superintendence of the administration of the laws in each department. Merlin, Répert.

PREGNANCY. In Medical Jurisprudence. The condition of a woman who has within her the product of a conception which has occurred within a year. Billings, Nat. Med. Dictionary.

Extra uterine or ectopic pregnancy is the development of the ovum outside of the uterine cavity, as in the Fallopian tubes or ovary. Extra uterine pregnancy commonly terminates by rupture of the sac, profuse internal hemorrhage, and death if not relieved promptly by a surgical operation. Rupture usually takes place between the second and sixth month of pregnancy.

The signs of pregnancy. These acquire a great importance from their connection with the subject of concealed, and also of pretended, pregnancy. The first may occur in order to avoid disgrace, and to accomplish in a secret manner the destruction of offspring. The second may be attempted to gratify the wishes of a husband or relations, to deprive the legal successor of his just claims, to gratify avarice by extorting money, and to avoid or delay execution.

These signs and indications are both subjective and objective. The chief subjective signs are: (1) cessation of menstruation, which rarely may not occur, and on the other hand may occur in other conditions; (2) nausea and vomiting which usually develop about the 6th week; (3) nervous disorders, including changes in disposition; (4) pain or discomfort in the breasts; (5) quickening or sensations due to the movements of the fœtus within the uterus. These sensations are first noticed about the end of the fourth month. The movements begin much earlier but are not felt until the uterus has developed sufficiently to come in contact with the abdominal walls.

The chief objective symptoms are: (1) changes in the facial expression with dark rings about the eyes and often spots of pigmentation resembling large freckles; (2) enlargement of the breast, the nipple becoming prominent, and in brunettes surrounded by an aureola of pigmentation; (3) enlargement of the abdomen, usually not evident before the third or fourth month. The prominence is pear-shaped with the small end downward; (4) fœtal movements which can be felt through the abdominal walls as early as the end of the fifth month; (5) the uterine souffle or sound heard with the ear upon the abdomen and caused by the blood current in the dilated uterine veins. This sound may be heard as early as the end of the fourth month, (6) the most important of all the signs consists of the sounds of the fœtal heart. These sounds can be heard about the beginning of the fifth month, and are of course a positive sign of pregnancy. The sounds have been aptly compared to the ticking of a watch heard through a pillow; (7) softening of the cervix or neck of the uterus; (8) ballottement, the impulse or wave excited by suddenly lifting the uterus with a hand in the vagina, the other hand being placed firmly upon the abdomen. A specific serum test to determine the existence of pregnancy has been devised by Abderhalden and bears his name. Like the specific tests employed in other conditions, it depends upon the fact that, with the growth of certain foreign cells or tissues in an animal body, certain substances are produced and cast into the circulation; the presence of these substances in the blood can be detected by the appropriate chemical methods.

The duration of pregnancy is normally about nine calendar or ten lunar months, or about 275 days from the cessation of the last menstrual period. The possibility of prolonged pregnancy has long been a fruitful subject of discussion but "by a study of the analogy of other functions of the body, by observations in the lower animals, and by accurate reliable data, from women in particular, we are forced to the conclusion that pregnancy may be and often is prolonged. . . . Gestation may be lengthened, parturition may be delayed from a few days to one or two months."

The laws relating to pregnancy concern the circumstances under and the manner in which the fact is ascertained. There are two cases where the fact whether a woman is or has been pregnant is important to ascertain. The one is when it is supposed she pretends pregnancy, and the other when she is charged with concealing it.

Pretended pregnancy may arise from two causes: the one when a widow feigns herself with child in order to produce a supposititious heir to the estate. The presumptive heir may in such case have a writ de ventre inspiciendo, by which the sheriff is commanded to have such made, and the fact determined whether pregnancy exists or not, by twelve matrons, in the presence of twelve knights. If the result determine the fact of pregnancy, then she is to be kept under proper guard until she is delivered. If the pregnancy be negatived, the presumptive heir is admitted to the inheritance; 1 Bla. Com. 456; Cro. Eliz. 566; 4 Bro. C. C. 90; 2 P. Wms. 591; Cox, C. C. 297. A practice quite similar prevailed in the civil law.

The second cause of pretended pregnancy occurs when a woman is under sentence of death for the commission of a crime. At common law, in case this plea be made before execution, the court must direct a jury of twelve matrons, or discreet women, to ascertain the fact, and if they bring in their verdict quick with child (for barely with child, unless it be alive in the womb, is not sufficient), execution shall be stayed, generally till the next session of the court, and so from session to session, till either she is delivered or proves by the course of nature not to have been with child at all; 4 Bla. Com. 394; State v. Arden, 1 Bay (S. C.) 487.

In Scotland, all that is necessary to be proved, to have execution delayed, is the fact of pregnancy, no difference being made whether she be quick with child or not. This is also the provision of the French penal code upon this subject. In this country, there is little doubt that clear proof that the woman was pregnant, though not quick with child, would at common law be sufficient to obtain a respite of execution until after delivery. The difficulty lies in making the proof sufficiently clear, the signs and indications being all somewhat uncertain, some of them wanting, all liable to variation, and conviction of the fact only fastening upon the mind when a number of them, inexplicable upon any other hypothesis, concur in that one result.

It has been held that pregnancy at the time of marriage by another than the husband is sufficient ground for divorce, provided the pregnancy was unknown to the husband and there was no reasonable ground of suspicion by him; Appeal of Allen, 99 Pa. 196, 44 Am. Rep. 101; Nadra v. Nadra, 79 Mich. 591, 44 N. W. 1046. It is held that proof of concealed pregnancy of the wife before marriage entitles the husband to a divorce; May v. May, 71 Kan. 317, 80 Pac. 567; especially where he had had no sexual relations with her; Sinclair v. Sinclair, 57 N. J. Eq. 222, 40 Atl. 679; or he may have the marriage annulled for fraud; Fontana v. Fontana, 77 Misc. 28, 135 N. Y. Supp. 220; but not where he condones the fraud by continuing to cohabit with the wife after discovery; Lenoir v. Lenoir, 24 App. D. C. 160. This can hardly be laid down as an absolute rule; 1 Bish. Mar. Div. & Sep. § 483.

A husband who has been induced to marry a wife with whom he has had prior sexual relations, by representations that she was with child by him, may obtain a divorce on proof that the pregnancy was due to intercourse with another person; Wallace v. Wallace, 137 Ia. 37, 114 N. W. 527, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 544, 126 Am. St. Rep. 253, 15 Ann. Cas. 761; contra, Young v. Young (Tex.) 127 S. W. 898; Gondouin v. Gondouin, 14 Cal. App. 285, 111 Pac. 756.

Where adultery was in issue in a homicide case, proof of pregnancy was admitted as tending to show the improbability of intercourse; Washington v. State, 46 Tex. Cr. R. 184, 79 S. W. 811.

A carrier may be liable for injury to a pregnant woman, which would not have occurred but for her condition; Colorado S. & I. Ry. Co. v. Nichols, 41 Colo. 272, 92 Pac. 691, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 215.

Pregnancy is seldom concealed except for the criminal purpose of destroying the life of the fetus in utero, or of the child immediately upon its birth. Infant life is easily extinguished; while proof of the unnatural crime is hard to be furnished. This has led to the passage of laws, both in England and in this country, calculated to facilitate the proof and also to punish the very act of concealment of pregnancy and death of the child when, if born alive, it would have been illegitimate. In England, the very stringent act of 21 Jac. I. c. 27, required that any mother of such child who had endeavored to conceal its birth should prove by at least one witness that the child was actually born dead; and for want of such proof it arrived at the forced conclusion that the mother had murdered it. This cruel law was essentially modified in 1803, by the passage of an act declaring that women indicted for the murder of bastard children should be tried by the same rules of evidence and presumption as obtain in other trials of murder.

The early legislation of Pennsylvania was characterized by the same severity. The act of May 31, 1781, made the concealment of the death of a bastard child conclusive evidence to convict the mother of murder. This was repealed by the act of April 5, 1790, s. 6, which declared that the constrained presumption that the child whose death is concealed was therefore murdered by the mother shall not be sufficient to convict the party indicted, without probable presumptive proof is given that the child was born alive. The law was further modified by the act of April 22, 1794, s. 18, which declares that the concealment of the death of any such child shall not be conclusive evidence to convict the party indicted for the murder of her child, unless the circumstances attending it be such as shall satisfy the mind of the jury that she did wilfully and maliciously destroy and take away the life of such a child. The act also punishes the concealment of the death of a bastard child by fine and imprisonment. The act of March 31, 1860, is in force in Pennsylvania. It makes the concealment of the death of an illegitimate child an offence punishable by fine and imprisonment, and leaves the question of the murder of the child by its mother subject to the mode of trial and punishment as in ordinary cases of murder. Counts for murder and concealing the death of the child may, however, be united in the same indictment.

(In Notebene v. Malore, Year Book, 12 Rich. II, 46, it was considered that three years was the possible duration of pregnancy.)

PREGNANT. See AFFIRMATIVE PREGNANT; NEGATIVE PREGNANT; PREGNANCY.

PREJUDICE (Lat. præ, before, judicare, to judge). A forejudgment. A leaning toward one side of a cause for some reason other than its justice. See Willis v. State, 12 Ga. 448.

PRELATE. Ecclesiastical officers are often so called. There are two orders of prelates: the first is composed of bishops, and the second, of abbots, generals of orders, deans, etc.

PRÉLÈVEMENT. In French Law. The portion which a partner is entitled to take out of the assets of a firm before any division shall be made of the remainder of the assets between the partners.

The partner who is entitled to a prélèvement is not a creditor of the partnership: on the contrary, he is a part-owner; for, if the assets should be deficient, a creditor has the preference over the partner; on the other hand, should the assets yield any profit, the partner is entitled to his portion of it, whereas the creditor is entitled to no part of it, but he has a right to charge interest when he is in other respects entitled to it.

PRELIMINARY. Something which precedes: as, preliminaries of peace, which are the first sketch of a treaty, and contain the principal articles on which both parties are desirous of concluding, and which are to serve as the basis of the treaty.

PRELIMINARY ACT. In English Law. A document stating the time and place of a collision between vessels, the names of the vessels, and other particulars required to be filed by each solicitor in actions for damage by such collisions. Whart. Law. Dict.

PRELIMINARY EXAMINATION. The hearing given to a person accused of crime, by a magistrate or judge, exercising the functions of a committing magistrate, to ascertain whether there is evidence to warrant and require the commitment and holding to bail of the person accused. See Bish. New Cr. L. § 32, 225.

Coroners generally have the powers of a committing magistrate as also have the mayors of cities in many of the states; id. 229 b.

In case, as it often happens, there is question as to what precise crime should be charged against the prisoner or whether more than one crime is involved in the facts shown, the commitment should be so framed as to cover them all, leaving to the prosecuting officer and the grand jury the opportunity for election; but if the commitment does not cover all charges it does not discharge the prisoner from liability for the rest; id. § 33. The discharge of a prisoner on a preliminary examination will not operate as a bar to further proceedings; Duffy v. Britton, 47 N. J. L. 251; In re Garst, 10 Neb. 78, 4 N. W. 511.

It is said that a person charged with crime, unless a fugitive from justice, is entitled to a preliminary examination; Coffield v. State, 44 Neb. 417, 62 N. W. 875; but it was also held that such examination is not necessary as a basis for finding an indictment; State v. Schieler, 4 Idaho 120, 37 Pac. 272; and that in proper cases the court may direct the prosecuting attorney to submit indictments without such examination; Com. v. Taylor, 2 Dist. Rep. (Pa.) 743. A complaint made on such examination may be dismissed and a new charge prosecuted before another magistrate; State v. Nordstrom, 7 Wash. 506, 35 Pac. 382; but after holding the accused to bail the magistrate cannot discharge him without notice to the prosecutor; Hill v. Egan, 160 Pa. 119, 28 Atl. 646. The denial of the right to be taken before a magistrate of the county in which one is arrested, to give bail does not vitiate a subsequent trial and conviction; People v. Eberspacher, 79 Hun 410, 29 N. Y. Supp. 796.

Where the evidence seems to warrant the commitment of the accused person, or time is required for the introduction of other evidence or for further investigation, the person may be committed or held to bail for further hearing. The examination may be postponed on account of the physical inability to attend of important witnesses for the state; State v. Aucoin, 47 La. Ann. 1677, 18 South. 709.

Generally the offence charged is stated in the complaint and warrant and a preliminary examination is waived; and a plea that there was no such examination will not be entertained after information filed; State v. Myers, 54 Kan. 206, 38 Pac. 206. An objection that there was no preliminary examination must be raised before trial by plea in abatement or motion to quash; Coffield v. State, 44 Neb. 417, 62 N. W. 875.

A person arrested and taken before a magistrate for preliminary examination may waive it even where the state constitution secures the right to such examination; People v. Tarbox, 115 Cal. 57, 46 Pac. 896; State v. Larkins, 5 Idaho 200, 47 Pac. 945. See, also, as to waiver of such examinations, Ryan v. State, 83 Wis. 486, 53 N. W. 836; People v. Harris, 103 Mich. 473, 61 N. W. 871.

It is the duty of the committing magistrate to secure the attendance of witnesses for the prosecution who are examined by him, for which purpose he may require them to give bail for their appearance before the grand jury or in the criminal court, with or without surety which is usually in his discretion; 1 Bish. N. Cr. L. 34. Where the preliminary examination is provided for by law, the testimony of the witnesses taken thereat may be afterwards shown in contradiction; People v. Nelson, 85 Cal. 421, 24 Pac. 1006; Dolan v. State, 40 Ark. 454. And the witnesses are liable to the penalties of perjury for false swearing if so authorized, otherwise not; State v. Furlong, 26 Me. 69; 2 McClain, Cr. Law § 858.

The filing of an information after the preliminary examination, but before a return of it made by the examining magistrate, is a mere irregularity and does not vitiate the proceedings; People v. Tarbox, 115 Cal. 57, 46 Pac. 896. In Colorado, by statute, an information may be filed without a preliminary examination, upon the affidavit of any person who has knowledge of the commission of the offence and is a competent witness; Holt v. People, 23 Colo. 1, 45 Pac. 374; Noble v. People, 23 Colo. 9, 45 Pac. 376.

Where a complaint charged perjury on a certain date, and examination was waived, and the information subsequently filed charged the commission of the crime on another date, a plea in abatement on the ground that there was no examination on the offence charged in the information, was substained; Brown v. State, 91 Wis. 245, 64 N. W. 749.

A statutory requirement that the magistrate shall, on preliminary examination, examine the witnesses to support the accusation, does not require that all of the witnesses known to the state shall be examined, but merely sufficient to justify the magistrate in binding over the accused for trial; Emery v. State, 92 Wis. 146, 65 N. W. 848.

United States commissioners holding preliminary examinations have no judicial power, but only authority to determine whether there is probable cause to believe that the offence was committed; U. S. v. Hughes, 70 Fed. 972; and a district judge holding a preliminary examination has only, quoad hoc, the powers of a commissioner; id.

Where an examining magistrate certified that he found probable cause to believe that an offence had been committed and had taken bail, it was sufficient to sustain an information without a positive certificate by the magistrate that an offence had been committed; People v. Whittemore, 102 Mich. 519, 61 N. W. 13.

In England, when an accused person has been arrested, either without warrant or by a justice's warrant, if he is charged with an offence for which he may be tried before a jury, the justice holds a preliminary inquiry to decide whether he ought or ought not to be sent for trial. The admission of the public during those inquiries is a matter of discretion with the justice. The witnesses for the prosecution are examined under oath and may be cross-examined by the defendant or his counsel or solicitor. The evidence is taken down in writing and after the prosecution is closed, it is read in the hearing of the defendant and he is asked whether he has anything to say in answer to the charge, being first told that he is not required to speak but that whatever he does say will be taken down in writing and may be given in evidence against him on the trial. The defendant is then allowed to call witnesses to prove his innocence. He may examine these himself or by his counsel or solicitor, and they may be cross-examined by the prosecutor. The defendant may not be questioned nor may he give evidence on his own behalf, except in certain special cases. If he choose to give evidence on oath he is liable to be cross-examined by the prosecutor.

If a prima facie case is not made out the defendant is discharged. If the justices are of opinion that a case has been made out they send him to trial. Hearings may be adjourned upon reasonable grounds to a stated time and place, in which case the accused is either removed under custody or discharged on his own recognizance, with or without sureties, to appear at the adjourned hearing. The limit of time must not exceed eight days. If the accused be held for trial, the prosecutor and the witnesses are bound by recognizance to appear and give evidence at the trial. The accused will not be released on bail when the charge is treason. In cases of felony and a large number of misdemeanors, the justice has a discretion in the matter. In case of misdemeanors not specially provided for, they have no power to refuse bail. Haycraft, Exec. Pow. in Rel. to Crime.

PRELIMINARY PROOF. In Insurance. Marine policies in the United States generally have a provision that a loss shall be payable in a certain time, usually sixty days, "after proof," meaning "preliminary proof," which is not particularly specified. Fire policies usually specify the preliminary proof. Life policies, like marine, usually make the loss payable sixty or ninety days after notice and proof; Fuller v. Ins. Co., 31 Me. 325; Loomis v. Ins. Co., 6 Gray (Mass.) 396; Gilbert v. Ins. Co., 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 43, 35 Am. Dec. 543; Stew. Low. C. 354; Columbian Ins. Co. v. Lawrence, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 507, 9 L. Ed. 512; Noyes v. Ins. Co., 30 Vt. 659. See PROOFS OF LOSS.

PREMEDITATEDLY. Thought of beforehand, for any length of time, however short. State v. Seaton, 106 Mo. 198, 17 S. W. 169. "Deliberately" logically contains in it all that is meant by "premeditatedly," and more. But "premeditatedly" is also contained in the phrase "malice aforethought." State v. Dale, 108 Mo. 205, 18 S. W. 976.

PREMEDITATION. A design formed to commit a crime or to do some other thing before it is done. State v. Coella, 3 Wash. 99, 28 Pac. 28.

Intent before the act, but not necessarily existing any extended time before. Killins v. State, 28 Fla. 313, 9 South. 711.

Premeditation differs essentially from will, which constitutes the crime; because it supposes, besides an actual will, a deliberation, and a continued persistence which indicate more perversity. The preparation of arms or other instruments required for the execution of the crime are indications of premeditation, but are not absolute proof of it; as these preparations may have been intended for other purposes, and then suddenly changed to the performance of the criminal act. Murder by poisoning must of necessity be done with premeditation. See MALICE.

PREMIER. The principal minister of state; the prime minister. See CABINET.

PREMISES (Lat. præ, before, mittere, to put, to send). That which is put before. The introduction. Statements previously made. See 1 East 456.

In Conveyancing. That part of a deed which precedes the habendum, in which are set forth the names of the parties with their titles and additions, and in which are recited such deeds, agreements, or matters of fact as are necessary to explain the reasons upon which the contract then entered into is founded; and it is here, also, the consideration on which it is made is set down and the certainty of the thing granted. 2 Bla. Com. 298; Sumner v. Williams, 8 Mass. 174, 5 Am. Dec. 83; New Jersey Z. Co. v. Franklinit Co., 13 N. J. Eq. 331.

See [1907] K. B. 297.

In Equity Pleading. The stating part of a bill. It contains a narrative of the facts and circumstances of the plaintiff's case, and the wrongs of which he complains, and the names of the persons by whom done and against whom he seeks redress. Cooper, Eq. Pl. 9; Bart. Suit in Eq. 28; Mitt. Eq. Pl. 43; Story, Eq. Pl. § 27.

Every material fact to which the plaintiff intends to offer evidence must be stated in the premises; otherwise, he will not be permitted to offer or require evidence of such fact; 1 Bro. C. C. 94; 3 P. Wms. 276; 2 Hare 264; Peacock v. Terry, 9 Ga. 148.

In Estates. Lands and tenements. 3 Maule & S. 169; Bowers v. Pomeroy, 21 Ohio St. 188.

PREMIUM. In Insurance. The consideration for a contract of insurance.

A policy of insurance always expresses the consideration called the premium, which is a certain amount or a certain rate upon the value at risk, paid wholly in cash, or partly so and partly by promissory note or otherwise. 2 Pars. Marit. Law 182. By the charters of mutual fire insurance companies, the insured building is usually subject to a lien for the premium; Union Ins. Co. v. Hoge, 21 How. (U. S.) 35, 16 L. Ed. 61. The premium may be payable by service rendered; Kentucky Mut. Ins. Co. v. Jenks, 5 Ind. 96.

In life insurance, the premium is usually payable periodically; Buckbee v. Trust Co., 18 Barb. (N. Y.) 541; and the continuance of the risk is usually made to depend upon the due payment of a periodical premium; Hallock v. Ins. Co., 26 N. J. L. 268. Illness is no excuse for not paying; Hipp v. Ins. Co., 128 Ga. 491, 57 S. E. 892, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 319. But if the practice of the company and its course of dealings with the insured, and others known to him, have been such as to induce a belief that so much of the contract as provides for a forfeiture upon non-payment at a fixed time will not be insisted on, the company will not be allowed to set up such a forfeiture, as against one in whom their conduct has induced such belief; May, Ins. § 361; Mut. B. Ins. Co. v. Higginbotham, 95 U. S. 380, 24 L. Ed. 499; Home Protection v. Avery, 85 Ala. 348, 5 South. 143, 7 Am. St. Rep. 54. But no course of dealing estops a company from refusing a premium after the death of the insured; Thompson v. Ins. Co., 116 Tenn. 557, 92 S. W. 1098, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1039, 115 Am. St. Rep. 823. The acceptance by a manager of a life insurance company of a promissory note from the insured for the amount of the advance premium, and a delivery of the policy upon receipt of the note, constitute a waiver of the cash premium provided for in the application and policy which binds the company, although the policy also provides that the first premium shall be paid at the home office of the company on the delivery of the policy, and that no agent has power in any way to waive the terms of the contract; 18 N. Y. L. J. 1785.

A company receiving and appropriating money paid by a policy holder cannot avoid liability on the policy on the ground that no receipt in the prescribed form was given; Matthews v. Ins. Co., 147 N. C. 339, 61 S. E. 192, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1219.

An action lies to recover a premium paid on a policy of life insurance where the company, upon the discovery of certain false statements inserted therein by the company's agents, cancelled the policy, but the cost of the insurance enjoyed by the insured during the life of the policy must first be deducted; McDonald v. Ins. Co., 68 N. H. 4, 38 Atl. 500, 73 Am. St. Rep. 548. But this is doubted in 46 Am. L. Reg. 40, because the insured should be entitled to recover the entire premium, he never having had any insurance under the void policy. New York L. Ins. Co. v. Fletcher, 117 U. S. 519, 6 Sup. Ct. 837, 29 L. Ed. 934. So far as the agreed risk is not run in amount or time under a marine policy, the whole or a proportional stipulated or customary part of the premium is either not payable, or, if paid, is to be returned unless otherwise agreed; 2 Pars. Marit. Law 185; Hill v. Reed, 16 Barb. (N. Y.) 280; Mut. Marine Ins. Co. v. Munro, 7 Gray (Mass.) 246. Where an insurance company authorizes the insured to send a premium by mail, such premium is paid when the letter containing it is deposited in the post office addressed to the company; McCluskey v. Life Ass'n, 77 Hun 556, 28 N. Y. Supp. 931.

PREMIUM NOTE. In Insurance. A note given in place of payment of the whole or a part of the premium.

The premium, or a part of it, is not unfrequently paid wholly or in part by a promissory note, with a stipulation in the policy that the unpaid amount shall be set off and deducted in settling for a loss; 1 Phill. Ins. § 51. It is also usually collaterally secured by a stipulation in the policy for the forfeiture of the policy by non-payment of the premium note, or any amount due thereon by assessment or otherwise; Bangs v. Gray, 12 N. Y. 477; Atlantic Ins. Co. v. Goodall, 35 N. H. 328.

PREMIUM PUDICITIÆ (Lat. the price of chastity). The consideration of a contract by which a man promises to pay to a woman with whom he has illicit intercourse a certain sum of money.

When the contract is made as the payment of past cohabitation, as between the parties, it is good, and will be enforced, if under seal, but such consideration will not support a parol promise; 3 Q. B. 483; Poll. Contr. 288; 1 Story, Contr. § 670. It cannot be paid on a deficiency of assets, until all creditors are paid, though it has a preference over the heir, next of kin, or devisee. If the contract be for future cohabitation, it is void; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. 13th ed. § 296; 2 P. Wms. 432; 1 W. Bla. 517; Roberts, Fraud. Conv. 428; Trovinger v. McBurney, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 253; Winebrunner v. Weisiger, 3 T. B. Monr. (Ky.) 35. See CONSIDERATION.

PRENDER, PRENDRE (L. Fr.). To take. This word is used to signify the right of taking a thing before it is offered: hence the phrase of law, it lies in render, but not in prender. See À PRENDRE; PROFITS À PRENDRE; Gale & W. Easem.; Washb. Easem.

PRENOMEN (Lat.). The first or Christian name of a person. Benjamin is the prenomem of Benjamin Franklin. See Cas. Hardw. 286; 1 Tayl. 148.

PREPENSE. Aforethought. See 2 Chitty, Cr. Law 1784.

See MALICE AFORETHOUGHT.

PREPONDERANCE OF EVIDENCE. Greater weight of evidence, or evidence which is more credible and convincing to the mind. Button v. Metcalf, 80 Wis. 193, 49 N. W. 809. That which best accords with reason and probability. U. S. v. McCaskill, 200 Fed. 332.

It is usually said that the party who has the burden of proof of a fact must produce a preponderance of evidence thereon. "By preponderance of evidence is meant the greater weight of the evidence; that it outweighs the evidence of the adverse party;" Nickey v. Steuder, 164 Ind. 189, 73 N. E. 117. "Preponderance means the most weight. It is as correct a definition as can be given;" Thomas v. Paul, 87 Wis. 607, 58 N. W. 1031. A jury should be charged that they should find according as they should be "satisfied of the truth of the matter in controversy by a preponderance of the evidence"; Grotjan v. Rice, 124 Wis. 253, 102 N. W. 551. It has been said that when the scale stands in equipoise, the jury should find for the defendant; Ray v. Donnell, 4 McLean 504, Fed. Cas. No. 11,590. In such a case a verdict in favor of the party bound to maintain one of two inconsistent propositions is necessarily wrong; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Henderson, 57 Ark. 402, 21 S. W. 878. If there is an opposing presumption, the preponderance should be sufficient to overcome that; Decker v. Ins. Co., 66 Me.

406; Elwood v. Tel. Co., 45 N. Y. 549, 6 Am. Rep. 140. See Wigmore, Evid. § 2498.

PREPOSITUS. The person in question in any case of ascertaining next of kin or heirship.

PREROGATIVE. In Civil Law. The privilege, pre-eminence, or advantage which one person has over another: thus, a person vested with an office is entitled to all the rights, privileges, prerogatives, etc., which belong to it.

In English Law. The word simply means a power or will which is discretionary, and above and uncontrolled by any other will. It is frequently used to express the uncontrolled will of a sovereign power in the state and is applied not only to the king but also to the legislative and judicial branches of the government.

"The prerogative is the name for the remaining portion of the crown's original authority, and is therefore the name for the discretionary power left at any moment in the hands of the crown, whether such power be, in fact, exercised by the king himself or by his ministers. Every act which the executive government can lawfully do without the authority of an act of parliament is done by virtue of this prerogative." Dicey, Constitution 369; when a franchise is attached to the crown, it is a prerogative; when granted to a subject, it is a franchise; [1903] 2 Ch. 598.

It is sometimes applied by law writers to the thing over which the power or will is exercised, as fiscal prerogatives, meaning king's revenues; 1 Halleck, Int. L. 147.

PREROGATIVE COURT. In English Law. An ecclesiastical court held in each of the two provinces of York and Canterbury before a judge appointed by the archbishop of the province.

Formerly in this court testaments were proved, and administrations granted where a decedent left chattels to the value of five pounds (bona notabilia) in two distinct dioceses or jurisdictions within the province, and all causes relating to the wills, administrations, or legacies of such persons were originally cognizable. This jurisdiction was transferred to the court of probate by 20 & 21 Vict. c. 77, § 4, and 21 & 22 Vict. c. 95, and now, by the Judicature Acts, it is included in the supreme court of judicature.

An appeal lay formerly from this court to the king in chancery, by stat. 25 Hen. VIII. c. 19, afterwards to the privy council, by stat. 2 & 3 Will. IV. c. 92; 2 Steph. Com. 11th ed. 206; 3 Bla. Com. 65.

A court having a jurisdiction of probate matters, in the state of New Jersey.

PREROGATIVE WRITS. Processes issued by an exercise of the extraordinary power of the crown on proper cause shown. They are the writs of procedendo, manda- mus, prohibition, quo warranto, habeas corpus; 3 Steph. Com. 11th ed. 626. They differ from other writs in that they are never issued except in the exercise of judicial discretion, and are directed generally not to the sheriff, but to the parties sought to be affected; 3 Bla. Com. 132. As to jurisdiction of a court of last resort to issue prerogative writs, see People v. Dist. Ct., 37 Colo. 443, 86 Pac. 87, 92 Pac. 958, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 768.

PRESCRIBABLE. To which a right may be acquired by prescription.

PRESCRIPTION. A mode of acquiring title to incorporeal hereditaments by immemorial or long-continued enjoyment.

The distinction between a prescription and a custom is that a custom is a local usage and not annexed to a person; a prescription is a personal usage confined to the claimant and his ancestors or grantors. The theory of prescription was that the right claimed must have been enjoyed beyond the period of the memory of man, which for a long time, in England, went back to the time of Richard I. To avoid the necessity of proof of such long duration, a custom arose of allowing a presumption of a grant on proof of usage for a long term of years.

The length of time necessary to raise a strict prescription was limited by statute 32 Hen. VIII. at sixty years; Coolidge v. Learned, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 504; 2 Greenl. Ev. § 539. See Arbuckle v. Ward, 29 Vt. 43; Clawson v. Primrose, 4 Del. Ch. 643.

One who claimed a right of way or the like, if his right were questioned and he could not produce his deed, could prescribe, i. e. show that he had enjoyed it before the time of legal memory, or that in the district in which the land was situated there was a special custom which entitled all persons in his position to the right claimed; 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 136.

Proof of user as of right for so long as aged persons could remember was enough to raise a presumption that the right had existed from time immemorial, if it was neither secret, nor forcible, nor by permission; subsequently, user for 20 years was held sufficient; 25 Q. B. D. 484; but this presumption could, at common law, be rebutted by proof that the enjoyment had in fact commenced within the time of legal memory; Odgers, C. L. 565. By the Prescription Act (1832) it was provided that after user as of right and without interruption for thirty years in the case of a profit à prendre, and of twenty years in the case of an easement, the prima facie right should not be defeated by proof that it commenced at a date subsequent to 1189.

The expectation of acquiring an easement at the end of a current term of prescription "is not an interest in land or easement known to the law"; "there is no intermediate stage which has any existence"; Pollock, First Book of Jurispr. 194, citing L. R. 6 Ch. 768; [1901] 2 Ch. 324. Prescription is not a right which has been created or acquired, but a mere expectation, a hope, a realization of which depends upon numerous contingencies; People v. Dimas, 18 P. R. 1019.

Grants of incorporeal hereditaments are presumed upon proof of enjoyment of the requisite character for a period of years equal to that fixed by statute as the period of limitation in respect of real actions; 3 Kent 442; Arnold v. Foot, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 330; Ford v. Whitlock, 27 Vt. 265; Watkins v. Peck, 13 N. H. 360, 40 Am. Dec. 156; Strickler v. Todd, 10 S. & R. (Pa.) 63, 13 Am. Dec. 649; Sargent v. Ballard, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 251.

A grant cannot be presumed where it would have been unlawful; Donahue v. State, 112 N. Y. 142, 19 N. E. 419, 2 L. R. A. 576.

In England an ancient user may be a justification for the exercise of a noisy (2 Bing. 134) or an offensive (4 id. 183) trade; or for discharging water in an impure state upon adjoining land; 1 M. & W. 77; or for polluting a stream; 1 H. & N. 797; 7 E. & B. 391; [1905] 1 Ch. 205. But the right to carry on an offensive trade, or to pollute water with sewage, is not acquired merely by having carried on the trade or having discharged the water for twenty years; but it must be shown that the air over the plaintiff's land, or the water has been corrupted for that time; 10 A. & E. 590; 7 E. & B. 391; and corrupted to the extent of the right claimed; L. R. 2 Ch. 478; and so as to be actionable or preventable by the plaintiffs or his predecessors; L. R. 11 Ch. Div. 852. In [1907] A. C. 476, a nuisance from noise and vibration was legalized on the ground of an implied grant, arising from the common intent of the parties.

Lapse of time cannot justify a nuisance arising from the manufacture of animal matter into a fertilizer, as every day's continuance is a new offence; N. W. Fertilizing Co. v. Hyde Park, 97 U. S. 659, 24 L. Ed. 1036; nor legalize a public nuisance; Leahan v. Cochran, 178 Mass. 566, 60 N. E. 382, 53 L. R. A. 891, 86 Am. St. Rep. 506; Reed v. Birmingham, 92 Ala. 339, 9 South. 161; People v. Min. Co., 66 Cal. 138, 4 Pac. 1152, 56 Am. Rep. 80; Nolan v. New Britain, 69 Conn. 668, 38 Atl. 703; Baltimore v. Imp. Co., 87 Md. 352, 39 Atl. 1081, 40 L. R. A. 494, 67 Am. St. Rep. 344; State v. Holman, 104 N. C. 861, 10 S. E. 758; Meiners v. Brewing Co., 78 Wis. 364, 47 N. W. 430, 10 L. R. A. 586; Woodruff v. Min. Co., 18 Fed. 753; where the defendant relied upon a prescriptive right to cause sewage to pass over certain places, an injunction was granted where such places were used as oyster beds and the defendants alleged that the sale of their oysters had been prohibited; 72 J. P. 404.

It is not a universal principle without exception that whatever incorporeal hereditament may be granted may also be acquired by long and uninterrupted user. On the contrary, it is well settled that a right claimed by prescription must be such as must reasonably be presumed to have been granted. An owner of land who is compos mentis may grant an easement over it which will in effect destroy the usufruct of his property, but no man will be presumed to have made such a grant; Tinicum Fishing Co. v. Carter, 61 Pa. 21, 100 Am. Dec. 597. It is there suggested that our departure from the common law as to the prescription of light and air might well have been put upon this principle; Hoy v. Sterrett, 2 Watts (Pa.) 331, 27 Am. Dec. 313; Wheatley v. Baugh, 25 Pa. 532, 64 Am. Dec. 721; Hazlett v. Powell, 30 Pa. 296; Haverstick v. Sipe, 33 Pa. 368.

A prescriptive claim of common without stint as annexed to a messuage without land has been held bad; 8 Term 396. A plea that the occupiers of a brick kiln for thirty years had enjoyed as of right the privilege to take from the plaintiff's close all the clay they required was overruled, because there could arise no reasonable presumption of such a grant; 5 Q. B. 415. The public cannot acquire a right by an uninterrupted user for twenty years, with the knowledge of the owner, of his soil on the bank of a navigable river as a landing for property in transit to and from vessels navigating such river; Post v. Pearsall, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 425.

No right can be acquired by prescription or adverse user to impede or interfere with the waters of a navigable or floatable stream; Collins v. Howard, 65 N. H. 190, 18 Atl. 794; Rhodes v. Whitehead, 27 Tex. 304, 84 Am. Dec. 631. Where one has constructed a dam across a floatable stream, and has always maintained it so that logs could go over it, he cannot set up a prescriptive right to obstruct such public use, though the dam has existed for more than twenty years; Trullinger v. Howe, 53 Or. 219, 97 Pac. 548, 99 Pac. 880, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 545. Nor can the use of a water course be adverse to the rights of another so long as there is an abundance of water to supply both; Faulkner v. Rondoni, 104 Cal. 140, 37 Pac. 883. The use of the surplus water flowing from a spring is a mere license which can never ripen into a prescriptive right; Jobling v. Tuttle, 75 Kan. 351, 89 Pac. 699, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 960; Talbot v. Water Co., 29 Mont. 17, 73 Pac. 1111. In Hunter v. Emerson, 75 Vt. 173, 53 Atl. 1070, it is said the open, notorious and continued taking of water from a spring for a period of more than fifteen years is permissive, and not under a claim of right, when it is consistent with another's title, though no express license is given.

Prescription properly applies only to incorporeal hereditaments; Ferris v. Brown, 3

Barb. (N. Y.) 105; Finch, Law 132; such as easements of water, light and air, way, etc.; Tyler v. Wilkinson, 4 Mas. 397, Fed. Cas. No. 14,312; Garrett v. Jackson, 20 Pa. 331; 1 Gale & D. 205, 210, n.; Tudor, Lead. Cas. 114; see Levy v. Brothers, 4 Misc. 48, 23 La. Ann. 825; Oldstein v. Bldg. Ass'n, 44 La. Ann. 492, 10 South. 928; Christ Church v. Lavezzolo, 156, Mass. 89, 30 N. E. 471; a class of franchises; Co. Litt. 114; Arundel v. McCulloch, 10 Mass. 70; Kuhn v. North, 10 S. & R. (Pa.) 401. See FERRY; Herbert, Prescription. The English law knows no positive prescription for corporeal things; for such things, the law provides a statute of limitations; 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 135.

Corporations may exist by prescription; 2 Kent *277; Stockbridge v. West-Stockbridge, 12 Mass. 400. It is necessary in such case to presuppose a grant by charter or act of parliament, which has been lost; Robie v. Sedgwick, 35 Barb. (N. Y.) 319. It has been held that a railroad company cannot acquire a right of way by prescription; Narron v. R. Co., 122 N. C. 856, 29 S. E. 356, 40 L. R. A. 415; as against an owner who has not given his consent thereto, though the occupation was lawfully taken under the right of eminent domain; id.; that it can acquire such right (here by possession and use for 40 years after entry by consent or license); Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Smith, 128 Fed. 1, 63 C. C. A. 1; Cogbill v. R. Co., 92 Ala. 252, 9 South. 512; Midland R. Co. v. Smith, 113 Ind. 233, 15 N. E. 256.

In 6 Mod. 73, it was held that every one had a right to fish in a navigable river, or in an arm of the sea. In 4 Burr. 2162, the court followed the language of that case to the effect that in navigable rivers the fishery is common, but held that since prescription was found in the case at bar, the plaintiff's right was good. And it was further said the crown may grant a several fishery in a navigable river where the sea flows and reflows, or in an arm of the sea. The public may grant the exclusive right of fishing in a navigable river; and if it may be granted, it may be prescribed for. Such a right may never be presumed. It is however, capable of being proved; Chalker v. Dickinson, 1 Conn. 382, 6 Am. Dec. 250.

It has been said, on the contrary, that the king has no power, and since Magna Carta, never has had, to grant an exclusive right of fishing in an arm of the sea; 5 Barn. & Ald. 268; Browne v. Kennedy, 5 Har. & J. (Md.) 203, 9 Am. Dec. 503; and that a private and several right to fish in a navigable river must have had its origin before Magna Carta; L. R. 4 Ex. 369. In England there are such several and exclusive fisheries in navigable rivers attached to manors, either by early grant from the crown or by prescription, because there might have been such a grant on which to found it; Tinicum Fishing Co. v. Carter, 61 Pa. 21, 100 Am. Dec. 597.

where it is said: "Neither the proprietaries of Pennsylvania or New Jersey ever owned the bed of the Delaware. Their respective grants were to low water mark on either side. The bed of the river and the river itself were in the crown, and passed by force of the revolution and the definitive treaty of peace, Sept. 3, 1783, to the two states, to be owned and enjoyed on the same principle upon which a navigable river flowing between two coterminous nations is held." That a fishing place might be granted by compliance with the statute separate from the soil was settled in Pennsylvania by the decision in Hart v. Hill, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 124; but no point was decided in that case as to the nature of such a grant. It would seem, however, to have been considered an incorporeal hereditament; Tinicum Fishing Co. v. Carter, 61 Pa. 21, 100 Am. Dec. 597, per Sharswood, J., where it was held that a right to take fish is a profit à prendre in alieno solo. It requires for its use and enjoyment exclusive occupancy during the period of fishing. It implies the right to fix stakes or capstans for the purpose of drawing the seine and the occupancy of the bank at high tide as well as the space between high and low water mark as far as may be necessary and usual. The grantee in the nature of things must have exclusive possession for the time he is fishing, and for that purpose; the grantor at all other times and for all other purposes.

Land or an interest in land cannot be prescribed for; 2 Bla. Com. 264. It may well be questioned whether such a profit à prendre can be, especially when not pleaded in a que estate, but in a man and his ancestors. That kind of a user for twenty-one years and upwards which may be sufficient to raise a presumption of a grant of a mere easement will not support a claim for an interest in the land itself or its profits.

Where a right to fish in a navigable river is set up as appurtenant or affixed to a several fishery in the river or to adjoining lands, if there be a dominant and a servient tenement, if the plaintiff prescribes in a que estate in him and those whose estate he had, there might be sufficient evidence to create the presumption of a grant. But there is a manifest reason for the distinction in the nature and amount of the evidence required in case of such an easement and one merely in gross. There is a certainty as to the owners and occupiers of the land of which the appurtenancy is predicated which does not exist where the claim is in gross. A fair presumption arises of knowledge that the exercise of it is under a claim of right; Washb. Easem. 86, cited in Tinicum Fishing Co. v. Carter, 61 Pa. 21, 100 Am. Dec. 597. No title by user to an inheritable easement in gross could safely be allowed to grow up; Donnell v. Clark, 19 Me. 174; Thomas v.

Marshfield, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 240; Tinicum Fishing Co. v. Carter, 61 Pa. 21, 100 Am. Dec. 597. The last case was appealed four times by the defendant on different questions. It is cited in Cobb v. Bennett, 75 Pa. 326, 15 Am. Rep. 752, as discussing the subject of fisheries with much research.

In Louisiana, a manner of acquiring property or discharging debts by the effect of time. Rev. Code of La. Art. 3457. See Linman v. Riggins, 40 La. Ann. 761, 5 South. 49, 8 Am. St. Rep. 549.

See ADVERSE POSSESSION; EASEMENT.

In International Law. The doctrine of Immemorial Prescription is indispensable in public law; 1 Phill. Int. L. § 255. The general consent of mankind has established the principle that long and uninterrupted possession by one nation excludes the claim of every other. All nations are bound by this consent, since all are parties to it; none can safely disregard it without impugning its own title to its possessions; 1 Wheat. Int. L. 207; Virginia v. Tennessee, 148 U. S. 503, 13 Sup. Ct. 728, 37 L. Ed. 537; Rhode Island v. Massachusetts, 4 How. (U. S.) 591, 11 L. Ed. 1116; Indiana v. Kentucky, 136 U. S. 479, 10 Sup. Ct. 1051, 34 L. Ed. 329; Moore v. McGuire, 205 U. S. 214, 27 Sup. Ct. 483, 51 L. Ed. 776; 17 Harv. L. Rev. 346. Prescriptive rights to territory are binding as between two states; Maryland v. West Virginia, 217 U. S. 1, 30 Sup. Ct. 268, 54 L. Ed. 645.

The period of time cannot be fixed in public law as it can in private law; it must depend upon varying and variable circumstances; 1 Phill. Int. L. § 260.

Burke speaks of the "solid rock of prescription—the soundest, the most general, the most recognized title between man and man that is known in municipal, as in public jurisprudence." Vol. ix. p. 449.

PRESENCE. The being in a particular place.

In many contracts and judicial proceedings it is necessary that the parties should be present in order to render them valid; for example, a party to a deed, when it is executed by himself, must personally acknowledge it, when such acknowledgment is required by law, to give it its full force and effect, and his presence is indispensable, unless, indeed, another person represent him as his attorney, having authority from him for that purpose.

Actual presence is being bodily in the precise spot indicated.

Constructive presence is being so near to or in such relation with the parties actually in a designated place as to be considered in law as being in the place.

Attempting to deter a witness from testifying, while he is in the witness-room or hallways of the court-room, by offering him money, is a misdemeanor in the presence of the court, and punishable without indictment, as contempt; Petition of Savin, 131 U. S. 267, 9 Sup. Ct. 699, 33 L. Ed. 150.

It is a rule in the civil law that he who is incapable of giving his consent to an act is not to be considered present although he be actually in the place. A lunatic, or a man sleeping, would not, therefore, be considered present; Dig. 41. 2. 1. 3. And so if insensible; 4 Bro. P. C. 71; 3 Russ. 441; or if the act were done secretly so that he knew nothing of it; 1 P. Wms. 740.

The English statute of frauds, § 5, directs that all devises and bequests of any lands or tenements shall be attested or subscribed in the presence of the devisor. Under this statute it has been decided that an actual presence is not indispensable, but that where there was a constructive presence it was sufficient; as, where the testatrix executed the will in her carriage standing in the street before the office of her solicitor, the witness retiring into the office to attest it, and it being proved that the carriage was accidentally put back, so that she was in a situation to see the witness sign the will, through the window of the office; Bro. C. C. 98. See 2 Curt. Eccl. 320, 331; 1 Maule & S. 294; 2 C. & P. 491; Riggs v. Riggs, 135 Mass. 241, 46 Am. Rep. 464; Baldwin v. Baldwin's Ex'r, 81 Va. 410, 59 Am. Rep. 669.

In Criminal Law. In trials for cases in which corporal punishment is assigned, the defendant's appearance must ordinarily be in person, and must so appear on record. There can be no judgment of conviction taken by default; Dunn v. Com., 6 Pa. 387; Whart. Cr. Pl. & Pr. § 540. The prisoner's actual presence is not requisite at the making and arguing of motions of all kinds, though in motions for arrest of judgment and in error, the old practice was to require it; Godfriedson v. People, 88 Ill. 284; Bish. New Cr. Pro. 265; State v. Elkins, 63 Mo. 159. This is not now usually required in proceedings in error; People v. Clark, 1 Park. C. C. (N. Y.) 360. In felonies presence at the verdict is essential, and this right cannot be waived; Prine v. Com., 18 Pa. 103; but where a prisoner was voluntarily absent during the taking of a portion of the testimony in an adjoining room, he was considered as constructively present; 25 Alb. L. J. 303. See Lynch v. Com., 88 Pa. 189, 32 Am. Rep. 445. In trials for misdemeanors these rules do not apply; People v. Winchell, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 525; Whart. Cr. Pl. & Pr. § 550. See TRIAL.

PRESENT. A gift, or more properly, the thing given. It is provided by the constitution of the United States, art. 1, s. 9, n. 7, that "no person holding any office of profit or trust under them [the United States] shall, without the consent of congress, accept of any present, emolument, or office, or title, of any kind whatever, from any king, prince, or foreign state."

PRESENT USE. One which has an immediate existence and is at once operated upon by the statute of uses.

PRESENTATION. In Ecclesiastical Law. The act of a patron offering his clerk to the bishop of the diocese to be instituted in a church or benefice.

See PRESENTMENT.

PRESENTATION OFFICE. The office of the lord chancellor's official, the secretary of presentations.

PRESENTEE. In Ecclesiastical Law. A clerk who has been presented by his patron to a bishop in order to be instituted in a church.

PRESENTMENT. In Criminal Practice. The written notice taken by a grand jury of any offence, from their own knowledge or observation, without any bill of indictment laid before them at the suit of the government. 4 Bla. Com. 301.

Upon such presentment, when proper, the officer employed to prosecute afterwards frames a bill of indictment, which is then sent to the grand jury, and they find it to be a true bill. In an extended sense, presentments include not only what are properly so called, but also inquisitions of office and indictments found by a grand jury. 2 Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 25, s. 1.

The difference between a presentment and an inquisition is this: that the former is found by a grand jury authorized to inquire of offences generally, whereas the latter is an accusation found by a jury specially returned to inquire concerning the particular offence. 2 Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 25, s. 6. See, generally, Com. Dig. Indictment (B); Bac. Abr. Indictment (A); 1 Chitty, Cr. Law 163; 7 East 387; State v. Muzingo, 1 Meigs (Tenn.) 112.

The writing which contains the accusation so presented by a grand jury. U. S. v. Hill, 1 Brock. 156, Fed. Cas. No. 15,364.

In Contracts. The production of a bill of exchange or promissory note to the party on whom the former is drawn, for his acceptance, or to the person bound to pay either, for payment.

The holder of a bill is bound, in order to hold the parties to it responsible to him, to present it in due time for acceptance, and to give notice, if it be dishonored, to all the parties he intends to hold liable; Townsley v. Sumrall, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 170, 7 L. Ed. 386; Allen v. Suydam, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 321, 32 Am. Dec. 555; Bk. of Bennington v. Raymond, 12 Vt. 401; Fernandez v. Lewis, 1 McCord (S. C.) 322; Nelson v. Fottrell, 7 Leigh (Va.) 179. And when a bill or note becomes payable, it must be presented for payment, if it is intended to charge endorsers, on default.

In general, the presentment for payment should be made to the maker of a note, or the drawee of a bill, for acceptance, or to the acceptor for payment; 2 Esp. 509; but a presentment made at a particular place, when payable there, is, in general, sufficient; Hunt v. Maybee, 7 N. Y. 266. A personal demand on the drawee or acceptor is not necessary, a demand at his usual place of residence; 1 M. & G. 83; Belmont Bk. v. Patterson, 17 Ohio 78; of his wife, or other agent, is sufficient; Byles, Bills 283; Branch Bk. at Decatur v. Hodges, 17 Ala. 42; or place of business, of the acceptor; 3 Kent 64; Stainback v. Bank, 11 Gratt. (Va.) 260. When, on presentment of a bill of exchange at the acceptor's usual place of business, within proper hours, a notary finds the doors closed, he is justified, nothing further appearing, in protesting the bill for non-payment, without inquiry for the acceptor at his residence, and without making further effort to find him; Sulzbacher v. Bank, 80 Tenn. 201, 6 S. W. 129, 6 Am. St. Rep. 828. The term residence is not used in a strict sense, so necessarily implying a permanent, exclusive, or actual abode in a place, but it may be satisfied by a temporary, partial, or even constructive residence; Wachusett N. Bk. v. Fairbrother, 148 Mass. 181, 19 N. E. 345, 12 Am. St. Rep. 530. See RESIDENCE.

The presentment for acceptance must be made in reasonable time; and what this reasonable time is depends upon the circumstances of each case; 9 Moore, P. C. 66; 2 H. Bl. 565; Prescott Bank v. Caverly, 7 Gray (Mass.) 217, 66 Am. Dec. 473. The presentment of a note or bill for payment ought to be made on the day it becomes due; 4 Term 148; Henry v. Jones, 8 Mass. 453; Farmers' Bank v. Duvall, 7 Gill & J. (Md.) 78; Edgar v. Greer, 8 Ia. 394, 74 Am. Dec. 316; and notice of non-payment given, otherwise the holder will lose the security of the drawer and indorsers of a bill and indorsers of a promissory note; The Nereid, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 171, 4 L. Ed. 63; North Bank v. Abbot, 13 Pick. (Mass.) 465, 25 Am. Dec. 334; Woodworth v. Bank, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 391, 10 Am. Dec. 239; Glasgow v. Pratte, 8 Mo. 336, 40 Am. Dec. 142; and if the money be lodged there for its payment, the holder would probably have no recourse against the maker or acceptor if he did not present them on the day and the money should be lost; 5 B. & Ald. 244; Lyon v. Williamson, 27 Me. 149. The facts being undisputed, the question of reasonable time for presentment of a draft is one of law; Singer v. Dickneite, 51 Mo. App. 245.

The excuses for not making a presentment are general, and applicable to all persons who are indorsers; or they are special, and applicable to the particular indorser only.

Among the former are—inevitable accident or overwhelming calamity; Story, Bills § 308; Schofield v. Bayard, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 488; Reddington v. Julian, 2 Ind. 224. The prevalence of a malignant disease, by which the ordinary operations of business are suspended; Tunno v. Lague, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 1, 1 Am. Dec. 141; 3 Maule & S. 267. The breaking out of war between the country of the maker and that of the holder; U. S. v. Barker, 1 Paine 156, Fed. Cas. No. 14, 517. The occupation of the country where the note is payable, or where the parties live, by a public enemy, which suspends commercial operations and intercourse; Gris- wold v. Waddington, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 57; Scholefield v. Eichelberger, 7 Pet. (U. S.) 586, 8 L. Ed. 793. The obstruction of the ordinary negotiations of trade by vis major. Positive interdictions and public regulations of the state which suspend commerce and intercourse. The utter impracticability of finding the maker or ascertaining his place of residence; Story, Pr. Notes §§ 205, 236, 238, 241, 264; Moore v. Coffield, 12 N. C. 247; Stewart v. Eden, 2 Cal. (N. Y.) 121, 2 Am. Dec. 222.

Among the latter, or special excuses for not making a presentment, may be enumerated the following. The receiving the note by the holder from the payee, or other antecedent party, too late to make a due presentment; this will be an excuse as to such party; 16 East 248; Freeman v. Boynton, 7 Mass. 483; Story, Pr. Notes §§ 201, 265; Mills v. Bank, 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 431, 6 L. Ed. 512; Byles, Bills 206. The note being an accommodation note of the maker for the benefit of the indorser; Story, Bills § 370. A special agreement by which the indorser waives the presentment; Fuller v. McDonald, 8 Greenl. (Me.) 213, 23 Am. Dec. 499; Story, Bills § 371. The receiving security or money by an endorser to secure himself from loss, or to pay the note at maturity. In this case, when the indemnity or money is a full security for the amount of the note or bill, no presentment is requisite; Story, Bills § 374; Story, Pr. Notes § 281; Mechanic's Bk. v. Griswold, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 165; Bond v. Farnham, 5 Mass. 170, 4 Am. Dec. 47; Prentiss v. Danielson, 5 Conn. 175, 13 Am. Dec. 52. The receiving the note by the holder from the indorser as a collateral security for another debt; Story, Pr. Notes § 284; Story, Bills § 372; Rhett v. Poe, 2 How. (U. S.) 457, 11 L. Ed. 338.

Where a negotiable note is by its terms payable at a particular bank, proof of presentment at that bank for payment, at its maturity, is indispensable to a recovery in an action thereon against an endorser; Peabody Ins. Co. v. Wilson, 29 W. Va. 528, 2 S. E. 888.

A want of presentment may be waived by the party to be affected, after full knowledge of the fact; Richter v. Selin, 8 S. & R. (Pa.) 438.

Under the Uniform Negotiable Instrument Act presentment for payment is not necessary in order to charge the person primarily liable, but if the instrument be payable at a special place and he is able and willing to pay it there at maturity, that is equivalent to a tender.

To charge the drawer and endorsers, presentment of an instrument not payable on demand must be made on the day it falls due; if payable on demand must be made within a reasonable time after its issue, or, if a bill of exchange, after the last negotiation. Presentment must be made at a reasonable hour on a business day; if the person is absent or inaccessible, then to any person found at the place where the presentment is made. It is made at the proper place, if at the place specified in the instrument or if none be specified, then at the address given in the instrument, if any, of the person who is to make payment; if neither is specified, then at the usual place of business or residence; in any other case, if presented to the person wherever found, or at his last known place of business or residence.

If the persons primarily liable are liable as partners, and no place of business is specified, presentment may be made to any one of them, even after dissolution; but if they are not partners, then presentment must be made to them all. Presentment is not required in order to charge an endorser if the instrument was for his accommodation, and he has no reason to expect it will be paid on presentment.

Delay in presentment is excused when caused by circumstances beyond the holder's control, and not imputable to his default, misconduct or negligence; when the cause of delay ceases to operate, presentment must be made with reasonable diligence.

If the day of maturity falls on Sunday, or a holiday, the instrument is payable on the next succeeding business day; so as to Saturday, except that instruments payable on demand may, at the holder's option, be presented before twelve o'clock on Saturday, when that entire day is not a holiday.

Time is computed by excluding the day from which the time is to begin to run and including the date of payment.

An instrument payable at a bank is equivalent to an order to the bank to pay it and charge the principal debtor's account.

Presentment of a bill for acceptance must be made where the bill is payable after sight, or in any other case, where such presentment is necessary in order to fix the maturity; or where the bill expressly stipulates that it shall be presented for acceptance; or where it is drawn elsewhere than at the residence or place of business of the drawee. A bill must be presented or negotiated within a reasonable time; if not, the drawer and endorsers are discharged. If the drawee is dead, presentment must be made to his personal representative, or if he has been adjudged a bankrupt or insolvent, or has made an assignment for creditors, then to him or to his trustee or assignee. A bill may be presented for acceptance on any day on which negotiable instruments (see supra) may be presented for payment, and on Saturday before twelve o'clock, if not otherwise a holiday. Where the holder of a bill payable elsewhere than at the place of business or residence of the drawee has not time, with the exercise of reasonable diligence, to present it for acceptance before presenting it for payment on the day it falls due, the delay is excused. It is also excused, and a bill may be treated as dishonored by nonacceptance, where the drawee is dead, or has absconded, or is a fictitious person, or a person not having capacity to contract by bill, or where, after reasonable diligence, presentment cannot be made, or where, although presentment has been irregular, acceptance has been refused on other grounds. If a bill is dishonored by nonacceptance, no presentment for payment is necessary.

Sight drafts are allowed three days of grace in Massachusetts, North Carolina and Rhode Island.

See 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 303, note; PAYMENT.

PRESENTS. This word signifies the writing then actually made and spoken of: as, these presents; know all men by these presents; to all to whom these presents shall come.

PRESERVATION. Keeping safe from harm; avoiding injury. This term always presupposes a real or existing danger.

A jettison, which is always for the preservation of the remainder of the cargo, must therefore be made only when there is a real danger existing. See AVERAGE; JETTISON.

In certain cases the court may make orders for the preservation of the subject-matter of litigation. An order has been made for the sale of a horse which was consuming its value in food while an action on a warranty was pending; 3 C. P. D. 316; Brett Comm. 762. See PERISHABLE GOODS.

PRESIDENT. An officer of a company who is to direct the manner in which business is to be transacted. From the decision of the president there is an appeal to the body over which he presides.

PRESIDENT JUDGE. A title sometimes given to the presiding judge. It was formerly used in England and is now used in the courts of common pleas in Pennsylvania. So in the old Virginia court of appeals. The lord chief justice is now permanent president of the high court of justice in England. The title president is said to have a high Norman flavor. Inderwick, King's Peace 225.

PRESIDENT OF A BANK. This officer, under the banking system in the United States, is ordinarily a member of the board of directors of the bank, and is chosen by them. It is his duty to preside at all meetings of the board of directors; to exercise a constant, immediate, and personal supervision over the daily affairs of the bank; and to institute and carry on legal proceedings to collect demands or claims due the institution; Morse, Banks 144; Alexandria C. Co. v. Swann, 5 How. (U. S.) 83, 12 L. Ed. 60; Tremont Bk. v. Paine's Estate, 28 Vt. 24. Mortgages to secure subscriptions to stock are often put in his name; Valk v. Crandall, 1 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 179; but he has no more control over the property of the bank than any other director; Gibson v. Goldthwaite, 7 Ala. 281, 42 Am. Dec. 592; Hoyt v. Thompson, 5 N. Y. 320. He has no authority to release the claims of the bank without the authorization of the board of directors; Olney v. Chadsey, 7 R. I. 224; Davis v. Randall, 115 Mass. 547, 15 Am. Rep. 146; and an agreement made by him, after the bank has gone into liquidation, to continue its guarantee upon certain notes, is not binding upon the stockholders; Schrader v. Bank, 133 U. S. 67, 10 Sup. Ct. 238, 33 L. Ed. 564. See NATIONAL BANKS; OFFICER; Michie, Banking.

PRESIDENT OF THE COUNCIL. An officer of state who is a member of the cabinet. He attends on the sovereign, proposes business at the council table, and reports to the sovereign the transactions there. 1 Bla. Com. 230.

PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES OF AMERICA. The title of the chief executive officer of the United States.

The constitution directs that the executive power shall be vested in a president of the United States of America. Art. 2, s. 1.

No person except a natural-born citizen, or a citizen of the United States at the time of the adoption of the constitution shall be eligible to the office of president; neither shall any person be eligible to that office who shall not have attained the age of thirty-five years and been fourteen years resident within the United States. Art. 2, s. 1, par. 5.

He is chosen by presidential electors (q. v.). See 1 Kent 276; Story, Const. 5th ed. § 1453. The votes of the electors are transmitted to the vice-president and by him opened in the presence of both houses of congress and counted by tellers previously selected by the two houses separately. If there is no election, a president is chosen by the house of representatives, the members voting by states, from the candidates not exceeding three, having the highest number of electoral votes.

In case of a vacancy the vice-president succeeds, and if there be none then certain members of the cabinet succeed in a prescribed order; see CABINET.

The president shall, at stated times, receive for his services a compensation which shall neither be increased nor diminished during the period for which he shall have been elected; and he shall not receive within that period any other emolument from the United States, or any of them. Art. 2, s. 1, par. 7.

In addition to certain specified powers, the president is vested by the constitution with the executive power of the federal government and the duty of seeing that the laws are faithfully executed. As to his powers, generally, and the historical development of the executive office, see EXECUTIVE POWER.

The president and all civil officers of the United States shall be removed from office on impeachment for, and conviction of, treason, bribery, or other high crimes and misdemeanors. Art. 2, sec. 4.

The acts of the head of a department are presumed to have been by his direction; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Mitchell, 208 Fed. 469.

PRESIDENTIAL ELECTORS. Persons chosen in the different states whose sole duty it is to elect a president and vice-president of the United States. Each state appoints a number of electors equal to the whole number of senators and representatives to which the state is entitled in congress, and it is within the power of the state legislature to direct how such electors shall be appointed. (Const. art. ii. sect. 1). The electors have frequently been appointed by the state legislatures directly, and they have been elected separately by congressional districts; but the more usual method of appointment is by general ballot, so that each voter in a state votes for the whole number of electors to which his state is entitled.

The appointment and mode of appointment of electors belong exclusively to the states, under the constitution; McPherson v. Blacker, 146 U. S. 1, 13 Sup. Ct. 3, 36 L. Ed. 869.

The constitution provides, Amend. art. 12, that "the electors shall meet in their respective states, and vote by ballot for president and vice-president, one of whom, at least, shall not be an inhabitant of the same state with themselves; they shall name in their ballots the person voted for as president, and in distinct ballots the person voted for as vice-president; and they shall make distinct lists of all persons voted for as president, and of all persons voted for as vice-president, and of the number of votes for each, which list they shall sign and certify, and transmit, sealed, to the seat of the government of the United States, directed to the president of the senate." See PRESIDENT OF THE UNITED STATES; ELECTORAL COLLEGE; CONSTITUTION.

PRESS. By a figure this word signifies the art of printing.

All men have a right to print and publish whatever they may deem proper, unless by doing so they infringe the rights of another, as in the case of copyrights (q. v.), when they may be enjoined. For any injury they may commit against the public or individuals they may be punished, either by indictment or by a civil action at the suit of the party injured, when the injury has been committed against a private individual. See U. S. Const. Amendm. art. 1; LIBERTY OF THE PRESS; LIBEL.

PRESS COPIES. The identity of the handwriting as shown on the impression is not destroyed, nor rendered unrecognizable by persons acquainted with its characteristics. A person having accurate knowledge can testify to the genuineness with as much accuracy as if the original sheets were before him. Such copies are the same as other writings partially obliterated by damp and exposure, which are admissible as evidence, if duly identified by testimony. They are not however satisfactory as standards of comparison of handwriting. Enough originality is left to be identified by a witness when its own originality is in question; Com. v. Eastman, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 217, 48 Am. Dec. 596; to prove the contents of a lost letter, or where a party refused to give up the original; Dennis v. Barber, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 420; Cameron v. Peck, 37 Conn. 555. The necessity of producing the original, or laying the foundation in the usual way for secondary evidence, is not obviated by the fact that a party keeps letter press copies; Foot v. Bentley, 44 N. Y. 171, 4 Am. Rep. 652; Marsh v. Hand, 35 Md. 123. A copy, sworn to be correctly made from a press copy of a letter, is admissible as secondary evidence, to prove its contents, without producing the press copy; Goodrich v. Weston, 102 Mass. 362, 3 Am. Rep. 469. Press copies are admissible against a party when they appear to be in his handwriting and the originals cannot be produced; Com. v. Jefferies, 7 Allen (Mass.) 561, 83 Am. Dec. 712. Strictly speaking, a letter-press copy is secondary to the document from which it is taken, and cannot be treated as an original; 3 Camp. 228; Marsh v. Hand, 35 Md. 123; Merritt v. Wright, 19 La. Ann. 91; Anglo-American Packing & P. Co. v. Cannon, 31 Fed. 313.

Press copies, duly proved and attached to a deposition, are admissible where timely notice was given defendant to produce originals at the trial, and they were not produced; notice need not be given when depositions are taken; Illinois Car & E. Co. v. Wagon Co., 112 Fed. 737, 50 C. C. A. 504.

PRESS-GANG. See IMPRESSMENT.

PRESSING. See PEINE FORTE ET DURE.

PREST. A duty in money that was to be paid by the sheriff on his account in the exchequer, or for money left or remaining in his hands. Cowell.

PRESTATION. A presting or payment of money. Cowell.

It is used of a right by which neutral vessels may be appropriated by way of hire by a belligerent on payment of freight beforehand. In 1870 the Prussian troops sank six British vessels to obstruct navigation in the river Seine. The act was defended by Prussia on the ground of military necessity; indemnification was subsequently made; 1 Halleck, Int. L. Baker's Ed. 520.

PRESTIMONY, or PRÆSTIMONIA. In the Canon Law. A fund or revenue appropriated by the founder for the subsistence of a priest, without being erected into any title or benefice, chapel, prebend, or priory. It is not subject to the ordinary; but of it the patron, and those who have a right from him, are the collators. Whart. Law Lex.

PRESUME. To believe or accept upon probable evidence. It is not so strong a word as infer; Morford v. Peck, 46 Conn. 385. See INFERENCE; PRESUMPTION.

PRESUMPTION. An inference affirmative or disaffirmative of the truth or falsehood of any proposition or fact drawn by a process of probable reasoning in the absence of actual certainty of its truth or falsehood, or until such certainty can be ascertained. Best, Presump. 4.

An inference affirmative or disaffirmative of the existence of a disputed fact, drawn by a judicial tribunal, by a process of probable reasoning, from some one or more matters of fact, either admitted in the cause or otherwise satisfactorily established. Best, Presump. 12.

A rule of law that courts and judges shall draw a particular inference from a particular fact, or from particular evidence, unless and until the truth of such inference is disproved. Steph. Ev. 4; Ulrich v. Ulrich, 136 N. Y. 120, 32 N. E. 606, 18 L. R. A. 37.

Conclusive presumptions are inferences which the law makes so peremptorily that it will not allow them to be overturned by any contrary proof, however strong. Best, Presump. 20. They are called, also, absolute and irrebuttable presumptions.

Disputable presumptions are inferences of law which hold good until they are invalidated by proof or a stronger presumption. Best, Presump. 29; Livingston v. Livingston, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 287, 8 Am. Dec. 562.

Presumptions of fact are inferences as to the existence of some fact drawn from the existence of some other fact; inferences which common sense draws from circumstances usually occurring in such cases. 3 B. & Ad. 890.

Presumptions of law are rules which, in certain cases, either forbid or dispense with any ulterior inquiry. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 14. Inferences or positions established, for the most part, by the common, but occasionally by the statute, law, which are obligatory alike on judges and juries. Best, Presump. 17. They are either conclusive or disputable.

Mixed presumptions hold an intermediate place and consist of presumptive inferences which, from their strength, importance, or frequent occurrence, attract the observation of the law, and, from being constantly recommended by judges and acted on by juries, become as familiar to the courts as presumptions of law, and occupy as important a place in the administration of justice. They have been termed quasi legal presumptions, and are divided into three classes: 1st, Where the inference is one which common-sense would have made for itself; 2d, Where an artificial weight is attached to the evidentiary facts, beyond their mere natural tendency to produce belief; and 3d, Where from motives of legal policy, juries are recommended to draw inferences which are purely artificial. Chamb. Best, Ev. § 324.

The distinctions between presumptions of law and presumptions of fact are—first, that in regard to presumptions of law a certain inference must be made whenever the facts appear which furnish the basis of the inference; while in case of other presumptions a discretion more or less extensive is vested in the tribunal as to drawing the inference. See 9 B. & C. 643. Second, in case of presumptions of law, the court may draw the inference whenever the requisite facts are developed in pleading; Steph. Pl. 382; while other presumptions can be made only by the intervention of a jury. Presumptions of law are reduced to fixed rules, and form a part of the system of jurisprudence to which they belong; presumptions of fact are derived wholly and directly from the circumstances of the particular case, by means of the common experience of mankind. See 2 Stark. Ev. 684; Douglass v. Mitchell's Ex'r, 35 Pa. 440.

It has been said that a more useful and accurate division of presumptions of fact is obtained by treating them with reference to their effect upon the burden of proof and designating them in this aspect as slight and strong; Chamb. Best, Ev. § 319. Slight presumptions, though sufficient to excite suspicion or produce an impression in favor of the truth of the facts they indicate, do not, when taken singly, either constitute proof or shift the burden of proof; id. Strong presumptions shift the burden of proof even though the evidence to rebut them involved the proof of a negative; id. § 321. These are of great weight and in the absence of other evidence are decisive in civil cases; id. § 322. It has been suggested as the characteristic distinction between presumptions of law and presumptions of fact, either simple or mixed, that when the former are disregarded by a jury, a new trial is granted as matter of right, but that the disregard of any of the latter, however strong and obvious, is only ground for a new trial at the discretion of the court; Chamb. Best, Ev. § 327; 1 Term 167; Turnley v. Black, 44 Ala. 159; Goggans v. Monroe, 31 Ga. 331.

The lack of precision which attaches to the use of the word presumption springs naturally from the variety of the uses to which the word is applied. Of these Prof. J. B. Thayer in his pamphlet on the Presumption of Innocence (much of which is reprinted as Appendix B, in his Preliminary Treatise on Evidence) enumerates seven: (1) The presumption of facts properly defined, where a fact or set of facts furnishes evidence or inference of another. (2) The presumption of law properly defined, as, where a fact or set of facts is considered sufficient evidence of another in the absence to the contrary. (3) Where a fact or set of facts makes out a case which shall stand until overthrown by a specific quantity of evidence; (a) sufficient to satisfy a jury; (b) a preponderance; (c) evidence beyond a reasonable doubt. (4) Where the term is used to imply that a certain fact is the legal equivalent of another fact; e. g. the presumption of malice. (5) Where the contrary of the so-called presumption is not to be taken as true without evidence, the effect being to regulate the burden of proof. (6) Where neither a fact nor the contrary of it is to be assumed as true without evidence, the presumption being of the truth of what is termed a neutral fact, or in other words, that there is no presumption; as in case of shipwreck where there is no presumption of survivorship. 8 H. L. Cas. 183. (7) Where the word is used as a rhetorical term to express a legal doctrine as the presumption of innocence. See, for a discussion of this classification and a collection of cases relating thereto, Chamb. Best, Ev. 306.

A legal presumption does not take the place of evidence, but only determines the burden of proof; Graves v. Colwell, 90 Ill. 612, 616; Vincent v. Life Ass'n, 77 Conn. 281, 58 Atl. 963; 4 Wigm. Ev. § 2491; no presumption can be evidence; it is a rule about the duty of producing evidence; id. §§ 2490, 2511; State v. Linhoff, 121 Ia. 632, 97 N. W. 77.

The frequent statement that the presumption of innocence does not cease on the submission of the case to the jury is "based on a misunderstanding of the loosely used phrase that the presumption of innocence is to be regarded by the jury in every case as a matter of evidence" but which merely means that the burden of proof is on the other party; Gr. Ev. (16th ed.) § 34. It is not error to refuse to instruct the jury that they ought to regard a presumption of innocence as evidence; Wooten v. State, 24 Fla. 335, 5 South. 39, 1 L. R. A. 819. In a much cited case, Coffin v. U. S., 156 U. S. 432, 15 Sup. Ct. 394, 39 L. Ed. 481, a conviction was reversed because a charge that in order to be convicted there must be proof of guilt beyond a reasonable doubt did not sufficiently embody the statement of the presumption of innocence. That case, which held that the presumption of innocence is evidence, has been very much discussed, and has been said to have been possibly overruled in Agnew v. U. S., 165 U. S. 36, 17 Sup. Ct. 235, 41 L. Ed. 624, and it was rejected in State v. Soper, 148 Mo. 217, 49 S. W. 1007; State v. Kennedy, 154 Mo. 268, 55 S. W. 293; People v. Ostrander, 110 Mich. 60, 67 N. W. 1079. In those cases the court preferred to follow Morehead v. State, 34 Ohio St. 212, and Stevens v. Com., 45 S. W. 76, 20 Ky. L. Rep. 48. In Ogletree v. State, 28 Ala. 693, and People v. Lenon, 79 Cal. 625, 21 Pac. 967, it was held that the presumption of innocence and the doctrine of reasonable doubt were practically synonymous. The Coffin case was followed in People v. O'Brien, 106 Cal. 104, 39 Pac. 325, and People v. McNamara, 94 Cal. 509, 29 Pac. 953. In the Iowa case cited, the refusal to charge in the language of the opinion in the Coffin case was assigned as error and the exception overruled upon the ground that that case had been repudiated; Agnew v. U. S., 165 U. S. 36, 17 Sup. Ct. 235, 41 L. Ed. 624; but in Kirby v. U. S., 174 U. S. 47, 55, 19 Sup. Ct. 574, 43 L. Ed. 890, the declaration in the Coffin case that presumption is an instrument of proof was quoted with apparent approval. See Thayer, Evid.

There is no added presumption of innocence in favor of a husband who had killed his wife; State v. Soper, 148 Mo. 217, 49 S. W. 1007.

In giving effect to presumptions of fact, it is said that the presumption stands until proof is given of the contrary; 1 Cr. M. & R. 895; Miller v. The Resolution, 2 Dall. (Pa.) 22, 1 L. Ed. 271; Livingston v. Livingston, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 287, 8 Am. Dec. 562. See BURDEN OF PROOF; ONUS PROBANDI. This contrary proof may be a conflicting presumption; and Mr. Best lays down the following rules for application in such cases: first, special presumptions take the place of general ones; see 8 B. & C. 737; 5 Taunt. 326; Hazzard v. Smith, 1 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 68; second, presumptions derived from the ordinary course of nature are stronger than casual presumptions; 4 B. & C. 71; Co. Litt. 373 a; third, presumptions are favored which tend to give validity to acts; 1 Mann. & R. 668; 3 Camp. 432; 7 B. & C. 573; Tilson v. Thompson, 10 Pick. 359; Ripple v. Ripple, 1 Rawle (Pa.) 386; People v. McElroy, 72 Mich. 446, 40 N. W. 750, 2 L. R. A. 609; State v. Peterson, 38 Minn. 143, 36 N. W. 443; and see MAXIMS, Omnia præsuntur, etc.; fourth, the presumption of innocence is favored in law; 4 C. & P. 116; Russ. & R. 61; 10 M. & W. 15.

Among conclusive presumptions may be reckoned estoppels by deed, see ESTOPPELS; solemn admissions, of parties and unsolemn admissions which have been acted on; 1 Camp. 139; Simmons v. Bradford, 15 Mass. 82; see ADMISSIONS; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 205; that a sheriff's return is correct as to facts stated therein as between the parties; Simmons v. Bradford, 15 Mass. 82; that an infant under the age of seven years is incapable of committing a felony; 4 Bla. Com. 23; see Heilman v. Com., 84 Ky. 457, 1 S. W. 731, 4 Am. St. Rep. 207; that a boy under fourteen is incapable of committing a rape; 7 C. & P. 582; contra, Wagoner v. State, 5 Lea (Tenn.) 352, 40 Am. Rep. 36; Heilman v. Com., 84 Ky. 457, 1 S. W. 731, 4 Am. St. Rep. 207; that children born in wedlock are legitimate; Phillips v. Chittenden, 58 Vt. 49, 3 Atl. 323; Scott v. Hillenberg, 85 Va. 245, 7 S. E. 377; and it cannot be proved by the wife; Mink v. State, 60 Wis. 583, 19 N. W. 445, 50 Am. Com. 27; 1 Co. 177; 2 id. 3 b; 6 id. 54 a.

Among rebuttable presumptions may be reckoned the presumptions that a man is innocent of the commission of a crime; Steph. Ev. 97; see Com. v. Hawkins, 3 Gray (Mass.) 465; 4 B. & C. 247; Long v. State, 23 Neb. 33, 36 N. W. 310; that the possessor of property is its owner; Magee v. Scott, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 150, 55 Am. Holt, 83 Ala. 528, 3 South. 321, 3 Am. St. Rep. 768; homicide committed by means of a deadly weapon, creates a presumption of malice; Brown v. State, 83 Ala. 33, 3 South. 857, 3 Am. St. Rep. 685; State v. Byers, 100 N. C. 512, 6 S. E. 420; that a vote is legal; Gumm v. Hubbard, 97 Mo. 311, 11 S. W. 61, 10 Am. St. Rep. 312; Hahn v. Stinson, 98 N. C. 591, 3 S. E. 490; that a letter duly directed and mailed, was received by the person to whom it was directed, in the regular course of mail; Hastings v. Ins. Co., 63 Hun (N. Y.) 624, 17 N. Y. Supp. 333; Young v. Clapp, 147 Ill. 176, 32 N. E. 187, 35 N. E. 372, 63 Hun 624.

In the absence of a contrary showing, names of witnesses for an applicant for naturalization are presumed to have been posted for the time required by law; U. S. v. Erickson, 188 Fed. 747.

All interstate freight rates established in accordance with law are presumed to be just and reasonable; Hooker v. Interst. Com. Com'n, 188 Fed. 242, reversed Hooker v. Knapp, 225 U. S. 302, 32 Sup. Ct. 769, 56 L. Ed. 1099 (on the ground that the commerce court had no jurisdiction).

While it is presumed that a man is sober until shown to have been intoxicated, yet when he is shown to have been very much intoxicated, a court or jury may infer from that fact alone that he had been drinking intoxicants, and if it was proved that he took one drink and his whereabouts and abstinence were not shown, and there was an opportunity, it might also be inferred and found without further proof that he drank more; Hoagland v. Canfield, 160 Fed. 146.

The failure of a party to produce testimony within his knowledge and power, on a material question involved in the case, raises a presumption that the fact is against him; Choctaw & M. R. Co. v. Newton, 140 Fed. 225, 71 C. C. A. 655.

The maxim as to all presumptions being against a spoliator of documents applies only when intentional fraud or wrongful conduct is involved, and the presumption is one of fact which may be overcome by explanation of circumstances; Mastin v. Noble, 157 Fed. 506, 85 C. C. A. 98; Drost v. Mueller, 103 Mo. 624, 15 S. W. 967; Warren v. Crew, 22 Ia. 315.

It is not permissible for a jury to base an inference of fact upon another fact which is only established by presumption. Whenever circumstantial evidence is relied on to prove a fact, the circumstances must be proved and not themselves presumed; Cunard S. S. Co. v. Kelley, 126 Fed. 610, 61 C. C. A. 532; Manning v. Ins. Co., 100 U. S. 693, 25 L. Ed. 761.

A favorite maxim is that ignorantio legis neminem excusat, or that every one is conclusively presumed to know the law. There is no such presumption in fact; 2 C. B. 720; L. R. 3 Q. B. 629. See IGNORANCE.

Another very much misused maxim is that one is presumed to intend the natural consequence of his act. This has been characterized as "merely a fantastic transference into the law of evidence of the phraseology of positive law;" Chamb. Best, Ev. 310; Androscoggin Bank v. Kimball, 10 Cush. (Mass.) 373; Jones v. Ricketts, 7 Md. 108. So far as it is a rule of law it means simply that mere carelessness is not a ground of defence against legal liability; Germania Fire Ins. Co. v. R. Co., 72 N. Y. 90, 28 Am. Rep. 113; Hartford Life & Annuity Ins. Co. v. Gray, 80 Ill. 28; Grace v. Adams, 100 Mass. 505, 97 Am. Dec. 117, 1 Am. Rep. 131.

There is a presumption of jurisdiction which attaches to the record of the judgment or the decree of a court of general jurisdiction in another state, and where the record discloses nothing in regard to the service of process or notice and no evidence is given on the subject, jurisdiction over the person will be presumed; Smith v. Trust Co., 154 N. Y. 333, 48 N. E. 553.

For a discussion of the "Instinct of Self-Preservation as Affording Presumption of Due Care" in cases where there were no eyewitnesses to an accident causing death, see 77 Cent. L. J. 331. In Illinois the rule is that some evidence must be adduced to fortify the presumption of the exercise of due care, though it need not be connected with the occurrence of the accident; Newell v. R. Co., 261 Ill. 505, 104 N. E. 224. In an action against an electric railway company for the death of a pedestrian, it was error to instruct that, because of the instinct of self-preservation, a presumption must be indulged in that decedent was using due care and did not intend to commit suicide, without referring to testimony on the subject, and charging the jury when such presumption would cease to operate; Jones v. R. Co., 91 Kan. 282, 137 Pac. 796.

See AGE; DEATH; INSANITY.

PRESUMPTIVE EVIDENCE. See EVIDENCE.

PRESUMPTIVE HEIR. See HEIR PRESUMPTIVE.

PRESUMPTIVE TITLE. See TITLE.

PRET A USAGE (Fr. loan for use). A phrase used in the French law instead of commodatum.

PRETENDED TITLE STATUTE. The statute 32 Hen. VIII. c. 9, § 2. It enacts that no one shall sell or purchase any pretended right or title to land, unless the vendor hath received the profits thereof for one whole year before such grant, or hath been in actual possession of the land, or of the reversion or remainder, on pain that both purchaser and vendor shall each forfeit the value of such land to the king and the prosecutor.

PRÉTENTION. In French Law. The claim made to a thing which a party believes himself entitled to demand but which is not admitted or adjudged to be his.

The words right, action, and prétention are usually joined; not that they are synonymous, for right is something positive and certain, action is what is demanded, while prétention is sometimes not even accompanied by a demand.

PRETERITION (Lat. prætor and eo, to go by). In Civil Law. The omission by a testator of some one of his heirs who is entitled to a legitime (q. v.) in the succession.

Among the Romans, the preterition of children when made by the mother was presumed to have been made with design; the preterition of sons by any other testator, was considered as a wrong, and avoided the will, except the will of a soldier in service, which was not subject to so much form.

PRETEXT. The reasons assigned to justify an act, which have only the appearance of truth, and which are without foundation, or which, if true, are not the true reasons for such act. Vattel, liv. 3, c. 3, § 32.

Ostensible reason or motive assigned or assumed as a color or cover for the real reason or motive; false appearance, pretence. State v. Ball, 27 Neb. 604, 43 N. W. 398.

PRETIUM AFFECTIONIS (Lat.). An imaginary value put upon a thing by the fancy of the owner in his affection for it or for the person from whom he obtained it. Bell, Dict.

When an injury has been done to an article, it has been questioned whether in estimating the damage there is any just ground, in any case, for admitting the pretium affectionis. It seems that when the injury has been done accidentally by culpable negligence, such an estimation of damages would be unjust, but when the mischief has been intentional it ought to be so admitted. Kames, Eq. 74, 75.

PRETIUM PERICULI. The price of the risk, e. g. the premium paid on a policy of insurance; also the interest paid on money advanced on bottomry or respondentia.

PRETORIUM. A court house or hall of justice. 3 How. St. Tr. 425.

PREUVE (Fr.). Evidence in the sense of the term in English law, and of probatio in the canon and civil law. The French word evidence, Latin evidentia, is commonly restricted to the testimony of the senses. 1 Best, Evid. § 11.

PREVAILING PARTY. To be such does not depend upon the degree of success at different stages of the suit, but whether, at the end of the suit, or other proceeding, the party who has made a claim against the other, has successfully maintained it. Bangor & P. R. Co. v. Chamberlain, 60 Me. 286. See Hawkins v. Nowland, 53 Mo. 330.

PREVARICATION. In Civil Law. The acting with unfaithfulness and want of probity. The term is applied principally to the act of concealing a crime. Dig. 47. 15. 6.

PREVENT. To hinder; to obstruct; to intercept. Burr v. Williams, 20 Ark. 185. It is held not to mean to obstruct by physical force; 17 Q. B. 145.

PREVENTION (Lat. prevenire, to come before). In Civil Law. The right of a judge to take cognizance of an action over which he has concurrent jurisdiction with another judge.

In Pennsylvania it has been ruled that a justice of the peace cannot take cognizance of a cause which has been previously decided by another justice. Sharpe v. Thatcher, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 77, 1 L. Ed. 296; Coventry v. Cummings, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 114, 1 L. Ed. 312.

PREVIOUS QUESTION. In parliamentary practice, the question whether a vote shall be taken on the main issue, or not, brought forward before the main or real question is put by the speaker and for the purpose of avoiding, if the vote is in the negative, the putting of this question. The motion is in the form "that the question be now put," and the mover and seconder vote against it. See CLOTURE.

In the house of representatives of the United States and in many state legislatures the object of moving the previous question is to cut off debate and secure immediately a vote on the question under consideration. See Hinds, Precedents in the House of Repr.

PREVIOUSLY. An adverb of time, used in comparing an act or state named, with another act or state, subsequent in order of time, for the purpose of asserting the priority of the first. Lebrecht v. Wilcoxon, 40 Ia. 94.

PREVISORS, STATUTE OF. A statute of 25 Edw. III. St. 6, for the protection of spiritual patrons against the pope. See Maitl. Canon L. 69.

PRICE. The consideration in money given for the purchase of a thing.

It is not synonymous with value; Chicago, K. & W. R. Co. v. Parsons, 51 Kan. 408, 32 Pac. 1083.

There are three requisites to the quality of a price in order to make a sale.

It must be serious and such as may be demanded; if, therefore, a person were to sell me an article, and by the agreement, reduced to writing, he were to release me from the payment, the transaction would no longer be a sale, but a gift. Pothier, Vente, n. 18.

It must be certain and determinate; but what may be rendered certain is considered as certain; if, therefore, I sell a thing at a price to be fixed by a third person, this is sufficiently certain, provided the third person make a valuation and fix the price; Pothier, Vente, n. 23; Brown v. Bellows, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 179; 2 Kent 477. When the parties have not expressed any price in their contract, the presumption of law is that the thing is sold for the price it generally brings at the time and place where the agreement was made; Lyles v. Lyles's Ex'rs, 6 H. & J. (Md.) 273; Coxe 261; 10 Bingh. 376; 11 U. C. Q. B. 545.

The third quality of a price is that it consists in money, to be paid down, or at a future time; for if it be of anything else it will no longer be a price, nor the contract a sale, but exchange or barter; Pothier, Vente, n. 30; 16 Toullier, n. 147; Mitchell v. Gile, 12 N. H. 390; Vail v. Strong, 10 Vt. 457; see, Hudson I. Co. v. Alger, 54 N. Y. 173, where it was held that price in an act meant value or compensation.

The true price of a thing is that for which things of a like nature and quality are usually sold in the place where situated, if real property; in the place where exposed to sale, if personal; Pothier, Vente, n. 243. The first price or cost of a thing does not always afford a sure criterion of its value. It may have been bought very dear or very cheap; Ayl. Parerg. 447; Merlin, Répert.; Brown v. Bellows, 4 Pick. (Mass.) 179.

In a declaration in trover it is usual, when the chattel found is a living one, to lay it as of such a price; when dead, of such a value; 8 Wentw. Pl. 372, n.; 2 Lilly, Abr. 629.

Lord Tenterden's act has substituted value for price in the English statute of frauds; 25 L. J. C. P. 257. See Campb. Sales 162; Cost.

PRICE CURRENT. A list or enumeration of various articles of merchandise, with their prices, the duties (if any), payable thereon, when imported or exported, with the drawbacks occasionally allowed upon their exportation. Wharton.

PRIDE GAVEL. A rent or tribute. Tayl. Gavelk. 112.

PRIEST. An officer in the second order of ministry in the church.

PRIMA FACIE (Lat.). At first view or appearance of the business; as the holder of a bill of exchange, indorsed in blank, is prima facie its owner.

Prima facie evidence of fact is in law sufficient to establish the fact, unless rebutted; Kelly v. Jackson, 6 Pet. (U. S.) 622, 632, 8 L. Ed. 523; U. S. v. Wiggins, 14 Pet. (U. S.) 334, 10 L. Ed. 481. See, generally, Pinkham v. Gear, 3 N. H. 484; Finn v. Com., 5 Rand. (Va.) 701; Armstrong v. Boylan, 4 N. J. L. 77; Ducoign v. Schreppel, 1 Yeates (Pa.) 347; Rector v. Welch, 1 Mo. 334; Allen v. Gray, 11 Conn. 95; Parker v. Sinedly, 2 Root (Conn.) 286; Taylor v. Pettibone, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 66; Phillips v. Berick, 16 Johns. (N. Y.) 136, 8 Am. Dec. 209; Benjamin v. Sinclair, 1 Bail. (S. C.) 174; Bodley v. Hord, 2 A. K. Marsh. (Ky.) 244; Troy v. Evans, 97 U. S. 3, 24 L. Ed. 941. For example, when buildings are fired by sparks emitted from a locomotive engine passing along the road, it has been held to be prima facie evidence of negligence on the part of those who have the charge of it; 3 C. B. 229; and proof of the mailing of a letter duly stamped is prima facie evidence of its receipt by the person to whom it is addressed; Young v. Clapp, 147 Ill. 176, 32 N. E. 187, 35 N. E. 372; Hastings v. Ins. Co., 63 Hun 624, 17 N. Y. Supp. 333.

PRIMA TONSURA (Lat.). A grant of a right to have the first crop of grass. 1 Chitty, Pr. 181.

PRIMACY OF THE GREAT POWERS. See CONCEPT OF EUROPE.

PRIMAGE. In Mercantile Law. A duty payable to the master and mariners of a ship or vessel,—to the master for the use of his cables and ropes to discharge the goods of the merchant, to the mariners for lading and unlading in any port or haven. Abb. Sh. 270.

A small payment to the master for his care and trouble which he is to receive for his own use, unless he has otherwise agreed with the owner. Abb. Sh. 13th ed. 531; it is of a very ancient date and subject to authority and regulations. "In the 'Guidon,' it is called la contribution des chausses ou pot-de-vin du maître." It is sometimes called the master's hat-money; id.

It is no longer a gratuity to the master, unless especially stipulated; but it belongs to the owners or freighters, and is nothing but an increase of the freight rate; Carr v. R. Co., 14 Fed. Rep. 421.

PRIMARY. That which is first or principal: as, primary evidence, that evidence which is to be admitted in the first instance, as distinguished from secondary evidence, which is allowed only when primary evidence cannot be had.

PRIMARY ELECTION. A popular election held by members of a particular political party, for the purpose of choosing delegates to a convention empowered to nominate candidates for that party to be voted for at an approaching election. State v. Hirsch, 125 Ind. 210, 24 N. E. 1062, 9 L. R. A. 170.

Laws regulating primary elections are constitutional; In re County Treasurers, 9 Colo. 631, 21 Pac. 474; if there is nothing in the constitution forbidding such laws; State v. Miles, 210 Mo. 127, 109 S. W. 595; Kenneweg v. Co. Com'rs, 102 Md. 119, 62 Atl. 249. See a note in 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 465. They have been upheld as a valid exercise of the police power; Hopper v. Stack, 69 N. J. L. 569, 56 Atl. 1; State v. Felton, 77 Ohio St. 554, 84 N. E. 85, 12 Ann. Cas. 65. Such laws do not violate the constitutional provision which forbids the restraining of any of the inhabitants from assembling in a peaceable manner to consult for their common good; the act is considered as merely providing for reasonable regulation; Ladd v. Holmes, 40 Or. 167, 66 Pac. 714, 91 Am. St. Rep. 457.

The following provisions in primary election laws have been held not to render an act invalid: Requiring the voter to declare his membership in the party holding the election and to agree in advance to support the nominee; State v. Michel, 121 La. 374, 46 South. 430; State v. Drexel, 74 Neb. 776, 105 N. W. 174; that when he has voted at a primary election he shall not sign a petition for another candidate; Katz v. Fitzgerald, 152 Cal. 433, 93 Pac. 112; that no person shall vote at a primary election who has signed a petition for a candidate of a party to which he does not belong, or has voted at a primary election of another party within one year, or refuses to state his name, residence, and party affiliations; Rouse v. Thompson, 228 Ill. 522, 81 N. E. 1109; precluding voters at a primary election from taking part in other nominations for the same office; State v. Michel, 121 La. 374, 46 South. 430; that no person shall vote at a primary election unless he be a resident of the voting district in which he desires to vote, and unless he voted with a particular political party at the last general election; State v. Felton, 77 Ohio St. 554, 84 N. E. 85, 12 Ann. Cas. 65; Ladd v. Holmes, 40 Or. 167, 66 Pac. 714, 91 Am. St. Rep. 457; Morrow v. Wipf, 22 S. D. 146, 115 N. W. 1121.

But a provision forbidding persons to vote whose names do not appear on the precinct register, etc., used at the last general election, or upon its supplement, is unconstitutional because it debars native-born citizens who since the last election have attained the right to vote, and persons naturalized since the last election, etc., and voters who have changed their residences; Spier v. Baker, 120 Cal. 370, 52 Pac. 659, 41 L. R. A. 196; and so is a provision as to native-born citizens which is an enlargement of the constitutional right of suffrage; id.; also a provision that in case of a special election to fill a vacancy, the various political parties shall nominate candidates; id.

It has been held that a provision that candidates must first pay a polling fee of from $10 to $50 is valid; Socialist Party v. Uhl, 155 Cal. 776, 103 Pac. 181; especially if it was to be used to pay the expenses of the election; Kenneweg v. County Com'rs, 102 Md. 119, 62 Atl. 249; so of a requirement of the payment of filing fees aggregating $30; State v. Scott, 99 Minn. 145, 108 N. W. 828; other cases have held such requirements invalid where the fees were to go to the state treasury; People v. Board, 221 Ill. 9, 77 N. E. 321, 5 Ann. Cas. 562; Ballinger v. McLaughlin, 22 S. D. 206, 116 N. W. 70; so of a requirement that every candidate should pay a filing fee of two per cent. of the salary of the office; Johnson v. Grand Forks County, 16 N. D. 363, 113 N. W. 1071, 125 Am. St. Rep. 662; so of a one per cent. filing fee; State v. Drexel, 74 Neb. 776, 105 N. W. 174.

A provision is valid that a candidate defeated at a primary election shall not run on an independent ticket; State v. Moore, 87 Minn. 308, 92 N. W. 4, 59 L. R. A. 447, 94 Am. St. Rep. 702; otherwise of a provision which requires a candidate to declare under oath his purpose to become a candidate; Dapper v. Smith, 138 Mich. 104, 101 N. W. 60; and one which requires candidates for the legislature to pledge themselves to support the candidate for United States senator who shall receive the majority vote of that party at such primary; State v. Blaisdell, 18 N. D. 55, 118 N. W. 141, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 465, 138 Am. St. Rep. 741; State v. Berry, 18 N. D. 75, 118 N. W. 150.

Provisions are valid which limit the primaries to parties which polled three per cent. of the total vote at the last preceding election; Katz v. Fitzgerald, 152 Cal. 433, 93 Pac. 112; Ladd v. Holmes, 40 Or. 167, 66 Pac. 714, 91 Am. St. Rep. 457; so if the limit be one per cent.; State v. Drexel, 74 Neb. 776, 105 N. W. 174; or ten per cent.; State v. Felton, 77 Ohio St. 554, 84 N. E. 85, 12 Ann. Cas. 65; State v. Jensen, 86 Minn. 19, 89 N. W. 1126; State v. Michel, 121 La. 374, 46 South. 430; or even if the primaries be restricted to the two parties which had polled the largest vote, the primary of the largest party to be held first; Kenneweg v. County Com'rs, 102 Md. 119, 62 Atl. 249.

A voter at a primary election cannot be required to declare his intention to support the nominee; Spler v. Baker, 120 Cal. 370, 52 Pac. 659, 41 L. R. A. 196.

A provision that in a senatorial district, consisting of two counties, not more than two persons of the same political party, that is, one candidate for senator and one for representative, shall be nominated from any one county, is held in conflict with the constitutional provision merely requiring that senators and representatives shall be residents of the district. Provisions to the effect that in Cook county no party may hold a primary election unless it cast twenty per cent. of the vote at the last election for president, while outside that county a party which cast ten per cent. may hold a primary election, and that outside of Cook county a person may vote at the primaries upon stating his present party affiliations, while in Cook county he cannot so vote if he has voted at the primary election of another party within two years, are declared to be void because special legislation and interfering with the freedom of voters; People v. Board of Election, 221 Ill. 9, 77 N. E. 321, 5 Ann. Cas. 562.

Provisions in primary election laws which fail to preserve the secrecy of the ballot do not render such acts unconstitutional; State v. Felton, 77 Ohio St. 554, 84 N. E. 85, 12 Ann. Cas. 65; State v. Michel, 121 La. 374, 46 South. 430; Hopper v. Stack, 69 N. J. L. 569, 56 Atl. 1; Line v. Board of Canvassers, 154 Mich. 329, 117 N. W. 730, 18 L. R. A. (N. S.) 412, with note, 16 Ann. Cas. 248.

The legislature may provide that a party committee may establish qualifications for voters at primary elections in addition to those provided by the general election laws; State v. Michel, 121 La. 374, 46 South. 430; or may prescribe the time, manner, etc., of holding primary elections and also the qualifications of voters; State v. Felton, 77 Ohio St. 554, 84 N. E. 85, 12 Ann. Cas. 65. But in People v. Board of Election, 221 Ill. 9, 77 N. E. 321, 5 Ann. Cas. 562, it was held that a law authorizing a party's central committee to determine whether candidates should be nominated at the primaries or by delegates chosen there or should be selected by a majority or plurality vote, was an invalid delegation of legislative power.

An act permitting the voters at primary elections to name their choice for a senator of the United States is not an invalid delegation of power; State v. Blaisdell, 18 N. D. 55, 118 N. W. 141, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 465, 138 Am. St. Rep. 741; Socialist Party v. Uhl, 155 Cal. 776, 103 Pac. 181. See note in 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1135.

PRIMARY EVIDENCE. The best evidence of which the case in its nature is susceptible. 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3053. See Steph. Ev. 67; EVIDENCE.

PRIMARY OBLIGATION. An obligation which is the principal object of the contract: for example, the primary obligation of the seller is to deliver the thing sold, and to transfer the title to it. It is distinguished from the accessory or secondary obligation to pay damages for not doing so. 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 702. See SURETYSHIP.

PRIMARY POWERS. The principal authority given by a principal to his agent: it differs from mediate powers. Story, Ag. § 58.

PRIMATE. In Ecclesiastical Law. An archbishop who has jurisdiction over his province, or one of several metropolitans presiding over others. Exarch comes nearest to it in the Greek church. The Archbishop of Canterbury is the Primate of All England; the Archbishop of York is Primate of England.

PRIME. In a contract for delivery of "prime barley" prime will be understood according to its use among merchants. Whitmore v. Coates, 14 Mo. 9.

Prime cost, the true price paid for goods upon a bona fide purchase. U. S. v. Sixteen Packages, 2 Mas. 53, Fed. Cas. No. 16,303.

Used in Louisiana as "having precedence of"; as, to prime a mortgage.

PRIME MINISTER. The head of the British cabinet. He usually holds the office of First Lord of the Treasury, unless he is a peer, in which case he takes some other office. At the present writing the prime minister is also secretary of state for war.

The office was unknown to the law until 1906, when the prime minister was accorded a place in the order of precedence. Lowell, Gov. of Engl. 68.

"He is the principal executive of the British constitution, and the sovereign a cog in the mechanism." Bagehot.

See CABINET; PREMIER.

PRIME SERJEANT. The Queen's first serjeant at law.

PRIMER ELECTION. A term used to signify first choice.

In England, when coparcenary lands are divided, unless it is otherwise agreed, the eldest sister has the first choice of the parts: this part is called the enitia pars. Sometimes the oldest sister makes the partition; and in that case, to prevent partiality, she takes the last choice. Hob. 107; Litt. §§ 243, 245; Bac. Abr. Coparceners (U).

PRIMER FINE. The fine due the crown by ancient prerogative on suing out the writ of præcipe. 1 Steph. Com. 560.

PRIMER SEISIN. In English Law. The right which the king had, when any of his tenants died seised of a knight's fee, to receive of the heir, provided he were of full age, one whole year's profits of the lands, if they were in immediate possession; and half a year's profits, if the lands were in reversion, expectant on an estate for life. 2 Bla. Com. 66. See FEUDAL LAW.

PRIMICERIUS. The first of any degree of men. 1 Mon. Ang. 838.

PRIMO BENEFICIO. A writ directing a grant of the first benefice in the sovereign's gift. Cowell.

PRIMOGENITURE. The state of being first born; the eldest.

At common law, in cases of the descent of land, primogeniture gave a title to the oldest son in preference to the other children. This distinction has been abolished in the United States. Formerly in Pennsylvania, in cases of intestacy, the oldest son took a double portion of the real estate; Jenk's Lessee v. Backhouse, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 91, where it was held that a trust estate (the legal title) descends as at common law; and this case was followed in Delaware; Doe v. Lank, 4 Houst. (Del.) 648.

It was not the general rule at the end of the 12th century; Pollock, First Book of Jurispr. 241. It was probably first applied to military fiefs. Perhaps at first the younger brothers lived on the land with the elder brother, holding the land in "parage." But under military tenures, primogeniture became the rule. In a charter of 1276, it was said that if property was divided among co-heirs, no one portion would suffice even for its owner's maintenance; 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 140.

The law of primogeniture has not been altered in England; see however the radical act of 1897, cited in LAND TRANSFER.

PRIMOGENITUS (Lat.). The first-born. 1 Ves. 290. And see 3 Maule & S. 25; 8 Taunt. 468.

PRIMUM DECRETUM (Lat.). In the courts of admiralty, this name is given to a provisional decree. Bacon, Abr. The Court of Admiralty (E).

PRINCE. In a general sense, a sovereign; the ruler of a nation or state. The son of a king or emperor, or the issue of a royal family: as, princes of the blood. The chief of any body of men.

PRINCE OF WALES. A title given to the eldest son of the British sovereign or to the heir apparent to the crown.

He is so created by letters patent, and is also created Earl of Chester. He is Duke of Cornwall by inheritance.

Mary and Elizabeth, though each, at the time, was only heiress presumptive, were created Princesses of Wales by Henry VIII.

PRINCES OF THE BLOOD. The younger sons of the British sovereign and male members of other branches of the royal family not in the direct line of succession.

Princess Royal. The eldest daughter of the king.

PRINCIPAL. Leading; chief; more important.

This word has several meanings. It is used in opposition to accessary, to show the degree of crime committed by two persons. Thus, we say, the principal is more guilty than the accessary after the fact.

In estates, principal is used as opposed to incident or accessary: as in the following rule: "The incident shall pass by the grant of the principal; but not the principal by the grant of the incident: accessorium non ducit sed sequitur suum principale." Co. Litt. 152 a.

It is used in opposition to agent, and in this sense it signifies that the principal is the prime mover. See PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

It is used in opposition to interest: as, the principal being secured, the interest will follow. See INTEREST.

The corpus or capital of the estate in contradistinction to the income.

Money bearing interest; a capital sum lent on interest.

It is used also in opposition to surety: thus, we say, the principal is answerable before the surety. See SURETYSHIP; GUARANTY.

Principal is used also to denote the more important: as, the principal person.

In the English law, the chief person in some of the inns of chancery is called principal of the house. Principal is also used to designate the best of many things: as, the principal bed, the principal table, and the like.

In Criminal Law. The actor in the commission of a crime.

All who are present, either actually or constructively, at the place of a crime, and are either aiding, abetting, assisting, or advising its commission, or are present for such purpose, are principals in the crime; U. S. v. Boyd, 45 Fed. 851. See Fernandez v. State, 25 Tex. App. 538, 8 S. W. 667.

Principals are of two kinds, namely, principals in the first degree, and principals in the second degree.

A principal in the first degree is one who is the actual perpetrator of the act. 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 233, 615; Hately v. State, 15 Ga. 346. But to constitute him such it is not necessary that he should be actually present when the offence is consummated; People v. Adams, 3 Denio (N. Y.) 190, 45 Am. Dec. 468; Smith v. State, 21 Tex. App. 107, 17 S. W. 552. For if one lay poison purposely for another, who takes it and is killed, the offender, though absent when it was taken, is a principal in the first degree; Clark, Cr. L. 83; 4 Bla. Com. 34; 1 Chitty, Cr. L. 257. And the offence may be committed in his absence, through the medium of an innocent agent: as, if a person incites a child under the age of discretion, or any other instrument excused from the responsibility of his actions by defect of understanding, ignorance of the fact, or other cause, to the commission of crime, the inciter, though absent when the act was committed, is ex necessitate liable for the act of his agent and a principal in the first degree; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 514; 2 Leach 978. But if the instrument be aware of the consequences of his act, he is a principal in the first degree; the employer, in such case, if present when the fact is committed, is a principal in the second degree, and, if absent, an accessory before the fact; 1 C. & K. 589; 1 Archb. Cr. L. 58.

Principals in the second degree are those who are present aiding and abetting the commission of the act. Rasnick v. Com., 2 Va. Cas. 356. They are generally termed aiders and abettors, and sometimes, improperly, accomplices; for the latter term includes all the particeps criminis, whether principals in the first or second degree or mere accessories. A person to be a principal in the second degree need not be actually present, an ear or eye witness of the transaction. The presence may be constructive. He is, in construction of law, present aiding and abetting if, with the intention of giving assistance, he be near enough to afford it should the occasion arise. If, for instance, he be outside the house watching to prevent surprise or the like, whilst his companions are in the house committing a felony, such constructive presence is sufficient to make a principal in the second degree; Clark, Cr. L. 85; Com. v. Knapp, 9 Pick. (Mass.) 496, 20 Am. Dec. 491; 9 C. & P. 437; Brennan v. People, 15 Ill. 511. There must, however, be a participation in the act; for although a person be present when a felony is committed, yet if he does not consent to the felonious purpose or contribute to its execution, he will not be a principal in the second degree merely because he does not endeavor to prevent the felony or apprehend the felon; 1 Russ. Cr. 27; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 439; State v. Hildreth, 31 N. C. 440, 51 Am. Dec. 369; Connaught v. State, 1 Wis. 159, 60 Am. Dec. 370.

The law recognizes no difference between the offence of principals in the first and principals in the second degree. And so immaterial is the distinction considered in practice that, if a man be indicted as principal in the first degree, proof that he was present aiding and abetting another in committing the offence, although his was not the hand which actually did it, will support the indictment; and if he be indicted as principal in the second degree, proof that he was not only present, but committed the offence with his own hand, will support the indictment. So, when an offence is punishable by a statute which makes no mention of principals in the second degree, such principals are within the meaning of the statute as much as the parties who actually commit the offence; 1 Archb. Cr. L. 66. See State v. Anderson, 89 Mo. 312, 1 S. W. 135.

In treason, and in offences below felony, and in all felonies in which the punishment of principals in the first degree and of principals in the second degree is the same, the indictment may charge all who are present and abet the fact as principals in the first degree, provided the offence permits of a participation, or specially, as aiders and abettors; Archb. Cr. Pl. 7; Com. v. Chapman, 11 Cush. (Mass.) 422; 1 C. & M. 187. But where by particular statutes the punishment is different, then principals in the second degree must be indicted specially as aiders and abettors; Archb. Cr. Pl. 7. If indicted as aiders and abettors, an indictment charging that A gave the mortal blow, and that B, C, and D were present aiding and abetting, will be sustained by evidence that B gave the blow, and that A, C, and D were present aiding and abetting; and even if it appears that the act was committed by a person not named in the indictment, the aiders and abettors may, nevertheless, be convicted; Dougl. 207; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 350. And the same though the jury say that they are not satisfied which gave the blow, if they are satisfied that one of them did, and that the others were present aiding and abetting; 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 52; 2 C. & K. 382.

See ACCESSARY; ACCOMPLICE; PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

PRINCIPAL AND AGENT. Agency is a relation between two or more persons, by which one party, usually called the agent or attorney, is authorized to do certain acts for, or in relation to the rights or property of, the other, who is denominated the principal, constituent, or employer. Prof. Joel Parker, MS. Lect. 1851.

A contract by which one person, with greater or less discretionary power, undertakes to represent another in certain business relations. Whart. Ag. 1.

The right on the part of the agent to act, is termed his authority or power. In some instances the authority or power must be exercised in the name of the principal, and the act done is for his benefit alone. In others, it may be executed in the name of the agent, and if the power is coupled with an interest on the part of the agent, it may be executed for his own benefit; Prof. Joel Parker, Harvard Law School Lect. 1851.

The principal is one who, being competent sui juris to do any act for his own benefit or on his own account, confides it to another person to do for him. 1 Domat b. 1, tit. 15, Introd.; Story, Ag. § 3.

The agent is one who undertakes to transact some business, or to manage some affair, for another, by the authority and on account of the latter, and to render an account of it; 1 Livermore, Ag. 67. See Co. Litt. 207; 1 B. & P. 316.

The term is one of a very wide application, and includes a great many classes of persons to which distinctive appellations are given; as, factors, brokers, attorneys, cashiers of banks, auctioneers, clerks, super cargoes, consignees, ships' husbands, masters of ships, and the like.

Other names for an agent are proxy, delegate, representative; and for principal, employer, constituent or chief; Mech. Agency § 3. In fact the terms agent and attorney are often used synonymously. Thus, a letter or power of attorney is constantly spoken of as the formal instrument by which an agency is created; Paley, Ag. Dunl. ed. 1, n.

No word is more commonly used than agent; [1897] A. C. 180. It is sometimes used as meaning one who has no principal, but who on his own account offers for sale some particular article having a special name; 39 L. J. Ch. 36.

"The line of demarkation between the relation of principal and agent, and that of master and servant is exceedingly difficult to define; . . . the two relations are essentially similar; . . . the difference between them is one of degree only, and not of kind;" Mechem, Agency § 2. It is that the former relates to commercial or business transactions and the latter deals with matters of manual or mechanical execution; Kingan & Co. v. Silvers, 13 Ind. App. 80, 37 N. E. 413. A contract giving the right to sell all the product of a company for five years at a certain commission was merely an employment to sell on commission and did not create the relation of master and servant; Morrow v. Ice Co., 211 Pa. 445, 60 Atl. 1004. An agency to manage, lease and sell property and pay expenses upon it and to collect debts and pay over the money received to the principal, is fiduciary in its character; Zetelle v. Myers, 19 Grat. (Va.) 62. The correspondent of a firm of brokers who received money on representations that they would purchase options on the Chicago Board of Trade and who shared with him the commissions taken, was not an agent of either party, but a particeps criminis in a gambling enterprise; Munns v. Commission Co., 117 Ia. 516, 91 N. W. 789. But where a bank represented itself as acting as agent for one who corresponded directly with the other person respecting loan applications, which the bank offered to submit to the plaintiff's assignor, it was merely an agent and not liable for the proposed lender's failure to furnish the money and to accept the loan; Klay v. Bank, 122 Ia. 506, 98 N. W. 315. Where a canner agreed to ship to defendant for sale the entire output of his establishment during the season it made him merely an agent and not a joint owner of the shipments; Elwell v. Coon (N. J.) 46 Atl. 580. But an offer to furnish engines on defendant's order at certain discounts and terms for a year did not create an agency but merely gave the right to purchase at the discount; Russell & Co. v. McSwegan, 84 N. Y. Supp. 614. Another text writer says that agency and service are "distinguishable . . . by the fact that the former relates to business transactions, in which there is more or less discretion allowed to the employee, while the latter relates to manual services which the employee is, as a rule, obliged to perform under specific orders;" Whart. Agency, §§ 19, 20. Mechem also points out in the section above cited that agency relates to transactions with third persons and implies more or less of discretion in the agent, whereas service has reference to actions upon or about things in which the servant acts under the direction and control of the master. He adds truly that this distinction is not altogether satisfactory in its application, as, except in the very lowest form of service, more or less discretion is allowed the servant; and in almost any form of agency, the agent is subject to the specific control of the principal. Usually, however, "the distinction is sufficiently clear for practical purposes, particularly as the same principles of law will ordinarily be applied to either relation."

In distinguishing between partnership and agency, it is to be remembered primarily that each partner acts in every transaction as principal for himself and as agent for the other members of the firm. And hence the question sometimes arises whether the action taken by one person was as the agent of another who would be entitled to the benefits of the transaction, or partly on his own behalf and partly on the behalf of others jointly interested in him. In the former case there would be an agency and in the latter a partnership, and in dealing with such questions, it is necessary to remember that each partner does act in the dual capacity of principal and agent; Cox v. Hickman, 8 H. L. Cas. 268, 311; Worrall v. Munn, 5 N. Y. 229, 239, 55 Am. Dec. 330. No general rule can be stated which will determine the character of the transaction as between those two relations in every case, but each must depend upon circumstances which show the intentions of the parties and determine the construction of the contract; see Grinton v. Strong, 148 Ill. 587, 36 N. E. 559.

Another question may arise as to whether the transaction is one between principal and agent for the sale of goods by the latter for the account of the former, and this may affect not only the parties themselves but their obligations and liabilities to third persons. In these cases, also, resort must be had to the construction of the contract and the light which may be thrown upon it by proof of the intention of the parties; Bayliss v. Davis, 47 Ia. 340; see SALE; and for a collection of cases on this particular point see Clark & Skyles, Ag. p. 16 et seq., §§ 8-10. Another distinction which is involved in many cases is whether a person is an independent contractor or an agent, he being in the former case in no sense under the control of the person for whom he is working. See INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR.

Cases may also arise where it is necessary to determine whether the relation between parties is that of principal and agent or landlord and tenant, particularly where the question of liability for repairs and improvements is involved. Unsuccessful efforts to establish an agency in such case were made in Ragsdale v. Industrial Co., 71 Miss. 284, 14 South. 193; and Hawley v. Curry, 74 Ill. App. 309, in both of which cases the relation was held to be that of landlord and tenant. See that title.

The question has also arisen as to whether a person was acting under an agency or a license. It would seem that these relations would be easily distinguished, but in Bingham v. Hickman, 115 Pa. 420, 8 Atl. 644, it was held that a committee of creditors of mine owners who operated the mine and managed the business were agents and not mere licensees as was contended. See LICENSE.

The creation of the agency, when express, may be either by deed, in writing not by deed, or by a verbal delegation of authority; 2 Kent 612; 9 Ves. 250; Stackpole v. Arnold, 11 Mass. 27, 6 Am. Dec. 150; Ewing v. Tees, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 450, 2 Am. Dec. 455; McComb v. Wright, 4 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 667.

An authority may be delegated by deed for any purpose whatever; for whenever one by parol would be sufficient, one by deed will be equally so, and a power under seal, authorizing the agent to sign the principal's name, includes authority to affix his seal also; Wickham v. Knox, 33 Pa. 71; but it does not authorize the agent to make a deed in his own name; Bassett v. Hawk, 114 Pa. 502, 8 Atl. 18. When it is to do something which must be performed through the medium of a deed, then the authority must also be by deed, and executed with all the forms necessary to render the instrument perfect; Gordon v. Bulkeley, 14 S. & R. (Pa.) 331; Harshaw v. McKesson, 65 N. C. 688, 694; Ford v. Williams, 13 N. Y. 577, 67 Am. Dec. 83; and subsequent parol ratification is not sufficient to bind the principal, though a written recognition with other acts in pais may do so; Blood v. Goodrich, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 68, 24 Am. Dec. 121; but it has been held that the agent's authority may be shown by an oral ratification or by acts of the principal from which such ratification may be inferred; Hammond v. Hannin, 21 Mich. 374, 4 Am. Rep. 490; if the principal be present, and verbally or impliedly authorize the agent to affix his name to the deed he will be bound; Croy v. Busenbark, 72 Ind. 48. But written authority is not required to authorize an agent to sign an unsealed paper, or a contract in writing not under seal, even where a statute makes it necessary that the contract, in order to bind the party, shall be in writing, unless the statute positively requires that the authority shall also be in writing; Wagoner v. Watts, 44 N. J. L. 126; Newton v. Bronson, 13 N. Y. 587, 67 Am. Dec. 89. In Riley v. Minor, 29 Mo. 439, it was held that the authority of an agent to make an executory contract for the sale of land need not be in writing; and in Watson v. Sherman, 84 Ill. 263, it was held that a power of attorney not under seal was sufficient to authorize the agent to sell land, but not to make a conveyance; for the latter purpose the power must be in writing and of equal dignity with the deed to be executed. In that case the sale was held good in equity. A contract for the sale of land, signed and sealed by an agent, was held valid though the agent's authority was not sealed, and ejectment might be supported thereon; Baum v. Dubois, 43 Pa. 260.

An authority is to be so construed as to include not only all the necessary and proper means of executing it with effect, but also all the various means which are justified or allowed by the usages of trade; Denman v. Bloomer, 11 Ill. 177; or are fairly to be implied from the transactions between the parties or papers relating thereto; Rogers v. Kneeland, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 218.

The rule that an authority must be of the same character as the instrument to be signed by the agent was a rigid common law rule, but it was considered so technical that it has been changed in some states by statute; J. B. Streeter, Jr., Co. v. Janu, 90 Minn. 393, 96 N. W. 1128. In other states the courts, without any statute, have shown a disposition to relax the rule, as where it is held that a seal attached unnecessarily by an agent will be treated as surplusage, and the instrument, though not effectual as a deed, may be held good as a contract of sale; Viser v. Rice, 33 Tex. 139; Blacknall v. Parish, 59 N. C. 70, 78 Am. Dec. 239; and this tendency to relax the rule is shown in other cases above cited. In Harshaw v. McKesson, 65 N. C. 688, 694, the court, after some discussion of the cases, said, "There is little use in holding on to a rule after it has been reduced to such a shadow." A lease executed by an agent without authority in writing, though void, may be admitted in evidence in an action for use and occupation; Jennings v. McComb, 112 Pa. 518, 4 Atl. 812; and the same was held of a lease void within the statute of frauds; McIntosh v. Hodges, 110 Mich. 319, 68 N. W. 158, 70 N. W. 550.

It may be stated generally that the authority of an agent may be conferred either in writing, not under seal, or verbally, or by his mere employment, and that if a person knowingly permits another to act for him or clothes him with apparent authority to do so, he will be bound to third persons who in good faith have dealt with the supposed agent and thus there is created what has been termed "an agency by estoppel." 1 Clark & Skyles, Agency 140, sec. 55; Bronson v. Chappell, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 681, 20 L. Ed. 436.

Parol authority has been held sufficient to authorize one as agent to make an assignment of a claim against an insolvent; Dingley v. McDonald, 124 Cal. 90, 56 Pac. 790; to sell mules and apply the proceeds; Hirsh & Co. v. Beverly, 125 Ga. 657, 54 S. E. 678; to fill in the name of the grantee in a deed; Otis v. Browning, 59 Mo. App. 326; to execute bills and notes; Harrison v. Tiernans, 4 Rand. (Va.) 177; to settle a controversy; Piercy v. Hedrick, 2 W. Va. 458, 98 Am. Dec. 774; to sign one's name as surety in a bond; Bannister v. Wallace, 14 Tex. Civ. App. 452, 37 S. W. 250; contra, Com. v. Magoffin, 25 S. W. 599, 15 Ky. L. Rep. 775. The authority may be conferred merely by letter; Lyon v. Pollock, 99 U. S. 668, 25 L. Ed. 265; Smith v. Allen, 86 Mo. 178.

When the agency is not express, it may be inferred from the relation of the parties and the nature of the employment, without proof of any express appointment; 2 Kent 613; 15 East 400; Judson v. Sturges, 5 Day (Conn.) 556. Where relations exist which constitute agency, it will be such whether the parties understand it to be or not; Bradstreet Co. v. Gill, 72 Tex. 115, 9 S. W. 753, 2 L. R. A. 405, 13 Am. St. Rep. 768. The admissions of a supposed agent cannot prove the existence of the agency; Osgood v. Pacey, 23 Ill. App. 116; French v. Wade, 35 Kan. 391, 11 Pac. 138; Fullerton v. McLaughlin, 70 Hun 568, 24 N. Y. Supp. 280; Larson v. Inv. Co., 51 Minn. 141, 53 N. W. 179; Salmon Falls Bk. v. Leyser, 116 Mo. 51, 22 S. W. 504.

An agency may be created by law, as in those cases where the law authorizes a wife to pledge her husband's credit, even against his will, it creates a compulsory agency; Mecham, Ag. § 82; Benjamin v. Dockham, 134 Mass. 418.

The authority may be general, as when it extends to all acts connected with a particular business or employment; Gibson v. Hardware Co., 94 Ala. 346, 10 South. 304; Fatman v. Leet, 41 Ind. 138; or special, when it is confined to the authority to do one or more specific acts, in which case it is confined within the limits of the authority and extends to no other business than is authorized; Lattomus v. Ins. Co., 3 Houst. (Del.) 404; Towle v. Leavitt, 23 N. H. 360, 55 Am. Dec. 195; Martin v. Farnsworth, 49 N. Y. 555; Union S. & T. Co. v. Mallory, 157 Ill. 554, 41 N. E. 888, 48 Am. St. Rep. 341.

Where the powers are general, they are more liberally construed according to the necessity of the transaction and, in the absence of notice, parties dealing with an agent have the right to presume that his authority is general; Austrian v. Springer, 94 Mich. 343, 54 N. W. 50, 34 Am. St. Rep. 350; Coles v. Ins. Co., 41 W. Va. 261, 23 S. E. 732; and, particularly, one dealing with the agent of a corporation may regard his agency as general in the absence of notice to the contrary; Maher v. Moore (Del.) 42 Atl. 721; and this rule was extended so far as to be applied to a subagent employed by the general agent of a corporation; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Tift, 100 Ga. 86, 27 S. E. 765. On the other hand, a special agent is limited as to the business to be done, and his authority must in general be strictly pursued; Kramer v. Blair, 88 Va. 456, 13 S. E. 914; Hooe v. Oxley, 1 Wash. (Va.) 19, 1 Am. Dec. 425; and it will be strictly construed; Young v. C. H. Ass'n, 99 Ill. App. 290; MacDonald v. O'Neil, 21 Pa. Super. Ct. 364; Jeffrey v. Bigelow, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 518, 28 Am. Dec. 476; but it will be treated as including all usual means for effectually executing it; Bass Dry Goods Co. v. Mfg. Co., 119 Ga. 124, 45 S. E. 980. As if it be to do an act upon condition, and the agent does it absolutely, it is void; and vice versa. If a person do less than the authority committed to him, the act is void; but if he does that which he is authorized, and more, it is good for that which is warranted, and void for the rest. Both of these rules, however, may have many exceptions and limitations; Paley, Ag. 178.

An authority given to two or more persons cannot as a general rule be executed by one, though one die or refuse, unless there is an express provision that a certain number of them may act, or unless the power is coupled with an interest; Paley, Ag. 177; Co. Litt. 112 b, 181 b; Salisbury v. Brisbane, 61 N. Y. 617; Hartford Fire Ins. Co. v. Wilcox, 57 Ill. 180; Copeland v. Ins. Co., 6 Pick. (Mass.) 198; Low v. Perkins, 10 Vt. 532, 33 Am. Dec. 217; but if the instrument creating the power shows such an intention, the authority may be executed by part of those named as agents; Cedar Rapids & St. P. R. Co. v. Stewart, 25 Ia. 115; and it has been held that where the act is merely ministerial, anyone may do it; and so where the agency is expressly made joint and several; Purinton v. Annuity Co., 72 Me. 22 (but in another case the rule requiring all the appointees to join in the execution of the power was held to apply, whether the duty be ministerial or judicial; Johnston v. Bingham, 9 W. & S. [Pa.] 56); and powers delegated to a committee of corporate directors can be exercised by a majority; McNeil v. Chamber of Commerce, 154 Mass. 277, 28 N. E. 245, 13 L. R. A. 559. Where, however, the authority is of a public nature, it may be executed by a majority; Jefferson Co. v. Slagle, 66 Pa. 202; Worcester v. Board of R. Com'rs, 113 Mass. 161; Cooley v. O'Connor, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 391, 20 L. Ed. 446; People v. Nichols, 52

N. Y. 478, 11 Am. Rep. 734. It is also to be noted that the rule under consideration has no application to the case of a partnership, as each partner may execute an authority delegated to his firm, and the act of one is the act of the firm in pursuance of the power; Jeffries v. Life Ins. Co., 110 U. S. 309, 4 Sup. Ct. S. 28 L. Ed. 156; Deakin v. Underwood, 37 Minn. 98, 33 N. W. 318, 5 Am. St. Rep. 827.

As to the form to be observed in the execution of an authority, where an agent is authorized to make a contract for his principal in writing, it must, in general, be personally signed by him; but in the name of the principal and not merely in the attorney's name, though the latter be described as attorney in the instrument; Fowler v. Shearer, 7 Mass. 19; Buffalo Catholic Institute v. Bitter, 87 N. Y. 250. But it matters not in what words this is done, if it sufficiently appear to be in the name of the principal. "For A B" (the principal), "C D" (the attorney) has been held to be sufficient; Story, Ag. § 153; Clark & Skyles, Ag. 679, § 296; Hunter's Adm'rs v. Miller's Adm'rs, 6 B. Monr. (Ky.) 612; Tucker Mfg. Co. v. Fairbanks, 98 Mass. 105; Wamb. Cas. 614. The strict rule of law in this respect applies, however, only to sealed instruments; and the rule is further modified, even in such cases, where the seal is not essential to the validity of the instrument; Story, Ag. §§ 148, 154; New England M. Ins. Co. v. De Wolf, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 56.

Where a person acts merely as agent of another, and as such signs papers, an express disclosure of his principal's name on their face or in the signature is not essential to protect him from personal liability to a party having full knowledge of the facts; Metcalf v. Williams, 104 U. S. 93, 26 L. Ed. 665 (a check signed "W. G. Williams, V. Pres't"), where it was held that the ordinary rule is that if a person merely adds to his signature the word "Agent," "Trustee," "Treasurer," without disclosing his principal, he is personally bound. The appendix is a mere descriptio personæ. But if he be in fact such "agent" etc. of some principal, the instrument will be given the same effect as was given to it by the parties themselves. In Kean v. Davis, 21 N. J. L. 683, 47 Am. Dec. 182, a bill was signed "J. K., Pres. etc." It was held that parol proof was admissible to show that the bill was a company bill. One who signs as "A, Secretary of X Co.," binds himself, but evidence of the understanding of the parties is admissible if the suit is between the original parties; Janes v. Bank, 9 Okl. 546, 60 Pac. 290. The cases are, however, conflicting.

An authority must be executed within the period to which it is limited; 4 Campb. 279.

The business of the agency may concern either the property of the principal, of a third person, of the principal and a third person, or of the principal and the agent, but must not relate solely to the business of the agent. A contract in relation to an illegal or immoral transaction cannot be the foundation of a legal agency; Liverm. Ag. 6. 14.

Agency created by ratification of acts previously done. The agency must be antecedently given, or subsequently adopted; and in the latter case there must be an act of recognition, or an acquiescence in the act of the agent from which a recognition may be fairly implied; 2 Kent 614. If, with full knowledge of what the agent has done, the principal ratify the act, the ratification will be equivalent to an original authority,—according to the maxim, omnis ratihibitio retrotrahitur et mandato æquiparatur; Paley, Ag. 172; 4 Ex. 798. The ratification relates back to the original making of the contract; 31 L. J. Ex. 163; Russ v. Telfener, 57 Fed. 973; except as to intermediate vested rights; Fowler v. Pearce, 49 Ill. 59; Norton v. Bull, 43 Mo. 113. It must be ratified in its entirety; Elwell v. Chamberlin, 31 N. Y. 611; Krider v. College, 31 Ia. 547; Rogers v. Hardware Co., 24 Neb. 653, 39 N. W. 844; E. O. Standard Milling Co. v. Flower, 46 La. Ann. 315, 15 South. 16; and subject to the charges imposed by the agent; 9 H. L. C. 391. If the principal accepts the benefit of a contract, he is responsible for the fraudulent representations of the agent, although made without authority; Barnard v. Iron Co., 85 Tenn. 139, 2 S. W. 21; Riser v. Walton, 78 Cal. 490, 21 Pac. 362; Murray v. Mayo, 157 Mass. 248, 31 N. E. 1063; Wheeler & Wilson Mfg. Co. v. Aughey, 144 Pa. 398, 22 Atl. 667, 27 Am. St. Rep. 638.

Ratification will, in general, relieve the agent from all responsibility on the contract, when he would otherwise have been liable; 2 Br. & B. 452. See Ballou v. Talbot, 16 Mass. 461, 8 Am. Dec. 146; Rossiter v. Rossiter, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 494, 24 Am. Dec. 62. See ASSENT; Ayliffe, Pand. *386; 18 Viner, Abr. 156; Story, Ag. 239. See, generally, 25 Am. Law Rev. 14; AGENCY.

A principal having the right to disaffirm acts of an agent must do it promptly, and if not done within a reasonable time ratification will be presumed; Indianapolis Rolling Mill v. R. Co., 120 U. S. 256, 7 Sup. Ct. 542, 30 L. Ed. 639. The principle of ratification by laches or delay is applicable to a municipal corporation, such as a county; Boone Co. v. R. Co., 139 U. S. 684, 11 Sup. Ct. 687, 35 L. Ed. 319.

An infant is not, in general, liable on his contracts; but if, after coming of age, he ratify the contract by an actual or express declaration, he will be bound to perform it, as if it had been made after he attained full age. The ratification must be voluntary, deliberate, and intelligent, and the party must know that without it he would not be bound; Hinely v. Margaritz, 3 Pa. 428; see Martin

v. Mayo, 10 Mass. 137, 6 Am. Dec. 103; Gay v. Ballou, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 403, 21 Am. Dec. 158; and now in England must be in writing. But a confirmation or ratification of a contract may be implied from acts of the infant after he becomes of age, as, by enjoying or claiming a benefit under a contract he might have wholly rescinded; Barnaby v. Barnaby, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 221; and an infant partner will be liable for the contracts of the firm, or at least such as were known to him, if he, after becoming of age, confirm the contract of partnership by transacting business of the firm, receiving profits, and the like; Salinas v. Bennett, 33 S. C. 285, 11 S. E. 968; but his mere failure to disaffirm a conveyance on coming of age, without some positive and clear act of affirmation, will not amount to a ratification; Hill v. Nelms, 86 Ala. 442, 5 South. 796; Hoffert v. Miller, 86 Ky. 572, 6 S. W. 447. See INFANT.

A board of directors may ratify the unauthorized execution of a promissory note by the secretary and bind the corporation when it has authority to borrow money and execute securities therefor; Nebraska & K. Farm Loan Co. v. Bell, 12 U. S. App. 699, 58 Fed. 326, 7 C. C. A. 253; and the bringing of a suit by a limited partnership upon a contract made by its agents without proper authority, though not ultra vires, is a ratification of its terms; Park Bros. & Co. v. Mfg. Co., 6 U. S. App. 26, 49 Fed. 618, 1 C. C. A. 393.

A principal cannot ratify the acts of his agent where he has no knowledge of such acts; Taliaferro v. Bank, 71 Md. 200, 17 Atl. 1036; Beebe v. E. Ass'n, 76 Ia. 129, 40 N. W. 122; but when a claim is founded upon an act done without the claimant's knowledge and authority, by a person claiming to act as his agent, the bringing of an action by him based upon that act is a ratification of it; Robb v. Vos, 155 U. S. 13, 15 Sup. Ct. 4, 39 L. Ed. 52.

Ratification can only take place where the agent professed to act for the person ratifying; 5 B. & C. 909; Leake, Contr. 470. Thus a forged signature to a note cannot be ratified; Henry v. Heeb, 114 Ind. 275, 16 N. E. 606, 5 Am. St. Rep. 613; Shisler v. Van Dike, 92 Pa. 447, 37 Am. Rep. 702; Brook v. Hook, L. R. 6 Ex. 89; contra, Living v. Wiler, 32 Ill. 387; Williams v. Bayley, L. R. 1 H. L. 200; Garrett v. Gonter, 42 Pa. 143; Greenfield Bank v. Crafts, 4 Allen (Mass.) 447, where the view is taken that the party whose signature is forged adopts it with full knowledge as his own, he may be bound as if he had made it originally; Forsyth v. Day, 46 Me. 176, where the liability was placed upon the ground of estoppel; as it was also in Union Bank v. Middlebrook, 33 Conn. 95.

An intention to ratify may be presumed from the silence of the principal who has received a letter from the agent informing him of what has been done on his account; Smith v. Sheeley, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 358, 20 L. Ed. 430; Bassett v. Brown, 105 Mass. 551; Hall v. Vanness, 49 Pa. 457; Hammond v. Hannin, 21 Mich. 374, 4 Am. Rep. 490; Swartwout v. Evans, 37 Ill. 442; Viele v. Ins. Co., 26 Ia. 38, 96 Am. Dec. 83; or from any acts inconsistent with a contrary inference; Bryant v. Moore, 26 Me. 84, 45 Am. Dec. 96; St. Louis & M. Packet Co. v. Parker, 59 Ill. 23; or from a suit by the principal; 9 B. & C. 59; Cairnes v. Bleecker, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 300; Bredin v. Dubarry, 14 S. & R. (Pa.) 30; or by adoption of a submission to arbitration, although the agent exceeded his authority; Hall v. Ins. Co., 57 Conn. 105, 17 Atl. 356; or by keeping and enforcing a mortgage, obtained by an agent for the release of another mortgage; Nichols, Shepard & Co. v. Shaffer, 63 Mich. 599, 30 N. W. 383.

The acts of the agent must be disapproved within a reasonable time after notice, or the principal will be considered as having ratified them by his silence; Johnson v. Carrere, 45 La. Ann. 847, 13 South. 195.

By ratifying a contract a man adopts the agency altogether, as well what is detrimental as what is for his benefit; Findley v. Breedlove, 4 Mart. N. S. (La.) 105; Story, Ag. § 250; 9 B. & C. 59; Rogers v. Hardware Co., 24 Neb. 653, 39 N. W. 844; Findlay v. Pertz, 31 U. S. App. 340, 66 Fed. 427, 13 C. C. A. 559. See Rader v. Maddox, 150 U. S. 128, 14 Sup. Ct. 46, 37 L. Ed. 1025.

Agency for Both Parties. In general an agent for one party cannot act in the same transaction for the other, and if he does so, the contract is voidable; Greenwood Ice & Coal Co. v. Ins. Co., 72 Miss. 46, 17 South. 83; New York Cent. Ins. Co. v. Ins. Co., 14 N. Y. 85. There seems to be an exception in the case of an auctioneer's clerk, their business being simply ministerial and the custom generally understood; 9 H. L. R. 218; additional New York cases are cited in 9 Harv. L. Rev. 349; Pratt v. Ins. Co., 130 N. Y. 206, 29 N. E. 117; Bank of N. Y. Assoc. v. Trust Co., 143 N. Y. 559, 38 N. E. 713.

The New York test as to an agent representing both parties is whether or not he is invested with discretion. No other jurisdiction seems to have recognized this distinction; see 9 Harv. L. Rev. 349.

The test of discretion is distinctly repudiated in Porter v. Woodruff, 36 N. J. Eq. 174; Jansen v. Williams, 36 Neb. 869, 53 N. W. 279, 20 L. R. A. 207. The rule that the contract is voidable is followed in Cannell v. Smith, 142 Pa. 25, 21 Atl. 793, 12 L. R. A. 395; Rice v. Wood, 113 Mass. 133, 18 Am. Rep. 459; Berlin v. Farwell, 3 Cal. Unrep. Cas. 634, 31 Pac. 527; Bell v. McConnell, 37 Ohio St. 396, 41 Am. Rep. 528; Kronenberg v. Fricke, 22 Ill. App. 550; Salomans v.

Fender, 34 L. J. Ex. 95; but see Hammond v. Bookwalter, 12 Ind. App. 177, 39 N. E. 872. As to the agent's right to commissions from both parties where he simply introduces them and they make their own contract, see Montross v. Eddy, 94 Mich. 100, 53 N. W. 916, 34 Am. St. Rep. 323; Green v. Robertson, 64 Cal. 75, 28 Pac. 446.

An agent with orders from two customers for certain stock joined the orders and purchased the full amount from the plaintiffs; held that there was no contractual relation with either principal and that they were not liable for the price; Beckhusen v. Hamblet, 16 T. L. Rep. 278 (Q. B. D.). This case is commented on in 14 Harv. L. Rev. 146, where it is said that if there have been two separate contracts for the precise number of shares ordered by each customer, he would have been liable to the seller on his own contract whether the broker disclosed his principal or not, and while it seems odd that by lumping the orders the seller loses the right of action against the customers, yet the writer considers the result logical. The decision in the English case is sustained by Roosevelt v. Doherty, 129 Mass. 301, 37 Am. Rep. 356, which is the converse and where the action was brought by one principal against a third party.

Who may be Principal. Every one of full age, and not otherwise disabled, is capable of being a principal; for it is a rule that whenever a person has power, as owner, or in his own right, to do a thing, he may do it by another; Com. Dig. Attorney (C 1); Heinecius, ad Pand. p. 1, l. 3, tit. 1, § 424; 9 Co. 75 b; Story, Ag. § 6. Infants are generally incapable of appointing an agent; but under special circumstances they may make such appointments. For instance, an infant may authorize another to do any act which is beneficial to him, but not to do an act which is to his prejudice; 2 Kent 233; 9 Co. 75; 3 Burr. 1804; Tucker v. Moreland, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 58, 69, 9 L. Ed. 345; Whitney v. Dutch, 14 Mass. 463, 7 Am. Dec. 229. A married woman could not, in general, appoint an agent or attorney; and when it was requisite that one should be appointed, the husband usually appointed for both. She might, perhaps, dispose of or incumber her separate property, through an agent or attorney; Cro. Car. 165; 2 Bulstr. 13; but this seemed to be doubted; Cro. Jac. 617; 1 Brownl. 134; Ad. Ej. 174. Idiots, lunatics, and other persons not sui juris are wholly incapable of appointing an agent; Story, Ag. § 6.

His Liability as Affected by the Character of the Agency. The general principle which governs the liability of a principal is that the responsibility is measured by the character and extent of the authority given; for example, authority to an agent to vote at a corporate meeting upon the stock of his principal does not empower the former to act for the latter in connection with other stockholders, who were also creditors of the corporation, in taking measures for cancelling a mortgage of the corporation under which the claims of the principal and those stockholders against the corporation were secured; Moore v. Ensley, 112 Ala. 228, 20 South. 744. The powers of the agent must be measured by the application to each particular case of ordinary business principles, and sound judgment to be exercised by the agent in executing his authority, and by the court which is to deal with the case in considering the question of the responsibility of the principal. Where a discretion has been conferred upon the agent, the principal must abide the result of its exercise and will be held liable to third persons where it has been honestly exercised. So where an agent has power to borrow money on exceptional terms in cases of emergency, a lender is not bound to inquire whether in the particular case the emergency has or has not arisen; 15 L. R. App. 357. And where the agent was entrusted with securities and instructed by the principal to raise a certain sum upon them, but borrowed a larger sum and fraudulently appropriated the difference, the principal could not redeem the securities without paying the lender in full where he had acted bona fide and in ignorance of the limitation, although he had no knowledge of the agent's authority to borrow and made no inquiry, and the agent practised fraud and forgery to obtain the loan; [1895] App. Cas. 173, affirming [1895] 3 Ch. 130.

His right to the Service of the Agent, and His Correlative Obligations. The principal is entitled to the service of the agent with respect to the matter in hand as though the agent were attending to his own business; and the latter will be considered, to that extent, as merging his own individuality and will be held to act entirely for the benefit of the principal. He cannot make a profit out of the business which he transacts for the principal derived from any knowledge acquired by him in the course of it, except consistently with the engagements between the principal and agent. So where an agent, acting in a confidential capacity, obtained information of a defect in his principal's title and put in an outstanding claim through a third party, it was held that he could not profit by his purchase but held the title for his principal; Kelley-Goodfellow Show Co. v. Scales, 12 U. S. App. 610, 58 Fed. 161, 7 C. C. A. 140. On the other hand, a principal cannot retain the fruit of his agent's acts and yet disclaim his authority in order to escape the corresponding obligation. Where a corporation obtained from the plaintiff the right to construct a road in front of his property and constructed it, it could not refuse to recognize its agent's authority to bind it to pay the sum he agreed to pay; Nutting v. R. Co., 21 App. Div. 72, 47 N. Y. Supp. 327. It is said in this case that agency cannot be proved by the uncorroborated testimony of the agent, nor can any implication of consent to the work done arise, in the absence of proof of knowledge that it was being done.

Their Rights and Liabilities. The rights to which principals are entitled arise from obligations due to them by their agents or by third persons.

Their Rights as against the Agents. The rights of principals in relation to their agents are—first, to call them to an account at all times in relation to the business of the agency; 2 Bouvier, Inst. 28. Second, when the agent violates his obligations to his principal, either by exceeding his authority, or by positive misconduct, or by mere negligence or omissions in the discharge of the functions of his agency, or in any other manner, and any loss or damage falls on his principal, the latter will be entitled to full indemnity; Story, Ag. § 217c; Dodge v. Tileston, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 328; 7 Beav. 176. But the loss of damage must be actual, and not merely probable or possible; Story, Ag. § 222; Paley, Ag. 7, 8, 74, 75. But see id. 74, note 2. Third, where both the principal and agent may maintain a suit against a third person for any matter relating to the agency, the principal has a right to supersede the agent by suing in his own name; and he may by his own intervention intercept, suspend, or extinguish the right of the agent under the contract; Story, Ag. § 403; 4 Camp. 194; Taintor v. Prendergast, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 72, 38 Am. Dec. 618. But, as we shall presently see, an exception to this rule arises in favor of the agent, to the extent of any lien, or other interest, or superior right, he may have in the property; Story, Ag. §§ 393, 397, 407, 424. The principal has a right to determine or revoke the authority given to his agent, at his own mere pleasure, where not otherwise agreed between them; Willcox & Gibbs Sewing Mach. Co. v. Ewing, 141 U. S. 627, 12 Sup. Ct. 94, 35 L. Ed. 882.

Agents are not entitled to use the materials gained or collected by them in the cause of their employment to the detriment of their principal; [1893] 1 Ch. 218.

Their Rights with Respect to Third Persons. In general, the principal, as against third persons, has a right to all the advantages and benefits of the acts and contracts of his agent, and is entitled to the same remedies against such third persons, in respect to such acts and contracts, as if they were made or done with him personally; Story, Ag. §§ 418, 420; Paley, Ag. 323; Brewster v. Saul, 8 La. 296; 2 Stark. 443. But to this rule there are the following exceptions. First, when the instrument is under seal, and it has been exclusively made between the agent and the third person, as, for example, a charter-party or bottomry bond made by the master of a ship in the course of his employment, in this case the principal cannot sue or be sued on it; Story, Ag. § 422; Dubois v. Canal Co., 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 285. Second, when an exclusive credit is given to and by the agent, and therefore the principal cannot be considered in any manner a party to the contract, although he may have authorized it and be entitled to all the benefits arising from it. The case of a foreign factor buying or selling goods is an example of this kind; he is treated, as between himself and the other party, as the sole contractor, and the real principal cannot sue or be sued on the contract. This, it has been well observed, is a general rule of commercial law, founded upon the known usage of trade; and it is strictly adhered to, for the safety and convenience of foreign commerce; Story, Ag. § 425; 9 B. & C. 87; 4 Taunt. 574. Third, when the agent has a lien or claim upon the property bought or sold, or upon its proceeds, which is equal to or exceeds the amount of its value, the principal cannot sue without the consent of the agent; Story, Ag. §§ 403, 407, 424.

But contracts are not unfrequently made without mentioning the name of the principal. In such case he may avail himself of the agreement; for the contract will be treated as that of the principal as well as of the agent. If, however, the person with whom the contract was made, bona fide dealt with the agent as owner, he will be entitled to set off any claim he may have against the agent, in answer to the demand of the principal; and the principal's right to enforce contracts entered into by his agent is affected by every species of fraud, misrepresentation, or concealment of the agent which would defeat it if proceeding from himself; Story, Ag. §§ 420, 440; 2 Kent 632; Paley, Ag. 324; 3 B. & P. 490; Hogan v. Shorb, 24 Wend. (N. Y.) 458.

Undisclosed Principal. Where one enters into a contract in his own name, but is in fact the agent of another for whose benefit he is acting, and he does not disclose the name of his principal, though the fact that he is acting as an agent is known to the other party, the person for whose benefit such contract is made is termed an undisclosed principal. The rules concerning his rights and liabilities are fairly well settled both in this country and in England, though constantly and severely criticised, but at the same time acknowledged by the critics to be probably unchangeable. The cases have resulted in a settled rule of decision that the other party to the contract may at his option sue the agent on the contract to the same extent as if he were principal; Arger-singer v. MacNaughton, 114 N. Y. 535, 21 N. E. 1022, 11 Am. St. Rep. 687; Brigham v. Herrick, 173 Mass. 460, 53 N. E. 906; Bey- mer v. Bonsall, 79 Pa. 298; Mitchell v. Beck, 88 Mich. 342, 50 N. W. 305; 7 Term 360.

Where the principal, under a written contract, is disclosed on its face by the agent, in England the other party may sue either; L. R. 6 C. P. 486; 8 M. & W. 834; unless the contract sufficiently shows that the agent is not to be bound; 2 T. L. R. (K. B.) 7. In this country there is said to be no case on the agent's liability; 19 Harv. L. Rev. 456 (1906), where the question is discussed on principle. The cases are collected in Wambaugh, Cas. Ag. 548-582. Or he may maintain an action against the undisclosed principal when it is ascertained who he is; York Mfg. Co. v. R. Co., 3 Wall. (U. S.) 107, 18 L. Ed. 170; Maxey Mfg. Co. v. Burnham, 89 Me. 538, 36 Atl. 1003, 56 Am. St. Rep. 436; Richardson v. Farmer, 36 Mo. 35, 88 Am. Dec. 129; Hubbard v. Ten Brook, 124 Pa. 291, 16 Atl. 817, 2 L. R. A. 823, 10 Am. St. Rep. 585; Kayton v. Barnett, 116 N. Y. 625, 23 N. E. 24; Woodford v. Hamilton, 139 Ind. 481, 39 N. E. 47; 9 B. & C. 78; [1893] 1 Q. B. 346; and the rule of the liability of the undisclosed principal applies not only to oral contracts, but to written ones other than negotiable instruments; and parol evidence is permissible to show that the principal is liable; Higgins v. Senior, 8 M. & W. 834; Darrow v. Produce Co., 57 Fed. 463; Chandler v. Coe, 54 N. H. 561; Gates v. Brower, 9 N. Y. 205, 59 Am. Dec. 530; and this doctrine is also true as to contracts required by the statute of frauds to be in writing; Trueman v. Loader, 11 Ad. & El. 589; Byington v. Simpson, 134 Mass. 169, 45 Am. Rep. 314; Waddill v. Seabree, 88 Va. 1012, 14 S. E. 849, 29 Am. St. Rep. 766; but where the other party, with knowledge of all the circumstances, makes his election as to whom he will charge, the other is discharged, and cannot afterwards be sued by such third person; New York & C. S. S. Co. v. Harbison, 16 Fed. 688.

The rule of the liability of the principal does not apply to contracts under seal; Badger Silver Mining Co. v. Drake, 88 Fed. 48, 31 C. C. A. 378; Sanger v. Warren, 91 Tex. 472, 44 S. W. 477, 66 Am. St. Rep. 913; 6 Ch. App. 525; nor to negotiable instruments; Pease v. Pease, 35 Conn. 131, 95 Am. Dec. 225; Powers v. Briggs, 79 Ill. 493, 22 Am. Rep. 175; Sparks v. Transfer Co., 104 Mo. 531, 15 S. W. 417, 24 Am. St. Rep. 351; Rand v. Hale, 3 W. Va. 495, 100 Am. Dec. 761; Siffkin v. Walker, 2 Camp. 308. This exception naturally results from the doctrine of the law merchant holding only the parties to a negotiable instrument as liable to a suit upon it, but it is to be noted that if there is uncertainty upon the face of the paper, whether it is intended to bind the principal or the agent, parol evidence may be admitted to make clear the intention of the parties; Metcalf v. Williams, 104 U. S. 93, 26 L. Ed. 665; Simanton v. Vliet, 61 N. J. L. 595, 40

Atl. 595; Keldan v. Winegar, 95 Mich. 430, 54 N. W. 901, 20 L. R. A. 705; but such evidence is inadmissible to render liable a person who is not named in, or bound by, a written contract; Ferguson v. McBean, 91 Cal. 63, 27 Pac. 518, 14 L. R. A. 65.

In considering the right of an undisclosed principal to sue the other party, it might be considered that since, ordinarily, a contract cannot confer a right of action upon a person not a party to it, such principal would have no action. It is, however, now fairly well settled, both in England and in this country, that the principal may sue upon the contract and introduce parol evidence to show that it was made for his benefit; 10 B. & C. 671; L. R. 6 Eq. 165; Buchanan v. Linseed-Oil Co., 91 Fed. 88, 33 C. C. A. 351; Prichard v. Budd, 76 Fed. 710, 22 O. C. A. 504; Nicoll v. Burke, 78 N. Y. 580; Girard v. Taggart, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 19, 9 Am. Dec. 327; Kelly v. Thuey, 143 Mo. 422, 45 S. W. 300; Cushing v. Rice, 46 Me. 303, 7 Am. Dec. 579.

Either principal or agent may recover on such a contract not under seal; Stockbarger v. Sain, 69 Ill. App. 436; Nitro Powder Co. v. Marx & Rawolle, 148 App. Div. 571, 133 N. Y. Supp. 151; and the principal need only prove by a preponderance of evidence that he is the real party; it need not be "clear and satisfactory"; Barbre v. Goodale, 28 Or. 465, 43 Pac. 378. An undisclosed principal may sue on a parol contract made by an agent in his own name; Coulter v. Blatchley, 51 W. Va. 163, 41 S. E. 133; Battey v. Lunt, Moss & Co., 30 R. I. 1, 73 Atl. 353, 136 Am. St. Rep. 926; but not upon one under seal; Smith v. Pierce, 45 App. Div. 628, 60 N. Y. Supp. 1011. Such principal may be sued by the other party; Brooks v. Shaw, 197 Mass. 376, 84 N. E. 110; Schweyer v. Jones, 152 Mich. 241, 115 N. W. 974; but not on a specialty; Western S. R. Co. v. Fire Ins. Co., 163 Fed. 644; and the agent may be sued; Whitney v. Woodmansee, 15 Idaho 735, 99 Pac. 968; Fitzpatrick v. Manheimer, 157 Mich. 307, 122 N. W. 83; Jewell v. Theater Co., 12 Cal. App. 681, 108 Pac. 527; Leterman v. Lumber Co., 110 Va. 769, 67 S. E. 281; Hale v. Triest, 150 App. Div. 166, 134 N. Y. Supp. 673. The third party may sue either principal or agent; Gay v. Kelley, 109 Minn. 101, 123 N. W. 295, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 742; but he must elect; Cherrington v. Burchell, 147 App. Div. 16, 131 N. Y. Supp. 631. If the principal sues, the other party may set off a demand against the agent; Winslow Bros. & Co. v. Staton, 150 N. C. 264, 63 S. E. 950; his rights as undisclosed principal are subject to claims acquired in good faith against the agent; Kent v. De Coppet, 149 App. Div. 589, 134 N. Y. Supp. 195.

One who contracted under seal as agent for a fictitious principal was himself held liable; Schenkberg v. Treadwell, 94 N. Y.

Supp. 418; this is true as to a contract not under seal; L. R. 2 C. P. 174; but the New York case is a per curiam one with a dissenting opinion by MacLean, J., which is very brief, but well reasoned, and is substantially repeated in a criticism of the case in 19 Harv. L. Rev. 59. Case is the proper action against an agent who has exceeded his authority in a contract under seal; Roberts v. Button, 14 Vt. 195; or an action in the nature of case against one who, without authority, signs as agent a contract for and in the name of another; Sheffield v. Ladue, 16 Minn. 388 (Gil. 346), 10 Am. Rep. 145.

In an interesting discussion of the rights and liabilities of the undisclosed principal, Prof. Ames (Lect. on Leg. Hist. 453), assuming that the doctrine of his liability to the other party is "so firmly established in the law of England and of this country that it would be quixotic to attack it in the courts," contends that it is an anomaly to be reckoned with but not treated as an analogy. It has been so treated by Lords Davey and Lindley, and Smith, L. J., and by text writers; [1901] A. C. 240, 256, 261; [1901] 1 Q. B. 629, 635; Tiffany, Ag. 232; Huffcut, Ag. 166; 9 Colum. L. Rev. 116, 130; 3 L. Q. R. 359; 14 id. 5; though by others the rule has been treated as of self-evident soundness; Lord Cairns, in 4 App. Cas. 504, 514; Anson, Cont. 2d ed. 346. The article concludes with three objections to the rule as admitted and established: 1. It violates fundamental principles of contract. 2. The third person has no relief against the principal upon his agent's sealed or negotiable contracts, or his liability as a shareholder. 3. It frequently works unjustly in the case of simple contracts, and, while it is too late to apply it to the last class, it is suggested that to cases within the second there may be applied the doctrine of equitable execution on the debtor's right of exoneration, which has the merits of accord with legal principle, uniform application to all forms of contract and the production of just results. See notes on undisclosed principal in 16 L. Ed. 36, and 27 L. Ed. 903.

A more detailed reference to cases is impracticable here, but it may be noted that the right of action in cases involving the question of an undisclosed principal has resulted in many cases, where not only is the existence of an agency a question, but, where forgery is resorted to to create the appearance of an agency, there has been a question whether obtaining the money under a forged paper by an alleged agent creates a liability in tort or upon an implied warrant of authority only. A very few of the cases involving this question, which has been much discussed in the English courts, may be noted.

A stockbroker acting in good faith under a forged power of attorney, purporting to be signed by Oliver, effected a transfer of stock standing in the Bank of England, in the name of Oliver. He was held liable on an implied warrant of authority in a suit by the bank which had made good the loss to Oliver, although the bank had equally good means of knowing of the forgery; Oliver v. Bank of England, 17 T. L. R. 286, [1902] 1 Ch. 610. It is suggested in 15 Harv. L. Rev. 71, that there being no contract, the action should be in tort theoretically, but there being no such action for innocent misrepresentation, courts have implied a warranty of authority; 18 Q. B. D. 54. In Collen v. Wright, 8 E. & B. 647, it was first authoritatively held that an agent acting without authority and inducing the plaintiff to enter into a contract, an existing principal impliedly warrants his agency. The propriety of applying this case to the facts in Oliver v. Bank of England is objected to in 18 L. Q. R. 364, but its criticism is dissented from in 16 Harv. L. Rev. 312, which cites as authority supporting a warranty in consideration of the detriment incurred by the bank from the reason that the result of the transfer might be contrary to its interests; Callisher v. Bischoffsheim, L. R. 59 B. 449; Seward v. Mitchell, 1 Cold. (Tenn.) 87. In Derry v. Peek, L. R. 14 App. Cas. 337, it was held that one who suffers by acting in reliance on a merely negligent misrepresentation cannot recover, and a writer in 16 Harv. L. Rev. 312, is of opinion that Collen v. Wright must be recognized in England as an exception to Derry v. Peek. Where the agent acquainted the person with whom he dealt of the doubt as to his authority, he was held not liable; [1892] 1 Q. B. 456; Newman v. Sylvester, 42 Ind. 106; but Oliver v. Bank of England, supra, does not come within this exception. On similar facts, the doctrine of implied warranty has been held to apply; Boston & A. R. Co. v. Richardson, 135 Mass. 473. The writer above cited suggests that the principle established is practical and in accordance with sound business principles, though, in fact, it is but a veiled exception to a settled principle in the law of torts; Farmers' Co-op. Trust Co. v. Floyd, 47 Ohio St. 525, 26 N. E. 110, 12 L. R. A. 346, 21 Am. St. Rep. 846. There are notes on this line of cases in 15 Harv. L. Rev. 221, and 16 id. 311.

It was held in [1901] 1 Ch. 344, that where an agent makes a contract for the principal in the name of the principal, but claims no authority, there is no implied warranty, the rule being that the agent is liable on an implied warranty of authority only when the other party relied on the existence of authority in fact. In that case, Kekewich, J., points out that the modern rule of implied warranty laid down in Collen v. Wright, 8 E. & B. 647 (to which this case is a curious exception), that a person making a contract as agent, in the name of the principal, impliedly contracts that he has authority, and, if he has not, he is liable in an action on such implied contract; overruling the opinion in Smout v. Ilberry, 10 M. & W. 12, which held that a professed agent for a named principal cannot be held personally liable without some sort of actual personal default.

Where the principal gives notice to the debtor not to pay money to the agent, unless the agent has a superior right, from a lien or otherwise, the amount of any payment afterwards made to the agent may be recovered by the principal from the debtor; Story, Ag. § 429; 4 Camp. 60; Corlies v. Cumming, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 186. Money paid by an agent may also be recovered by the principal under any of the following circumstances: first, where the consideration fails; second, where money is paid by an agent through mistake; third, where money is illegally extorted from an agent in the course of his employment; fourth, where the money of the principal has been fraudulently applied by the agent to an illegal and prohibited purpose; Paley, Ag. 335. When goods are entrusted to an agent for a specific purpose, a delivery by him for a different purpose, or in a manner not authorized by the commission, passes no property in them, and they may, therefore, be reclaimed by the owner; Paley, Ag. 340; Peters v. Ballistier, 3 Pick. (Mass.) 495. Third persons are also liable to the principal for any tort or injury done to his property or rights in the course of the agency. If both the agent and third person have been parties to the tort or injury, they are jointly as well as severally liable to the principal, and he may maintain an action against both or either of them. Story, Ag. § 436; 3 Maule & S. 562.

The Liabilities of the Principal to His Agent or to Third Persons—To the Agent. The liabilities of the principal to his agent are—to reimburse him all his advances, expenses, and disbursements lawfully incurred about the agency, and also to pay him interest upon such advances and disbursements whenever interest may fairly be presumed to have been stipulated for or to be due to the agent; Story, Ag. § 335; Paley, Ag. 107, 108; second, to pay him his commissions as agreed upon, or according to the usage of trade, except in cases of gratuitous agency; Story, Ag. § 324; third, to indemnify the agent when, without his own default, he has sustained damages in following the directions of his principal: for example, when the agent has innocently sold the goods of a third person, under the direction or authority of his principal, and a third person recovers damages against the agent, the latter will be entitled to reimbursement from the principal; Story, Ag. § 339; Greene v. Goddard, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 212.

To Third Persons. The principal is bound to fulfill all the engagements made by the agent for or in the name of the principal, which come within the scope of his usual employment, although the agent in the particular instance has in fact exceeded or violated his private instructions; Story, Ag. 443; Fitzsimmons v. Joslin, 21 Vt. 129, 52 Am. Dec. 46; Bryant v. Moore, 26 Me. 84, 45 Am. Dec. 96; Ruggles v. Ins. Co., 114 N. Y. 415, 21 N. E. 1000, 11 Am. St. Rep. 674; Sails v. Miller, 98 Mo. 478, 11 S. W. 970. See [1893] 1 Q. B. 346. And where an exclusive credit is not given to the agent, the principal is liable to third persons upon contracts made by his agent within the scope of his authority, although the agent contracts in his own name and does not disclose his agency; Story, Ag. § 446. But if the principal and agent are both known, and exclusive credit be given to the latter, the principal will not be liable though the agent should subsequently become insolvent; Story, Ag. § 447. When goods are sold to a person who in fact is the agent of another, but the seller has no knowledge of the agency, the latter may elect to make the principal his debtor on discovering him; Merrill v. Kenyon, 48 Conn. 314, 40 Am. Rep. 174; Benjamin v. Birmingham, 50 Ark. 433, 8 S. W. 183. The same principle applies where the seller is informed at the time of the sale that the buyer is an agent, but is not informed who the principal is; 9 B. & C. 78; Raymond v. Proprietors of C. & E. Mills, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 319. Where money is paid by a third person to the agent, by mistake or upon a consideration that has failed, the principal will be liable to repay it although he may never have received it from his agent; Story, Ag. § 451; Paley, Ag. 293; 2 Esp. 509.

A principal who accepts the benefits of a contract made on his behalf by his authorized agents is responsible for the fraudulent representation of the agent, although made without authority; Barnard v. Iron Co., 85 Tenn. 139, 2 S. W. 21; Continental Ins. Co. v. Ins. Co., 51 Fed. 884, 2 C. C. A. 535; and a person who has adopted a sale made by his agent, and receives the benefit of it, takes the sale with all the burdens created by false representations of the agent; Riser v. Walton, 78 Cal. 490, 21 Pac. 362; Albitz v. R. Co., 40 Minn. 476, 42 N. W. 394; Ehrsam v. Mahan, 52 Kan. 245, 34 Pac. 800; Akberg v. Brewing Co., 65 Hun 182, 19 N. Y. Supp. 956; and a principal must adopt the acts of his agents as a whole; Rogers v. Hardware Co., 24 Neb. 653, 39 N. W. 844; E. O. Stanard Mill. Co. v. Fowler, 46 La. Ann. 315, 15 South. 16. A ratification by a principal of an unauthorized contract made by his agent, relates back to the beginning of the transaction; Russ v. Telfener, 57 Fed. 973; and a principal having the right to disaffirm acts of an agent must do it promptly, and if not done within a reasonable time ratification will be presumed; Indianapolis Rolling Mill v. R. Co., 120 U. S. 256, 7 Sup.

Ct. 542, 30 L. Ed. 639. There can be no ratification by a principal of the acts of his agent, where he has no knowledge of such acts; Taliaferro v. Bank, 71 Md. 200, 17 Atl. 1036; Beebe v. Life & E. Ass'n, 76 Ia. 129, 40 N. W. 122.

The principal is not, in general, liable to a criminal prosecution for the acts or misdeeds of his agent, unless he has authorized or co-operated in such acts or misdeeds; Story, Ag. § 452; 1 Mood. & M. 433. He is, however, civilly liable to third persons for the misfeasance, negligence, or omission of duty of his agent in the course of the agency, although he did not authorize or know of such misconduct, or even although he forbade it; Story, Ag. § 452; Hunter v. Machine Co., 20 Barb. (N. Y.) 507; Southwick v. Estes, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 385; Ewing v. Shaw, 83 Ala. 333, 3 South. 692; City Nat. Bank of Birmingham v. Dun, 51 Fed. 160; Halsell v. Musgrave, 5 Tex. Civ. App. 476, 24 S. W. 358; and he is liable for the injuries and wrongs of sub-agents who are retained by his direction, either express or implied; Story, Ag. § 454; 1 B. & P. 409. But the responsibility of the principal for the negligence or unlawful acts of his agent is limited to cases properly within the scope of the agency. Nor is he liable for the wilful acts of his agent whereby damage is occasioned to another, unless he originally commanded or subsequently assented to the act; Paley, Ag. 298, 299; Story, Ag. § 456; Inhabitants of Lowell v. R. R. Corp., 23 Pick. (Mass.) 25, 34 Am. Dec. 33; Church v. Mansfield, 20 Conn. 284. Strict compliance with the instructions of a principal by the agent is a condition of exemption of the agent from liability; Bank of British North America v. Cooper, 137 U. S. 473, 11 Sup. Ct. 160, 34 L. Ed. 759.

There is a general presumption that an agent has disclosed to his principal all facts which come to his knowledge in the course of the agency, and this presumption remains in force so long as the agent acts within the scope of his employment in good faith for the interest of the principal; Duncan v. Jaudon, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 165, 21 L. Ed. 142; Humphreys v. Beneficial Ass'n, 139 Pa. 214, 20 Atl. 1047, 11 L. R. A. 564; Hyatt v. Clark, 118 N. Y. 563, 23 N. E. 891; but if he forms the purpose of dealing with the principal's property for his own benefit or that of some one else opposed in interest, his subsequent action based upon such purpose is considered to be in fraud of the rights of the principal, and the presumption no longer prevails; Henry v. Allen, 151 N. Y. 1, 45 N. E. 355, 36 L. R. A. 658; Lamson v. Beard, 94 Fed. 30, 36 C. C. A. 56, 45 L. R. A. 822.

An interesting collection of cases illustrating the doctrine of the liability of the principal for the act of the agent is the subject of an annotation in 35 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 530, as to the authority of officers of corporations to employ physicians and nurses in cases of accident to employes or others. It has been held that the superintendent or general manager of a railroad company has the authority to employ a physician in such cases; Cincinnati, I., St. L. & C. R. Co. v. Davis, 126 Ind. 99, 25 N. E. 878, 9 L. R. A. 503; Marquette & O. R. Co. v. Taft, 28 Mich. 289; L. R. 2 Ex. 228. Such employment was sustained in the case of any superior officer, where no higher one was present; as, a division superintendent; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Winterbotham, 52 Kan. 433, 34 Pac. 1052; a conductor; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Smith, 121 Ind. 353, 22 N. E. 775, 6 L. R. A. 320; Peninsular R. Co. v. Gary, 22 Fla. 356, 1 Am. St. Rep. 194; a master mechanic; Pacific R. Co. v. Thomas, 19 Kan. 256; a yard master; Marquette & O. R. Co. v. Taft, 28 Mich. 289; and a station agent; 3 Ex. 268. In any case the company will be bound if the employment be ratified by the superintendent; Louisville, E. & St. L. R. Co. v. McVay, 98 Ind. 391, 49 Am. Rep. 770; Pacific R. Co. v. Thomas, 19 Kan. 256. There is no inherent power in the general manager, but the question of his delegated authority is for the jury; Swazey v. Mfg. Co., 42 Conn. 556; Chaplin v. Freeland, 7 Ind. App. 676, 34 N. E. 1007; and so the authority of a superintendent and general manager of an electric light company, who was also a director, to bind the corporation by employing a nurse, was held a question for the jury; Hodges v. Light & Power Co., 109 Mich. 547, 67 N. W. 564.

Ordinarily a person authorized to deliver, and delivering, the property of another to a common carrier for shipment, may by the latter be treated as having authority to stipulate for and accept the terms of affreightment, and, as against the carrier, the owner is bound by them; Jennings v. Ry. Co., 127 N. Y. 438, 28 N. E. 394; and where the managing editor of a newspaper contracted to hire a yacht for gathering news, having done the same thing before, his authority, either direct or indirect, is presumed; Sun Printing & Pub. Ass'n v. Moore, 183 U. S. 642, 22 Sup. Ct. 240, 46 L. Ed. 366.

Who may be Agent. Many persons disqualified from acting for themselves, such as infants; Brown v. Fire Ins. Co., 117 Mass. 479; persons attainted, or outlaws; aliens; Monseaux v. Urquhart, 19 La. Ann. 482; see Washington University v. Finch, 18 Wall. (U. S.) 106, 21 L. Ed. 818; Robinson v. Life Assur. Soc., 42 N. Y. 54, 1 Am. Rep. 400; slaves, and others, could act as agents in the execution of a naked authority; Whart. Ag. § 14; Lyon v. Kent, 45 Ala. 656; Chastain v. Bowman, 1 Hill (S. C.) 270; Co. Litt. 252 a; Story, Ag. § 4. A feme covert may be the agent of her husband, and as such, with his consent, bind him by her contract or other act; Miller v. Watt, 70 Ga. 385; Martin v. Rector, 101 N. Y. 77, 4 N. E. 183; Pullam v. State, 78 Ala. 31, 56 Am. Rep. 21; Rogers v. Roberts, 58 Md. 523; but she cannot contract for the sale of his land without express authority; Edwards v. Tyler, 141 Ill. 454, 31 N. E. 312; she may be the agent of another in a contract with her husband; Bacon, Abr. Authority, B; Pickering v. Pickering, 6 N. H. 124; Mackinley v. McGregor, 3 Whart. (Pa.) 369, 31 Am. Dec. 522; Felker v. Emerson, 16 Vt. 653, 42 Am. Dec. 532. But although she is in general competent to act as the agent of a third person; 7 Bingham. 565; Butler v. Price, 110 Mass. 97; Goodwin v. Kelly, 42 Barb. (N. Y.) 194; it is not clear that she can do so when her husband expressly dissents, particularly when he may be rendered liable for her acts; Story, Ag. § 7. The husband may be agent for the wife; Anderson v. Ames, 151 Mass. 11, 23 N. E. 577; Meyer v. Montgomery, 57 Mich. 278, 49 N. W. 616; Barnett v. Glutting, 3 Ind. App. 415, 29 N. E. 154, 927; by virtue of his relations alone he has no implied power to act; Price v. Seydel, 46 Ia. 696; or a son may be the agent of his father; Hitchcock v. Davis, 87 Mich. 629, 49 N. W. 912. Persons non compos mentis cannot be agents for others; Whart. Ag. § 15 (but see Ewell's Evans, Agency *10; 4 Exch. 7; S. C. Ewell, Lead. Cas. on Disabilities 614; as to cases when one deals with a lunatic, not knowing of his lunacy; see, also, First Nat. Bank v. Hart, 55 Ill. 62; Wilder v. Weakley's Estate, 34 Ind. 181; Young v. Stevens, 48 N. H. 133, 2 Am. Rep. 202, 97 Am. Dec. 592; Gibson v. Soper, 6 Gray [Mass.] 279, 66 Am. Dec. 414; Henry v. Fine, 23 Ark. 417; Somers v. Pumphrey, 24 Ind. 238; Matthiessen & Weichers Refining Co. v. McMahon's Adm'r, 38 N. J. L. 536; 4 Q. B. D. 661; nor can a person act as agent in a transaction where he has an adverse interest or employment; 11 Cl. & F. 714; Walker v. Palmer, 24 Ala. (N. S.) 358; Bentley v. Ins. Co., 19 Barb. (N. Y.) 595; Rice v. Wood, 113 Mass. 133, 18 Am. Rep. 459; Scribner v. Collier, 40 Mich. 375, 29 Am. Rep. 541; Bell v. McConnell, 37 Ohio St. 396, 41 Am. Rep. 528; and whenever the agent holds a fiduciary relation, he cannot contract with the same general binding force with his principal as when such a relation does not exist; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. §§ 308, 328; 4 M. & C. 134; Chamberlain v. Harrod, 5 Greenl. (Me.) 420; Copeland v. Ins. Co., 6 Pick. (Mass.) 198; Ringo v. Binns, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 269, 9 L. Ed. 420.

Extent of Authority. The authority of the agent, unless the contrary clearly appears, is presumed to include all the necessary and usual means of executing it with effect; 2 H. Bla. 618; Rogers v. Kneeland, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 218; Peck v. Harriott, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 146, 9 Am. Dec. 415; Denman v. Bloomer, 11 Ill. 177; Valentine v. Piper, 22 Pick. (Mass.)

85, 33 Am. Dec. 715; Hit-tuk-ho-Mi v. Watts, 7 Smedes & M. (Pa.) 363, 45 Am. Dec. 308; Goodale v. Wheeler, 11 N. H. 424; Bradford v. Bush, 10 Ala. 386; Huntley v. Mathias, 90 N. C. 101, 47 Am. Rep. 516; Benninghoff v. Ins. Co., 93 N. Y. 495. Where, however, the whole authority is conferred by a written instrument, its nature and extent must be ascertained from the instrument itself, and cannot be enlarged by parol evidence; 5 B. & Ald. 204; Schimmelpennich v. Bayard, 1 Pet. (U. S.) 264, 7 L. Ed. 138; State v. Bank, 45 Mo. 528; and parol evidence cannot be used to contradict the writing; Bish. Cont. § 169. As to the authority of joint agents, see supra.

Duties and Liabilities. The particular obligations of an agent vary according to the nature, terms, and end of his employment; 2 Id. Raym. 517. He is bound to execute the orders of his principal whenever, for a valuable consideration, he has undertaken to perform them; Allen v. Suydam, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 321, 32 Am. Dec. 555. When his authority is limited by instructions, it is his duty to adhere faithfully to those instructions; 3 B. & P. 75; Rundle v. Moore, 3 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 36; Wilson v. Wilson, 26 Pa. 394; Fowler v. Colt, 25 N. J. Eq. 202; Lee v. Clements, 48 Ga. 128; Brakeley v. Tuttle, 3 W. Va. 133; Thornton v. Boyden, 31 Ill. 200; but cases of extreme necessity and unforeseen emergency constitute exceptions to this rule; Forrestier v. Bordman, 1 Story 45, Fed. Cas. No. 4,945; Wilson v. Wilson, 26 Pa. 394; 4 Campb. 83; Milbank v. Dennistoun, 21 N. Y. 386; Goodwillie v. McCarthy, 45 Ill. 186; and where the agent is required to do an illegal or an immoral act; 6 C. Rob. Adm. 207; Armstrong v. Toler, 11 Wheat. (U. S.) 258, 6 L. Ed. 468; Brown v. Howard, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 119; Davis v. Barger, 57 Ind. 54; he may violate his instructions with impunity; Story, Ag. §§ 193, 194, 195. If he have no specific instructions, he must follow the accustomed course of the business; Burrill v. Phillips, 1 Gall. C. C. 360, Fed. Cas. No. 2,200. Where parties carry on business in name of another, they are justified in employing an attorney to defend a suit in the name of such person; Mason v. Taylor, 38 Minn. 32, 35 N. W. 474.

When the transaction may, with equal advantage to the principal, be done in two or more different ways, the agent may in general do it in either, provided a particular mode has not been prescribed to him; 1 Liverm. Ag. 103. He is to exercise the skill employed by persons of common capacity similarly engaged, and the same degree of diligence that persons of ordinary prudence are accustomed to use about their own affairs; Savage v. Birkhead, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 167; Harriman v. Stowe, 57 Mo. 93; Marsh v. Whitmore, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 178, 22 L. Ed. 482; New Orleans, J. & G. N. R. Co. v. All- britton, 38 Miss. 242, 75 Am. Dec. 98; Stewart v. Parnell, 147 Pa. 523, 23 Atl. 838; 11 M. & W. 113; Whitney v. Martine, 88 N. Y. 535; Howard v. Grover, 28 Me. 97, 48 Am. Dec. 478; Phillips v. Moir, 69 Ill. 155. It is his duty to keep his principal informed of his doings, and to give him reasonable notice of whatever may be important to his interests; 5 M. & W. 527; Forrestier v. Bordman, 1 Story 43, 56, Fed. Cas. No. 4,945; Harvey v. Turner, 4 Rawle (Pa.) 229. He is also bound to keep regular accounts, and to render his accounts to his principal at all reasonable times, without concealment or overcharge; Haas v. Damon, 9 Ia. 589; Kerfoot v. Hyman, 52 Ill. 512; Clark v. Moody, 17 Mass. 145.

As to their principals, the liabilities of agents arise from a violation of duties and obligations to them by exceeding his authority, by misconduct, or by any negligence, omission, or act by the natural result or just consequence of which the principal sustains a loss; 1 B. & Ad. 415; 6 Hare 366; Rundell v. Kalbfus, 125 Pa. 123; 17 Atl. 238; Gill v. Middleton, 105 Mass. 477, 7 Am. Rep. 548; Whitney v. Martine, 88 N. Y. 535. And joint agents who have a common interest are liable for the misconduct and omissions of each other, in violation of their duty, although the business has, in fact, been wholly transacted by one with the knowledge of the principal, and it has been privately agreed between themselves that neither shall be liable for the acts or losses of the other; 7 Taunt. 403; Snelling v. Howard, 51 N. Y. 373.

One undertaking to settle a debt for another cannot purchase it on his own account; Albertson v. Fellows, 45 N. J. Eq. 306, 17 Atl. 816; and a sale by agent of principal's property to himself is void at the option of the principal; Bank of Louisville v. Gray, 84 Ky. 565, 2 S. W. 168; De Mallagh v. De Mallagh, 77 Cal. 126, 19 Pac. 256; and a sale of land by agent to his wife is voidable; Tyler v. Sanborn, 128 Ill. 136, 21 N. E. 193, 4 L. R. A. 218, 15 Am. St. Rep. 97.

An agent of a vendor, who speculates in the subject-matter of his agency, or intentionally becomes interested in it as a purchaser, or as the agent of a purchaser, violates his contract of agency, betrays his trust, forfeits his commission, and becomes indebted to his principal for any profit made by his breach of duty; McKinley v. Williams, 74 Fed. 94, 20 C. C. A. 312. The wilful default of the agent to keep and render true accounts operates as a forfeiture of his compensation; Siple v. Stickney, 190 Mass. 43, 76 N. E. 226, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 469, and note citing cases, 112 Am. St. Rep. 309, 5 Ann. Cas. 611.

The degree of neglect which will make the agent responsible for damages varies according to the nature of the business and the relation in which he stands to his principal. The rule of the common law is, that where a person holds himself out as of a certain business, trade, or profession, and undertakes, whether gratuitously or otherwise, to perform an act which relates to his particular employment, an omission of the skill which belongs to his situation or profession is imputable to him as a fraud upon his employer; Paley, Ag. Lloyd ed. 7, note 4. But where his employment does not necessarily imply skill in the business he has undertaken, and he is to have no compensation for what he does, he will not be liable to an action if he act bona fide and to the best of his ability; 1 Liverm. Ag. 336, 339, 340. See 11 M. & W. 113.

As to third parties, generally, when a person having full authority is known to act merely for another, his acts and contracts will be deemed those of the principal only, and the agent will incur no personal responsibility; 2 Kent 629; Poll. Contr. 94; 3 P. Wms. 277; Mauri v. Heffernan, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 58; Lehman v. Feld, 37 Fed. 852. But when an agent does an act without authority, or exceeds his authority, and the want of authority is unknown to the other party, the agent will be personally responsible to the person with whom he deals; Story, Ag. § 264; 2 Taunt. 385; Meech v. Smith, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 315; Sumner v. Williams, 8 Mass. 178, 5 Am. Dec. 83. In case the agent conducts the business in his own name, for the benefit and with the property of the principal, the latter cannot escape liability for the purchase price of goods by a secret limitation on the agent's authority to purchase; Hubbard & Co. v. Ten Brook, 124 Pa. 291, 16 Atl. 817, 2 L. R. A. 823, 10 Am. St. Rep. 585; Allis v. Voigt, 90 Mich. 125, 51 N. W. 190. If the agent having original authority contract in the name of his principal, and it happen that at the time of the contract, unknown to both parties, his authority was revoked by the death of the principal, the agent will not be personally responsible; 10 M. & W. 1; but no notice of the death is necessary to relieve the estate of the principal from responsibility, those dealing with an agent assuming the risk that his authority may be terminated without notice to them; Weber v. Bridgman, 113 N. Y. 600, 21 N. E. 985.

An agent will be liable on a contract made with him when he expressly, or by implication, incurs a personal responsibility; Bell v. Teague, 85 Ala. 211, 3 South. 861; as, if he make an express warranty of title, and the like; or if, though known to act as agent, he give or accept a draft in his own name; 5 Taunt. 74; Com. v. Stow, 1 Mass. 54; Sharp v. Emmet, 5 Whart. (Pa.) 288, 34 Am. Dec. 554; Argersinger v. Macnaughton, 114 N. Y. 535, 21 N. E. 1022, 11 Am. St. Rep. 687; Florida M. & G. R. Co. v. Varnedoe, 81 Ga.

175, 7 S. E. 129; and public as well as private agents may, by a personal engagement, render themselves personally liable; Paley, Ag. 381. If he makes a contract, signs a note, or accepts a draft as "agent," without disclosing his principal, he becomes personally liable unless the person with whom he is dealing has knowledge of the character and extent of the agency or the circumstances of the transaction are sufficient to inform him; 1 Am. L. C. 766, 767; Sharpe v. Bellis, 61 Pa. 69, 100 Am. Dec. 618; Hewes v. Andrews, 12 Colo. 161, 20 Pac. 338; Jones v. Johnson, 86 Ky. 530, 6 S. W. 582; Bickford v. Bank, 42 Ill. 238, 89 Am. Dec. 436; Cobb v. Knapp, 71 N. Y. 348, 27 Am. Rep. 51; Bartlett v. Raymond, 139 Mass. 275, 30 N. E. 91; Ye Seng Co. v. Corbitt, 9 Fed. 423. In general, although a person contract as agent, yet if there be no other responsible principal to whom resort can be had, he will be personally liable; as, if a man sign a note as "guardian of A. B.," an infant, in that case neither the infant nor his property will be liable, and the agent alone will be responsible; 2 Brod. & B. 460; Duvall v. Craig, 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 45, 4 L. Ed. 180; Bryson v. Lucas, 84 N. C. 680, 37 Am. Rep. 634. The fact that a person may sue an agent in a contract made with him does not prevent suit from being brought against principal when he is discovered; Hall v. White, 123 Pa. 95, 16 Atl. 521. The case of an agent of government, acting in that capacity for the public, is an exception to this rule, even though the terms of the contract be such as might, in a case of a private nature, involve him in a personal obligation; it not being presumed that a public agent meant to bind himself individually; Paley, Ag. 376, 377; and see 5 B. & Ald. 34; Hodgson v. Dexter, 1 Cra. (U. S.) 345, 2 L. Ed. 130; Knight v. Clark, 48 N. J. L. 22, 2 Atl. 780, 57 Am. Rep. 534. Masters of ships, though known to contract for the owners of the ships and not for themselves, are liable for the contracts they make for repairs, unless they negative their responsibility by the express terms of the contract; Leonard v. Huntington, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 298; James v. Bixby, 11 Mass. 34. As a general rule, the agent of a person resident in a foreign country is personally liable upon all contracts made by him for his employer, whether he describe himself in the contract as agent or not, this being the usage of trade, and it being presumed that the credit was given to him and not to his principal; L. R. 9 Q. B. 572; Miller v. Lea, 35 Md. 396, 6 Am. Dec. 417; Kirkpatrick v. Stainer, 22 Wend. (N. Y.) 244; Rogers v. Marsh, 33 Me. 106; In re Merrick's Estate, 5 W. & S. (Pa.) 9; but this presumption may be rebutted by proof of a contrary agreement; 11 Ad. & E. 589, 594, 595; and does not apply to agents in a different state within the United States; Vawter v. Baker, 23 Ind. 63. An agent for a foreign principal now stands upon the same grounds as those acting for domestic employers; Oelricks v. Ford, 23 How. (U. S.) 49, 16 L. Ed. 534; L. R. 9 Q. B. 572.

An agent is personally responsible where money has been paid to him for the use of his principal under such circumstances that the party paying it becomes entitled to recall it. In such cases, as long as the money has not been paid over by the agent, nor his situation altered, as by giving his principal fresh credit upon the faith of it, it may be recovered from the agent; 3 M. & S. 344; Hearsey v. Prunyn, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 179; and if, in receiving the money, the agent was a wrong-doer, he will not be exempted from liability by payment to his principal; 1 Campb. 396. If his principal was not entitled to it, but the agent pays it to him after notice not to do so, the agent is liable therefor; Carter v. Stork, 63 Hun 636, 18 N. Y. Supp. 470.

With regard to the liability of agents to third persons for torts, there is a distinction between acts of misfeasance or positive wrongs, and nonfeasances or mere omissions of duty. In the former case, the agent is personally liable to third persons, although authorized by his principal; 1 B. & P. 410; Clark v. Lovering, 37 Minn. 120, 33 N. W. 776; Berghoff v. McDonald, 87 Ind. 549; Crane v. Onderdonk, 67 Barb. (N. Y.) 47; Weber v. Weber, 47 Mich. 569, 11 N. W. 389; Hedden v. Griffin, 136 Mass. 229, 49 Am. Rep. 25; Reed v. Peterson, 91 Ill. 297; but see Ewing v. Shaw, 83 Ala. 333; while in the latter he is, in general, solely liable to his principal; Story, Ag. § 308; Delaney v. Rochereau, 34 La. Ann. 1123, 44 Am. Rep. 456; Carey v. Rochereau, 16 Fed. 87; Campbell v. Portland Sugar Co., 62 Me. 552, 16 Am. Rep. 503.

A principal is liable civilly for the neglect, fraud, deceit, or other wrongful act of his general agent, though personally innocent of the fraud; Robinson v. Walton, 58 Mo. 380; Jewett v. Carter, 132 Mass. 335; Witherwax v. Riddle, 121 Ill. 140, 13 N. E. 545; Upton v. Tribilcock, 91 U. S. 45, 23 L. Ed. 203; Busch v. Wilcox, 82 Mich. 315, 46 N. W. 940.

But this rule does not apply to special agents; Rice v. Sanders, 152 Mass. 112, 24 N. E. 1079, 8 L. R. A. 315, 23 Am. St. Rep. 804. If a special agent makes false representations on the subject of the transaction in order to influence the other party to enter into the contract, the principal is responsible for the deceit; Sandford v. Handy, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 260; Webb's Poll. Torts 383.

Where the principal receives and retains the benefit of a contract obtained through the fraud of his agent, he is liable to an action for deceit; Mundorff v. Wickersham, 63 Pa. 87, 3 Am. Rep. 531.

For an independent fraud by an agent not within the scope of his agency, the principal is not responsible; Webb's Poll. Torts 384, citing Fellows v. Com'rs, 36 Barb. (N. Y.) 655.

As to misrepresentations by an agent, the rules are thus given in Poll. Torts 384: Where the principal knows the representation to be false and authorizes the making of it, he is clearly liable; the agent is liable or not according as he does or does not himself believe the representation to be true. Where the principal knows the contrary of the representation to be true and it is made by the agent in the general course of his employment, but without specific authority, if the agent does not believe his representation to be true, he commits a fraud in the interest of the principal and the principal is liable; 6 M. & W. 373. If the agent does believe the representation to be true, an action would probably lie against the principal; though see 14 App. Ca. 337. In the latter class of cases there is no doubt that the other contracting party may rescind; Poll. Torts 384. See DECEIT.

The principal and agent are both liable where a tortious act was committed by the agent; Block v. Haseltine, 3 Ind. App. 491, 29 N. E. 937.

Rights and Privileges. As to his principal, an agent is ordinarily entitled to compensation for his services, commonly called a commission, which is regulated either by special agreement, by the usage of trade, or by the presumed intention of the parties; 8 Bingh. 65; Martin v. Roberts, 36 Fed. 217. In general, he must have faithfully performed the whole service or duty before he can claim any commissions; 1 C. & P. 384; Sea v. Carpenter, 16 Ohio, 412. The right to commissions accrues on orders for the sale of articles where there is absence of warranty as to responsibility of parties giving the orders, when they are accepted and the goods forwarded; Steinbach v. Carriage Co., 37 Fed. 760. The right to commissions accrues where the agent has a purchaser who accepts property and is ready to perform a contract of sale, although the principal refuse to be bound by authority of agent; Witherell v. Murphy, 147 Mass. 417, 18 N. E. 215; Flood v. Leonard, 44 Ill. App. 113. Also if vendor releases the purchaser from his obligation; Granger v. Griffin, 43 Ill. App. 421. He may forfeit his right to commissions by gross unskilfulness, by gross negligence, or gross misconduct, in the course of his agency; 3 Campb. 451; Dodge v. Tileston, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 328; as, by not keeping regular accounts; 8 Ves. 48; Clark v. Moody, 17 Mass. 145; by violating his instructions; by wilfully confounding his own property with that of his principal; 5 B. & P. 136; Woodward v. Suydam, 11 Ohio, 363; by fraudulently misapplying the funds of his principal; Chit. Com. L. 222; by embarking the property in illegal transactions; or by doing anything which amounts to a betrayal of his trust; Segar v. Parrish, 20 Gratt. (Va.) 672; Vennum v. Gregory, 21 Ia. 326; L. R. 9 Q. B. 480; Walker v. Osgood, 98 Mass. 348, 93 Am. Dec. 168; Kerfoot v. Hyman, 52 Ill. 512; Jones v. Hoyt, 25 Conn. 386; Hobson v. Peake, 44 La. Ann. 383, 10 South. 762.

See REAL ESTATE BROKER.

The agent has a right to be reimbursed his advances, expenses, and disbursements reasonably and in good faith incurred and paid, without any default on his part, in the course of the agency; 5 B. & C. 141; Warren v. Hewitt, 45 Ga. 501; Maitland v. Martin, 86 Pa. 120; Searing v. Butler, 69 Ill. 575. And also to be paid interest on such advancements and disbursements whenever it may fairly be presumed to have been stipulated for, or to be due to him; 3 Campb. 467; Meech v. Smith, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 315; Delaware Ins. Co. v. Delaunie, 3 Binn. (Pa.) 295. But he cannot recover for advances and disbursements made in the prosecution of an illegal transaction, though sanctioned by or even undertaken at the request of his principal; 3 B. & C. 639; Coventry v. Barton, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 142, 8 Am. Dec. 376; and he may forfeit all remedy against his principal even for his advances and disbursements made in the course of legal transactions by his own gross negligence, fraud, or misconduct; Williams v. Littlefield, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 362; Dodge v. Tileston, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 328; Godman v. Meixsel, 65 Ind. 32; nor will he be entitled to be reimbursed his expenses after he has notice that his authority has been revoked; 2 Term 113; 3 Brown, Ch. 314.

The agent may enforce the payment of a debt due him from his principal on account of the agency, either by an action at law or by a bill in equity, according to the nature of the case; and he may also have the benefit of his claim by way of set-off to an action of his principal against him, provided the claim is not for uncertain damages, and is in other respects of such a nature as to be the subject of a set-off; 4 Burr. 2133; Corlies v. Cumming, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 181; Beckwith v. Sibley, 11 Pick. (Mass.) 482. He may recover actual damages sustained in an action brought at the end of the term for breach of contract; Howard v. Daly, 61 N. Y. 362, 19 Am. Rep. 285; Richardson v. Machine Works, 78 Ind. 422, 41 Am. Rep. 584; 15 Ad. & El. N. S. 576; James v. Allen Co., 44 Ohio St. 226, 6 N. E. 246, 58 Am. Rep. 821. He has also a lien for all his necessary commissions, expenditures, advances, and services in and about the property intrusted to his agency, which right is in many respects analogous to the right of set-off; Wilson v. Martin, 40 N. H. 88; Lovett v. Brown, 40 N. H. 511; United States Exp. Co. v. Haines, 67 Ill. 139; Nevan v. Roup, 8 Ia. 211; but it is only a particular lien; Adams v. Clark, 9 Cush. (Mass.) 215, 57 Am. Dec.

41; 8 H. L. Cas. 838; McKenzie v. Nevius, 22 Me. 138, 38 Am. Dec. 291; Nevan v. Roup, 8 Ia. 207; Farrington v. Meek, 30 Mo. 581, 77 Am. Dec. 627; Mathias v. Sellers, 86 Pa. 486, 27 Am. Rep. 723. Factors have a general lien upon the goods of their principal in their possession, and upon the price of such as have been lawfully sold by them, and the securities given therefor; 2 Kent 640; McGraft v. Rugee, 60 Wis. 406, 19 N. W. 530, 50 Am. Rep. 378; Weed v. Adams, 37 Conn. 378; Eaton v. Truesdail, 52 Ill. 307. There are other cases in which a general lien exists in regard to particular classes of agents, either from usage, from a special agreement of the parties, or from the peculiar habit of dealing between them: such, for example, as insurance brokers, bankers, common carriers, attorneys-at-law, and solicitors in equity, packers, calico-printers, fullers, dyers, and wharfingers; Story, Ag. §§ 379-384. See LIEN.

As to third persons, in general, a mere agent who has no beneficial interest in a contract which he has made on behalf of his principal cannot support an action thereon; Baltimore & P. Steamboat Co. v. Atkins, 22 Pa. 522. An agent acquires a right to maintain an action upon a contract against third persons in the following cases: First, when the contract is in writing, and made expressly with the agent, and imports to be a contract personally with him; as, for example, when a promissory note is given to the agent, as such, for the benefit of the principal, and the promise is to pay the money to the agent eo nomine; in such case the agent is the legal plaintiff, and alone can bring an action; Dacey, Parties 134; Druckenmiller v. Young, 27 Pa. 97; Borrowscale v. Bosworth, 99 Mass. 378; Albany & Rensselaer Co. v. Lundberg, 121 U. S. 451, 7 Sup. Ct. 958, 30 L. Ed. 982; Ludwig v. Gillespie, 105 N. Y. 653, 11 N. E. 835; L. R. 6 Q. B. 361; and it has been held that the right of the agent in such case to sue in his own name is not confined to an express contract; thus, it has been said that one holding, as mere agent, a bill of exchange, or promissory note, indorsed in blank, or a check or note payable to bearer, may yet sue on it in his own name; Goodman & Mitchell v. Walker, 30 Ala. 482, 68 Am. Dec. 134; Pierce v. Robie, 39 Me. 205, 63 Am. Dec. 614; Buffum v. Chadwick, 8 Mass. 103. Second, the agent may maintain an action against third persons on contracts made with them, whenever he is the only known and ostensible principal, and consequently, in contemplation of law, the real contracting party; Story, Ag. § 393; Dacey, Parties 136-138; Gilpin v. Howell, 5 Pa. 41, 45 Am. Dec. 720; 5 B. & Ad. 389; as, if an agent sell goods of his principal in his own name, as though he were the owner, he is entitled to sue the buyer in his own name; Beebe v. Robert, 12 Wend. (N. Y.) 413, 27

Am. Dec. 132; 5 M. & S. 833; U. S. Tel. Co. v. Gildersleve, 29 Md. 232, 96 Am. Dec. 519; 4 Bing. 2; and, on the other hand, if he so buy, he may enforce the contract by action. The renunciation of the agent's contract by the principal does not necessarily preclude the agent from maintaining an action, but he will still be entitled to sue the party with whom he has contracted for any damages which he may have sustained by reason of a breach of contract by the latter; 2 B. & Ald. 962. Third, the right of the agent to sue in his own name exists when, by the usage of trade or the general course of business, he is authorized to act as owner, or as a principal contracting party, although his character as agent is known; Story, Ag. § 393. Fourth, where the agent has made a contract in the subject-matter of which he has a special interest or property, he may enforce his contract by action, whether he held himself out at the time to be acting in his own behalf or not; Story, Ag. § 393; Bryan v. Wilson, 27 Ala. 215; Dacey, Parties 139; Baltimore & P. Steamboat Co. v. Atkins & Co., 22 Pa. 522; Porter v. Raymond, 53 N. H. 519; Morrill v. De la Granja, 99 Mass. 383; for example, an auctioneer who sells the goods of another may maintain an action for the price, though the sale be on the premises of the owner of the goods, because the auctioneer has a possession coupled with an interest; 1 H. Bla. 81, 84, 85. But this right of the agent to bring an action in his own name is subordinate to the rights of the principal, who may, unless in particular cases where the agent has a lien or some other vested right, bring a suit himself, and suspend or extinguish the right of the agent; 5 M. & Sel. 385; Morrill v. De la Granja, 99 Mass. 383; Ludwig v. Gillespie, 105 N. Y. 653, 11 N. E. 835.

An agent may maintain an action of trespass or trover against third persons for injuries affecting the possession of his principal's property; and when he has been induced by the fraud of a third person to sell or buy goods for his principal, and he has sustained a personal loss, he may maintain an action against such third person for such wrongful act, deceit, or fraud; Story, Ag. §§ 414, 415; 9 B. & C. 208; 3 Campb. 320; 1 B. & Ald. 59. But his remedy for mere torts is confined to cases like the foregoing, where his "right of possession is injuriously invaded, or where he incurs a personal responsibility, or loss, or damage in consequence of the tort"; Story, Ag. § 416.

Gifts procured by agents and purchases made by them from their principals should be scrutinized with vigilant and close scrutiny; Ralston v. Turpin, 129 U. S. 663, 9 Sup. Ct. 420, 32 L. Ed. 747.

Sub-agents. A mere agent cannot, generally, appoint a sub-agent, so as to render the latter directly responsible to the principal; 9 Co. 75; 2 M. & S. 298, 301; Appeal of Locke, 72 Pa. 491, 13 Am. Rep. 716; Lyon v. Jerome, 26 Wend. (N. Y.) 485, 37 Am. Dec. 271; Warner v. Martin, 11 How. (U. S.) 209, 13 L. Ed. 667; Gillis v. Bailey, 21 N. H. 149; Connor v. Parker, 114 Mass. 331; but may when such is the usage of trade or is understood by the parties to be the mode in which the particular business might be done; 1 M. & S. 484; Laussatt v. Lippincott, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 386, 9 Am. Dec. 440; Bodine v. Fire Ins. Co., 51 N. Y. 117, 10 Am. Rep. 566; Inhabitants of Buckland v. Inhabitants of Conway, 16 Mass. 396; Smith v. Sublett, 28 Tex. 163; or when necessity requires it; Dorchester & Milton Bank v. Bank, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 177; Johnson v. Cunningham, 1 Ala. 249; Gray v. Murray, 3 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 167; and also if agent is given all the powers the principal might have exercised; Meyer v. Montgomery, 87 Mich. 278, 49 N. W. 616; but not if the agency is of such a nature as to be personal to the agent; Drum v. Harrison, 83 Ala. 384, 3 South. 715; or if it requires special skill, discretion, or judgment; Emerson v. Hat Mfg. Co., 12 Mass. 237, 7 Am. Dec. 66; Planters' & Farmers' Nat. Bank v. Bank, 75 N. C. 534; Pendall v. Rench, 4 McLean 259, Fed. Cas. No. 10,917. But the power to appoint a sub-agent may be implied, either from the terms of the original authority, from the ordinary custom of trade, or from the fact that it is indispensable in order to accomplish the end; Davis v. King, 66 Conn. 465, 34 Atl. 107, 50 Am. St. Rep. 104.

A sub-agent is generally invested with the same rights, and incurs the same liabilities in regard to his immediate employers, as if the latter were the real principal. To this general rule there are some exceptions: for example, where, by the general usage of trade or the agreement of the parties, sub-agents are ordinarily or necessarily employed to accomplish the ends of the agency, there, if the agency is avowed and the credit is exclusively given to the principal, the intermediate agent may be entirely exempted from all liability to the sub-agent. The agent, however, will be liable to the sub-agent unless such exclusive credit has been given, although the real principal or superior may also be liable; Story, Ag. § 386. When the agent employs a sub-agent to do the whole or any part of the business of the agency, without the knowledge or consent of his principal, either express or implied, the latter will only be entitled to recover from his immediate employer, and his sole responsibility is also to him. In this case the superior or real principal is not responsible to the sub-agent, because there is no privity between them; Story, Ag. §§ 13, 217, 387.

Where, by an express or implied agreement of the parties, or by the usages of trade, a sub-agent is to be employed, a privity exists between the principal and the sub-agent, and the latter may justly maintain his claim for compensation both against the principal and his immediate employer, unless exclusive credit is given to one of them; and in that case his remedy is limited to that party; Mech. Ag. 690; 6 Taunt. 147.

A sub-agent employed without the knowledge or consent of the principal has his remedy against his immediate employer only, with regard to whom he will have the same rights, obligations, and duties as if the agent were the sole principal. But where sub-agents are ordinarily or necessarily employed in the business of the agency, the sub-agent can maintain his claim for compensation both against the principal and the immediate employer, unless the agency be avowed and exclusive credit be given to the principal, in which case his remedy will be limited to the principal; Dubois v. Canal Co., 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 285; Laussatt v. Lippincott, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 386, 9 Am. Dec. 440; Smith v. Lewis, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 157, 3 Am. Dec. 469.

A sub-agent will be clothed with a lien against the principal for services performed and disbursements made by him on account of the sub-agency, whenever a privity exists between them; Story, Ag. § 388; 2 Campb. 218, 597; Lincoln v. Battelle, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 475; McKenzie v. Nevius, 22 Me. 138, 38 Am. Dec. 291. If he is appointed without the express or implied authority of the principal he can acquire no lien; 4 Campb. 348. He will acquire a lien against the principal if the latter ratifies his acts, or seeks to avail himself of the proceeds of the sub-agency, though employed by the agent without the knowledge or consent of the principal; 2 Campb. 218, 597, 598; 4 id. 348, 353; McKenzie v. Nevius, 22 Me. 138, 38 Am. Dec. 291. He may avail himself of his general lien against the principal by way of substitution to the rights of his immediate employer to the extent of the lien of the latter; 2 M. & S. 298. And there are cases in which a sub-agent who has no knowledge or reason to believe that his immediate employer is acting as an agent for another will have a lien on the property for his general balance; Story, Ag. § 390; 4 Campb. 60, 349, 353.

Where the sub-agents are appointed, if the agent has either express or implied authority to appoint a sub-agent, he will not ordinarily be responsible for the acts or omissions of the substitute; 2 B. & P. 438; Waite v. Leggett, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 198, 18 Am. Dec. 441 (but only for negligence in choosing the substitute; Whart. Negl. § 277; Mechem, Ag. § 197); and this is especially true of public officers; 15 East 384; U. S. v. Kirkpatrick, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 720, 6 L. Ed. 199; Seymour v. Van Slyck, 8 Wend. (N. Y.) 403; Hutchins v. Brackett, 22 N. H. 252, 53 Am. Dec. 248; Conwell v. Voorhees, 13 Ohio 523, 42 Am. Dec. 206; M'Millan v. Eastman, 4 Mass. 378; Schroyer v. Lynch, 8 Watts (Pa.) 455; but the sub-agent will himself be directly responsible to the principal for his own negligence or misconduct; Taber v. Perrot, 2 Gall. C. C. 565, Fed. Cas. No. 13,721; Waite v. Leggett, 8 Cow. (N. Y.) 198, 18 Am. Dec. 441.

Termination of the Agency. In general, an authority is revocable from its nature, unless it is given for a valuable consideration, or is part of a security, or coupled with an interest; Story, Ag. § 476; 2 Kent 643; Kent v. Kent, 2 Mass. 342; Barr v. Schroeder, 32 Cal. 609; Chambers v. Seay, 73 Ala. 372; Attrill v. Patterson, 58 Md. 226. "By the phrase 'coupled with an interest' (used with reference to a power of attorney) is not meant an interest in the exercise of the power, but an interest in the property on which the power is to operate;" quoted from Hunt v. Rousmanier, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 174, 5 L. Ed. 589, in Taylor v. Burns, 203 U. S. 120, 27 Sup. Ct. 40, 51 L. Ed. 116.

An authority to sell on commission is not coupled with an interest but is revocable; Chambers v. Seay, 73 Ala. 372; Walker v. Denison, 86 Ill. 142; Blackstone v. Buttermore, 53 Pa. 266; and the fact that an authority is expressed as being irrevocable will not make it so; Walker v. Denison, 86 Ill. 142; Blackstone v. Buttermore, 53 Pa. 266; Frink v. Roe, 70 Cal. 296, 11 Pac. 820; Attrill v. Patterson, 58 Md. 226. It may generally be revoked at any moment before the actual exercise of it; Story, Ag. §§ 463, 465; and although the agent is appointed under seal, it has been held that his authority may be revoked by parol; Story, Ag. § 463; Copeland v. Ins. Co., 6 Pick. (Mass.) 198. The revocation may be express, as by the direct countermand of the principal, or it may be implied. The death of the principal determines the authority; Davis v. Bank, 46 Vt. 728; Saltmarsh v. Smith, 32 Ala. 404; Johnson v. Wilcox, 25 Ind. 182.

The authority may be renounced by the agent before any part of it is executed, or when it is in part executed; but in either case, if the agency is founded on a valuable consideration, the agent, by renouncing it, makes himself liable for the damages which his principal may sustain thereby; Story, Ag. § 478; Story, Bailm. § 202. If by the express terms of the commission the authority of the agent be limited to a certain period, it will manifestly cease so soon as that period has expired. The authority of the agent is ipso facto determined by the completion of the purpose for which it was given. If the agency is indefinite in duration, the agent may, upon giving reasonable notice, sever the relation at any stage without liability to the principal; Barrows v. Cushway, 37 Mich. 481; Coffin v. Landis, 46 Pa. 426.

The termination of the agency may be by a countermand of authority on the part of the principal, at the mere will of the principal; and this countermand may, in general, be effected at any time before the contract is completed; Story, Ag. §§ 463, 465; Barr v. Reitz, 53 Pa. 256; Whart. Ag. § 94; Willcox & Gibbs Sewing Mach. Co. v. Ewing, 141 U. S. 627, 12 Sup. Ct. 94, 35 L. Ed. 882; even though in terms irrevocable, provided there is no valid consideration, and the agent has not an interest in the execution of the authority entrusted to him; Story, Ag. §§ 476, 477; but when a contract has been made with contingent compensation for agency it cannot be revoked; Warren Chemical & Mfg. Co. v. Holbrook, 118 N. Y. 586, 23 N. E. 908, 16 Am. St. Rep. 788. But when the authority or power is coupled with an interest, or when it is given for a valuable consideration, or when it is a part of a security, then, unless there is an express stipulation that it shall be revocable, it cannot be revoked; Story, Ag. §§ 476, 477; 2 Kent 643, 644; Hunt v. Rousmanier, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 174, 5 L. Ed. 589; Hutchins v. Hebbard, 34 N. Y. 24; Hartley, Appeal of, 53 Pa. 212, 91 Am. Dec. 207; Oregon & W. M. Sav. Bk. v. Mortg. Co., 35 Fed. 22. When the authority has been partially executed by the agent, if it admit of severance, or of being revoked as to the part which is unexecuted, it may be revoked as to that part; but if it be not thus severable, and the agent by its execution in part will sustain damage, it cannot be revoked as to the unexecuted part unless the agent be fully indemnified; Story, Ag. § 466. This revocation may be by a formal declaration publicly made known, by an informal writing, or by parol; or it may be implied from circumstances, as, if another person be appointed to do the same act; Story, Ag. § 474; Morgan v. Stell, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 305; Copeland v. Ins. Co., 6 Pick. (Mass.) 198.

Though the agent hold a power of attorney under seal which may be revoked by parol; Brookshire v. Brookshire, 30 N. C. 74, 47 Am. Dec. 341. It takes effect from the time it is made known, and not before, both as regards the agent and third persons; Story, Ag. § 470; 2 Kent 644; Poll. Contr. 93; Beard v. Kirk, 11 N. H. 397; Diversy v. Kellogg, 44 Ill. 114, 92 Am. Dec. 154; Hatch v. Coddington, 95 U. S. 48, 24 L. Ed. 339; Fellows v. Steamboat Co., 38 Conn. 197. When one is not notified of revocation of agent's authority, he is justified in acting upon the presumption of its continuance; Johnson v. Christian, 128 U. S. 374, 9 Sup. Ct. 87, 32 L. Ed. 412; Quinn v. Dresbach, 75 Cal. 159, 16 Pac. 762, 7 Am. St. Rep. 138; Smith v. Watson, 82 Va. 712, 1 S. E. 96.

The determination may be by the renunciation of the agent either before or after a part of the authority is executed; Story, Ag. § 478; it should be observed, however, that if the renunciation be made after the authority has been partly executed, the agent by renouncing it becomes liable for the damages which may thereby be sustained by his principal; Story, Ag. § 478; Jones, Bailm. 101; Thorne v. Deas, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 84; or by operation of law, in various ways. And the agency may terminate by the expiration of the period during which it was to exist and to have effect; as, if an agency be created to endure a year, or until the happening of a contingency, it becomes extinct at the end of the year, or on the happening of the contingency; Story, Ag. § 480.

The determination may result from the marriage of a principal, if a feme sole; Brown v. Miller, 46 Mo. App. 1; the insanity of the principal; Davis v. Lane, 10 N. H. 156; Hunt v. Rousmanier, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 174, 5 L. Ed. 589; his bankruptcy; Story, Ag. § 482; 16 East 382; Baldw. C. C. 38; or death of the principal which usually revokes the authority to act for him or for his estate; Long v. Thayer, 150 U. S. 520, 14 Sup. Ct. 189, 37 L. Ed. 1167; Lowrie v. Salz, 75 Cal. 349, 17 Pac. 232. Where an agent by the sudden death of his principal without known heirs is left in sole charge of his principal's estate, he is entitled to compensation for services in connection with the estate until the persons entitled to the property are found and their rights established in the orphans' court; In re Bryant's Estate, 180 Pa. 192, 36 Atl. 738.

As to revocation of agency by death, see 14 Harv. L. Rev. 562. In England and most of the States this revocation is instantaneous, even as to third parties without notice; L. R. 4 C. P. 744; Turnan v. Temke, 84 Ill. 286; 10 M. & W. 1; Gale v. Tappan, 12 N. H. 145, 37 Am. Dec. 194; Scruggs v. Driver's Ex'rs, 31 Ala. 274; Cleveland v. Williams, 29 Tex. 204, 94 Am. Dec. 274.

No Notice Required. No notice is necessary to relieve the estate of the principal of responsibility, even on contracts into which the agent has entered with third persons, who are ignorant of principal's death; Weber v. Bridgman, 113 N. Y. 600, 21 N. E. 985; if an order is sent by mail the day before principal died and is filled in ignorance of the death, the contract is binding as of the date on which the order was mailed; Davis v. Davis, 93 Ala. 173, 9 South. 736; but notice is necessary in Pennsylvania, Missouri, and, in some cases, in Ohio; Cassidy v. McKenzie, 4 W. & S. (Pa.) 282, 39 Am. Dec. 76; Carriger's Adm'r v. Whittington's Adm'r, 26 Mo. 313, 72 Am. Dec. 212; Ish v. Crane, 8 Ohio St. 520; and under the civil law; Whart. Ag. § 101; but death does not revoke when the authority is coupled with an interest; Blackstone v. Buttermore, 53 Pa. 266; 4 Campb. 325; Hunt v. Rousmanier, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 174, 5 L. Ed. 589; or from the insanity; Story, Ag. § 487; bankruptcy; 5 B. & Ald. 27, 31; or death of the agent; 2 Kent 643; though not necessarily by marriage or bankruptcy; Story, Ag. §§ 485, 486; 3 Burr. 1471; from the extinction of the subject-matter of the agency, or of the principal's power over it, or by the complete execution of the trust; Story, Ag. 499.

As to revocation by lunacy of principal, see 4 Q. B. D. 661; s. c. 19 Am. L. Reg. 106, with Judge Bennett's note reviewing cases. As to revocation by death of principal, see id. 401.

PRINCIPAL CHALLENGE. See CHALLENGE.

PRINCIPAL CONTRACT. One entered into by both parties on their own account or in the several qualities they assume.

PRINCIPAL OBLIGATION. That obligation which arises from the principal object of the engagement which has been contracted between the parties. It differs from an accessory obligation. For example, in the sale of a horse, the principal obligation of the seller is to deliver the horse; the obligation to take care of him till delivered is an accessory engagement. Pothier, Obl. n. 182. By principal obligation is also understood the engagement of one who becomes bound for himself, and not for the benefit of another. Pothier, Obl. n. 186.

PRINCIPAL PLACE OF BUSINESS. See FOREIGN CORPORATIONS.

PRINCIPLES. By this term is understood truths or propositions so clear that they cannot be proved nor contradicted unless by propositions which are still clearer.

That which constitutes the essence of a body or its constituent parts. 8 Term 107. See Parker v. Stiles, 5 McLean 63, Fed. Cas. No. 10,749; PATENT.

They are of two kinds: one when the principle is universal, and these are known as axioms or maxims: as, no one can transmit rights which he has not; the accessory follows the principal, etc. The other class are simply called first principles. These principles have known marks by which they may always be recognized. Those are—first, that they are so clear that they cannot be proved by anterior and more manifest truths; second, that they are almost universally received; third, that they are so strongly impressed on our minds that we conform ourselves to them whatever may be our avowed opinions.

First principles have their source in the sentiment of our own existence, and that which is in the nature of things. A principle of law is a rule or axiom which is founded in the nature of the subject, and it exists before it is expressed in the form of a rule. Domat, Lois Civiles, liv. prél. t. 1, s. 2; Toullier, tit. prél. n. 17. The right to defend one's self continues as long as an unjust attack, was a principle before it was ever decided by a court: so that a court does not establish but recognizes principles of law.

PRINT. The word includes most of the forms of figures or characters or representations, colored or uncolored, that may be impressed on a yielding surface. Arthur v. Moller, 97 U. S. 367, 24 L. Ed. 1046; U. S. v. Harman, 38 Fed. 829.

PRINTED FORMS. A court in construing a contract will look at what was originally the printed form and at what was introduced in writing to alter that printed form; 2 C. & M. 539. Words written in a printed form, such as an insurance policy, will in case of doubt have a greater effect than the printed words; 22 Q. B. D. 501.

See INTERPRETATION.

PRINTING. The art of impressing letters: the art of making books or papers by impressing legible characters.

In patent cases in the circuit court, the taxable costs do not include expenditures for printing, charts, models, exhibits, printed records, briefs, copies of testimony, and the like; Kelly v. R. Co., 83 Fed. 183; but the practice varies in different circuits.

See LIBEL; LIBERTY OF THE PRESS; PRESS.

PRIORITY. Precedence; going before.

He who has the precedence in time has the advantage in right, is the maxim of the law; not that time, considered barely in itself, can make any such difference, but because, the whole power over a thing being secured to one person, this bars all others from obtaining a title to it afterwards; 1 Fonbl. Eq. 320.

In the payment of debts, the United States is entitled to priority when the debtor is insolvent or dies and leaves an insolvent estate. The priority was declared to extend to cases in which the insolvent debtor had made a voluntary assignment of all his property, or in which his effects had been attached as an absconding or absent debtor, on which an act of legal bankruptcy had been committed; 1 Kent 243.

Among common creditors, he who has the oldest lien has the preference,—it being a maxim both of law and equity, qui prior est tempore potior est jure; Berry v. Ins. Co., 2 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 608. See INSOLVENCY.

But in respect to privileged debts, arising ex contractu, existing against a ship or vessel under the general admiralty law, the order of priority is most generally that of the inverse order of their creation,—thus reversing the order of priority generally adopted in the courts of common law. The ground of this inversion of the rule is that the services performed at the latest hour are more efficacious in bringing the vessel and her freightage to their final destination. Each foregoing incumbrance is, therefore, actually benefited by means of the succeeding incumbrance; 16 Bost. Law Rep. 1, 264;

17 id. 421. See MARITIME LIENS; ASSETS; LIEN.

PRISAGE. An ancient duty or right of the crown of one-tenth of the amount of wine carried by the ships of merchants, aliens, or denizens. 3 Bulstr. 1.

PRISEL EN AUTER LIEU. A taking in another place. A plea in abatement to a writ of replevin.

PRISON. A public building for confining persons, either to insure their production, in court, as accused persons and witnesses, or to punish them as criminals.

The root is French, as is shown by the Norman prisons, prisoners; Kelham, Norm. Fr. Dict.; and Fr. prisons, prisons. Britton, c. 11, de Prisons. Originally it was distinguished from gaol, which was a place for confinement, not for punishment. See Jacob, Dict. Gaol. But at present there is no such distinction.

The United States has no prisons. The joint resolution of September 3, 1789, recommended to the states to authorize state prisons to receive United States prisoners, the latter paying the states for the service. In the absence of a state prison, the marshal, under the jurisdiction of the district judge, may procure a suitable place. See R. S. § 5537, 5539; Randolph v. Donaldson, 9 Cra. (U. S.) 76, 3 L. Ed. 662. A federal prisoner may be incarcerated in any of the jails of the district; Johnson v. Crawford, 154 Fed. 761.

See PENITENTIARY; GAOL; PRISONER; DETAINER; RULES.

PRISON BREAKING, or BREACH. The act by which a prisoner, by force and violence, escapes from a place where he is lawfully in custody. This is an offence at common law. This offence is to be distinguished from rescue (q. v.), which is a deliverance of a prisoner from lawful custody by a third person. 2 Bish. Cr. L. § 1065.

To constitute this offence there must be—a lawful commitment of the prisoner on criminal process; Co. 2d Inst. 589; 1 Carr. & M. 295; Com. v. Miller, 2 Ashm. (Pa.) 61; see In re Edwards, 43 N. J. L. 555, 39 Am. Rep. 610; an actual breach with force and violence of the prison, by the prisoner himself, or by others with his privity and procurement; Russ. & R. 458; the prisoner must escape; 2 Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 18, s. 12. See 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 607; 4 Bla. Com. 130; Co. 2d Inst. 500; People v. Duell, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 449; Com. v. Briggs, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 559.

A convict who has been made a "trusty" and was not confined within the prison walls is guilty of an escape if he leaves the state; Jenks v. State, 63 Ark. 312, 39 S. W. 361; and so is one who flees from the custody of a jailer while being worked on a highway; Saylor v. Com., 122 Ky. 776, 93 S. W. 48; Johnson v. State, 122 Ga. 172, 50 S. E. 65; contra, State v. King, 114 Ia. 413, 87 N. W.

282, 54 L. R. A. 853, 89 Am. St. Rep. 371, where it was held that a convict who had concealed himself in a crevice of rock in a quarry, and thereby escaped, was not guilty of breaking prison because no force was used. One may be guilty of escape after sentence and before commitment; Com. v. Briggs, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 559. It is no defense to a prosecution for escape if the defendant left a chain-gang to avoid unmerited punishment; Johnson v. State, 122 Ga. 172, 50 S. E. 65. A sheriff is not excused for a negligent escape by merely using care in keeping the prisoner; State v. Mullen, 50 Ind. 598.

PRISON LABOR. In most of the states prisoners convicted of crime are sentenced to hard labor, and in the constitution of the United States and of several of the states, the right to require the services of prisoners is secured by the exception of cases of punishment for crime from the provisions which abolish involuntary servitude.

In some states convict labor is farmed out to contractors, who thereby acquire a right in the prison and its inmates where the former is leased. The state, in order to resume its possession, must compensate the lessee as in other cases of taking private property; People v. Brooks, 16 Cal. 11. The right of the lessee, however, is subject to the pardoning power; State v. McCauley, 15 Cal. 429; and to the legislative power to modify and control the punishment: id.; Hancock v. Ewing, 55 Mo. 101. A contract by the warden of a penitentiary for the hire of convicts is substantially a contract by the state, and a bill for the specific performance of it will not lie; Comer v. Bankhead, 70 Ala. 493; Jones v. Lynds, 7 Paige (N. Y.) 301.

In some states the sale or lease of convict labor is forbidden by constitution or statute, is unlawful, unless authorized by the court before which the prisoner has been tried, and this authority cannot be given at a term other than that at which the prisoner was convicted; State v. Pearson, 100 N. C. 414, 6 S. E. 387.

As the result of labor agitation there have been attempts by legislation to forbid or regulate strictly the sale of convict-made goods. The Ohio act of May 19, 1894, forbidding any person to sell without license convict-made goods, was held unconstitutional; Arnold v. Yanders, 56 Ohio St. 417, 47 N. E. 50, 60 Am. St. Rep. 753.

An act prohibiting the use of machinery for manufacturing goods in any penal institutions of the state was held to forbid the use of machinery within the walls of prisons, even though operated by free workmen; Kempf v. Francies, 238 Pa. 320, 86 Atl. 190.

See PRISONER; HARD LABOR.

In England, by 60 & 61 Vict. c. 63, the importation of foreign prison-made goods is absolutely prohibited.

A convict may recover for injuries inflicted on him by a railroad company by negligence, where he has been hired out to the company and is under the orders of a state officer; San Antonio & A. P. R. Co. v. Gonzales, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 321, 72 S. W. 213. Where a convict was hired to a corporation, a servant of which wrongfully caused him to be whipped, the corporation is liable for the assault; Sloss-Sheffield S. & I. Co. v. Dickinson, 167 Ala. 211, 52 South. 594. Lessees of convicts are not liable to a convict for injuries due to the wrongful act of a guard or the negligence of a sub-lessee; Mason v. Hamby, 6 Ga. App. 131, 64 S. E. 569.

An act authorizing the keeper of a prison to make contracts for the labor of the prisoners does not give him power to make a contract binding upon the state beyond his term of office; Trask v. State, 32 N. J. L. 478.

Articles made by prison labor are denied entry by act of 1913.

PRISON-MADE GOODS. See PRISON LABOR.

PRISONER. One held in confinement against his will.

Lawful prisoners are either prisoners charged with crimes or for a civil liability. Those charged with crimes are either persons accused and not tried; and these are considered innocent, and are therefore entitled to be treated with as little severity as possible, consistently with the certain detention of their persons; they are entitled to their discharge on bail, except in capital cases; or those who have been convicted of crime, whose imprisonment, and the mode of treatment they experience, is intended as a punishment: these are to be treated agreeable to the requisitions of the law, and, in the United States, always with humanity. Prisoners in civil cases are persons arrested on original or mesne process, and these may generally be discharged on bail; and prisoners in execution, who cannot be discharged except under the insolvent laws.

Persons unlawfully confined are those who are not detained by virtue of some lawful, judicial, legislative, or other proceeding. They are entitled to their immediate discharge on habeas corpus. For the effect of a contract entered into by a prisoner, see 1 Salk. 402, n.; 6 Toullier 82.

"An officer may take from a prisoner any articles of property which it is presumable may furnish evidence against him, but money should not be taken unless it is in some way connected with the charge or proof against him, as he is thereby deprived of the means of making his defence. The arresting officer if he finds on the prisoner's body, or otherwise in his possession, either goods or money which he reasonably believes to be connected with the supposed crime as its fruits, or as supplying proofs relating to the transaction, may take and hold them to be disposed of as the court directs;" Stuart v. Harris, 69 Ill. App. 668. By statute in Iowa an officer making an arrest, or a jailer upon committing a person to jail, may search him and take from him all offensive weapons and property which might be used in effecting an escape, but he has no right to take from him watches and money in no way connected with crime; Commercial Exch. Bk. v. McLeod, 65 Ia. 666, 19 N. W. 329, 22 N. W. 919, 54 Am. Rep. 36, where it was said: "Where a party submits to a search of his person by an officer, it cannot be said that the search was with his consent, because he makes no physical resistance; when the search is completed and the fruits thereof are retained by the officer, it would require a strong showing to hold that this was with the consent of the prisoner."

Where money had been taken from a prisoner and an effort was made to reach it by garnishment against the officer, it was held that it was illegally taken, not being connected with the offence charged or necessary as evidence of the crime; but an application for a mandamus to compel the restoration of the money by the officer was denied because the propriety of its restoration was the subject of litigation under the attachment; Ex parte Hurn, 92 Ala. 102, 9 South. 515, 13 L. R. A. 120, 25 Am. St. Rep. 23.

Pieces of silver intended for the manufacture of counterfeit coin were held to have been properly taken by the sheriff from the person who was carrying them to the place of manufacture, and it was held that the owner could not sustain trover therefor against the sheriff; Spalding v. Preston, 21 Vt. 9, 50 Am. Dec. 68, where it was held by Redfield, J., that the base metal was properly detained both as evidence and because from its character it was, "so to speak, outlawed, and common plunder." In New Hampshire it was held that "if a prisoner has about his person money, or other articles of value, by means of which, if left in his possession, he might obtain tools or implements, or assistance, or weapons, with which to effect his escape; the officer arresting him may seize and hold such property for a time, without being liable for a conversion of the property, if he acts in good faith and for the purposes aforesaid;" Closson v. Morrison, 47 N. H. 482, 93 Am. Dec. 459.

It has been held that United States officials have no right to confiscate money found on federal prisoners, and when it has been done and the money paid into the treasury, it may be recovered back by suit against the United States under the act of March 3, 1887; U. S. v. Harris, 77 Fed. 821, 23 C. C. A. 483.

In England an officer who arrests a prisoner has no right to take from him money unless it is in some way connected with the offence with which he is charged, as he thereby deprives him of the means of making his defence; 7 C. & P. 138, 488, 515; and it was so held with respect to a watch and other articles taken by a police officer at the time of arrest; id. 447. In this case the indictment was for rape, and it was said by Patteson, J.: "Certainly the property must be given up; it has nothing whatever to do with the charge. It ought not to have been taken."

Though the laws of a state permit a prison warden to receive and care for property found on convicts, the warden is not thereby authorized to receive payment on a certificate of deposit; Thompson v. Niles, 115 Ia. 67, 87 N. W. 732. See SEARCH.

Keeping a prisoner on bread and water is a cruel and unusual punishment; Johnson v. Waukesha Co., 64 Wis. 281, 25 N. W. 7.

It is no defence to a prosecution for murder that the accused was a convict for life; Singleton v. State, 71 Miss. 782, 16 South. 295, 42 Am. St. Rep. 488; contra, Ex parte Meyers, 44 Mo. 279; State v. Jolly, 96 Mo. 435, 9 S. W. 897, where it was held that the prisoner could not be tried for another crime until the expiration of the term imposed upon him. In Gaines v. State (Tex.) 53 S. W. 623, it was held that a prisoner could be brought into court to be tried on another charge.

A convict who escapes before the completion of his term is not entitled to an allowance for the time he was at large; Ex parte Moebus, 137 Fed. 154. See ESCAPE.

One in jail and awaiting trial is entitled freely to consult with his counsel, privately and apart; State v. Davis (Okla.) 130 Pac. 962, 44 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1083.

A prisoner, who is serving a life sentence at the time of his father's death, does not inherit from him; In re Donnelly's Estate, 125 Cal. 417, 58 Pac. 61, 73 Am. St. Rep. 62; but though a life prisoner is declared civilly dead by statute, the descent of his property is not thereby cast on his heirs; Smith v. Becker, 62 Kan. 541, 64 Pac. 70, 53 L. R. A. 141. A prisoner sentenced to death is not incapable of managing his own estate prior to execution; Gray v. Stewart, 70 Kan. 429, 78 Pac. 852, 109 Am. St. Rep. 461; where a life prisoner is insane, a committee may be appointed for his estate; Trust Co. v. Deposit Co., 187 N. Y. 178, 79 N. E. 996. A contract by one confined for life is valid; Stephani v. Lent, 30 Misc. 346, 63 N. Y. Supp. 471.

See TICKET-OF-LEAVE; SENTENCE; PUNISHMENT; ACCUMULATIVE SENTENCE.

PRISONER OF WAR. One who has been captured while fighting under the banner of some state. He is a prisoner even though never confined in a prison.

In modern times, prisoners are treated with more humanity than formerly: the individual captor has now no personal right to his prisoner. Prisoners are under the superintendence of the government. See 1 Kent 14.

The Convention Concerning the Laws and Customs of War on Land, adopted at The Hague in 1899, lays down (arts. 4-20) specific rules regarding the status of prisoners of war and the treatment to be accorded to them. It is provided that they must be humanely treated; that their personal belongings, except those of a military character, are to remain their property; that they are not to be confined unless as an indispensable measure of safety; that, while they may be put to work for the benefit of the captor state, they are to receive pay for such work, and they are not to be set to tasks connected with the operations of war; that they shall be treated as regards food and clothing on the same footing as the troops of the captor government; that, if set at liberty on parole, their own government is bound not to require of them any service incompatible with such parole; that they are to be allowed opportunity for the exercise of their religion; that wills drawn up by them are to be received on the same conditions as for soldiers of the national army. Moreover, the Convention provides for the establishment of a bureau of information whose duty it is to answer all inquiries about prisoners of war; and relief societies are to receive from the belligerents every facility for the effective accomplishment of their humane task. Higgins, The Hague Peace Conferences 206-272; Spaight, War Rights on Land 260-319.

It is a general rule that a prisoner of war is out of the protection of the laws of the state so far that he can have no civil remedy under them, and he can, therefore, maintain no action. But his person is protected against all unlawful acts. Spaight, War Rights on Land 260-319.

PRIVACY. The right of privacy has been defined as the right of an individual to withhold himself and his property from public scrutiny, if he so chooses. The doctrine is of recent growth, and is as yet insufficiently defined. It is said to be incapable of exact definition, and to exist only so far as its assertion is consistent with law or public policy, and in a proper case equity will interfere, if there is no remedy at law, to prevent an injury threatened by the invasion of, or infringement upon, this right from motives of curiosity, gain, or malice. Such remedy has been invoked to prevent the publication of oral lectures delivered by a professor; 12 App. Cas. 326; 3 L. J. Ch. 209; or copies of private drawings and etchings; 1 MacN. & G. 25; or a letter in the possession of a person by whom it was received, without the writer's consent, where the publication is not necessary for the vindication of the receiver or the public interests; 2 Ves. & B. 19; 2 Atk. 342; Ambl. 737; Woolsey v. Judd, 4 Duer (N. Y.) 379; Grigsby v. Breckinridge, 2 Bush. (Ky.) 480, 92 Am. Dec. 509; a telegram of a private nature; Kiernan v. Tel. Co., 50 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 194; a scientific, artistic, or literary composition kept for the private use of the composer; 4 Burr. 2303, 2330, 2408; 2 Eden 329; 2 Meriv. 435; Wheaton v. Peters, 8 Pet. (U. S.) 591, 8 L. Ed. 1055; a portrait in a newspaper; Marks v. Jaffa, 6 Misc. 290, 26 N. Y. Supp. 908; or a photograph by the photographer; 40 Ch. Div. 345; Corliss v. Walker Co., 64 Fed. 280, 31 L. R. A. 283. But such publication of a photograph or portrait will not be prevented where the person is a "public character," such as a foremost inventor of world-wide reputation; Corliss v. Walker Co., 64 Fed. 280, 31 L. R. A. 283. The case on appeal held that the publication of such a photograph will not be restrained. The doctrine prevailed one time that an injunction against the publication of letters could only be granted where they were of the nature of a literary composition; Wetmore v. Scovell, 3 Edw. Ch. (N. Y.) 515; Hoyt v. Mackenzie, 3 Barb. Ch. (N. Y.) 320, 49 Am. Dec. 178; but this doctrine no longer prevails; Woolsey v. Judd, 4 Duer (N. Y.) 379. In many cases the unauthorized use of one's name, where it will tend to cause irreparable damage, will be enjoined, as a recommendation of a medicinal preparation by a physician; Mackenzie v. Mineral Springs Co., 27 Abb. N. C. (N. Y.) 402, 18 N. Y. Supp. 240; see 11 Beav. 561; a use of a person's name as director of a corporation; 10 Beav. 561; or a publisher's statement that one is a member of a bankrupt firm; 7 L. R. Eq. 488; a false statement of a dispute pending a suit in relation thereto; 52 L. J. Ch. 134; 8 W. R. 734.

The property of an author or composer of any work, whether of literature, art, or science, in such work, unpublished and kept for his private use or pleasure, cannot be questioned; 1 MacN. & G. 42.

Every clerk employed in a merchant's counting house is under an implied contract that he will not make public that which he learns in the execution of his duty as clerk; 2 Hare 393; 1 MacN. & G. 45.

The court will interfere by injunction to prevent a party's availing himself in any manner of a title arising out of the violation of right or any breach of confidence; 1 MacN. & G. 25.

A photographer who had taken a negative likeness of A. for money, was restrained from selling or exhibiting copies, both on the ground that there was an implied contract not to use the negative for such purposes, and also that such sale or exhibition was a breach of confidence. The right to enjoin the copying of a photograph does not depend on the existence of a property right; the court of chancery has always had original jurisdiction to prevent what it considered and treated as a wrong, whether arising from the violation of a right or from breach of contract or confidence; 40 Ch. Div. 354, following 1 MacN. & G. 25.

In Prince Albert v. Strange, De G. & S. 652, and, on appeal, 1 MacN. & G. 23, it was held that the reproduction of etchings belonging to the plaintiff and Queen Victoria, and made for their own pleasure, would be restrained, and the defendants would also be restrained from publishing a description of them, whether more or less limited or summary, and whether in the form of a catalogue or otherwise.

An author of letters or papers of whatever kind, whether they be letters of business or private letters, or literary compositions, has a common and exclusive copyright therein unless he has unequivocally dedicated them to the public or some private person, but no person has the right to publish them without his consent unless such publication be required to establish a personal right or claim or to vindicate character. The government has perhaps a right to publish official letters addressed to it by public officers; but no private person has such a right without the sanction of the government; Folsom v. Marsh, 2 Story 100, Fed. Cas. No. 4,901.

If the recipient of a letter attempt to publish such letter on occasions not justifiable, equity will prevent the publication as a breach of private rights. . . . The general property, and the general rights incident to property, belong to the writer, whether the letter is a literary composition, or a familiar letter, or contains details of business. Third persons standing in no privity with either party are not entitled to publish letters to subserve their own private purposes of interest or curiosity or passion; Folsom v. Marsh, 2 Story 111, Fed. Cas. No. 4,901. The writer of letters, though written without any purpose of profit or any idea of literary property, possesses such a right of property in them that they cannot be published without his consent, unless the purposes of justice, civil or criminal, require the publication; 2 Swanst. 418, Romilly, arguing; but see High, Inj. § 1012, contra.

This subject of the right to privacy was much discussed in the case Schuyler v. Curtis, in which an injunction was sought to prevent certain persons from making a statue of a deceased woman and exhibiting it at the Columbian Exposition, the avowed object being to honor her as a philanthropist and reformer. A decree for an injunction entered by the supreme court of New York was affirmed by the general term, but was reversed by the court of appeals; Schuyler v. Curtis, 147 N. Y. 434, 42 N. E. 22, 31 L. R. A. 286, 49 Am. St. Rep. 671, reversing 70 Hun 598, 24 N. Y. Supp. 512. In this case the question whether the action contemplated was a violation of the right of privacy was discussed, and the conclusion reached by a majority of the court that "the individual right of privacy which any person has during his life dies with the person, and any right of privacy which survives is a right pertaining to the living only," and that "any privilege of surviving relatives of a deceased person to protect his memory exists for the benefit of the living to protect their feelings and to prevent a violation of their own rights in the character and memory of the deceased." It was held that "persons attempting to raise a statue or bust of a woman who is no longer living, if their motive is to do honor to her, and if the work is to be done in an appropriate manner, cannot be restrained by her surviving relatives from carrying out such a purpose, merely because they had not the honor of her personal acquaintance or friendship while she was living, or, at the most, had merely been associated with her philanthropic enterprises. The mere fact that a person's feelings may be injured by the erection of a statue to a deceased relative was decided not to be a ground for an injunction against its erection, unless there is reasonable and plausible ground for the existence of this mental distress and injury. It must not be the creation of mere caprice, nor of pure fancy, nor the result of a supersensitive and morbid mental organization dwelling with undue emphasis upon the exclusive and sacred character of this right of privacy."

The opposite view was presented by Gray, J., who dissented:

"Upon the findings in this case, I think we are bound to say that the purpose of the defendants was to commit an act which was an unauthorized invasion of the plaintiff's right to the preservation of the name and memory of Mrs. Schuyler intact from public comment and criticism. As the representative of all her immediate living relatives, it was competent for him to maintain action to preserve them from becoming public property, as would be the case if a statue were erected by strangers for public exhibition under such classification, with respect to the characteristic virtues of the deceased, as they judged befitting. I cannot see why the right of privacy is not a form of property, as much as is the right of complete immunity of one's person."

In 1893 it was held in a New York case that an injunction will lie to restrain the publication of the plaintiff's picture in a newspaper, with an invitation to the readers of the newspaper to vote upon the question of the popularity of the plaintiff as compared with that of another person whose picture was also published; Marks v. Jaffa, 6 Misc. 290, 26 N. Y. Supp. 908.

The common law right of privacy was upheld in the following cases: Pavesich v. Ins. Co., 122 Ga. 190, 50 S. E. 68, 69 L. R. A. 101, 106 Am. St. Rep. 104, 2 Ann. Cas. 561; Foster-Milburn Co. v. Chinn, 134 Ky. 424, 120 S. W. 364, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1137, 135 Am. St. Rep. 417, the court in the last case basing its conclusion on a right of property. It was squarely denied in Roberson v. Box Co., 171 N. Y. 538, 64 N. E. 442, 59 L. R. A. 478, 89 Am. St. Rep. 828, reversing 64 App. Div. 30, 71 N. Y. Supp. 876; and in Henry v. Cherry, 30 R. I. 13, 73 Atl. 97, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 991, 136 Am. St. Rep. 928, 18 Ann. Cas. 1006, holding that it was a personal right not guaranteed by the constitution and not a property right.

As a result of Roberson v. Box Co., 171 N. Y. 538, 64 N. E. 442, 59 L. R. A. 478, 89 Am. St. Rep. 828, an act was passed in New York to prevent the use of a person's name or picture without written consent, for purposes of advertising or trade; it was held constitutional in Rhodes v. S. & H. Co., 120 App. Div. 470, 104 N. Y. Supp. 1102, affirmed in 193 N. Y. 223, 85 N. E. 1097, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1143, 127 Am. St. Rep. 945, and in S. & H. Co. v. Rhodes, 220 U. S. 502, 31 Sup. Ct. 490, 55 L. Ed. 561. Other cases under the act are: Riddle v. MacFadden, 201 N. Y. 215, 94 N. E. 644; Wyatt v. McCreery & Co., 126 App. Div. 650, 111 N. Y. Supp. 86; Wyatt v. Wanamaker, 126 App. Div. 656, 111 N. Y. Supp. 90; Kunz v. Bosselman, 131 App. Div. 288, 115 N. Y. Supp. 650; Wyatt v. Wanamaker, 58 Misc. 429, 110 N. Y. Supp. 900; Ellis v. Hurst, 66 Misc. 235, 121 N. Y. Supp. 438; Binns v. Vitagraph Co., 67 Misc. 327, 124 N. Y. Supp. 515. In Moser v. Pub. Co., 59 Misc. 78, 109 N. Y. Supp. 963, the act was held not to prohibit a newspaper from publishing a person's name or picture without his consent in a single issue.

Binns, wireless operator on the Republic when in collision, who heroically saved many lives, procured an injunction against a moving picture concern for exhibiting films representing the disaster in which he was represented by one of its employees; Binns v. Vitagraph Co., 210 N. Y. 51, 103 N. E. 1108.

In a suit brought by an Austrian consul against a beneficial association using in its corporate title the name of the emperor of Austria-Hungary and his portrait without authority, the court said obiter that the emperor only could proceed for the breach of privacy; Von Thodorovich v. Beneficial Ass'n, 154 Fed. 911.

An injunction will be refused on a bill alleging libel, but proving merely loss of privacy; 22 T. L. R. 532; 78 L. T. R. N. S. 840; Atkinson v. Doherty & Co., 121 Mich. 372, 80 N. W. 285, 46 L. R. A. 219, 80 Am. St. Rep. 507. But in Foster-Milburn Co. v. Chinn, 134 Ky. 424, 120 S. W. 364, 34 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1137, 135 Am. St. Rep. 417, plaintiff was allowed to recover in an action for libel without proving special damages, where it appeared that his picture had been published without his consent as part of an advertisement.

The publication by a newspaper of an inoffensive photograph and true likeness of a person in connection with the story of her father's crime is not an invasion of the right of privacy for which the law affords any remedy; Hillman v. Pub. Co., 64 Wash. 691, 117 Pac. 594, 35 L. R. A. (N. S.) 595.

Vassar College, having a public character, cannot invoke the rule as to privacy and enjoin a corporation from selling "Vassar Chocolates" in packages containing a representation of a girl in scholastic garb, an imitation of the Vassar pennant and college seal, etc.; Vassar College v. Biscuit Co., 197 Fed. 982.

It has been held that loss of privacy in the use of land resulting from the construction of a railroad is a proper element of damages; L. R. 5 H. L. 418; and so of rooms in a dwelling house after the erection of an elevated railway; Moore v. R. Co., 130 N. Y. 523, 29 N. E. 997, 14 L. R. A. 731.

In an article in 4 Harv. Law Rev. 193, by Samuel D. Warren and Louis D. Brandeis, the following are suggested as the limitations to the right to privacy:

1. The right to privacy does not prohibit any publication of matter which is of public or general interest.

2. The right to privacy does not prohibit the publication of any matter, if in itself not private, when the publication is made under circumstances which would render it a privileged publication according to the law of slander and libel.

3. The law would probably not grant any redress for the invasion of privacy by oral publication in the absence of special damage.

4. The right to privacy ceases upon the publication of facts by the individual, or with his consent.

5. The truth of the matter published does not afford a defence.

6. The absence of "malice" in the publisher does not afford a defence.

PRIVATE. Affecting or belonging to individuals, as distinct from the public generally. Not clothed with office.

PRIVATE ACT. See STATUTE; GENERAL LAW.

PRIVATE BILL OFFICE. An office of the British parliament where the business of securing private acts of parliament is conducted.

PRIVATE BILLS. A private member's bill is one of a public nature introduced by a private member; a private bill is one dealing only with a matter of private personal or local interest; Lowell, Gov. of Eng. 266.

PRIVATE CARRIER. One who agrees in some special case with some private individual to carry for hire, as distinguished from a common carrier who holds himself out to all persons who choose to employ him as ready to carry for hire. Story, Cont. 752 a; Allen v. Sackrider, 37 N. Y. 342. See CARRIER.

PRIVATE CORPORATION. See CORPORATION.

PRIVATE DWELLING-HOUSE. A covenant which requires a house to be used as a private dwelling-house only, is broken by its being used as a school or dancing academy; 25 L. J. Q. B. 264; or as an institution for educating the daughters of missionaries; 47 L. J. Ch. 230; or as a club; id.; or as a hotel or lodging-house; 53 id. 682; but not by a public auction of the furniture of the house; 24 W. R. 485.

PRIVATE INTERNATIONAL LAW. A name used by some writers to indicate that branch of the law which is now more commonly called Conflict of Laws.

Mr. Dicey (Conflict of Laws, Moore's Ed. 12) points out that the defect of "Conflict of Laws" is that the supposed conflict is fictitious and never really takes place; that the expression has the further radical defect of concealing from view the circumstance that the question by the law of what country a given transaction shall be governed is often too plain to admit of doubt. If, he says, the term applies to the conflict in the mind of a judge as to which of two systems of law should govern a given case, this amounts simply to saying that the term "conflict of laws" may be used as an inaccurate equivalent for the less objectionable phrase "choice of laws." He considers the expression "private international law" as "handy and manageable," but that it is at bottom inaccurate, and has led to endless misconception of the true nature of this department of legal science. It confounds two classes of rules which are generically different from each other. The principles of international law are truly "international," because they prevail between or among nations; but they are not in the proper sense of the term "laws," for they are not commands proceeding from any sovereign; on the other hand, the principles of private international law are "laws" in the strictest sense of that term, for they are commands proceeding from the sovereign of a given state; but they are not "international," for they are laws which determine the private rights of one individual against another, and these individuals may, or may not, belong to the same nation. The expression "international private law" is, no doubt, a slight improvement on "private international law" as it points out that the rules which the name denotes belong to the domain of private law. But the name has the insuperable fault of giving to the adjective international a meaning different from the sense in which it is generally and correctly employed.

Other suggested names are "comity," the "local limits of law," "intermunicipal law," but these have not become current. Holland (Jurisprudence 370) first employed the term "extra-territorial recognition of rights," but Mr. Dicey points out that this is a description, and not a name.

Hannis Taylor (Jurisprudence 611), after considering the opinion of many writers, American, English and Continental, as to the use of this name, reaches the conclusion that its use is subject to many objections and expresses his regret for having adopted it (following Kent) in his International Public Law. Holland, Jurisprudence 410, considers the term "wholly indefensible." Gray, Nature, etc., of the Law 124, approves this view and points out that Dicey has returned to the title "Conflict of Laws."

Sir F. Pollock (First Book of Jurispr. 99) speaks of this department of the law as "now commonly" the "conflict of laws," but he prefers the German term—Internationale Privat-recht.

See INTERNATIONAL LAW; CONFLICT OF LAWS.

PRIVATE LAND CLAIMS. The United States obtained from the Republic of Mexico by the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, of February 2, 1848, and by the Gadsden purchase, December 30, 1853, all the property included in what is now the states of California, Colorado, Utah, Wyoming, and Nebraska, and the territories of new Mexico and Arizona; and by these treaties the United States agreed to protect and recognize the rights of property of every kind belonging to Mexicans that was situated in the ceded territory. Under the stipulations contained in the treaty of Guadalupe Hidalgo, congress, on March 3, 1851, passed a law to determine the validity of private land grants in the state of California; and on March 3, 1891 (26 Stat. L. 854), it passed a law for the settlement of title to private land grants under both treaties, entitled "An act to establish a court of private land claims and to provide for the settlement of private land claims in certain states and territories." By this act all persons claiming rights protected by the treaties, whether their title was complete and perfect or incomplete and inchoate, are given the right to present their claims and have the validity thereof ascertained and determined by the court. This court ceased to exist June 30, 1903; Act of March 3, 1903; its powers in the approval of surveys executed under its decrees of confirmation were conferred upon the commissioner of the general land office; Act of April 28, 1904.

PRIVATE NUISANCE. Anything done to the hurt and annoyance of the lands, tenements, or hereditaments of another. 3 Bla. Com. 215; Kavanagh v. Barber, 131 N. Y. 211, 30 N. E. 235, 15 L. R. A. 689. "Some unauthorized act which causes injury to property, or interferes with a person's rights over the property of others, or materially interferes with the ordinary physical enjoyment of property by causing injury to health or sensible personal discomfort." 3 Steph. Com. 406.

See NUISANCE.

PRIVATE PROPERTY. As used in a constitution, the term applies to such property as belongs absolutely to an individual, and of which he has the exclusive right of disposition; property of a specific, fixed, and tangible nature, capable of being had in possession and transmitted to another, as houses, lands, and chattels; Com'rs of Homochitto River v. Withers, 29 Miss. 32, 64 Am. Dec. 126.

PRIVATE WAY. An incorporeal hereditament of a real nature, entirely different to a common highway. The right of going over another man's ground. Kister v. Reeser, 98 Pa. 5, 42 Am. Rep. 608. See WAY.

PRIVATEER. A vessel owned by one or more private individuals, armed and equipped at his or their expense, for the purpose of carrying on a maritime war, by the authority of one of the belligerent parties.

A privateer is a private vessel commissioned by the state by the issue of a letter of marque to its owner to carry on all hostilities by sea, presumably according to the laws of war. She continues under the control of her private owner, and her crew are under the same discipline as the crew of a merchant ship. Formerly a state issued letters of marque to its own subjects, and to those of neutral states as well, but a privateersman who accepted letters of marque from both belligerents was regarded as a pirate.

For the purpose of encouraging the owners of private armed vessels, they are usually allowed to appropriate to themselves the property they capture, or, at least, a large proportion of it; 1 Kent 96. See Keane v. The Gloucester, 2 Dall. (U. S.) 36, 1 L. Ed. 278; The Mary and Susan, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 46, 4 L. Ed. 32.

By the Declaration of Paris (q. v.) privateering was abolished, but the United States, Spain, Mexico, and Venezuela did not accede to this declaration.

The creation of a volunteer navy by a belligerent was not prohibited by the Declaration of Paris. A volunteer cruiser is a vessel loaned by her private owner to the state. Her officers are commissioned and her crew are subject to the discipline of a ship of war; she only resembles a privateer in that her prizes belong to her owner. In 1870, when Prussia proposed the creation of a volunteer navy, the French government protested, but the English government held that such a navy was to be distinguished from privateers, and that their employment was no evasion of the Declaration of Paris; but from this opinion Phillimore decidedly dissented. Risley, Law of War 112.

The Convention Relative to the Conversion of Merchant-Ships into War-Ships, adopted at The Hague in 1907, defines the conditions subject to which merchant-ships may be incorporated into the fighting fleet of a state in time of war. Such ships must be under the direct authority and immediate control of the power whose flag they fly; they must bear the external marks which distinguish the war-ships of their nationality; their commanders must be duly-commissioned officers in the service of the state; their crews must be subject to the rules of military discipline; they are bound to observe in their operations the laws and customs of war; and their names must figure on the list of the ships of the military fleet of the belligerent. Higgins, The Hague Peace Conferences, 308-321.

A merchant vessel without any commission may become a lawful combatant in self-defence, and if she captures her assailant, the latter may be condemned as lawful prize.

During the civil war in America, congress authorized the president to issue letters of marque, but he did not do so. The confederates offered their letters of marque to foreigners, but they were not accepted. The confederate vessels were commissioned as of its regular navy. Boyd's Wheat. Int. Law.

The president's proclamation at the outbreak of the Spanish-American war, 1898, declared that privateering would not be resorted to by the United States.

It has been thought that the constitutional provision empowering congress to issue letters of marque deprives it of the power to join in a permanent treaty abolishing privateering. See 28 Am. L. Rev. 615; 24 id. 902; 19 Law Mag. & Rev. 35.

PRIVATION. A taking away or withdrawing. Co. Litt. 239.

PRIVEMENT ENCEINTE (L. Fr.). A term used to signify that a woman is pregnant, but not quick with child. See Wood, Inst. 662; ENCEINTE; FÆTUS; PREGNANCY.

PRIVIES. Persons who are partakers or have an interest in any action or thing, or any relation to another. Wood, Inst. b. 2, c. 3, p. 255; Co. Litt. 271 a.

There are several kinds of privies; namely, privies in blood, as the heir is to the ancestor; privies in representation, as is the executor or administrator to the deceased;

privies in estate, as the relation between the donor and donee, lessor and lessee; privies in respect to contracts; and privies on account of estate and contract together. Prest. Conv. 327. Privies have also been divided into privies in fact and privies in law. 8 Co. 42 b. See Viner, Abr. Privity; 5 Com. Dig. 347; Ilamm, Part. 131; Woodf. Landl. & T. 279; 1 Dane, Abr. c. 1, art. 6. The latter are created by the law casting land upon a person, as in escheat; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 189.

No one is privy to a judgment whose succession to the rights of property thereby affected occurred previously to the institution of the suit. Freem. Judg. § 162; Norton v. Fruit-Packing Co., 83 Fed. 515, 27 C. C. A. 576.

See PRIVITY; Bigelow v. M. & S. Co., 225 U. S. 111, 32 Sup. Ct. 641, 56 L. Ed. 1009, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 875.

PRIVIGNUS (Lat.). In Civil Law. Son of a husband or wife by a former marriage; a stepson. Calvinus, Lex.; Vicat, Voc. Jur.

PRIVILEGE. Exemption from such burdens as others are subjected to. State v. Betts, 24 N. J. L. 557. See Brenham v. Water Co., 67 Tex. 542, 4 S. W. 143; Ripley v. Knight, 123 Mass. 519. See a full title in Jacob, Law Dict.

In Civil Law. A right which the nature of a debt gives to a creditor, and which entitles him to be preferred before other creditors. Dalloz, Dict. Privilege; Domat, Lois Civ. liv. 2, t. 1, s. 4, n. 1; 43 La. Ann. 1078, 1194.

Privilege is "a real right in a thing (jus in re) springing from the nature of a debt which has been contracted with reference to that thing, and securing the debt by a preference on the proceeds of the thing when it is sold under legal process." Howe, Stud. Civ. L. 86.

"A mortgage under the civil law is to all intents and purposes what it is in equity in the English law or the law of Connecticut, a security for a debt given by the agreement of the debtor. But a debtor cannot, by his mere agreement, proprio vigore, confer a privilege.

"If he contracts a debt, which by its nature has a privilege under the law, then the privilege exists, as a method of securing the debt. It inheres in the thing with reference to which the debt has been contracted, follows it into the hands of third persons (in the absence of some law of recordation providing to the contrary), and as a rule would prime a mortgage of the same property." "The one is legal; the other conventional. This former is sometimes called by the civilians a privileged hypothecation; the latter a mere hypothecation." Howe, Stud. Civ. L. 88.

The civil law privilege became, by adoption of the admiralty courts, the admiralty lien; Howe, Stud. Civ. L. 89; The J. E.

Rumbell, 148 U. S. 1, 13 Sup. Ct. 498, 37 L. Ed. 345.

Creditors of the same rank of privileges are paid in concurrence, that is, on an equal footing. Privileges may exist either in movables or immovables, or in both at once. They are general or special, on certain movables. The debts which are privileged on all the movables in general are the following, which are paid in this order. Funeral charges. Law charges, which are such as are occasioned by the prosecution of a suit before the courts. But this name applies more particularly to costs, which the party cast has to pay to the party gaining the cause. It is in favor of these only that the law grants the privilege. Charges, of whatever nature, occasioned by the last sickness, concurrently among those to whom they are due. See LAST SICKNESS. The wages of servants for the year past, and so much as is due for the current year. Supplies of provisions made to the debtor or his family during the last six months by retail dealers, such as bakers, butchers, grocers, and during the last year by keepers of boarding-houses and taverns. The salaries of clerks, secretaries, and other persons of that kind. Dotal rights due to wives by their husbands.

The debts which are privileged on particular movables are—the debt of a workman or artisan, for the price of his labor, on the movable which he has repaired or made, if the thing continues still in his possession; that debt on the pledge which is in the creditor's possession; the carrier's charges and accessory expenses on the thing carried; the price due on movable effects, if they are yet in the possession of the purchaser; and the like. See LIEN.

Creditors who have a privilege on movables in Louisiana are (1) vendors for purchase money, (2) architects, mechanics, contractors, etc., for construction, rebuilding and repair of houses, etc., (3) material men, (4) those who have worked by the job in the manner required by law or police regulation on levees, bridges, ditches, and roads of a proprietor; Code §§ 3249-51.

In regard to privilege, Domat says, "We do not reckon in the number of privileges the preference which the creditor has on the movables that have been given him in a pawn, and which are in his custody. The privilege of a creditor is the distinguishing right which the nature of his credit gives him, and which makes him to be preferred before other creditors, even those who are prior in time, and who have mortgages." Domat, pt. 1, lib. iii. tit. 1. sec. v.

These privileges were of two kinds: one gave a preference on all the goods, without any particular assignment on any one thing; the other secures to the creditors their security on certain things, and not on the other goods.

Among creditors who are privileged, there is no priority of time, but each one is in the order of his privilege, and all creditors who have a privilege of the same kind take proportionately, although their debts be of different dates. And all privileges have equally a preference over those of an inferior class, and over debts which do not have this favored character, whether subsequent or antecedent in point of time.

The vendor of immovable property, for which payment has not been made, is preferred before creditors of the purchaser, and all other persons, as to the thing sold. By the Roman law, this principle applies equally to movables and immovables; and the seller may seize upon the property in the hands of his vendee, or wherever he can find it.

So, too, a person who has lent money to repair a thing, or to make improvements, has this privilege. And this, though he lends to workmen or architects, etc., if it be done with the knowledge of the owner.

Carriers have a privilege not only for the price of carriage, but for money paid on account of the goods.

Landlords have a privilege for the rents due from their tenants even on furniture of the under-tenants, if there be a sublease. But not if payment has been made to the tenant by an immediate lessor; although a payment made by the sub-tenant to the landlord would be good as against the tenant.

The privilege was lost by a novation, or by anything in the original contract which showed that the vendor had taken some other security inconsistent with the privilege. See Domat, pt. i. lib. lii. tit. i. sec. v.

See Dalloz, Dict. Privilege; LIEN; LAST SICKNESS; PREFERENCE.

In Maritime Law. An allowance to the master of a ship of the general nature of prize, being compensation, or rather a gratuity, customary in certain trades, and which the law assumes to be a fair and equitable allowance, because the contract on both sides is made under the knowledge of such usage by the parties.

PRIVILEGE FROM ARREST. Privilege from arrest on civil process.

It is either permanent, as in case of diplomatic representations and their servants, the royal family and servants, peers and peeresses, etc., or temporary, as in case of members of both houses of congress, and of the state legislature, who are privileged eundo, manendo, et redeundo; 1 Kent 243; Cooley, Const. Lim. 163; 8 R. I. 43; see 2 Stra. 985; practising barristers, while actually engaged in the business of the court; 1 H. Bla. 636; 1 M. & W. 488; 6 Ad. & E. 623; a clergyman in England whilst going to church, performing services, and returning; 7 Bingh. 320; witnesses and parties to a suit and bail, eundo, manendo, et redeundo; 5 B. & Ad.

1078; 1 Maule & S. 638; 6 Ad. & E. 623; Ellis v. Degarmo, 17 R. I. 715, 24 Atl. 579, 19 L. R. A. 560; Parker v. Marco, 136 N. Y. 585, 32 N. E. 989, 20 L. R. A. 45, 32 Am. St. Rep. 770; and other persons who are privileged by law. See ARREST. Privilege (from arrest) does not extend to defendants in criminal cases; Smith v. Nicola, 6 Pa. Dist. Rep. 595.

A suitor going to, attending or returning from court is privileged from service of summons, whether he is a resident of the state or not; Barber v. Knowles, 77 Ohio St. 81, 82 N. E. 1065, 11 Ann. Cas. 1144, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 663, with note upon the question of the effect of delay in returning.

In case of the arrest of a legislator contrary to law, the legislative body of which he is a member may give summary relief by ordering his discharge, and if this be not complied with, by punishing the persons concerned in such arrest, as for contempt of its authority. If it neglect to interfere, the court from which the process issued should set it aside; and any court or officer having authority to issue writs of habeas corpus may inquire into the case and release the party; Cooley, Const. Lim. 163; Cush. Parl. Pract. § 546. "When attachment is mere process, privilege exists; when it is punitive or disciplinary, privilege does not exist." Brett, Comm. 748.

In some states, by constitution the privilege has been enlarged, so as to exempt the persons of legislators from any service of civil process: Michigan, Kansas, Nebraska, California, Wisconsin, Indiana, Oregon.

See EXTERRITORIALITY; Piggott, Consular Jurisdiction.

PRIVILEGE, WRIT OF. A process to enforce or maintain a privilege. Cowell.

PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS. Communications made bona fide upon any subject-matter in which the party communicating has an interest, or in reference to which he has a duty, if made to a person having a corresponding interest or duty, although it contain matter which without this privilege would be defamatory and actionable.

Duty, in this canon, cannot be confined to legal duties, which may be enforced by indictment, action, or mandamus, but must include moral and social duties of imperfect obligation; 5 E. & B. 347. The proper meaning of a privileged communication, said Baron Parke, is only this: that the occasion on which the communication was made rebuts the inference prima facie arising from a statement prejudicial to the character of the plaintiff, and puts it upon him to prove that there was malice in fact,—that the defendant was actuated by motives of personal spite or ill-will, independent of the occasion on which the communication was made; 2 Cr. M. & R. 573. So, also, in Lewis v. Chapman, 16 N. Y. 373. See Lowry v.

Vedder, 40 Minn. 475, 42 N. W. 542; Chaffin v. Lynch, 83 Va. 106, 1 S. E. 803; White v. Nicholls, 3 How. (U. S.) 287, 11 L. Ed. 591; [1891] App. Cas. 78; Brown v. Vannaman, 85 Wis. 451, 55 N. W. 183, 39 Am. St. Rep. 860.

The law recognizes two classes of cases in which the occasion either supplies an absolute defence, or a defence subject to the condition that the party acted bona fide without malice. The distinction turns entirely on the question of malice. The communications last mentioned lose their privilege on proof of express malice; Erber v. Dun, 12 Fed. 526. The former depend in no respect for their protection upon the bona fides of the defendant. The occasion is an absolute privilege, and the only questions are whether the occasion existed, and whether the matter complained of was pertinent to the occasion; Heard, Lib. & S. § 89. See Webb, Pollock, Torts 335; Odg. Sl. & L. 184; Ramsey v. Cheek, 109 N. C. 270, 13 S. E. 775.

As to communications which are thus absolutely privileged, no person is liable, either civilly or criminally, in respect of anything published by him as a member of a legislative body, in the course of his legislative duty, or in respect of anything published by him in the course of his duty in any judicial proceeding. This privilege extends not only to parties, counsel, witnesses, jurors, and judges in a judicial proceeding, but also to proceedings in legislative bodies, and to all who, in the discharge of public duty or the honest pursuit of private right, are compelled to take part in the administration of justice, or in legislation.

Allegations in pleadings imputing criminal or fraudulent acts to the opposite party, if pertinent, are absolutely privileged and cannot be made the ground of an action for libel; McGehee v. Ins. Co., 112 Fed. 853, 50 C. C. A. 551. Likewise words uttered by a judge in the course of judicial proceedings with reference to the case before him; 4 F. 783, Sc. Ct. of Sess.; and an official report of an executive or administrative officer; De Arnaud v. Ainsworth, 24 App. D. C. 167, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 163; Spalding v. Vilas, 161 U. S. 483, 16 Sup. Ct. 631, 40 L. Ed. 780; a city council resolution; Wachsmuth v. Bank, 96 Mich. 427, 56 N. W. 9, 21 L. R. A. 278; a mayor's written veto message; Trebilcock v. Anderson, 117 Mich. 39, 75 N. W. 129; and statements made by a witness to one of the parties and his attorney in preparing proofs for trial; [1905] A. C. 480. But facts furnished by a client to his attorney and incorporated in a petition which are misleading and defamatory and are foreign to the object of the suit are not privileged; Wimblish v. Hamilton, 47 La. Ann. 246, 16 South. 856.

A fair report of any judicial proceeding or inquiry is privileged; Heard, Lib. & S. §§

90, 103, 110; Odg. Lib. & S. *185; but to be privileged it must be an accurate and impartial account of what actually occurred; Post Pub. Co. v. Moloney, 50 Ohio St. 71, 33 N. E. 921. A report to a newspaper of judicial proceedings, if made by an outsider, is actionable if made from motives of personal hostility; 5 Ex. Div. 53. See Hibbard, Spencer, Bartlett & Co. v. Ryan, 46 Ill. App. 313; Randall v. Hamilton, 45 La. Ann. 1184, 14 South. 73, 22 L. R. A. 649; [1893] 1 Q. B. 65.

The bona fide statements of one church member on the trial of another, before a church tribunal, are privileged; Etchison v. Pergerson, 88 Ga. 620, 15 S. E. 680; Shurtleff v. Stevens, 51 Vt. 501, 31 Am. Rep. 698. They are said to have a qualified privilege; Pollock, Torts 253.

Freedom of speech in parliament is protected by the Bill of Rights; 1 W. & M. Sess. 2, c. 2.

In America, as in England, the defence of privilege, when applied to comment and criticism of the acts of public men, is confined to facts as they actually happened, and does not extend to false assertions of fact; Hallam v. Pub. Co., 55 Fed. 456. See Jackson v. Pittsburgh Times, 152 Pa. 406, 25 Atl. 613, 34 Am. St. Rep. 659; Burt v. Newspaper Co., 154 Mass. 238, 28 N. E. 1, 13 L. R. A. 97.

An action will not lie against a judge for words spoken in his judicial capacity in a court of justice; L. R. 3 Ex. 220.

Unfounded insinuations made by counsel against the prosecutor are privileged; 11 Q. B. Div. 588; so are volunteered statements of a witness involving a criminal charge against a person not connected with the case under inquiry. Military courts stand in the same way; L. R. 7 H. L. 744; communications relating to affairs of state and passing between officials are absolutely privileged; Pollock, Torts 253; [1895] 1 Q. B. 888; as to whether military and naval reports, not made in the cause of some judicial inquiry, are absolutely privileged, or have only a qualified privilege, see L. R. 5 Q. B. 94. Fair reports of judicial and parliamentary inquiries are said to have an absolute privilege; Pollock, Torts 253.

A communication is privileged when made in good faith in answer to one having an interest in the information sought, and it will be privileged if volunteered, when the party to whom it is made has an interest in it and such party stands in such relation to him as to make it a reasonable duty, or at least proper, that he should give the information.

"A communication which would otherwise be privileged, if made with malice in fact or through hatred, ill-will, and a malicious design to injure, is not a privileged communication, but the burden of proof is on the plaintiffs to show malice in fact." Erber v. Dun & Co., 12 Fed. 526; Briggs v. Garrett, 111

Pa. 404, 2 Atl. 513, 56 Am. Rep. 274. A member of a legislative body cannot take advantage of his position to utter private slanders against others; McGaw v. Hamilton, 184 Pa. 108, 39 Atl. 4, 63 Am. St. Rep. 786.

A physician's statements to a druggist in respect of a prescription wrongfully compounded by the druggist are privileged unless malice is proved; [1907] A. C. 708; and so of the report of a school committee; Haight v. Cornell, 15 Conn. 74; and the report of a road commissioner; Pearce v. Brower, 72 Ga. 243. See De Arnaud v. Ainsworth, 24 App. D. C. 167, 5 L. R. A. (N. S.) 163, where it is said in a note that probably the leading American case, is Maurice v. Worden, 54 Md. 233, 39 Am. Rep. 384, where the endorsement by the superintendent of the Naval Academy upon the resignation of a professor was held to be privileged only so far as to rebut the presumption of malice and cast upon the plaintiff the burden of proving actual malice.

Independent books and documents of a defunct corporation, left with the attorney for the corporation by a client, are not a privileged communication. They must be produced upon subpoena, even if they might incriminate the attorney; Grant v. U. S., 227 U. S. 74, 33 Sup. Ct. 190, 57 L. Ed. 423.

Information furnished by a charity organization society at the request of a person not a member, but who was interested, is a privileged communication; 13 Cent. L. J. 432. So are communications to a near relative respecting the character of a person with whom the relative is negotiating for a marriage; 8 C. & P. 88 (but not by a stranger; The Count Joannes v. Bennett, 5 Allen [Mass.] 170, 81 Am. Dec. 738); so where one communicated to an employer his suspicions of dishonest conduct in a servant towards himself; 8 C. B. N. S. 597.

Other cases in which the privilege was sustained are statements by a school superintendent of his reason for revoking the certificate of a teacher; Rausch v. Anderson, 75 Ill. App. 526; a report of a committee appointed at a public school meeting to investigate the financial report of the school trustees; Lent v. Underhill, 54 App. Div. 609, 66 N. Y. Supp. 1086; the official report of the principal of a school to the city superintendent concerning the work of a teacher; Walker v. Best, 107 App. Div. 304, 95 N. Y. Supp. 151; the report of a committee appointed by the governor of a state to investigate charges against a state board of charities; In re Investigating Commission, 16 R. I. 751, 11 Atl. 429; a report of grand jurors to the court; Rector v. Smith, 11 Ia. 302; statements by the superintendent of a city water department in response to an inquiry from his superiors; Stevenson v. Ward, 48 App. Div. 291, 62 N. Y. Supp. 717; the report of a committee of aldermen appointed to investigate charges against a saloon keeper, made in the course of their official duty; Weber v. Lane, 99 Mo. App. 69, 71 S. W. 1099; charges by the superintendent of a state charitable institution against the head of a department under him; Hemmens v. Nelson, 138 N. Y. 517, 34 N. E. 342, 20 L. R. A. 440.

A publication by a newspaper of an article without inquiry is not privileged because received from a regular correspondent; Schuyler v. Busbey, 68 Hun 474, 23 N. Y. Supp. 102. Communications between an applicant for a patent and the patent office touching an unissued patent are not privileged; Edison E. L. Co. v. Lighting Co., 44 Fed. 234.

As to statements made to commercial agencies, see that title; [1908] A. C. 390; 14 Col. L. Rev. 187, article by Prof. Jeremiah Smith.

Whenever it is right, in the interest of society, for one person to communicate to another what he believes or has heard concerning any person's conduct or character, it is a privileged occasion; Poll. Torts 256; L. R. 5 Q. B. 11. Thus a solicitor to his client about the soundness of a security, or a father to his daughter about her suitor; Poll. Torts 256; a creditor of a firm in liquidation to another of its creditors as to a member of the debtor firm; L. R. 4 Ex. 232; communications addressed to a person in public position relating to the redress of grievances; 5 E. & B. 344. Where the defendant dismissed the plaintiff from its service on account of gross neglect of duty, a statement by the defendant to its servants of the reason for plaintiff's dismissal is a privileged communication. The occasion being privileged, the communication is so, unless the plaintiff can show that it was malicious; [1891] 2 Q. B. 189.

In making privileged communications of a confidential kind, the failure to use the ordinary means of insuring privacy will destroy the privilege; L. R. 9 C. P. 393.

If the occasion be privileged the plaintiff must prove malice; that is dishonest or reckless ill-will. To constitute malice there must be something more than the absence of reasonable ground for belief; Poll. Torts 262. See 8 Harv. L. Rev. 9; CONFIDENTIAL COMMUNICATIONS; LIBEL; MALICE; JUSTIFICATION; SLANDER.

PRIVILEGED COPYHOLDS. Those copyholds which are held according to the custom of the manor and not according to the will of the lord. They include ancient demesne and customary freehold. See CUSTOMARY COPYHOLD; 2 Woodd. Lect. 33; Lee, Abs. 63; 1 Crabb, R. P. 709, 919; 2 Bla. Com. 100.

PRIVILEGED DEBTS. Those which an executor or administrator, assignee in bankruptcy, etc., may pay in preference to others, such as funeral expenses, servants' wages, and doctors' bills during last sickness, etc. See PRIVILEGE; ADMINISTRATOR.

PRIVILEGED DEED. In Scotch Law. An instrument, for example, a testament, in the execution of which certain statutory formalities usually required are dispensed with, either from necessity or expediency. Erskine, Inst. 3. 2. 22; Bell, Dict.

PRIVILEGED VILLEINAGE. Villein socage. 1 Steph. Com. 188, 223. See SOCAGE.

PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES. The words privileges and immunities are used in the 14th amendment of the United States constitution, and in other parts of that document, and were also used in the Articles of Confederation. They are such privileges as are fundamental, which belong to the citizens of all free governments and which have at all times been enjoyed by citizens of the United States; Slaughter House Cases, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 76, 21 L. Ed. 394; Spies v. Illinois, 123 U. S. 150, 8 Sup. Ct. 21, 31 L. Ed. 80; O'Neil v. Vermont, 144 U. S. 361, 12 Sup. Ct. 693, 36 L. Ed. 450.

These have been enumerated as some of the principal privileges: Protection by the government, the enjoyment of life and liberty, with the right to acquire and possess property of every kind, and to pursue and obtain happiness and safety; subject nevertheless to such restraints as the government may justly prescribe for the general good of the whole. The right of a citizen of one state to pass through or reside in any other state, for purposes of trade, agriculture, professional pursuits, or otherwise; to claim the benefit of the writ of habeas corpus, to institute and maintain actions of every kind in the courts of the state, to take, hold, and dispose of property, and an exemption from higher taxes or impositions than are paid by other citizens of the state; Corfield v. Coryell, 4 Wash. C. C. 371, Fed. Cas. No. 3230. This enumeration by Mr. Justice Washington in the leading case of Corfield v. Coryell has acquired a somewhat historic value. It has been much quoted and in the Slaughter House Cases, 16 Wall. 36, 75, 21 L. Ed. 394, it is largely quoted by Mr. Justice Miller as a definition which had been adopted in the main by that court.

Another definition more general in its character was one of counsel, arguendo, in Spies v. Illinois, 123 U. S. 131, 150, 8 Sup. Ct. 21, 22, 31 L. Ed. 80. "I hold the privilege and immunity of a citizen of the United States to be such as have their recognition in or guaranty from the Constitution of the United States." And of this Mr. Justice Field, in his dissenting opinion in O'Neil v. Vermont, 144 U. S. 323, 361, 12 Sup. Ct. 693, 36 L. Ed. 450, said that, while it might be difficult to define the terms so as to cover all the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States, "after much reflection, I think the definition given at one time before this court by a distinguished advocate—Mr. John Randolph Tucker of Virginia—is correct," quoting his words as above. It is, however, to be noted that a citizen of a state passing through or residing in any other state is entitled to no greater privileges and immunities than are possessed by the citizens of the latter state; Detroit v. Osborne, 135 U. S. 492, 10 Sup. Ct. 1012, 34 L. Ed. 260.

The privileges and immunities of a citizen of the United States and those of a state are distinct from each other, and it is only the former which are placed by the 14th amendment under the protection of the federal constitution; the latter, whatever they may be, are not intended to have any additional protection by this paragraph of the amendment; In re Kemmler, 136 U. S. 436, 10 Sup. Ct. 930, 34 L. Ed. 519; Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 36, 74, 21 L. Ed. 394; Com. v. Milton, 12 B. Monr. (Ky.) 212, 54 Am. Dec. 522; U. S. v. Anthony, Fed. Cas. No. 14,459, 11 Blatchf. 200.

The privileges and immunities protected by the amendment are those of national citizenship; Walker v. Sauvinet, 92 U. S. 90, 23 L. Ed. 678; such as arise out of the essential character of the national government; Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 36, 74, 21 L. Ed. 394; Ex parte Kinney, Fed. Cas. No. 7,825, 3 Hughes 9; In re Kemmler, 136 U. S. 436, 10 Sup. Ct. 930, 34 L. Ed. 519; State v. McCann, 21 Ohio St. 198; and belong to the citizens of all free governments; O'Neil v. Vermont, 144 U. S. 361, 12 Sup. Ct. 693, 36 L. Ed. 450; Spies v. Illinois, 123 U. S. 150, 8 Sup. Ct. 21, 31 L. Ed. 80; Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 36, 21 L. Ed. 394; those common to the citizens of the states; Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 168, 19 L. Ed. 357; they are that limited class depending immediately upon the constitution of the United States; Charge to Grand Jury, Fed. Cas. No. 18,260. They are such only as pertain to citizenship of the United States as distinguished from state citizenship; Rosenthal v. New York, 226 U. S. 260, 33 Sup. Ct. 27, 57 L. Ed. 212, Ann. Cas. 1914B, 71.

Before the adoption of this amendment, the rights known as privileges and immunities of the citizens of the states (with a few exceptions specifically named in the federal constitution) depended for protection exclusively upon the states, and it was not the purpose of the amendment to subject them to the control of congress. The citizens of the states, as such, are left to the state governments for security and protection in respect to such rights; Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 36, 21 L. Ed. 394. The amendment adds nothing to the rights of one citizen as against another; U. S. v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 543, 23 L. Ed. 588; Ward v. Flood, 48 Cal. 36, 17 Am. Rep. 405; nor does it control the power of the state over its own citizens; Short v. State, 80 Md. 392, 31 Atl. 322, 29 L. R. A. 404.

It applies only to such privileges and immunities as existed when it was adopted; Minor v. Happersett, 21 Wall. (U. S.) 162, 22 L. Ed. 627; Ward v. Flood, 48 Cal. 36, 17 Am. Rep. 405; and secures them against impairment or invasion by the states; U. S. v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 543, 23 L. Ed. 588; id., 1 Woods, 308, Fed. Cas. No. 14,897; Ward v. Flood, 48 Cal. 36, 17 Am. Rep. 405.

The police power of the state and its authority for the protection of life, health and property of its citizens are unimpaired; Pace v. Alabama, 106 U. S. 583, 1 Sup. Ct. 637, 27 L. Ed. 207; Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 36, 21 L. Ed. 394; Munn v. People, 69 Ill. 80; Fraser v. State, 3 Tex. App. 263, 30 Am. Rep. 131; Green v. State, 58 Ala. 190, 29 Am. Rep. 739. Not only the supreme court, but judges generally, have been disinclined to define broadly what are the privileges and immunities protected by the 14th amendment as appertaining to citizenship of the United States, except to characterize them as those "which owe their existence to the federal government, its national character, its constitution or its laws."

There have been suggested as illustrations in various cases, in addition to those cited supra, the right of free transit from one state to another and to the federal capital; of access to sea-ports, public offices and courts; protection upon the high seas or in foreign countries; the right of petition; of peaceable assemblage; the privilege of the writ of habeas corpus; the right to become a citizen of any state by residence therein; and the right to use the navigable waters of the United States; Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 36, 21 L. Ed. 394; State v. Medbury, 3 R. I. 141; Crandall v. State, 10 Conn. 343; Oliver v. Washington Mills, 11 Allen (Mass.) 281; Cooley, Const. Lim. (4th Ed.) 498. As deprecating a general definition, see McCready v. Virginia, 94 U. S. 391, 24 L. Ed. 248. The right of free transit through or from a state has been declared to be a privilege and immunity secured by art. IV, sec. 2, of the United States constitution and a statute prohibiting laborers from leaving the state without a license was held void on that ground, it being unnecessary to consider it as affected by the 14th amendment; Joseph v. Randolph, 71 Ala. 499, 46 Am. Rep. 347. The same right is protected against adverse legislation by decisions of the United States supreme court; Smith v. Turner, 7 How. (U. S.) 283, 12 L. Ed. 702; Crandall v. Nevada, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 35, 18 L. Ed. 745; Ward v. Maryland, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 418, 20 L. Ed. 449; in which cases the same result is reached upon different grounds. The states are not prohibited from abridging any rights and immunities of their own citizens except such as are protected by express provisions of the federal constitution; State v. Strauder, 11 W. Va. 745, 27

Am. Rep. 606; Short v. State, 80 Md. 392, 31 Atl. 322, 29 L. R. A. 404.

Whether the privileges and immunities referred to in the 14th amendment include those protected by the first eight amendments is a point touched upon, but not determined or discussed at large, by the supreme court. See Spies v. Illinois, 123 U. S. 131, 8 Sup. Ct. 22, 31 L. Ed. 80; O'Neil v. Vermont, 144 U. S. 323, 361, 12 Sup. Ct. 693, 36 L. Ed. 450; Re Kemmler, 136 U. S. 436, 446, 10 Sup. Ct. 930, 34 L. Ed. 519; Hodgson v. Vermont, 168 U. S. 262, 18 Sup. Ct. 80, 42 L. Ed. 461; Guthrie, Fourteenth Amend. 62-65. It has been held in a state court that this amendment does not extend the operation of the 4th and 5th amendments; State v. Atkinson, 40 S. C. 363, 18 S. E. 1021, 42 Am. St. Rep. 877.

Privileges and immunities protected by the constitution are the enjoyment, on terms of equality with others in similar circumstances, of pursuing a trade and of acquiring, holding and selling property; Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 8 Sup. Ct. 992, 1257, 32 L. Ed. 253; Mason v. Missouri, 179 U. S. 328, 21 Sup. Ct. 125, 45 L. Ed. 214 (and there are a number of dicta to the effect that the right to follow the ordinary callings of life is a privilege of citizens of the United States; Butchers' Union S. H. & L. S. L. Co. v. Slaughter-House Co., 111 U. S. 746, 762, 4 Sup. Ct. 652, 28 L. Ed. 585; Powell v. Pennsylvania, 127 U. S. 678, 684, 8 Sup. Ct. 992, 1257, 32 L. Ed. 253; Hodges v. U. S., 203 U. S. 1, 35, 27 Sup. Ct. 6, 51 L. Ed. 65); the right of an individual or class not to be singled out as a special subject of hostile or discriminating legislation; Pembina Consol. S. M. & M. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 125 U. S. 181, 8 Sup. Ct. 737, 31 L. Ed. 650; to be protected from class legislation; Barbier v. Connolly, 113 U. S. 27, 5 Sup. Ct. 357, 28 L. Ed. 923.

A corporation is not a citizen secured by the protection given to privileges and immunities; Ducat v. Chicago, 10 Wall. (U. S.) 410, 19 L. Ed. 972; Pembina Consol. S. M. & M. Co. v. Pennsylvania, 125 U. S. 181, 8 Sup. Ct. 737, 31 L. Ed. 650; Waters-Pierce Oil Co. v. Texas, 177 U. S. 45, 20 Sup. Ct. 518, 44 L. Ed. 657; Selover, B. & Co. v. Walsh, 226 U. S. 112, 33 Sup. Ct. 69, 57 L. Ed. 146; and the same view was taken prior to this amendment; Bank of Augusta v. Earle, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 586, 10 L. Ed. 274; Paul v. Virginia, 8 Wall. (U. S.) 168, 19 L. Ed. 357; Ducat v. Chicago, 48 Ill. 172, 95 Am. Dec. 529.

A citizen of the United States has been said to have a right as such to participate in foreign and inter-state commerce, to have the benefit of the postal laws, to make use in common with others of the navigable waters of the United States, to pass from state to state and into foreign countries; he may petition the federal authorities, visit the seat of government without being subjected to the payment of a tax for the privilege; Crandall v. Nevada, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 35, 18 L. Ed. 745; be the purchaser of public lands on the same terms as others; U. S. v. Waddell, 112 U. S. 76, 5 Sup. Ct. 35, 28 L. Ed. 673; Logan v. U. S., 144 U. S. 263, 12 Sup. Ct. 617, 36 L. Ed. 429; participate in the government if he comes within the conditions of suffrage, be protected from violence while exercising his right of suffrage; Logan v. U. S., 144 U. S. 263, 12 Sup. Ct. 617, 36 L. Ed. 429; demand the protection of the government on the high seas or in foreign countries; Cooley, Const. 489, 246; see Slaughter-House Cases, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 36, 21 L. Ed. 394; take out patents and copyrights, buy, sell, or devise United States securities, and take the benefit of the national bankrupt laws; Black, Const. L. 531. A state may not impose a tax upon travellers passing by public conveyance out of the state; Crandall v. Nevada, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 35, 18 L. Ed. 745; nor impose conditions upon the rights of citizens of other states to sue its citizens in the federal courts; Home Ins. Co. v. Morse, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 445, 22 L. Ed. 365; see Coger v. Packet Co., 37 Ia. 145; nor deny to colored citizens the privilege of serving on the jury, because of their color; Strauder v. West Virginia, 100 U. S. 303, 25 L. Ed. 664; Virginia v. Rives, 100 U. S. 313, 25 L. Ed. 667; Re Virginia, 100 U. S. 339, 25 L. Ed. 676; or to citizens who have become such by naturalization; Com. v. Towles, 5 Leigh (Va.) 743.

Trial by jury is not a privilege or immunity which the states are prevented by the 14th amendment from abridging; Walker v. Sauvinet, 92 U. S. 90, 23 L. Ed. 678; Maxwell v. Dow, 176 U. S. 581, 20 Sup. Ct. 448, 494, 44 L. Ed. 597; but citizens of African descent cannot be excluded from jury duty, on account of race or color, whether the discrimination is by statute or in the administration of the law independently of it; Strauder v. West Virginia, 100 U. S. 303, 25 L. Ed. 664; In re Virginia, 100 U. S. 339, 25 L. Ed. 676; Neal v. Delaware, 103 U. S. 370, 26 L. Ed. 567; Bush v. Kentucky, 107 U. S. 110, 1 Sup. Ct. 625, 27 L. Ed. 354; but if there is no discrimination on account of race or color and the jury be drawn wholly of white persons, it is valid; Bush v. Kentucky, 107 U. S. 110, 1 Sup. Ct. 625, 27 L. Ed. 354; Hicks v. Com., 3 Ky. Law Rep. 87. A white man may not complain that negroes were excluded from the jury which tried him; Com. v. Wright, 79 Ky. 22, 42 Am. Rep. 203. The exclusion of Chinese from juries is valid; State v. Ah Chew, 16 Nev. 50, 40 Am. Rep. 488.

The right to practice law is not such a privilege or immunity as is protected by the federal constitution; Bradwell v. Illinois, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 130, 21 L. Ed. 442; In re Lock- wood, 154 U. S. 116, 14 Sup. Ct. 1082, 38 L. Ed. 929; In re Taylor, 48 Md. 28, 30 Am. Rep. 451; nor the right to marry; Ex parte Kinney, 3 Hughes 9, Fed. Cas. No. 7,825; nor the right to vote; U. S. v. Cruikshank, 92 U. S. 543, 23 L. Ed. 588; Minor v. Happersett, 21 Wall. 162, 22 L. Ed. 627; Van Valkenburg v. Brown, 43 Cal. 43, 13 Am. Rep. 136; Spencer v. Board of Registration, 1 MacArthur (D. C.) 169, 29 Am. Rep. 582; People v. Barber, 48 Hun (N. Y.) 198; nor the right to practise medicine; Ex parte Spinney, 10 Nev. 323; State v. Carey, 4 Wash. 424, 30 Pac. 729; nor to sell intoxicating liquors; Eilenbecker v. District Court, 134 U. S. 31, 10 Sup. Ct. 424, 33 L. Ed. 801; nor of fishery; McCready v. Virginia, 94 U. S. 391, 24 L. Ed. 248; nor the right of marriage as between different races; Green v. State, 58 Ala. 190, 29 Am. Rep. 739; Ex parte Francois, 3 Woods 367, Fed. Cas. No. 5,047; State v. Gibson, 36 Ind. 389, 10 Am. Rep. 42; State v. Reinhardt, 63 N. C. 547; Fraser v. State, 3 Tex. App. 263, 30 Am. Rep. 131; see Conner v. Elliott, 18 How. (U. S.) 591, 15 L. Ed. 497; nor the privilege of attending the public schools of the state; Ward v. Flood, 48 Cal. 36, 17 Am. Rep. 405; Bertonneau v. Board, 3 Woods 177, Fed. Cas. No. 1,361; Claybrook v. Owensboro, 16 Fed. 297; nor the right of free education; State v. Maryland Institute, 87 Md. 643, 41 Atl. 126; nor the use of the mails for remitting money to a lottery company; Dauphin v. Key, 4 MacArthur (D. C.) 203; nor the right to associate as a military company and drill with arms, not being a regular state organized militia; Presser v. Illinois, 116 U. S. 252, 6 Sup. Ct. 580, 29 L. Ed. 615; nor to use the national flag for advertising purposes; Halter v. Nebraska, 205 U. S. 34, 27 Sup. Ct. 419, 51 L. Ed. 696, 10 Ann. Cas. 525. Nor is a registration law for certain cities, though there be but one in the class affected by it; Mason v. Missouri, 179 U. S. 328, 21 Sup. Ct. 125, 45 L. Ed. 214; nor a classification of towns; Williams v. Eggleston, 170 U. S. 304, 18 Sup. Ct. 617, 42 L. Ed. 1047; nor to have a controversy in the state court prosecuted or determined by one form of action rather than by another; Iowa C. R. Co. v. Iowa, 160 U. S. 389, 16 Sup. Ct. 344, 40 L. Ed. 467; nor to ride in a particular car or part of a public conveyance; Chilton v. R. Co., 114 Mo. 88, 21 S. W. 457, 19 L. R. A. 269, where a regulation requiring negroes to ride in separate cars was held to violate no constitutional right.

In Miller v. Texas, 153 U. S. 535, 14 Sup. Ct. 874, 38 L. Ed. 812, it was held that a state statute prohibiting the carrying of dangerous weapons does not abridge the privileges and immunities of citizens of the United States as defined in the Slaughter House Cases, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 36, 21 L. Ed. 394; Crandall v. Nevada, 6 Wall. (U. S.) 35, 18 L. Ed. 745; Ward v. Maryland, 12 Wall.

(U. S.) 163, 20 L. Ed. 260; and to the same effect is State v. Workman, 35 W. Va. 367, 14 S. E. 9, 14 L. R. A. 600.

Among statutes which have been held not to abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens are: Requiring that every child attending school shall be vaccinated; Bissell v. Davison, 65 Conn. 183, 32 Atl. 348, 29 L. R. A. 251; Jacobson v. Massachusetts, 197 U. S. 11, 25 Sup. Ct. 358, 49 L. Ed. 643, 3 Ann. Cas. 765; that policies of insurance shall not be issued without securing a charter of incorporation; Com. v. Vrooman, 164 Pa. 306, 30 Atl. 217, 25 L. R. A. 250, 44 Am. St. Rep. 603; that contractors shall accept no more than eight hours' work in twenty-four except in cases of necessity; People v. Warren, 77 Hun 120, 28 N. Y. Supp. 303; that every person before registration for election must be able to read and write; Stone v. Smith, 159 Mass. 413, 34 N. E. 521; that one who sells patents shall file an authenticated copy of the letters patent and an affidavit that such letters are genuine; Reeves v. Corning, 51 Fed. 774 (distinguishing Castle v. Hutchinson, 25 Fed. 394); that women shall not be employed in saloons, theatres, etc., where liquor is sold; In re Considine, 83 Fed. 157; that minors shall not remain therein; People v. Japinga, 115 Mich. 222, 73 N. W. 111; prohibiting plumbers from exercising their calling without a certificate from a board of examiners; People v. Warden of City Prison, 81 Hun 434, 30 N. Y. Supp. 1095; requiring that the seller of fertilizers shall take out a license; American Fertilizing Co. v. Board of Agriculture, 43 Fed. 609, 11 L. R. A. 179; that those carrying on the banking business shall comply with the provisions of an act relating thereto; State v. Scougal, 3 S. D. 55, 51 N. W. 858, 15 L. R. A. 477, 44 Am. St. Rep. 756; regulating the right to practise medicine; Brooks v. State, 88 Ala. 122, 6 South. 902; State v. Green, 112 Ind. 462, 14 N. E. 352; dentistry; Gosnell v. State, 52 Ark. 228, 12 S. H. 103, 18 Atl. 194, 23 Am. St. Rep. 22); suppressing a nuisance; In re Hong Wah, 82 Fed. 623; regulating or prohibiting the sale of liquor within a state. See LIQUOR LAWS.

Refusal to any person of the accommodations of any public conveyance or place of amusement; U. S. v. Stanley, 109 U. S. 3, 3 Sup. Ct. 18, 27 L. Ed. 835; refusing to allow colored children to attend the public schools; Lehew v. Brummell, 103 Mo. 546, 15 S. W. 765, 11 L. R. A. 828, 23 Am. St. Rep. 895 (but see *State v. Sup'rs, 19 N. Y. Supp. 978; the establishment of separate schools for white and colored children; McMillan v. School Committee, 107 N. C. 609, 12 S. E. 330, 10 L. R. A. 823; do not abridge the privileges or immunities of citizens; nor does a statute prohibiting the intermarriage of white and colored persons; State v. Reinhardt, 63 N. C. 547.

See CIVIL RIGHTS; DUE PROCESS OF LAW; PROTECTION OF THE LAW; LIBERTY OF CONTRACT; SCHOOLS.

PRIVILEGIUM (priva lex, i. e. de uno homine). In Civil Law. A private law inflicting a punishment or conferring a reward. Calvinus, Lex.; Cicero, de Lege 3, 19; pro Domo 17; Vicat, Voc. Jur. Every peculiar right by which one creditor or class of creditors is preferred to another in personal actions. Vicat, Voc. Jur. Every privilege granted by law in derogation of common right. Mackeldey § 188. A claim or lien on a thing, which once attaching, continues till waiver or satisfaction, and which exists apart from possession. So at the present day in maritime law; e. g. the lien of seamen on ship for wages. 2 Pars. Marit. Law 561. See PRIVILEGE.

PRIVILEGIUM CLERICALE (Lat.). Benefit of clergy, which see.

PRIVILEGIUM, PROPTER, PROPERTY. A qualified property in animals feræ naturæ, i. e. a privilege of hunting, taking, and killing them, in exclusion of others. 2 Bla. Com. 394.

PRIVITY. The mutual or successive relationship to the same rights of property. 1 Greenl. Ev. § 189; Stacy v. Thrasher, 6 How. (U. S.) 60, 12 L. Ed. 337; Bailey v. Sundberg, 49 Fed. 583, 1 C. C. A. 387, 1 U. S. App. 101; Hummel v. Bank, 2 Colo. App. 571, 32 Pac. 72. See PRIVIES.

PRIVITY OF CONTRACT. The relationship which subsists between two contracting parties.

From the nature of the covenant entered into by him, a lessee has both privity of contract and of estate; and though by an assignment of his lease he may destroy his privity of estate, still the privity of contract remains, and he is liable on his covenant notwithstanding the assignment; Dougl. 458, 764; Viner, Abr.; Stacy v. Thrasher, 6 How. (U. S.) 60, 12 L. Ed. 337.

See CAUSA PROXIMA NON REMOTA SPECTATUR; THIRD PARTIES.

PRIVITY OF ESTATE. Identity of title to an estate.

The relation which subsists between a landlord and his tenant.

It is a general rule that a termor cannot transfer the tenancy or privity of estate between himself and his landlord without the latter's consent: an assignee who comes in only in privity of estate is liable only while he continues to be legal assignee; that is, while in possession under the assignment; Rac. Abr. Covenant (14); Woodf. Landl. & T. 261; Viner, Abr.; Washb. R. P.

PRIVITY OF POSSESSION. To establish this, the later occupant must enter under the prior one, and must obtain his possession either by purchase or deed. When the possession is actual, it may commence in parol without deed or writing; and it may be transferred or pass from one occupant to another by parol, bargain, and sale, accompanied by delivery. All the law requires is continuity of possession, where it is actual; Shuffleton v. Nelson, 2 Sawy. 545, Fed. Cas. No. 12,822; Vance v. Wood, 22 Or. 77, 29 Pac. 73.

PRIVY. One who is a partaker or has any part or interest in any action, matter, or thing.

PRIVY COUNCIL. The chief council of the sovereign, called, by pre-eminence, "the Council," composed of those whom the king appoints. 1 Bla. Com. 229.

The number was anciently twelve; afterwards it was increased to an inconvenient number and was thereupon (1679) limited to thirty, of whom fifteen were the principal officers of state virtute officii, ten were lords and five were commoners. The number is now indefinite. With the exception of those of them who are cabinet ministers, the Privy councillors are not now ordinarily summoned to advise the king. The cabinet ministers are those members of the Council who actually conduct the business of the government. Privy councillors are made by the king's nomination, without either patent or grant. They have the title of "Right Honourable" during the life of the monarch who created them; they are subject to removal at his discretion.

Formal meetings of the Council for the discharge of official business are held about ten times a year, but only a small number of the members are summoned to these meetings. Orders in Council, and other matters resolved on by the cabinet, with the approval of the king, are brought forward and passed without discussion.

A committee of the Privy Council is called the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council and possesses extensive appellate jurisdiction. See that title; COURTS OF ENGLAND; CURIA REGIS; CABINET; ORDERS IN COUNCIL.

PRIVY PURSE. The income set apart for the sovereign's personal use.

PRIVY SEAL. In English Law. A seal which the king uses to such grants or things as pass the great seal. Co. 2d Inst. 554. A seal of the British government which is affixed to documents not requiring the great seal. Encycl. Br.

PRIVY SIGNET. The seal which is first used in making grants, etc., of the crown.

It is always in custody of the secretary of state. 2 Bla. Com. 347; 1 Steph. Comm. 593.

PRIVY TOKEN. By stat. 33 Henry VIII. c. 1, punishment is provided against those evil-disposed persons who devised how they might unlawfully get into their possession goods, chattels, and jewels of other persons by "privy tokens and counterfeit letters in other men's names," unto divers persons their friends and acquaintances, by color whereof they have unlawfully obtained the same. A false privy token within the statute has generally been taken to denote some seal, visible mark, or thing, as a key, a ring, etc. 13 Viner, Abr. 460. When one makes use of a false token, he is indictable for the cheat, though the act is not larceny; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 585. But when the consent obtained covers no more than the possession, and the goods are converted to his own use, the offence becomes larceny; 1 Leach 420; East, Pl. Cr. 691. See FALSE TOKEN; CHEAT.

PRIVY VERDICT. One which is delivered privily to a judge out of court.

PRIZE. In Maritime Law. The apprehension and detention at sea of a ship or other vessel, by authority of a belligerent power, either with the design of appropriating it, with the goods and effects it contains, or with that of becoming master of the whole or a part of its cargo. 1 C. Rob. 228. See Bened. Adm. § 509.

The vessel or goods thus taken.

Goods taken on land from a public enemy are called booty; and the distinction between a prize and booty consists in this, that the former is taken at sea and the latter on land.

A lawful prize includes enemy's property captured on the high seas or in territorial waters belonging either to the captor or to the enemy, and property of neutrals captured and confiscated for breach of blockade or as contraband of war; Risley, Law of War 144.

In order to vest the title of the prize in the captors, it must ordinarily be brought with due care into some convenient port for adjudication by a competent court. But circumstances may render such a step improper; and of these the captor must be the judge. In making up his decision, good faith and reasonable discretion are required; Jecker v. Montgomery, 18 How. (U. S.) 110, 15 L. Ed. 311; 1 Kent 101. The condemnation must be pronounced by a prize court of the government of the captor sitting in the country of the captor or his ally; The Santissima Trinidad, 7 Wheat. (U. S.) 283, 5 L. Ed. 454; the prize court of an ally cannot condemn.

Strictly speaking, as between the belligerent parties the title passes, and is vested when the capture is complete; and that was formerly held to be complete and perfect when the battle was over, or the flag hauled down, and the spes recuperandi was gone. Later, twenty-four hours' possession was required, and in still later times it was considered that the captured vessel must be brought infra præsidia (q. v.) to a place of safety. But by the modern usage of nations this is not sufficient to change the property. A judicial tribunal must pass upon the case; and the property is not charged in favor of a neutral vendee or recaptor, so as to bar the original owner, until a regular sentence of condemnation; 1 Kent 102; 1 C. Rob. 135; but this rule is not inflexible.

A neutral ship in the employment of a belligerent is, as well as the enemy's cargo, subject to capture; The City of Mexico, 24 Fed. 33. Where a vessel is captured by the army it is not subject to condemnation as prize; The Nuestra Señora de Regla, 108 U. S. 92, 2 Sup. Ct. 287, 27 L. Ed. 662.

Formerly prizes could be brought into a neutral port and kept there until condemned by a prize court sitting in the belligerent's territory; but it is probable that, at present, this right would be limited to cases arising out of stress of weather, lack of supplies, etc., and only for such length of time as necessity requires; Risley, Law of War, 176.

All captures are made for the government; The Dos Hermanos, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 306, 6 L. Ed. 328; and the title to captured property always vests primarily in the government of the captors. The rights of individuals, where such rights exist, are the result of local law or regulation; The Florida, 101 U. S. 42, 25 L. Ed. 898; 2 Russ. & M. 56. The government may restore a prize, and the courts cannot condemn captured property that had been restored under a treaty of peace before decree; Manila Prize Cases, 188 U. S. 254, 23 Sup. Ct. 415, 47 L. Ed. 463.

The question of prize or no prize in England is triable only in a court of admiralty under a commission from the crown, with an appeal to the crown in council, for the crown reserves the right to decide such questions by its own authority and does not commit its determination to any municipal court.

Under the prize laws of the United States a ship includes a torpedo steam launch; U. S. v. Steever, 113 U. S. 747, 5 Sup. Ct. 765, 28 L. Ed. 1133.

Where there is a probable cause to believe that a vessel is liable to capture, it is proper to take her and subject her to the examination and adjudication of a prize court; Talbot v. The Amelia, 4 Dall. (U. S.) 34, 1 L. Ed. 730. Circumstances creating a reasonable suspicion of conduct warranting her capture are sufficient; The George, 1 Mas. 24, Fed. Cas. No. 5,328.

A captured vessel is usually put in charge of a prize master, whose duty is, immediately on his arrival in port, to institute proceedings for condemnation. He is a bailee for the captors, and may become liable for negligence resulting in loss to them, for demurrage, etc.; 2 Halleck, Int. L., Baker's ed. 391. A captor should bring his prize, as speedily as may be consistent with his other duties, within the jurisdiction of a competent prize court, though under imperious circumstances, he may take it to a foreign port or even sell it. The proceeds of a sale must be subject to the order of a prize court.

Rules are to be found in article 11 of the Naval War Code of 1900, withdrawn in 1904. Articles 5-8 of the Convention Relative to Certain Restrictions on the Exercise of the Right of Capture in Maritime War lay down regulations regarding the crews of enemy merchantships captured by a belligerent.

A captor's right of prize may be forfeited in various ways, as by delay in seeking a prize court; cruel treatment of the captured crew, embezzlement, etc.

By act of March 3, 1899, all laws providing for prize money are repealed. Reference may be made to cases arising out of the Spanish War. U. S. v. Taylor, 188 U. S. 283, 23 Sup. Ct. 412, 47 L. Ed. 477; The Mangrove Prize Money, 188 U. S. 720, 23 Sup. Ct. 343, 47 L. Ed. 664.

See PRIZE COURT; NEUTRALITY; RECAPTURE; CAPTURE; INFRA PRÆSIDIA; PRE-EMPTION.

In Contracts. A reward which is offered to one of several persons who shall accomplish a certain condition; as, if an editor should offer a silver cup to the individual who shall write the best essay in favor of peace. In this case there is a contract subsisting between the editor and each person who may write such essay that he will pay the prize to the writer of the best essay; Wolff, Dr. de la Nat. § 675.

PRIZE COURT. In English Law. That branch of admiralty which adjudicates upon cases of maritime captures made in time of war. A special commission issues in England, in time of war, to the judge of the admiralty court, to enable him to hold such court. See ADMIRALTY.

Some question has been raised whether the prize court is or is not a separate court from the admiralty court. Inasmuch as the commission is always issued to the judge of that court, and the forms of proceeding are substantially those of admiralty, while the law applicable is derived from the same sources, the fact that the commission of prize is only issued occasionally would hardly seem to render the distinction a valid one. But Lord Mansfield said that the whole system of procedure, litigation, and jurisprudence is different; Dougl. 613. See JUDICATURE ACTS.

In the United States, the admiralty courts discharge the duties both of a prize and an instance court (q. v.). The district courts are prize courts; Glass v. The Betsey, 3 Dall. (U. S.) 6, 1 L. Ed. 485. And are given such jurisdiction by the Judicial Code, March 3, 1911, with a direct appeal to the supreme court.

On the breaking out of hostilities the district court appoints commissioners, not exceeding three, to examine witnesses, etc., under the direction of the court; one shall be a retired naval officer, and at least one of the others shall be a member of the bar of the court; R. S. § 4621. For the practice see Bened. Adm. §§ 509-512; 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 494, note; 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 429, note; and as to the English practice, 2 Halleck, Int. L., Baker's ed. 421. Questions of booty may be referred to the admiralty by the crown; Knapp, P. C. 360.

If there is probable cause for the seizure of a vessel that is not a good prize, the captors may have their costs though the vessel is not condemned; Hooper v. U. S., 22 Ct. Cls. 408; they are not liable in damages; The Rover, 2 Gall. 240, 325, Fed. Cas. No. 12091; but if a captor unreasonably delays bringing suit for condemnation, he is liable for demurrage if the court decrees a restoration; U. S. v. The Nuestra Senora De Regla, 108 U. S. 92, 2 Sup. Ct. 287, 27 L. Ed. 662, where the United States was held liable for demurrage from the time when surrender might have been made, at the rate fixed by the charter party. A captor does not lose his right by delay in sending home a prize for adjudication, if he thinks it necessary and uses discretion and good faith; Jecker v. Montgomery, 18 How. (U. S.) 110, 15 L. Ed. 311. It is the usual practice of the prize court to give freight to the neutral carrier of enemy's goods that are seized; 3 Phill. Int. L. 373. The burden of proof that the prize is neutral rests upon the claimant; and if he fails to show it, condemnation ensues; 2 C. Rob. 77; he must clear himself of suspicion; Hooper v. U. S., 22 Ct. Cls. 408.

A prize court of the captors cannot sit in neutral territory, though it may in conquered territory, and in that of a co-belligerent; 2 Halleck, Int. L., Baker's ed. 401.

The decision of a prize court is conclusive against the subject of the state and as to the property in the subject-matter against all parties; but unlawful condemnation may subject the state of the captors to demands for indemnity by a foreign state; id. 407. But courts of other nations may examine as to the jurisdiction of a prize court, and if a condemnation therein was not according to the rules of international law, may treat it as a nullity; id. 411. Condemnations of prize courts are final in actions between individuals, and as to the vessel condemned, giving purchasers a good title against all the world, but do not bind foreign nations, if wrongfully decreed; Cushing v. U. S., 22 Ct. Cls. 1.

There is a clearly marked distinction between proceedings for prize and forfeiture. "The libel for prize is founded upon the law of nations, and depends for proof upon the facts of her acts upon the high seas. The libel for forfeiture is for the violation of a municipal statute, and depends upon a set of facts and circumstances entirely different from that of piratical aggression. The offences charged are separate and distinct, and the cause of action is in no wise the same." The City of Mexico, 28 Fed. 150. In the case of The Itata, it was said that "when a ship is libelled for prize, and the facts fail to sustain the libel, but make out a strong prima facie case of a statutory forfeiture, it would be the duty of the court to remand the case for a new libel; but under no circumstances could a ship be libelled for one offence, and have a decree entered against it for another distinct and separate offence." The Itata, 56 Fed. 505, 515, 5 C. C. A. 608.

The duties of prize courts are thus described by Lord Stowell:

"In forming my judgment, I trust that it has not for a moment escaped my anxious recollection what it is that the duty of my station calls for from me; namely, not to deliver occasional and shifting opinions to serve present purposes of particular national interests, but to administer, with indifference, that justice which the Law of Nations holds out, without distinction, to independent States, some happening to be neutral, and some belligerent. The seat of judicial authority is, indeed, locally here, in the belligerent country, according to the known law and practice of nations; but the law itself has no locality. It is the duty of the person who sits here, to determine this question exactly as he would determine the same question, if sitting at Stockholm; to assert no pretensions on the part of Great Britain which he would not allow to Sweden in the same circumstances; and to impose no duties on Sweden, as a neutral country, which he would not admit to belong to Great Britain in the same character." 1 C. Rob. 340.

In another case, he says:

"It is to be recollected that this is a court of the Law of Nations, though sitting here under the authority of the King of Great Britain. It belongs to other nations as well as to our own; and what foreigners have a right to demand from it, is the administration of the Law of Nations simply, and exclusively of the introduction of principles borrowed from our own municipal jurisprudence, to which it is well known they have at all times expressed no inconsiderable reluctance." 6 id. 349.

There are obvious objections to the system of national prize courts. Although in theory they apply international law to cases coming before them, they are in fact influenced by the municipal laws of their own country. In consequence, their decisions have often given rise to controversies, especially between the belligerent and neutral states. In 1877, the Institute of International Law proposed a reform of the system by the establishment of a court of five judges, two to be appointed by the belligerents and three by neutral powers. At the Second Hague Conference a Convention Relative to the Establishment of an International Prize Court was adopted, consisting of 57 articles, providing for the jurisdiction and constitution of the court and the procedure to be followed by it. The international court is a court of appeal, so that jurisdiction in the first instance is still to be exercised by the prize courts of the belligerent captor. A number of states refused to sign the Convention, while others objected to the constitution of the court. As it has not yet been generally ratified, its fate is still in doubt. Higgins, The Hague Peace Conferences, 407-444.

Nevertheless, British prize courts have at times enforced doctrines of prize law which have been vigorously attacked by other governments. The doctrine of "continuous voyages" as applied by the British courts to contraband, holding that a vessel is liable to condemnation, even if bound for a neutral port, if it be shown that the vessel is to go thence with the same cargo to an enemy port, is condemned by the majority of continental writers. Likewise the application of the doctrine of "continuous voyages" to blockade, made by the American prize courts during the civil war, has called forth protests from British as well as continental writers. 2 Opp. § 401.

PRIZE-FIGHT. A public prize-fight is an indictable offence. No concurrence of wills can justify a public tumult and alarm; therefore, persons who voluntarily engage in a prize-fight and their abettors are all guilty of assault; 4 C. & P. 537; Poll. Tort 186, n.; 1 Cox, C. C. 177; 2 Bish. C. L. § 535. Prize-fights are unlawful, and all persons guilty of aiding and abetting a prize-fight are guilty of an assault; 8 Q. B. Div. 534. See, also, Com. v. Barrett, 108 Mass. 302; Sullivan v. State, 67 Miss. 350, 7 South. 275.

To constitute prize-fighting there must be an expectation of reward to be gained by the contest or competition, either to be won from the contestant or to be otherwise awarded, and there must be an intent to inflict some degree of bodily harm on the contestant; People v. Taylor, 96 Mich. 576, 56 N. W. 27, 21 L. R. A. 287.

If two persons go out to fight with their fists, by consent, and do fight with each other, each is guilty of an assault, although there is no danger or ill-will; Com. v. Collberg, 119 Mass. 350, 20 Am. Rep. 328, disagreeing with State v. Beck, 1 Hill (S. C.) 363, 26 Am. Dec. 190; it is no bar to an action for assault that the parties fought with each other by mutual consent, but such consent may be shown in mitigation of the damages; Adams v. Waggoner, 33 Ind. 531, 5 Am. Rep. 230; one may recover in an action for assault and battery, although he agreed to fight with his adversary; for such agreement to break the peace being void, the maxim volenti non fit injuria does not apply; Bell v. Hansley, 48 N. C. 131; mere voluntary presence at a fight does not, as a matter of law, necessarily render persons so present guilty of an assault, as aiding and abetting in such fight; 8 Q. B. Div. 534 (4 C. & P. 537, distinguished); semble, mere presence of a person at a prize-fight affords some evidence for the consideration of a jury of an aiding and abetting in such fight; 8 Q. B. Div. 534.

To constitute a prize-fight it is not essential that the fight should be with the naked fist or hand, but the fact that a contest was had with gloved hands, as also the kind, size, weight, and other characteristics of the gloves so used, may be looked to in connection with the other evidence in the case in determining whether a contest was a prize-fight, or merely a sparring or boxing exhibition without prize or reward to the victor; State v. Moore, 4 Ohio N. P. 81.

Prize-fighting was not a distinct offence at common law and participants were indictable and punishable for assault, riot, or affray; 8 Q. B. Div. 534; 3 C. & M. 314; 2 C. & P. 234; Sullivan v. State, 67 Miss. 350, 7 South. 275.

A spectator at a sparring match is not particeps criminis; there is nothing unlawful in sparring, unless the men fight until they are so weak that a dangerous fall is likely to be the result of the game. Therefore, except in the latter case, death caused by an injury received during a sparring match does not amount to manslaughter; 10 Cox, C. C. 371.

In Arkansas equity has power to issue an injunction to restrain a prize-fight advertised to take place within its jurisdictional limits; 35 Am. Law Reg. & Rev. 100; the state obtained an injunction on the ground that a corporation was misusing its franchise and maintaining its property as a nuisance, although the act complained of was a crime; 143 Ind. 98, 40 N. E. 914, 28 L. R. A. 727, 52 Am. St. Rep. 407. A private citizen cannot sue to enjoin a prize fight unless he suffers some special injury from it; Louisville Athletic Club v. Nolan, 134 Ky. 220, 119 S. W. 800, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1019.

Evidence is not admissible to prove that such matches are common and harmless amusements, practised in the colleges of this country, nor was there error in refusing to allow the jury to examine the boxing gloves used by the respondent; State v. Burnham, 56 Vt. 445, 48 Am. Rep. 801.

An agreement to engage in a prize-fight is a conspiracy to commit a crime; and the declarations of either party with reference to the common object, or in furtherance of the criminal design, while engaged in its prosecution, are competent evidence against the other, though the agreement was made through backers or other representatives of the principals and the latter were unknown to each other; Seville v. State, 49 Ohio St. 117, 30 N. E. 621, 15 L. R. A. 516.

Whether a pugilistic encounter is a fight or boxing exhibition, is not a question upon which expert testimony is admissible on the trial of an indictment for engaging in a prize-fight. The question must be decided by the jury upon the evidence of what actually took place, under proper instructions from the court, and not upon the opinions of professional pugilists, and others experienced in such combats, or the rules adopted by associations for conducting such contests; Seville v. State, 49 Ohio St. 117, 30 N. E. 621, 15 L. R. A. 516; but it has also been held to be a question of law; People v. Taylor, 98 Mich. 576, 56 N. W. 27, 21 L. R. A. 287.

Statutes prohibiting prize-fights have been passed in nearly all the states.

By statute it is even made criminal for inhabitants of a state by previous agreement made in the state to leave the state and engage in a fight outside of its limits; Com. v. Barrett, 108 Mass. 302.

PRO BONO PUBLICO (Lat.). For the public good.

PRO CONFESSO (Lat. as confessed).

In Equity Practice. A decree taken where the defendant has either never appeared in the suit, or, after having appeared, has neglected to answer. 1 Dan. Ch. Pr. 479; Ad. Eq., 8th ed. *328, 330, 374.

A decree pro confesso is not a decree according to the prayer of the bill, but should be made by the court according to what is proper upon the statements of the bill assumed to be true. After such decree the defendant cannot set up anything in opposition to it either below or on appeal, except what appears on the face of the bill. The subject is fully considered in Thomson v. Wooster, 114 U. S. 104, 5 Sup. Ct. 788, 29 L. Ed. 105.

PRO CONSILIO (Lat.). For counsel given. An annuity pro consilio amounts to a condition, but in a feoffment or lease for life, etc., it is the consideration, and does not amount to a condition; for the state of the land by the feoffment is executed, and the grant of the annuity is executory. Plowd. 412.

PRO DEFECTU EXITUS (Lat.). For, or in case of, default of issue. 2 Salk. 620.

PRO DIGNITATE REGALI (Lat.). In consideration of the royal dignity. 1 Bla. Com. 223.

PRO EO QUOD (Lat.). In Pleading. For this that. This is a phrase of affirmation, and is sufficiently direct and positive for introducing a material averment. 1 Saund. 117; 2 Chit. Pl. 369-393; Gould, Pl. c. 3, § 34.

PRO FALSO CLAMORE SUO (Lat.). A nominal amercement of a plaintiff for his false claim, which used to be inserted in a judgment for the defendant.

PRO FORMA (Lat.). As a matter of form. 2 Kent 245.

Entering a pro forma decree for the sake of expediting a case on appeal, even though the court were actuated in doing so by a sense of public duty, is not sanctioned; Cramp & Sons S. & E. Bldg. Co. v. Turbine Co., 228 U. S. 645, 33 Sup. Ct. 722, 57 L. Ed. 1003.

PRO HAC VICE (Lat.). For this occasion.

PRO INDIVISO (Lat.). For an undivided part. The possession or occupation of lands or tenements belonging to two or more persons, and where, consequently, neither knows his several portion till divided. Bract. l. 5.

PRO INTERESSE SUO (Lat.). According to his interest.

PRO LÆSIONE FIDEI (Lat.). For breach of faith. 3 Bla. Com. 52.

PRO LEGATO (Lat.). As a legacy.

PRO MAJORI CAUTELA (Lat.). From greater caution.

PRO PARTIBUS LIBERANDIS (Lat.). An ancient writ for partition of lands between co-heirs. Reg. Orig. 316.

PRO QUERENTE (Lat.). For the plaintiff; usually abbreviated pro quer.

PRO RATA (Lat.). According to the rate, proportion, or allowance. A creditor of an insolvent estate is to be paid pro rata with creditors of the same class.

According to a certain rule or proportion. 19 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 355, n. (U. S. D. C. Cal.). It is presumed to be used in that sense in a will; id.

PRO RE NATA (Lat.). For the occasion as it may arise.

PRO SALUTE ANIMÆ (Lat.). For the good of his soul.

PRO TANTO (Lat.). For so much. See Donley v. Hays, 17 S. & R. (Pa.) 400.

PRO TEMPORE (Lat.). For the time being; temporary.

PROAMITA (Lat.). A grandfather's sister; a great aunt. Ainsworth, Dict.

PROAVIA (Lat.). A great-grandmother. Ainsworth, Dict.

PROAVUNCULUS (Lat.). A great-grandmother's brother. Ainsworth, Dict.

PROAVUS (Lat.). Great-grandfather. This term is employed in making genealogical tables.

PROBABILITY. Likelihood; consonance to reason; for example, there is a strong probability that a man of good moral character, and who has heretofore been remarkable for truth, will, when examined as a witness under oath, tell the truth; and, on the contrary, that a man who has been guilty of perjury will not, under the same circumstances, tell the truth: the former will, therefore, be entitled to credit, while the latter will not.

PROBABLE. Having the appearance of truth; appearing to be founded in reason.

PROBABLE CAUSE. A reasonable ground of suspicion, supported by circumstances sufficiently strong in themselves to warrant a cautious man in the belief that a person accused is guilty of the offence with which he is charged. Carl v. Ayers, 53 N. Y. 17; Fugate v. Millar, 109 Mo. 281, 19 S. W. 71; Clement v. Major, 1 Colo. App. 297, 29 Pac. 19.

Want of probable cause is one of the elements required to support an action for malicious prosecution, which title see for a discussion of the subject. See MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

In extradition cases, probable cause is made out by proof furnishing good reason to believe that the crime alleged has been committed by the person charged with having committed it; Ornelas v. Ruiz, 161 U. S. 502, 16 Sup. Ct. 689, 40 L. Ed. 787. See EXTRADITION.

In cases of municipal seizure for the breach of revenue, navigation and other laws, if the property seized is not condemned, the party seizing is exempted from liability for such seizure if the court before which the cause is tried grants a certificate that there was probable cause for the seizure. If the seizure was without probable cause, the party injured has his remedy at common law. See The Apollon, 9 Wheat. (U. S.) 362, 6 L. Ed. 111; Taylor v. U. S., 3 How. (U. S.) 197, 11 L. Ed. 559; Buckley v. U. S., 4 How. (U. S.) 251, 11 L. Ed. 961; Jecker v. Montgomery, 13 How. (U. S.) 498, 14 L. Ed. 240. See FOOD AND DRUG ACTS.

PROBATE. Originally, relating to proof; afterwards, relating to the proof of wills. In American law, now a general name or term used to include all matters of which probate courts have jurisdiction. Johnson v. Harrison, 47 Minn. 575, 50 N. W. 923, 28 Am. St. Rep. 382.

PROBATE CODE. The body or system of law relating to the estates of deceased persons, and of persons under guardianship. Johnson v. Harrison, 47 Minn. 575, 50 N. W. 923, 28 Am. St. Rep. 382.

PROBATE COURT. See COURTS OF PROBATE.

PROBATE DUTY. A tax laid by the government on the gross value of the personal property of the deceased testator.

PROBATE OF A WILL. The proof before an officer authorized by law that an instrument offered to be proved or registered is the last will and testament of the deceased person whose testamentary act it is alleged to be.

Jurisdiction. In England, the ecclesiastical courts were the only tribunals in which, except by special prescription, the validity of wills of personal estate could be established or disputed. Hence in all courts, the seal of the ecclesiastical court was conclusive evidence of the factum of a will of personalty; from which it followed that an executor could not assert or rely on his authority in any other court, without showing that he had previously established it in the spiritual court,—the usual proof of which was the production of a copy of the will by which he was appointed, certified under the seal of the ordinary. This was usually called the probate. The probate of a will was conclusive as to personalty; but not as to realty, which could only be settled by an issue out of chancery or a trial at law; 4 Kent 510.

The ecclesiastical courts had no jurisdiction of devises of lands; and in a trial at common law or in equity the probate of a will is not admissible as evidence, but the original will must be produced, and proved the same as any other disputed instrument. This rule has been modified by statute in some of the states. In New York, the record, when the will is proved by the subscribing witnesses, is prima facie evidence, and provision is made for perpetuating the evidence. See Jackson v. Hasbrouck, 12 Johns. (N. Y.) 192. In Massachusetts, North Carolina, and Michigan the probate is conclusive of its validity, and a will cannot be used in evidence till proved; Waters v. Stickney, 12 Allen (Mass.) 1, 90 Am. Dec. 122; 2 Mich. Comp. Laws (1871) 1375; Battle, Rev. 849. In Pennsylvania, the probate was held not conclusive as to lands, and, although not allowed by the register's court, it might be read in evidence; Smith v. Bonsall, 5 Rawle (Pa.) 80; but see McCay v. Clayton, 119 Pa. 138, 12 Atl. 860; but it becomes conclusive as to realty, unless within five years from probate those interested shall contest its validity. In South Carolina the will must be proved de novo in the court of common pleas, though allowed in the ordinary; Gibson v. Brown, 1 N. & McC. (S. C.) 326. In New Jersey, probate is necessary, but it is not conclusive; Denn v. Allen, 2 N. J. L. 42; except in actions not commenced within seven years from the probate; N. J. Rev. Stat. 1250. See EXECUTORS AND ADMINISTRATORS.

The effect of the probate in this country, and the rules in regard to jurisdiction, are generally the same as in England; but, as no ecclesiastical courts exist in the United States, probate is granted by some judicial officer, who performs the part of the ordinary in England, but generally with more ample powers in relation to the administration of the estate. See SURROGATE; LETTERS TESTAMENTARY.

The proof of the will is a judicial proceeding, and the probate a judicial act. The party propounding the instrument is termed the proponent, and the party disputing, the contestant. In England, proof ex parte was called probate in common form, and proof on notice to the next of kin, proof in solemn form. In the United States, generally speaking, proofs are not taken until citation or notice has been issued by the judge to all the parties interested to attend. On the return of the citation, the witnesses are examined, and the trial proceeds before the court. If the judge, when both parties have been heard, decides in favor of the will, he admits it to probate; if against the will he rejects it. In Pennsylvania no citation is required.

More than one instrument may be proved; and where the contents of two or more instruments are not wholly inconsistent with each other, they may all be admitted as together constituting the last will and testament of the deceased; Will. Exec. *138.

On the probate, the alleged will may be contested on any ground tending to impeach its validity; as, that it was not executed in due form of law and according to the requisite statutory solemnities; that it was forged, or was revoked, or was procured by force, fraud, misrepresentation, or undue influence over a weak mind, or that the testator was incompetent by reason of idiocy or lunacy.

PROBATIO (Lat.). Evidence. See PREUVE.

PROBATION. The evidence which proves a thing. It is either by record, writing, the party's own oath, or the testimony of witnesses. Proof. It also signifies the time of a novitiate; a trial. Nov. 5.

PROBATION SYSTEM. An effort to encourage good behavior in a convicted criminal by granting a deduction from his sentence or in case of its being his first offence, releasing him on condition that, for a stated period, he lead an orderly life. See SENTENCE; JUVENILE COURTS; PRISONER.

PROBATOR. In Old English Law. Strictly, an accomplice in felony who to save himself confessed the fact, and charged or accused any other as principal or accessory, against whom he was bound to make good his charge. It also signified an approver, or one who undertakes to prove a crime charged upon another. Jacob, Law Dict.

PROBATORY TERM. In the British courts of admiralty, after the issue is formed between the parties, a time for taking the testimony is assigned. This is called a probatory term. It is common to both parties, and either party may examine his witnesses. When good cause is shown, the term will be enlarged. 2 Brown, Civ. Law 418; Dunlop, Adm. Pr. 217.

PROBI ET LEGALES HOMINES (Lat.). Good and lawful men; persons competent in point of law to serve on juries. Cro. Eliz. 654, 751; Cro. Jac. 635; Mart. & Y. 147; Bac. Abr. Juries (A).

PROCEDENDO (Lat.). In Practice. A writ which issues where an action is removed from an inferior to a superior jurisdiction by habeas corpus, certiorari, or writ of privilege, and it does not appear to such superior court that the suggestion upon which the cause has been removed is sufficiently proved; in which case the superior court by this writ remits the cause to the court from whence it came, commanding the inferior court to proceed to the final hearing and determination of the same. See 2 W. Bla. 1060; 6 Term 365.

PROCEDURE. The methods of conducting litigation and judicial proceedings.

"Practice," like "procedure," which is used in the Judicature Acts, denotes the mode of proceeding by which a legal right is enforced, as distinguished from the law which gives or defines the right, and which, by means of the proceeding, the court is to administer; the machinery, as distinguished from its product. Per Lush, L. J., in 7 Q. B. Div. 333.

Prof. Thayer says (Evid. 200) that in the early days procedure was more important than law. It is the life of ancient law; 1 P. & M. XXXIII.

The term is so broad in its signification that it is seldom employed in our books as a term of art. It includes in its meaning whatever is embraced by the three technical terms, pleading, evidence, and practice. And practice in this sense means those legal rules which direct the course of proceeding to bring parties into the court and the course of the court after they are brought in; and evidence as a part of procedure signifies those rules of law whereby we determine what testimony is to be admitted and what rejected in each case, and what is the weight to be given to the testimony admitted. Bish. Cr. Proc. § 2; Kring v. Missouri, 107 U. S. 231, 2 Sup. Ct. 443, 27 L. Ed. 506. See Cochran v. Ward, 5 Ind. App. 95, 29 N. E. 795, 31 N. E. 581, 51 Am. St. Rep. 229.

The term is, with respect to its present use, rather a modern one. Recently the supreme court of the United States commented on the fact that it was unable to find anywhere a satisfactory definition of it. Apart from observations of the most general character the subject is one which does not admit of distinct or detailed treatment under this title. It includes all the practical titles of the law to which reference should be had, with respect to any particular matter, as they are separately treated in this work.

Probably the most salient fact with respect to legal procedure in civil cases is the modern tendency in England and the United States to obliterate technical distinctions between law and equity and to authorize the enforcement of equitable remedies, as well in courts of law as of chancery. But with respect to this tendency it has been very justly said: "Although, under modern systems, courts of law may enforce equitable rights, the proof must agree with the pleadings, and the relief granted must be within the prayer for relief and the grounds relied on." Eddy & B. Live-Stock Co. v. Blackburn, 70 Fed. 949, 17 C. C. A. 532.

Another feature of modern thought on the subject of procedure is the controversy between the advocates of common-law practice and that under codes.

In England the most radical changes in procedure have been introduced by the Judicature Acts, which title see. Under the changes thus introduced, where one formerly, in seeking relief from judicial tribunals, was obliged to use different forms of procedure in different courts, these acts, and the rules made pursuant to them, "have to a very large extent introduced uniformity in this respect into the practice of the different divisions of the court." 1 Brett, Com. 336.

In criminal procedure there is a strong tendency indicated towards simplification and expedition. The most notable tendency of a general character is that towards the abolition or modification of the grand jury system, as to which see that title. Comprehensive changes have been made in the criminal procedure of France relating to the preliminary examination of accused persons. See JUGE D'INSTRUCTION.

A new criminal code, notable both as to the changes introduced and the care with which it was prepared, went into effect in Italy in 1890, an analysis of which will be found in 35 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 696. In Great Britain the criminal procedure of Scotland is very different from that of England notwithstanding the Union, and a carefully detailed account of it may be found in 35 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 619. As to code changes in other countries, see CODE.

In a case defining the functions and authority of a prosecuting attorney and his right to enter a nolle prosequi after conviction, the supreme court of Louisiana directed attention to some differences between the criminal procedure of that state and that of England and the states which follow English precedents. The great power given to the prosecuting officer under the common law is greatly diminished in that state, and the court concludes its examination of the subject by this classification:

"First. The inauguration or preliminary stage, when the prosecuting officer has absolute control of his indictments.

"Second. The trial of the cause, and its incidents, during which the court has control and the power of the prosecuting officer is suspended.

"Third. The period between the verdict of the jury and the sentence of the court, when the pardoning power comes into operation." State v. Moise, 48 La. Ann. 109, 18 South. 943, 35 L. R. A. 701.

See POSTULATIO.

PROCEDURE ACTS. Three acts of parliament passed in 1852, 1854, and 1860, for the amendment of procedure at common law. Moz. & W. They have been largely superseded by the Judicature Acts of 1873 and 1875. See JUDICATURE ACTS.

PROCEEDING. In its general acceptance, the form in which actions are to be brought and defended, the manner of intervening in suits, of conducting them, the mode of deciding them, of opposing judgments, and of executing. It includes certified copies of pleadings on which the case was tried. School Dist. No. 49 v. Cooper, 44 Neb. 714, 62 N. W. 1084.

Ordinary proceedings intend the regular and usual mode of carrying on a suit by due course at common law.

Summary proceedings are those where the matter in dispute is decided without the intervention of a jury; these must be authorized by the legislature, except, perhaps in cases of contempt, for such proceedings are unknown to the common law.

In U. S. v. Bell, 81 Fed. 830, the question was suggested whether proceedings before pension commissioners are judicial proceedings within the meaning of R. S. § 860, which provides that evidence obtained from a party or witness shall not be used against him in any criminal proceeding. The court passed the question without deciding it, though apparently inclined to the affirmative.

In Louisiana there is a third kind of proceeding, known by the name of executory process (q. v.).

In New York the code of practice divides remedies into actions and special proceedings. An action is an ordinary proceeding in a court of justice, by which one party prosecutes another party for the enforcement or protection of a right, the redress or prevention of a wrong, or the punishment of a public offence. Every other remedy is a special proceeding.

PROCEEDS. Money or articles of value arising or obtained from the sale of property. Goods purchased with money arising from the sale of other goods, or obtained on their credit, are proceeds of such goods. 2 Pars. Marit. L. 201; Bened. Adm. 290. The sum, amount, or value of goods sold, or converted into money. Whart. Dict. Proceeds does not mean necessarily money; Phelps v. Harris, 101 U. S. 380, 25 L. Ed. 555.

PROCERES (Lat.). The name by which the chief magistrates in cities were formerly known. St. Armand, Hist. Eq. 88.

PROCÈS-VERBAL. In French Law. A true relation in writing in due form of law, of what has been done and said verbally in the presence of a public officer, and what he himself does upon the occasion. It is a species of inquisition of office.

The procès-verbal should be dated, contain the name, qualities, and residence of the public functionary who makes it, the cause of complaint, the facts tending to prove the existence of the crime, that which serves to substantiate the charge, point out its nature, the time, the place, the circumstances, state the proofs and presumptions, describe the place,—in a word, everything calculated to ascertain the truth. It must be signed by the officer. Dalloz, Dict. See JUGE D'INSTRUCTION.

PROCESS. In Practice. The means of compelling a defendant to appear in court, after suing out the original writ, in civil, and after indictment, in criminal, cases.

The method taken by law to compel a compliance with the original writ or commands of the court.

A writ, warrant, subpoena, or other formal writing issued by authority of law; also the means of accomplishing an end, including judicial proceedings; Gollobitsch v. Rainbow, 84 Ia. 567, 51 N. W. 48; the means or method pointed out by a statute, or used to acquire jurisdiction of the defendants, whether by writ or notice. Wilson v. R. Co., 108 Mo. 588, 18 S. W. 286, 32 Am. St. Rep. 624.

In civil causes, in all real actions and for injuries not committed against the peace, the first step was a summons, which was served in personal actions by two persons called summoners, in real actions by erecting a white stick or wand on the defendant's grounds. If this summons was disregarded, the next step was an attachment of the goods of the defendant, and in case of trespasses the attachment issued at once without a summons. If the attachment failed, a distringas issued, which was continued till he appeared. Here process ended in injuries not committed with force. In case of such injuries, an arrest of the person was provided for. See ARREST. In modern practice some of these steps are omitted; but the practice of the different states is too various to admit of tracing here the differences which have resulted from retaining different steps of the process.

In the English law, process in civil causes is called original process, when it is founded upon the original writ; and also to distinguish it from mesne or intermediate process, which issues pending the suit, upon some collateral interlocutory matter, as, to summon juries, witnesses, and the like; mesne process is also sometimes put in contradistinction to final process, or process of execution; and then it signifies all process which intervenes between the beginning and end of a suit. 3 Bla. Com. 279. See REGULAR PROCESS; OBSTRUCTING PROCESS; SHERIFF; SERVICE.

No court can, at common law, exercise jurisdiction over a party unless he is served with the process within the territorial jurisdiction of the court, or voluntarily appears; Mexican C. R. Co. v. Pinkney, 149 U. S. 194, 13 Sup. Ct. 859, 37 L. Ed. 699. See JURISDICTION.

As to the grant of letters patent for a process, see PATENT.

PROCESS OF INTERPLEADER. See INTERPLEADER.

PROCESS OF LAW. See DUE PROCESS OF LAW.

PROCESSION. A peaceable procession in the streets of a town, if lawful, and the streets are not obstructed more than is ordinarily the case under such circumstances, is not an indictable offence on the part of those composing it. State v. Hughes, 72 N. C. 25.

The peaceable procession in the streets of a religious body, known as the Salvation Army, has been held lawful, although the members were aware of the lawless intention of their opponents to make it the occasion of a riot; 26 Sol. Journ. 505. See 26 Alb. L. J. 22; STREETS.

PROCESSIONING. A term used to denote the manner of ascertaining the boundaries of land, as provided for by the laws of that state. 1 Tenn. Comp. Stat. § 2020. The term is also used in North Carolina and Georgia. Cansler v. Hoke, 14 N. C. 268; Christian v. Weaver, 79 Ga. 406, 7 S. E. 261.

PROCESSUM CONTINUANDO. A writ for the continuation of process after the death of the chief justice or other justices in the commission of oyer and terminer. Reg. Orig. 128.

PROCHEIN (L. Fr.). Next. A term somewhat used in modern law, and more frequently in the old law; as, prochein ami, prochein cousin. Co. Litt. 10.

PROCHEIN AMI (L. Fr.; spelled, also, prochein amy and prochain amy). Next friend (q. v.).

PROCLAMATION. The act of proclaiming or making publicly known certain affairs of state. A written or printed document in which are contained such matters, issued by proper authority: as, the president's proclamation, the governor's, the mayor's proclamation. Also used to express the public nomination of any one to a high office: as, such a prince was proclaimed emperor.

The president's proclamation may give force to a law, when authorized by congress; as, if congress were to pass an act, which should take effect upon the happening of a contingent event, which was to be declared by the president by proclamation to have happened, in this case the proclamation would give the act the force of law, which till then it wanted. How far a proclamation is evidence of facts, see Bac. Abr. Evidence (F); 8 How. St. Tr. 212; 4 Maule & S. 546; 2 Camp. 44; Dane, Abr. ch. 96, a. 2, 3, 4; Cook v. Hall, 1 Gilman (Ill.) 577; Brooke, Abr. The public proclamation of pardon and amnesty has the force of public law, of which courts and officers will take notice though not specially pleaded; Jenkins v. Collard, 145 U. S. 546, 12 Sup. Ct. 868, 36 L. Ed. 812. Courts take judicial notice of official proclamations and messages of the governor of the state; Wells v. R. Co., 110 Mo. 286, 19 S. W. 530, 15 L. R. A. 847.

On the breaking out of war it is usual for a nation to issue a proclamation announcing the existence of hostilities. See MANIFESTO; WAR.

In Practice. The declaration made by the crier, by authority of the court, that something is about to be done.

It usually commences with the French word Oyez, do you hear, in order to attract attention: it is particularly used on the opening of the court, and at its adjournment; it is also frequently employed to discharge persons who have been accused of crimes or misdemeanors.

PROCLAMATION OF EMANCIPATION. See BONDAGE.

PROCLAMATION OF EXIGENTS. In Old English Practice. On awarding an exigent, in order to outlawry, a writ of proclamation issued to the sheriff of the county where the party dwelt, to make three proclamations for the defendant to yield himself or be outlawed.

PROCLAMATION OF A FINE. The proclamation of a fine was a notice, openly and solemnly given at all the assizes held in the county where the lands lay. It was made within one year after engrossing the fine; and anciently consisted in the fine as expressed being openly read in court sixteen times,—four times in the term in which it was made, and four times in each of the three succeeding terms. This, however, was afterwards reduced to one reading in each term. These proclamations were upon transcripts of the fine, sent by the justices of the common pleas to the justices of assize and the justices of the peace. 2 Bla. Com. 352.

PROCLAMATION OF REBELLION. In Old English Practice. When a party neglected to appear upon a subpoena, or an attachment in chancery, a writ bearing this name issued; and, if he did not surrender himself by the day assigned, he was reputed and declared a rebel.

PROCLAMATOR. An officer of the English court of common pleas.

PROCREATION. The generation of children: it is an act authorized by the law of nature. One of the principal ends of marriage is the procreation of children. Inst. tit. 2, in pr.

PROCTOR. One appointed to manage the affairs of another or represent him in judgment. The authority was in writing under the hand of the principal and was called a proxy.

One who is employed to manage for another proceedings in admiralty and ecclesiastical causes.

A proctor, strictly speaking, conducts the proceeding out of court, as an English solicitor does in common-law courts; while the advocate conducts those in court. But in this country the distinction is not observed. A proctor is properly appointed in writing, but not necessarily so. Until final decree, he has entire control of the cause; but after decree he has no power except to enforce it. See Bened. Adm. § 334; W. Rob. 335. The fees of proctors are fixed by R. S. §§ 823-829; but fees not in the statute may be allowed in special cases; The Sarah E. Kennedy, 25 Fed. 672.

In England under the judicature acts proctors may practise in all divisions of the supreme court of judicature.

One of the representatives of the clergy in the convocations of the two provinces of Canterbury and York in the church of England.

An official in a university whose function it is to see that good order is kept.

See QUEEN'S PROCTOR.

PROCURATION. In Civil Law. The act by which one person gives power to another to act in his place, as he could do himself. A letter of attorney.

An express procuration is one made by the express consent of the parties. An implied or tacit procuration takes place when an individual sues another managing his affairs and does not interfere to prevent it. Dig. 17. 1. 6. 2; 50. 17. 60; Code 7. 32. 2.

Procurations are also divided into those which contain absolute power, or a general authority, and those which give only a limited power. Dig. 3. 3. 58; 17. 1. 60. 4.

Procurations are ended in three ways:

first, by the revocation of the authority; second, by the death of one of the parties; third, by the renunciation of the mandatory, when it is made in proper time and place and it can be done without injury to the person who gave it. Inst. 3. 27; Dig. 17. 1; Code 4. 35. See AUTHORITY; LETTER OF ATTORNEY; MANDATE; PER PROC.

The use of the word procuration (usually, per procuratione, or abbreviated to p. p.) on a promissory note by an agent is notice that the agent has but a limited authority to sign. Neg. Instr. Act § 21. See [1893] App. Cas. 170.

The act or offence of procuring women for lewd purposes. It is an offence in England, punishable by whipping; Act of December, 1912. See Odgers, C. L. 214.

See WHITE SLAVE ACT.

PROCURATIONS. In Ecclesiastical Law. Certain sums of money which parish priests pay yearly to the bishops or archdeacons, ratione visitationis. Dig. 3. 39. 25; Ayliffe, Parerg. 429; 17 Viner, Abr. 544.

PROCURATOR. In Civil Law. A proctor; a person who acts for another by virtue of a procuration. Procurator est, qui aliena negotia mandata Domini administrat. Dig. 3. 3. 1. See ATTORNEY; AUTHORITY.

PROCURATOR FISCAL. In Scotch Law. A public prosecutor. Bell, Dict.

PROCURATOR LITIS (Lat.). In Civil Law. One who by command of another institutes and carries on for him a suit. Vicat, Voc. Jur. Procurator is properly used of the attorney of actor (the plaintiff), defensor of the attorney of reus (the defendant). It is distinguished from advocatus, who was one who undertook the defence of persons, not things, and who was generally the patron of the person whose defence he prepared, the person himself speaking it. It is also distinguished from cognitor who conducted the cause in the presence of his principal, and generally in cases of citizenship; whereas the procurator conducted the cause in the absence of his principal. Calvinus, Lex.

PROCURATORIUM (Lat.). The proxy or instrument by which a proctor is constituted and appointed.

PROCURATORY OF RESIGNATION. A proceeding by which the vassal authorized the return of the fee to his superior. Bell, Dict.

PROCURE. To contrive, effect, or bring about; to cause. Long v. State, 23 Neb. 45, 36 N. W. 310.

There is a clear legal distinction between procuring an act to be done and suffering it to be done. 2 Ben. 196.

PROCUREUR DE LA RÉPUBLIQUE. The name of an officer charged with the prosecution of crimes under the French procedure, corresponding to the prosecuting attorney in the United States. See JUGE D'INSTRUCTION.

PRODIGAL. In Civil Law. A person who, though of full age, is incapable of managing his affairs, and of the obligations which attend them, in consequence of his bad conduct, and for whom a curator is therefore appointed. See PRODIGUS.

PRODIGUS. A prodigal. According to the Code Napoléon, a French subject of full age, who is of extravagant habits, when adjudged to be a "prodigal," is restrained from dealing with his movables without the consent of a legal adviser. Such judgment in France will be disregarded by an English court; [1902] 1 Ch. 488; 49 L. J. Ch. 261.

PRODITORIE (Law Lat.). Treasonably. This is a technical word formerly used in indictments for treason, when they were written in Latin. Tomlins.

PRODUCE. The product of natural growth, labor, or capital. The produce of a farm has been held not to include beef raised and killed thereon; Philadelphia v. Davis, 6 W. & S. (Pa.) 269; and yearly produce of a farm is held to be confined to crops gathered annually; Ladd v. Abel, 18 Conn. 513.

PRODUCE BROKER. A person occupied in buying and selling agricultural or farm products. 1 Abb. 470. See BROKER; COMMISSION MERCHANT; FACTOR.

PRODUCENT. In Ecclesiastical Law. He who produces a witness to be examined.

PRODUCTION. That which is produced or made product; fruit of labor; as the productions of the earth, comprehending all vegetables and fruits; the productions of intellect, or genius, as poems and prose compositions; the productions of art, as manufactures of every kinds. Dano v. R. Co., 27 Ark. 567.

PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS. Where there is an issue either direct or collateral on the forgery of papers, courts of equity or law will compel their production for inspection in advance of trial. A party to an action at law may, before trial, maintain a bill for discovery of letters relied on by the other party to the suit and alleged to have been written by the plaintiff in the bill, but which the plaintiff alleges are forgeries. The production of private writings in which another person has an interest may be had by a bill of discovery in proper cases, or in trials at law by an order for inspection, a notice to produce or a writ of subpoena duces tecum.

The order for inspection, though now provided for by statute in most states, was with in the practice of the English common-law courts at an early date. It is resorted to where documents in the possession of the other party are required for use in preparing the pleadings either by the plaintiff;

4 Bing. 539; 8 Dowl. 118; Churchill v. Loeser, 89 Hun 613, 35 N. Y. Supp. 310; or the defendant; 6 B. & S. 888; Earle v. Beman, 1 App. Div. 136, 36 N. Y. Supp. 833; but an order requiring a prospective defendant to produce books at an examination by plaintiff to enable the latter to prepare his complaint is erroneous; Green v. Carey, 81 Hun 496, 31 N. Y. Supp. 8. Where there was but one copy of an agreement between two persons, he who retained it would be compelled to produce it for the inspection of the other who might also take a copy of it, as, in the case of a partnership agreement; 1 Brod. & B. 318; or a lease; 4 Taunt. 666; or plans constituting part of an agreement sued on; Frescole v. Lancaster, 70 Fed. 337.

The practice was originally confined to cases in which there was but one copy, but it was speedily extended to any case in which the parties seeking an inspection have an interest in the document; 8 C. B. N. S. 617; nor was it necessary that it should be a single paper, but it extended to correspondence, as, a letter accepting an oral offer; id. An order for inspection might also be obtained by a defendant who suggested the alteration or forgery of the document which formed the cause of action; 2 Man. & G. 758. In such a case it was usual and proper for the application to be founded on an affidavit attacking the genuineness of the paper; Jackson v. Jones, 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 17.

The right of inspection is confined to documents supporting the case of the party applying for it and does not extend to those which support the case of his opponent; 1 Myl. & K. 88; 8 Eng. Rul. Cas. 712, and note; nor can the right be used for the purpose of finding out the case of the other party; [1897] 2 Q. B. 62; or where the books applied for contain entries of a confidential, privileged nature, not relative to the action, and the legitimate information from them can be obtained at the trial, and they are in possession of the plaintiff and can be produced under subpoena; Lowenthal v. Leonard, 20 App. Div. 330, 46 N. Y. Supp. 818; and in a libel suit an order will not be made for the production of the original manuscript where the publication is admitted; [1897] 2 Q. B. 188; [1895] 2 Q. B. 148. If, however, the party is entitled to the production of the document as being applicable to his case, his right is unaffected by the circumstance that it discloses the case of his opponent; id.; or that it is evidence for the other party's case also; Dock v. Dock, 180 Pa. 14, 36 Atl. 411, 57 Am. St. Rep. 617.

The right of common-law courts to order an inspection was established in England by stat. 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, § 6, which authorized the exercise of the power where an action was pending, and documents were in the control of the other party, of which by a bill of discovery the inspection could be secured. In the United States prior to the statutes of the same character which were passed in most states, the courts were indisposed to assume the power; Utica Bank v. Hillard, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 62; and resort was more frequently had to a bill of discovery.

Public documents are subject to the general rule that their inspection will not be ordered where it would be detrimental to the public interest; 1 Greenl. Ev. §§ 251, 476. As to the right of inspection of public records generally, see RECORDS.

Books of a corporation are not the private books of any of the officers and do not become so on the dissolution of such corporation; Wheeler v. U. S., 226 U. S. 478, 33 Sup. Ct. 158, 57 L. Ed. 309.

In England, counsel may notify opposing counsel to inspect documents in his (the former's) possession; failing such notice, they must be strictly proved at the trial; Odgers, C. L. 1242.

An objection to the production of documents on the ground that they may tend to criminate the party ordered to produce them must be taken only to the production of the documents alleged to have that effect and not to the order; [1897] 2 Q. B. 124.

In a libel suit against a newspaper proprietor and other defendants for a joint claim for the same libel and also a joint claim for damages for conspiracy, a newspaper proprietor cannot refuse production of the newspapers, either on the ground of privilege or that its production would tend to incriminate him, if the court considers that he does not honestly believe that its production will have that effect; [1899] 2 Ir. Rep. Q. B. 199. The publisher had admitted publication.

A person who has obtained an order for inspection of books cannot have irrelevant parts kept concealed during the whole litigation or unsealed and resealed on oath from time to time as the books are required in business, so as to cause interruption of it; it is sufficient if irrelevant entries are covered, during the actual inspection, with the affidavit of the person producing them that nothing material has been covered; [1897] 1 Ch. 761.

An order for production will be refused where the party applying refuses to state how the papers in question are material; Bull v. Thompson Co., 99 Ga. 134, 25 S. E. 31.

Too great generality in the application for production of books is cured by particularizing books in the order; Hofman v. Seixas, 12 Misc. 3, 33 N. Y. Supp. 23.

Where a relevant letter is scheduled in an application for the production of documents and it refers to another letter, the latter is relevant in the same application; 95 L. T. 694; and letters produced by the other party or his solicitor as a matter of courtesy must, subject to the explanation that they were produced incautiously, be treated as relevant and as if scheduled; 95 L. T. 694.

Any compulsory discovery by extorting the party's oath or compelling the production of his private books and papers in order to convict him of crime or to forfeit his property, was held unconstitutional as contrary to the fourth and fifth amendments; Boyd v. U. S., 116 U. S. 616, 6 Sup. Ct. 524, 29 L. Ed. 746. No statute which leaves the party or witness subject to prosecution after he answers the incriminating questions can supplant the privilege conferred by the constitution. R. S. § 860, does not supply a complete protection from all the perils against which the constitutional prohibition was designed to guard, and is not a full substitute for that prohibition; Counselman v. Hitchcock, 142 U. S. 547, 12 Sup. Ct. 195, 35 L. Ed. 1110.

The act of Feb. 11, 1893, provided that no person shall be excused from attending and testifying or from producing books, papers, tariffs, contracts, agreements and documents before the Interstate Commerce Commission, on the ground that the evidence, documentary or otherwise, may tend to incriminate him or subject him to a penalty or forfeiture. This act (1893) was passed in view of the Counselman Case, supra. It was held to afford absolute immunity against prosecution, federal or state, for the offence to which the question relates, and to deprive the witness of his constitutional right to refuse to answer; Brown v. Walker, 161 U. S. 591, 16 Sup. Ct. 644, 40 L. Ed. 819.

By act of Feb. 19, 1903, courts may compel the attendance of witnesses both on the part of a carrier and shipper, who shall be required to answer on all subjects relating, directly or indirectly, to the matter in controversy, and may compel the production of all books and papers both of the carrier and shipper which relate directly or indirectly to such transaction; the claim that such testimony or evidence may tend to criminate the person giving such evidence shall not excuse such person from testifying or such corporation producing its books and papers, but no person shall be prosecuted or subjected to any penalty or forfeiture for or on account of any transaction, matter or thing concerning which he may testify or produce evidence documentary or otherwise in such proceeding.

It is held that under this act the giving of testimony and the production of books does not deprive the witness of any rights under the fourth and fifth amendments; Interstate Com. Com'n v. Baird, 194 U. S. 25, 24 Sup. Ct. 563, 48 L. Ed. 860.

A corporation has not the constitutional right to refuse to submit its books and papers for an examination at the suit of the state; and an officer of a corporation which is charged with criminal violation of a statute cannot plead the criminality of the corporation as ground of a refusal to produce its books; Hale v. Henkel, 201 U. S. 43, 26 Sup. Ct. 370, 50 L. Ed. 652.

A state, under its visitatorial powers over corporations doing business therein, may compel them to produce books and papers (including those kept outside the state) for investigation, and may require the testimony of their officers and employees to ascertain whether its laws have been complied with; Hammond P. Co. v. Arkansas, 212 U. S. 322, 29 Sup. Ct. 370, 53 L. Ed. 530, 15 Ann. Cas. 645.

A subpoena duces tecum, which is specific and properly limited in its scope, and calls for the production of documents which, as against their lawful owner to whom the writ is directed, the party procuring its issuance is entitled to have produced, does not violate the unreasonable search and seizure provisions of the fourth amendment, and the constitutional privilege against testifying against himself cannot be raised for his personal benefit by an officer of the corporation having the documents in his possession; Wilson v. U. S., 221 U. S. 361, 31 Sup. Ct. 538, 55 L. Ed. 771, Ann. Cas. 1912D, 558.

An officer of a corporation cannot refuse to produce documents of a corporation on the ground that they would incriminate him simply because he himself wrote or signed them, and this even if indictments are pending against him; id.

The act of June 30, 1906, provides that under the immunity provisions of the acts of Feb., 1893, and Feb., 1903, immunity shall extend only to a natural person who in obedience to a subpoena gives testimony under oath or produces evidence, documentary or otherwise.

A state may require a corporation doing business therein, to produce before its tribunal books and papers kept by it or the state, although, at the time the books may be outside the state. It cannot refuse on the ground of incrimination; the court, on inspection, will determine the sufficiency of the objection, and what portion of them should be excluded. Such a statute does not deny to corporations the equal protection of the law, as the classification is a proper one. A Vermont act so providing, and subjecting to contempt proceedings corporations failing to comply with the act, is not unconstitutional as depriving corporations of their property without due process of law, or as constituting unreasonable searches or seizures, or requiring corporations to incriminate themselves; Consolidated Rendering Co. v. Vermont, 207 U. S. 541, 28 Sup. Ct. 178, 52 L. Ed. 327, 12 Ann. Cas. 658.

See NOTICE TO PRODUCE PAPERS; INCRIMINATION; SUBPOENA DUCES TECUM; PROFERT IN CURIA.

PRODUCTION OF SUIT (productio sectæ). The concluding clause of all declarations is, "and thereupon he brings his suit." In old pleading, this referred to the production by the plaintiff of his secta or suit, i. e. persons prepared to confirm what he had stated in the declaration. The phrase has remained; but the practice from which it arose is obsolete; 3 Bla. Com. 295; Steph. Pl., Andr. ed. § 220.

PROFANE. That which has not been consecrated. By a profane place is understood one which is neither sacred, nor sanctified, nor religious. Dig. 11. 7. 2. 4.

PROFANELY. In a profane manner. In an indictment, under the act of assembly of Pennsylvania, against profanity, it is requisite that the words should be laid to have been spoken profanely. Updegraph v. Com., 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 394. See BLASPHEMY.

PROFANENESS, PROFANITY. In Criminal Law. A disrespect to the name of God or His divine providence. This is variously punished by statute in the several states. See Cooley, Const. Lim., 2d ed. 580. See BLASPHEMY.

PROFECTITUS (Lat.). In Civil Law. That which descends to us from our ascendants. Dig. 23. 3. 5.

PROFERT IN CURIA (Lat. he produces in court: sometimes written profert in curiam, with the same meaning). In Pleading. A declaration on the record that a party produces in court the deed under which he makes title. In ancient practice, the deed itself was actually produced; in modern times, the allegation only is made in the declaration, and the deed is then constructively in possession of the court; 6 M. & G. 277; Tucker v. State, 11 Md. 322; Germain v. Wilgus, 67 Fed. 597, 14 C. C. A. 561.

Profert is, in general, necessary when either party pleads a deed and claims rights under it, whether plaintiff; Patten v. Heustis, 26 N. J. L. 293; or defendant; Duncan v. Clements, 17 Ark. 279; to enable the court to inspect and construe the instrument pleaded, and to entitle the adverse party to oyer thereof; 10 Co. 92 b; 1 Chitty, Pl. 414; Andr. Steph. Pl. 160; and is not necessary when the party pleads it without making title under it; Gould, Pl. c. 7, p. 2, § 47. But a party who is actually or presumptively unable to produce a deed may plead it without profert, as in suit by a stranger; Com. Dig. Pleader, O. 8; Cro. Jac. 217; Cro. Car. 441; or one claiming title by operation of law; Co. Litt. 225; Bac. Abr. Pleas (I 12); 5 Co. 75; or where the deed is in the possession of the adverse party or is lost. In all these cases the special facts must be shown, to excuse the want of profert. See Gould, Pl. c. 8, p. 2; Lawes, Pl. 96; 1 Saund. 9 a.

Profert of a patent can be made by reference to the letters patent or to a certified copy thereof; Heaton Peninsular B. F. Co. v. Schlochtermeyer, 69 Fed. 592. The profert of any recorded instrument, as letters patent, is equivalent to annexing a copy; American Bell Tel. Co. v. Tel. Co., 34 Fed. 803.

Profert and oyer are abolished in England by the Common Law Procedure Act, 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76; and a provision exists, 14 & 15 Vict. c. 99, for allowing inspection of all documents in the possession or under the control of the party against whom the inspection is asked. See 25 E. L. & E. 304. In many of the states profert has been abolished, and in some instances the instrument must be set forth in the pleading of the party relying upon it. The operation of profert and oyer, where allowed, is to make the deed a part of the pleadings of the party producing it; Tucker v. State, 11 Md. 322.

See PRODUCTION OF DOCUMENTS; LOST INSTRUMENT.

PROFESSION. A public declaration respecting something. Code 10. 41. 6. A state, art, or mystery: as, the legal profession. Dig. 1. 18. 6. 4; Domat, Dr. Pub. l. 1, t. 9, s. 1, n. 7.

In Ecclesiastical Law. The act of entering into a religious order. See 17 Viner, Abr. 545.

The term professions in a statute laying a tax includes lawyers; Lanier v. Macon, 59 Ga. 187. See Pennock v. Fuller, 41 Mich. 155, 2 N. W. 176, 32 Am. Rep. 148; People v. McAllister, 19 Mich. 217.

PROFIT A PRENDRE. The right to take soil, gravel, minerals, and the like from the land of another. An interest in the estate. Black v. Min. Co., 49 Fed. 549; Washb. Easem. 11. This right may be the subject of a separate grant; Engel v. Ayer, 85 Me. 448, 27 Atl. 352. It is an interest in the estate; Pierce v. Keator, 70 N. Y. 419, 26 Am. Rep. 612.

Profit à prendre is a peculiar species of easements. It is "the right to take something which is the produce of the land." It is in its nature an incorporeal right incapable of livery, though it is imposed upon corporeal or tangible property. It may be appurtenant to a dominant tenement, in the nature of an easement, or it may be a right in gross. It may be held apart from the possession of land, and differs therein from an easement, which requires a dominant tenement for its existence. When attached to other land it is in the nature of an easement; when not so attached it cannot properly be said to be an easement, but is an interest or estate in the land itself. Jones, Easements § 49. But it is said that it is not, strictly speaking, an easement; 1 Odgers, Com. L. 25.

The right can be acquired only by grant or prescription. Such a right in the soil of another cannot be claimed by custom.

Thus a claim by the inhabitants of a township upon the land of another to take sand, etc., from the seashore, is without foundation; 15 C. B. N. S. 240; Nudd v. Hobbs, 17 N. H. 524.

The privilege of watering cattle at a pond or brook or of taking the water for domestic purposes is an easement and not a profit à prendre; 5 Ad. & El. 758; the right to take seaweed from the shores is a right to a profit in the soil; Hill v. Lord, 48 Me. 100; and so is the right to take coal or any mineral from the land of another; Huff v. McCauley, 53 Pa. 206, 91 Am. Dec. 203; and so is a right to use lands of another to cut grass, for pasturage, for hunting, or fishing; Jones, Easements 57; so is the right to take and kill game on land or water; 9 Q. B. D. 315.

The right to profit à prendre acquired by grant or prescription as appurtenant to certain lands cannot be used as a right in gross by one not holding any connection with the land; 12 C. B. N. S. 91.

Profit à Rendre may be prescribed for in gross in fee; whether a profit à prendre can be is not so clear; Tinicum Fishing Co. v. Carter, 61 Pa. 21, 37, 100 Am. Dec. 597.

See EASEMENTS; À PRENDRE.

PROFITS. The advance in the price of goods sold beyond the cost of purchase. See Delaney v. Van Aulen, 84 N. Y. 23.

The gain made by the sale of produce or manufactures, after deducting the value of the labor, materials, rents, and all expenses, together with the interest of the capital employed.

An excess of the value of returns over the value of advances.

The excess of receipts over expenditures; that is, net earnings. Connolly v. Davidson, 15 Minn. 519 (Gil. 428), 2 Am. Rep. 154.

The receipts of a business, deducting current expenses; it is equivalent to net receipts. Eyster v. Board of Finance, 94 U. S. 500, 24 L. Ed. 188; Lepore v. Loan Ass'n, 5 Pa. Super. Ct. 276.

This is a word of very extended signification. In commerce, it means the advance in the price of goods sold beyond the cost of purchase. In distinction from the wages of labor, it is well understood to imply the net return to the capital of stock employed, after deducting all the expenses, including not only the wages of those employed by the capitalist, but the wages of the capitalist himself for superintending the employment of his capital or stock. Adam Smith, Wealth of Nat. b. I. c. 6, and M'Culloch's Notes; Mill, Polit. Econ. c. 15. After indemnifying the capitalist for his outlay, there commonly remains a surplus, which is his profit, the net income from his capital. 1 Mill, Polit. Econ. c. 15. The word profit is generally used by writers on political economy to denote the difference between the value of advances and the value of returns made by their employment.

The profit of the farmer and the manufacturer is the gain made by the sale of produce or manufactures, after deducting the value of the labor, materials, rents, and all expenses, together with the interest of the capital employed,—whether land, buildings, machinery, instruments, or money. The rents and profits of an estate, the income or the net income of it, are all equivalent expressions. The income or the net income of an estate means only the profit it will yield after deducting the charges of management; Andrews v. Boyd, 5 Greenl. (Me.) 202; Earl v. Rowe, 35 Me. 420, 58 Am. Dec. 714.

Under the term profit is comprehended the produce of the soil, whether it arise above or below the surface; as, herbage, wood, turf, coals, minerals, stones: Koen v. Bartlett, 41 W. Va. 559, 23 S. E. 666, 31 L. R. A. 128, 56 Am. St. Rep. 884; also fish in a pond or running water. Profits are divided into profits à prendre, or those taken and enjoyed by the mere act of the proprietor himself, and profits à rendre, namely, such as are received at the hands of and rendered by another. Hamm. N. P. 172.

Profits are divided by writers on political economy into gross and net,—gross profits being the whole difference between the value of advances and the value of returns made by their employment, and net profits being so much of that difference as is attributable solely to the capital employed. The remainder of the difference, or, in other words, the gross profits minus the net profits, has no particular name, but it represents the profits attributable to industry, skill and enterprise. See Malthus, Political Econ.; M'Culloch, Political Econ. 563. But the word profit is generally used in a less extensive signification, and presupposes an excess of the value of returns over the value of advances.

Using profit in this more limited and popular sense, persons who share profits do not necessarily share losses; for they may stipulate for a division of gain, if any, and yet some one or more of them may, by agreement, be entitled to be indemnified against losses by the others: so that whilst all share profits, some only bear losses. Persons who share gross returns share profits in the sense of gain; but they do not by sharing the returns share losses, for these fall entirely on those making the advances. Moreover, although a division of gross returns is a division of profits if there are any, it is so only incidentally, and because such profits are included in what is divided: it is not a division of profits as such; and under an agreement for a division of gross returns, whatever is returned must be divided, whether there be profit or loss, or neither; 1 Lindl. Part. 8, 17. These considerations have led to the distinction between agreements to share profits and agreements to share gross returns, and to the doctrine that, whilst an agreement to share profits creates a partnership, an agreement to share gross returns does not. See PARTNERSHIP.

It was said by Jessel, M. R., that "there is no such thing as gross profits." See 10 App. Cas. 446. Where a life insurance company issued "participating policies" for an increased premium, agreeing at the end of every five years to give two-thirds of the "gross profits" of such policies to the policy holders, it was held that this two-thirds constituted "annual profits or gains" of the company and were assessable for income tax; 10 App. Cas. 438, per Lords Blackburn and Fitzgerald; Lord Bramwell dissenting. The case seems to disregard the nature of the return of that portion of the premium charged in advance and subsequently ascertained to have been excessive, which the companies curiously enough call "dividends." See DIVIDENDS; NET PROFITS; OPERATING EXPENSES.

There is no rule of law that profits of one year cannot be divided because there was a debit balance in former years; [1901] 2 Ch. 184.

See Cotting v. R. Co., 54 Conn. 156, 5 Atl. 851, as to profits.

Commissions may be considered as profits, for some purposes. A participation in commissions has been held such a participation in profits as to constitute the participants partners; 2 H. Bla. 235; 4 B. & Ald. 663. So, commissions received from the sales of a pirated map are profits which must be accounted for by the commission merchant on a bill by the proprietor of the copyright; Stevens v. Gladding, 2 Curt. C. C. 608, Fed. Cas. No. 13,399. As between partners, all gains which equitably belong to the firm, but which are clandestinely received by one partner, are accounted profits of the firm; id.; Story, Part. § 174.

Depreciation of buildings in which a business is carried on, though they were erected by expenditure of the capital invested, is not ordinarily or necessarily considered in estimating the profits; Eyster v. Centennial Board of Finance, 94 U. S. 500, 24 L. Ed. 188 (a special case).

In computing the profits to which a party is entitled, interest on fines, debts, and taxes should be charged off and also a proper sum for depreciation of plant; Conville v. Shook, 24 N. Y. Supp. 547.

A direction or power given in a will to raise money out of the rents and profits of an estate for the payment of debts and legacies, or to raise a portion within a definite period, within which it could not be raised out of the annual rents and profits, authorizes a sale; 2 Ch. Cas. 205; 1 Vern. 104; 1 Ves. Sen. 491. And judges in later times, looking to the inconvenience of raising a large sum of money in this manner, have inclined much to treat a trust to apply the rents and profits in raising a portion, even at an indefinite period, as authorizing a sale or mortgage; 2 Jarm. Wills, 282; 1 Ves. 234; 1 Ves. Sen. 42. But, as a general rule, the question whether the money is to be raised by a sale or mortgage or out of the annual rents and profits will depend upon the nature of the purpose for which the money is to be raised, and the general tenor of the will; 2 Jarm. Wills, 383; 3 Bro. P. C. 66; 3 Yo. & J. 360; 2 P. Wms. 63. The circumstances that have chiefly influenced the decisions are—the appointment of a time within which the charge cannot be raised by annual profits; the situation of the estate, where a sale or mortgage would be very prejudicial, as in the case of a reversion, especially if it would occasion any danger that the charge would not be answered in its full extent; the nature of the charge, as where it is for debts or portions, and, in the latter instance, the age or death of the child; 2 Ves. 480, n. 1; 2 P. Wms. 13, 650. But in no case where there are subsequent restraining words has the word profit been extended; Prec. Ch. 586, note, and the cases cited there; 1 Atk. 506; 2 id. 105.

A devise of the rents and profits of land is equivalent to a devise of the land itself, and will carry the legal as well as the beneficial interest therein; 2 B. & Ald. 42; Reed v. Reed, 9 Mass. 372; Fox v. Phelps, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 393; Earl v. Rowe, 35 Me. 414, 58 Am. Dec. 714; 1 Bro. C. C. 310. A direction by the testator that a certain person shall receive for his support the net profits of the land is a devise of the land itself, for such period of time as the profits were devised; Earl v. Rowe, 35 Me. 419, 58 Am. Dec. 714.

An assignment of the profits of an estate amounts to an equitable lien, and would entitle the assignee in equity to insist upon a mortgage. Thus, if a tenant for life of the real estate should, by covenant, agree to set apart and pay the whole or a portion of the annual profits of that estate to trustees for certain objects, it would create a lien in the nature of a trust on those profits against him and all persons claiming as volunteers or with notice under him; 2 Cox, Ch. 253; 3 Bro. C. C. 531, 538.

Profits expected to arise from merchandise employed in maritime commerce are a proper subject of insurance in England and in the United States; 3 Kent 271; French v. Ins. Co., 16 Pick. (Mass.) 399. So in Italy; Targa, cap. xliii. No. 5; Portugal; Santerna, part iii. No. 40; and the Hanse Towns; 2 Magnus 213; Beneck, Ass. chap. 1, sect. 10, vol. 1, p. 170. But in France; Code de Comm. art. 347; Holland; Rynkershoek, Quæst. Priv. Jur. lib. iv. c. 5; and in Spain, except to certain distant parts; Ordenanzas de Bilbao, ch. xxii. art. 7, 8, 11; it is illegal to insure expected profits. Such insurance is required by the course and interest of trade, and has been found to be greatly conducive to its prosperity; 3 Kent 271; 2 East 544; 1 Arn. Ins., 6th ed. 37, 205. Sometimes the profits are included in a valuation of the goods from which they are expected to arise; sometimes they are insured as profits: Mumford v. Hallett, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 433; Patapsco Ins. Co. v. Coulter, 3 Pet. (U. S.) 222, 7 L. Ed. 659; 6 E. & B. 312. They must be insured as profits: May, Ins. § 79. They may be insured equally by valued and by open policies: 3 Camp. 267. But it is more judicious to make the valuation; Mumford v. Hallett, 1 Johns. (N. Y.) 433; 3 Kent 273. The insured must have a real interest in the goods from which the profits are expected; 3 Kent 271; but he need not have the absolute property in them; French v. Ins. Co., 16 Pick. (Mass.) 397, 400. See INSURANCE.

A trustee, executor, or guardian, or other person standing in a like relation to another, may be made to account for and pay all the profits made by him in any of the concerns of his trust, as by embarking the trust funds in trade; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. 465; 2 Myl. & K. 66, 672; Lindl. Part., Am. ed. 523; 2 Will. Exec. 139; Callaghan v. Hall, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 245; 1 Maule & S. 412; 2 Bro. C. C. 400; Jennison v. Hapgood, 10 Pick. (Mass.) 77.

The expected profits of a special contract may be reckoned as a part of the damages for a failure to fulfil it, where it appears that such profits would have accrued from the contract itself as the direct and immediate consequence of its fulfilment; Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Howard, 13 How. (U. S.) 307, 344, 14 L. Ed. 157; Fox v. Harding, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 516; 8 Exch. 401; Hawley v. Corey, 9 Utah 175, 33 Pac. 695; Harter Medicine Co. v. Hopkins, 83 Wis. 309, 53 N. W. 501. But where the profits are such only as were expected to result from other independent bargains actually entered into on the faith of such special contract, or for the purposes of fulfilling it, or are contingent upon future bargains or speculations or states of the market, they are too remote and uncertain to be relied upon as a proper basis of damages; Philadelphia, W. & B. R. Co. v. Howard, 13 How. (U. S.) 307, 344, 14 L. Ed. 157; Bridges v. Stickney, 38 Me. 361; Fox v. Harding, 7 Cush. (Mass.) 516; Masteron v. Brooklyn, 7 Hill (N. Y.) 61, 42 Am. Dec. 38; 13 C. B. 353. Profits may be recovered as damages for the breach of a contract, where they are not uncertain or remote, or where, from the terms of the contract itself or the special circumstances under which it was made, it may be reasonably presumed that they were within the intent and mutual understanding of both parties at the time the contract was made; Howard v. Mfg. Co., 139 U. S. 199, 11 Sup. Ct. 500, 35 L. Ed. 147; Anvil Min. Co.

v. Humble, 153 U. S. 540, 14 Sup. Ct. 878, 38 L. Ed. 814.

See MEASURE OF DAMAGES; PATENT; DIVIDENDS.

A purchaser is entitled to the profits of an estate from the time fixed upon for completing the contract, whether he does or does not take possession; 2 Sugd. Vend. ch. 16, sect. 1, art. 1; Baxter v. Brand, 6 Dana (Ky.) 298; Buchanan v. Lorman, 3 Gill (Md.) 82.

In a late case, the profits to which a patentee is entitled in equity against an infringer are thus classified:

(a) Where the infringer has sold or used a patented article, the plaintiff is entitled to recover all of the profits. (b) Where a patent, though using old elements, gives the entire value to the combination, the plaintiff is entitled to recover all the profits. Hurlbut v. Schillinger, 130 U. S. 456, 472, 9 Sup. Ct. 584, 32 L. Ed. 1011. (c) Where profits are made by the use of an article patented as an entirety, the infringer is liable for all the profits unless he can show—and the burden is on him to show—that a portion of them is the result of some other thing used by him. Elizabeth v. Pav. Co., 97 U. S. 126, 24 L. Ed. 1000. (d) But there are many cases in which the plaintiff's patent is only a part of the machine and creates only a part of the profits. In such case, if plaintiff's patent only created a part of the profits, he is only entitled to recover that part of the net gains; Westinghouse Electric & Mfg. Co. v. Mfg. Co., 225 U. S. 604, 32 Sup. Ct. 691, 56 L. Ed. 1222, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 653.

Under what circumstances a participation in profits will make one a partner in a trade or adventure, see PARTNERSHIP.

PROGRESSION. That state of a business which is neither the commencement nor the end. Some act done after the matter has commenced and before it is completed. Plowd. 343. See CONSUMMATION; INCEPTION.

PROHIBITIO DE VASTO DIRECTA PARTI. A judicial writ which was formerly addressed to a tenant, prohibiting him from waste pending suit. Reg. Jud. 21.

PROHIBITION. Forbidden to do; inhibition; interdiction. Talbott v. Casualty Co., 74 Md. 545, 22 Atl. 395, 13 L. R. A. 584.

In Practice. The name of a writ issued by a superior court, directed to the judge and parties to a suit in an inferior court, commanding them to cease from the prosecution of the same, upon a suggestion that the cause originally, or some collateral matter arising therein, does not belong to that jurisdiction, but to the cognizance of some other court. 3 Bla. Com. 112; Viner, Abr.; 2 H. Bla. 533; Re Fassett, 142 U. S. 479, 12 Sup. Ct. 295, 35 L. Ed. 1087; Alexander v. Crollott, 199 U. S. 580, 26 Sup. Ct. 161, 50 L. Ed. 317; it will lie to an inferior court which has taken jurisdiction of a suit against a foreign state; 17 Q. B. 196, 215.

The writ of prohibition may also be issued when, having jurisdiction, the court has attempted to proceed by rules differing from those which ought to be observed; Bull. N. P. 219; or when by the exercise of its jurisdiction, the inferior court would defeat a legal right; 2 Chitty, Pr. 355; or to prevent a judge from granting a new trial after expiration of the trial term; State v. Walls, 113 Mo. 42, 20 S. W. 883.

A writ of prohibition is a civil remedy given in a civil action, even when instituted to arrest a criminal prosecution; Farnsworth v. Montana, 129 U. S. 104, 9 Sup. Ct. 253, 32 L. Ed. 616; and only lies in case of the unlawful exercise of judicial functions; Fleming v. Com'rs, 31 W. Va. 617, 8 S. E. 267; State v. Gary, 33 Wis. 93; People v. Marine Court, 36 Barb. (N. Y.) 341.

The writ of prohibition issues only in cases of extreme necessity, and before it can be granted, it must appear that the party aggrieved has applied in vain for redress; and it is never allowed except in cases of usurpation or abuse of power, and not then unless other existing remedies are inadequate to afford relief, or no other remedy exists; Ensign Mfg. Co. v. Carroll, 30 W. Va. 532, 4 S. E. 782. When a writ of error or appeal furnishes a complete and effective remedy, a writ of prohibition will not be issued; Mastin v. Sloan, 98 Mo. 252, 11 S. W. 558; Turner v. Forsyth, 78 Ga. 683, 3 S. E. 649; Nelms v. Vaughan, 84 Va. 696, 5 S. E. 704. Prohibition will not issue after judgment and sentence unless want of jurisdiction appears on the face of the proceedings, but before judgment the supreme court can examine not simply the process and pleadings of record, but also the facts and evidence upon which action was taken; Re Cooper, 143 U. S. 472, 513, 12 Sup. Ct. 453, 36 L. Ed. 232.

A writ of prohibition will not be issued to restrain a district court from taking jurisdiction of a petition of the owner of a barge for the benefit of the limited liability act; Re Engles, 146 U. S. 357, 13 Sup. Ct. 281, 36 L. Ed. 1004.

When a party aggrieved by a judgment has an appeal to the supreme court which becomes inefficacious through his neglect, a writ of prohibition will not issue to prevent the enforcement of the judgment; Re Cooper, 143 U. S. 472, 513, 12 Sup. Ct. 453, 36 L. Ed. 232. If it appear that the thing sought to be prohibited has been done, a writ of error will be dismissed; Jones v. Montague, 194 U. S. 147, 24 Sup. Ct. 611, 48 L. Ed. 913.

"Where it appears that the court whose action is sought to be prohibited has clearly no jurisdiction of the cause originally, or of some collateral matter arising therein, a party who has objected to the jurisdiction at the outset and has no other remedy is entitled to a writ of prohibition as a matter of right. But where there is another legal remedy by appeal or otherwise, or where the question of the jurisdiction of the court is doubtful, or depends on facts which are not made matter of record, or where the application is made by a stranger, the granting or refusal of the writ is discretionary. Nor is the granting of the writ obligatory where the case has gone to sentence, and the want of jurisdiction does not appear upon the face of the proceedings." Re Rice, 155 U. S. 402, 15 Sup. Ct. 149, 39 L. Ed. 198, followed in The Conqueror, 166 U. S. 110, 17 Sup. Ct. 510, 41 L. Ed. 937; Alexander v. Crollott, 199 U. S. 580, 26 Sup. Ct. 161, 50 L. Ed. 317.

The term prohibition is also applied to the interdiction of making and of selling or giving away, intoxicating liquors, either absolutely or for other than medicinal, scientific, and sacramental purposes. See LIQUOR LAWS.

PROHIBITIVE IMPEDIMENTS. Those impediments to a marriage which are only followed by a punishment but do not render the marriage null. Bowyer, Mod. Civ. Law 44.

PROJET (Fr.). In International Law. The draft of a proposed treaty or convention. Projet de loi,—a bill in a legislative body.

PROLES (Lat.). Progeny; such issue as proceeds from a lawful marriage; and, in its enlarged sense, it signifies any children.

PROLETARIUS. In Civil Law. One who had no property to be taxed, and paid a tax only on account of his children (proles); a person of mean or common extraction. The word has become, in French, prolétaire signifying one of the common people; and in English proletariat.

PROLICIDE (Lat. proles, offspring, cadere, to kill). In Medical Jurisprudence. The destruction of the human offspring. Jurists divide the subject into feticide, or the destruction of the fœtus in utero, and infanticide, or the destruction of the new-born infant. Ryan, Med. Jur. 137.

PROLIXITY. The unnecessary and superfluous statement of facts in pleading or in evidence. This will be rejected as impertinent. 7 Price 278, n.

PROLOCUTOR. In Ecclesiastical Law. The president or chairman of a convocation. The speaker of the house of lords is called the prolocutor. The office belongs to the lord chancellor by prescription; 3 Steph. Com. 347.

PROLONGATION. Time added to the duration of something. See GIVING TIME.

PROLYTÆ (Lat.). In Roman Law. The term used to denominate students of law during the fifth and last year of their stud-les. They were left during this year very much to their own direction, and took the name prolytæ, omnino soluti. They studied chiefly the Code and the Imperial constitutions. See Dig. Pref. Prim. Const. 2; Calvinus. Lex.

PROMATERTERA (Lat.). Great maternal aunt; the sister of one's grandmother. Inst. 3. 6. 3; Dig. 38. 10. 10. 14.

PROMISE. An engagement by which the promisor contracts with another to perform or do something to the advantage of the latter.

The declaration of any party to an agreement, so far as relates to anything to be done or forborne on his part, is called a promise. Except in the case of simultaneous declaration, a promise is regularly either the acceptance of an offer or an offer accepted. Where the promise is embodied in a deed, there is an apparent anomaly. Pollock, Contr. 2, 7.

Within the statute of frauds a promise to pay the debt of another is an undertaking by a person not before liable, for the purpose of securing or performing the same duty for which the party for whom the undertaking is made, continues liable. Dillaby v. Wilcox, 60 Conn. 71, 22 Atl. 491, 13 L. R. A. 643, 25 Am. St. Rep. 299.

When an oral promise is made, all that is said at the time in relation to it must be considered; if, therefore, a man promises to pay all he owes, accompanied by a denial that he owes anything, no action will lie to enforce such a promise; Porter v. McClure, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 187.

Strictly speaking a promise is not a representation; the failure to make it good may give a cause of action, but it is not a false representation, which will authorize the rescission of a contract; Cunyus v. Guenther, 96 Ala. 564, 11 South. 649.

And when the promise is conditional, the condition must be performed before it becomes of binding force; Scouton v. Eislord, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 36. See 16 Harv. L. Rev. 319; CONDITION; CONTRACTS; THIRD PERSON, CONTRACTS FOR THE BENEFIT OF.

PROMISE OF MARRIAGE. A contract mutually entered into by a man and a woman that they will marry each other.

Every marriage is necessarily preceded by an express or implied contract of this description, as a wedding cannot be agreed upon and celebrated at one and the same instant; Addison, Contr. 1196.

When a man and a woman agree to marry and subsequently either one refuses, the other may bring suit for damages, such suits being called breach of promise suits. Before the Reformation no action for breach of promise could be maintained, for marriage was a matter of spiritual jurisdiction. It was not till the middle of the seventeenth century that marriage was recognized by our law as a temporal benefit, and a breach of promise as cognizable by the temporal courts; 20 Q. B. D. 494, 505.

A promise of marriage is not to be likened to an actual marriage. The latter is not a contract, but a legal relation; while the former is an executory contract in the strict sense of the term, and governed in general by the ordinary law of contracts, though it has certain peculiarities of its own. As in other contracts, the parties must be sui juris. If, therefore, the man or the woman be an infant, or labor under any other legal disability, he or she will not be bound by a promise of marriage; but if one of the parties be an infant and the other be an adult, the promise will be binding upon the latter; Stra. 937; Hunt v. Peake, 5 Cow. (N. Y.) 475, 15 Am. Dec. 475; Warwick v. Cooper, 5 Sneed (Tenn.) 659; McConkey v. Barnes, 42 Ill. App. 511. A promise made during infancy may be ratified after the infant attains majority. An English statute requires a new and distinct contract, after majority, in order to bind the infant on his promise to marry after he comes of age; but a new contract may be inferred from continued acceptance of the engagement; L. R. 5 C. P. 410. Neither does it follow that a promise of marriage is not binding because the parties to the promise cannot form a valid marriage; they may be competent to contract though not competent to marry.

There must be a legal and valid consideration; but as there are always mutual promises, they are a sufficient consideration for each other. There must be a meeting of the minds of the parties, i. e. a request or proposition on the one side, and an assent on the other. If the communications between the parties are verbal, the only questions which usually arise relate to evidence. The very words or time or manner of the promise need not be proved, but it may be inferred from the conduct of the parties, and from the circumstances which usually attend an engagement to marry: as, visiting, the understanding of friends and relations, preparations for marriage, and the reception of the man by the woman's family as a suitor; Wightman v. Coates, 15 Mass. 1, 8 Am. Dec. 77; Moritz v. Melhorn, 13 Pa. 331; 2 C. & P. 553; Southard v. Rexford, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 254; Waters v. Bristol, 26 Conn. 398; Clark v. Hodges, 65 Vt. 273, 26 Atl. 726. But as to the evidence of a contract to marry, more direct proof is now commonly required than formerly, since modern statutes permit parties themselves to take the stand; Schoul. Husb. & W. § 43. Therefore a promise cannot be inferred from devoted attention, frequent visits, and apparently exclusive attention; Homan v. Earle, 53 N. Y. 267; nor from mere presents or letters not to the point; see Com. v. Walton, 2 Brewst. (Pa.) 487;

[1891] 2 Q. B. 534; nor from the plaintiff's wedding preparations, unknown to the defendant; Cates v. McKinney, 48 Ind. 562, 17 Am. Rep. 768; Walmsley v. Robinson, 63 Ill. 41, 14 Am. Rep. 111; nor from the woman's unexplained possession of an engagement ring; Com. v. Walton, 2 Brewst. (Pa.) 487.

Under the law allowing parties to an action to testify, a promise of marriage cannot be inferred from the mere proof of circumstances such as usually attend an engagement to marry. In the absence of fraud, there must be proof of an actual contract; a meeting of minds of the two parties. Courtship alone or mere intention to marry is not enough. Thorough acquaintance with character, habits, and disposition is essential in order to enter into such a contract intelligently, and an opportunity must be allowed to form the acquaintance which is required, without raising the inference of a contract; Yale v. Curtiss, 151 N. Y. 598, 45 N. E. 1125. Mere courtship is not an agreement to marry; Burnham v. Cornwell, 16 B. Mon. (Ky.) 284, 63 Am. Dec. 529; Walmsley v. Robinson, 63 Ill. 41, 14 Am. Rep. 111.

When the parties are at a distance from each other, and the offer is made by letter, it will be presumed to continue for a reasonable time for the consideration of the party addressed; and if accepted within a reasonable time, and before it is expressly revoked, the contract is then complete; 1 Pars. Contr. 84. No particular form of words is necessary; Homan v. Earle, 53 N. Y. 267.

A promise of marriage is not within the third clause of the fourth section of the statute of frauds relating to agreements made upon consideration of marriage; but if not to be performed within a year, it has been held to be within the fifth clause, and must, therefore, be in writing in order to be binding; 1 Ld. Raym. 387; Short v. Stotts, 58 Ind. 29; Derby v. Phelps, 2 N. H. 515. But the later cases are inclined to construe the statute so as not to affect promises to marry; Lawrence v. Cooke, 56 Me. 187, 96 Am. Dec. 443; Clark v. Pendleton, 20 Conn. 495; the marriage may be performed within a year, and that is enough. See Blackburn v. Mann, 85 Ill. 222.

If no time be fixed and agreed upon for the performance of the contract, it is, in contemplation of law, a contract to marry within a reasonable period, considering the circumstances of the age, pecuniary means, etc., of the contracting parties, and either party may call upon the other to fulfil the engagement, and in case of default may bring an action for damages. If both lie by for an unreasonable period, and do not treat the contract as continuing, it will be deemed to be abandoned by mutual consent. If the parties are somewhat advanced in years, and the marriage is appointed to take place at a remote period of time, the contract would be voidable at the option of either party, as in restraint of marriage; Addison, Contr. 678.

On a promise to marry within a reasonable time, a plea that the defendant, after the promise and before the breach, became afflicted with occasional bleeding from the lungs and therefore incapable of marriage without great danger to his life, and therefore unfit for the married state, of which plaintiff had notice, was held bad in a much considered case in the Exchequer Chamber; E. B. & E. 746.

The fact that the plaintiff consented to a two years' postponement of the wedding-day does not relieve the defendant from his promise; Nearing v. Van Fleet, 71 Hun 137, 24 N. Y. Supp. 531.

Upon a refusal by one party to marry, an action lies at once, although the time set for the marriage has not come; Leake, Contr. 752; Burtis v. Thompson, 42 N. Y. 246, 1 Am. Rep. 516; so if a party puts it out of his power to perform his promise of marriage; Sheahan v. Barry, 27 Mich. 217; 15 M. & W. 189. An action lies when one party has given notice that he will not fulfil his promise, although the time for fulfilment has not arrived; L. R. 8 C. P. 167; or has ceased his attentions; Lemke v. Franzburg (Ia.) 141 N. W. 332; see BREACH; no demand nor tender of performance is necessary before bringing suit; Kelley v. Brennan, 18 R. I. 41, 25 Atl. 346. A refusal to fulfil the contract may be as well manifested by acts as by words. After the lapse of a reasonable time, if one party, without excuse, neglects or refuses to fulfil his promise, the other may consider this a breach and sue; Bennett v. Beam, 42 Mich. 346, 4 N. W. 8, 36 Am. Rep. 442.

The defences which may be made to an action for a breach of promise of marriage are, of course, various. If either party has been convicted of an infamous crime, or has sustained a bad reputation generally, and the other was ignorant of it at the time of the engagement, or if the woman has committed fornication, and this was unknown at the time to the man who promised to marry her, or if the woman prove unchaste subsequently; Von Storch v. Griffin, 77 Pa. 504; Sprague v. Craig, 51 Ill. 288; or if the woman is deeply involved in debt at the time of the engagement, and the fact is kept secret from her intended husband; Add. Contr. 680; but see E. B. & E. 796; or if false representations are made by the woman, or by her friends in collusion with her, as to her circumstances and situation in life and the amount of her fortune and marriage portion, any of these will constitute a good defence; 1 C. & P. 350, 529; Berry v. Bakeman, 44 Me. 164; 1 C. & K. 463; Morgan v. Yarborough, 5 La. Ann. 316; Butler v. Eschleman, 18 Ill. 44. But it has been held not to be a defence that the plaintiff at the time of the engagement was under an engagement to marry another person, unless the prior engagement was fraudulently concealed; E. R. & E. 796. But see 2 Pars. Contr. 550. And the defendant's pre-engagement would be no defence; Schoul. Husb. & W. § 48. It is not justification of a breach of promise to marry a woman, to show that she has been heard to use obscene language; 8 Can. L. J. 426; or is unchaste (if the man knew it); Bowman v. Bowman, 153 Ind. 498, 55 N. E. 422; or that the plaintiff had negro blood in her veins; Van Houten v. Morse, 162 Mass. 414, 38 N. E. 705, 26 L. R. A. 430, 44 Am. St. Rep. 373; and where marriage between cousins is not forbidden by statute, such relationship will not mitigate or excuse a breach of promise to marry; Alberts v. Albertz, 78 Wis. 72, 47 N. W. 95, 10 L. R. A. 584.

A bare offer of marriage is not a defence to a prosecution for seduction; it must be accepted; State v. Wise, 32 Or. 280, 50 Pac. 800; but the contrary was held in Com. v. Wright (Ky.) 27 S. W. 815, which is said to be the only case sustaining that view; 57 Alb. L. J. 51. The general rule is undoubtedly that nothing short of actual marriage is a bar; State v. Thompson, 79 Ia. 703, 45 N. W. 293; State v. Brandenburg, 118 Mo. 181, 23 S. W. 1080, 40 Am. St. Rep. 362; People v. Samonset, 97 Cal. 448, 32 Pac. 520.

If after the engagement either party is guilty of gross misconduct, inconsistent with the character which he or she was fairly presumed to possess, the other party will be released; 4 Esp. 256; but mutual improprieties and lewdness between the parties will not be allowed to bar the action or to go in mitigation or aggravation of damages; Johnson v. Smith, 3 Pittsb. 184; or excuse the performance of the contract; Powell v. Moeller, 107 Mo. 471, 18 S. W. 884. If the engagement is made without any agreement respecting the woman's property, and she afterwards disposes of any considerable portion of it without her intended husband's knowledge and consent, or if she insist upon having her property settled to her own separate use, it is said that this will justify him in breaking off the engagement; Add. Contr. 1201. So, if the situation and position of either of the parties as regards his or her fitness for the marriage relation is materially and permanently altered for the worse (whether with or without the fault of such party) after the engagement, this will release the other party. Thus, if one of the parties is attacked by blindness, or by an incurable disease, or any malady calculated permanently to impair and weaken the constitution, this will dispense with the performance of the contract on the part of the other party; Add. Contr. 1199; Pothier, Tr. du Mar. no. 1, 60, 61, 63. (In 1 Abb. App. Dec. 282, it was held that evidence that the plaintiff drank intoxicating liquors to excess was not admissible as a defence.) Whether it will also constitute a defence for the party afflicted, is a question of much difficulty. In 1 E. B. & E. 746, 765, where it appeared that the defendant since the engagement had become afflicted with consumption, whereby he was rendered incapable of marriage without great danger of his life, it was held, by six judges against five, that this constituted no defence; though it seemed to be agreed that it would have been a good defence for the other party.

It is a defence that the woman had become a confined invalid, but only after a reasonable waiting; Travis v. Schnebly, 68 Wash. 1, 122 Pac. 316, 40 L. R. A. (N. S.) 585, Ann. Cas. 1913E, 914; or has contracted a venereal disease after the promise, or before it, and it was unknown to the other party; Smith v. Compton, 67 N. J. L. 548, 52 Atl. 386, 58 L. R. A. 480; Shackleford v. Hamilton, 93 Ky. 80, 19 S. W. 5, 15 L. R. A. 531, 40 Am. St. Rep. 166; or that such disease, supposed to be cured, had broken out again; Gardner v. Arnett (Ky.) 50 S. W. 840; or that the condition of both parties had changed so that marriage would endanger their life or health; Sanders v. Coleman, 97 Va. 690, 34 S. E. 621, 47 L. R. A. 581; that the woman was unnecessarily operated on, rendering her incapable of child-bearing; Edmonds v. Hughes, 115 Ky. 561, 74 S. W. 283; or that she had tuberculosis; Lemke v. Franzenburg (Ia.) 141 N. W. 332; but ill health of the woman, known to the man at the time of the engagement, is no defence; id.

The common opinion that an agreement to marry between persons incapable of forming a valid marriage is necessarily void, is erroneous. If the disability pertains only to one of the parties, and the other party was ignorant of it at the time of the engagement, it will constitute no defence for the former. Thus, if a man who already has a wife living makes a promise of marriage to another woman who is ignorant of the former marriage, he will be liable in damages for a breach of his promise, although a performance is impossible; Leake, Contr. 597; 2 C. & P. 553; Kelley v. Riley, 106 Mass. 339, 8 Am. Rep. 336. Otherwise, if the woman knew, at the time the engagement was entered into, that the man was married; Noice v. Brown, 39 N. J. L. 133, 23 Am. Rep. 213; Paddock v. Robinson, 63 Ill. 99, 14 Am. Rep. 112; Carter v. Rinker, 174 Fed. 882; or had reason to know; id. Knowledge that the man was married, obtained by the woman subsequently to the engagement to marry, is not a defence, but may go in mitigation of damages; Coover v. Davenport, 1 Heisk. (Tenn.) 368, 2 Am. Rep. 706.

In an action for breach of promise of marriage, the court will not interfere with the discretion of the jury as to the amount of damages, unless there has been some obvious error or misconception on their part, or it is made apparent that they have been actuated by improper motives; 1 C. B. N. S. 660; Waters v. Bristol, 26 Conn. 398. And if the defendant has undertaken to rest his defence, in whole or in part, on the general bad character or the criminal conduct of the plaintiff, and fails altogether in the proof, the jury may take this into consideration as enhancing the damages; Southard v. Rexford, 6 Cow. (N. Y.) 254; Davis v. Slagle, 27 Mo. 600.

Loss of opportunity during the engagement to contract marriage with another is an element of damage; Hiveley v. Gollnick (Minn.) 144 N. W. 213.

A very large discretion is given to the jury as to damages; Pollock, Torts 184; and damages are often given which are, in fact, exemplary; L. R. 1 C. P. 331. The amount awarded is usually estimated according to plaintiff's loss of reputation, wealth, social position, and prospects in life, as well as the endurance of mortification, pain, or disgrace; Giese v. Schultz, 53 Wis. 462, 10 N. W. 598; Wilbur v. Johnson, 58 Mo. 600; Vanderpool v. Richardson, 52 Mich. 336, 17 N. W. 936.

Where such an action is brought by a woman, she may prove, in aggravation of damages, that the defendant, under color of a promise of marriage, has seduced her; Bennett v. Beam, 42 Mich. 346, 4 N. W. 8, 36 Am. Rep. 442; Leavitt v. Cutler, 37 Wis. 46; Sauer v. Schulenberg, 33 Md. 288, 3 Am. Rep. 174; L. R. 1 C. P. 331; Daggett v. Wallace, 75 Tex. 352, 13 S. W. 49, 16 Am. St. Rep. 908. But see, contra, Weaver v. Bachert, 2 Pa. 80, 44 Am. Dec. 159, commented on in Baldy v. Stratton, 11 Pa. 316; Perkins v. Hersey, 1 R. I. 493. And misconduct, showing that the plaintiff would be an unfit companion in married life, may be given in evidence in mitigation of damages; Button v. McCauley, 1 Abb. Prac. (N. Y.) 282. The defendant may show that his failure to marry the plaintiff proceeded from opposition by his mother to the marriage; Johnson v. Jenkins, 24 N. Y. 252; or that he was afflicted with an incurable disease at the time of his breach of the promise to marry, in mitigation of damages; Mabin v. Webster, 129 Ind. 430, 28 N. E. 863, 28 Am. St. Rep. 199. Evidence that the general character of the plaintiff for chastity previously to the engagement was bad, is admissible in mitigation of damages; Van Storch v. Griffin, 71 Pa. 240; Cole v. Holliday, 4 Mo. App. 94; so is indelicate conduct (not criminal) of plaintiff before the promise was made; Palmer v. Andrews, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 142. Evidence of the defendant's financial standing is admissible; Bennett v. Beam, 42 Mich. 346, 4 N. W. 8, 36 Am. Rep. 442; Fisher v. Oliver, 172 Mo. App. 18, 154 S. W. 453; so of his social position; Schoul. Husb. & W. § 49.

An action for breach of promise of marriage lies against a decedent's estate, where the father of the woman, learning that she was pregnant, killed the promisor; Johnson v. Levy, 122 La. 118, 47 South. 422, 16 Ann. Cas. 978.

See Schoul. Husb. & W. § 40; Maccola, Breach of Promise; Bishop, M. & D. ch. xi; BETROTHMENT; WEDDING.

PROMISEE. A person to whom a promise has been made.

As to promises made for the benefit of third persons, see THIRD PERSON.

PROMISES. When a defendant has been arrested, he is frequently induced to make confession in consequence of promises made to him that if he will tell the truth he will be either discharged or favored; in such a case, evidence of the confession cannot be received, because, being obtained by the flattery of hope, it comes in so questionable a shape, when it is to be considered evidence of guilt, that no credit ought to be given to it; Com. v. Chabcock, 1 Mass. 144; 1 Leach 299. This is the principle; but what amounts to a promise is not so easily defined. See CONFESSION.

PROMISOR. One who makes a promise.

The promisor is bound to fulfil his promise, unless it is contrary to law, as a promise to steal or to commit an assault and battery; when the fulfilment is prevented by the act of God, as where one has agreed to teach another drawing and he loses his sight, so that he cannot teach it; when the promisee prevents the promisor from doing what he agreed to do; when the promisor has been discharged from his promise by the promisee; when the promise has been made without a sufficient consideration; and perhaps in some other cases.

PROMISSORY NOTE. A written promise to pay a certain sum of money, at a future time, unconditionally. Brenzer v. Wightman, 7 W. & S. (Pa.) 264; Kimball v. Huntington, 10 Wend. (N. Y.) 675, 25 Am. Dec. 590; Franklin v. March, 6 N. H. 364, 25 Am. Dec. 462; Brooks v. Owen, 112 Mo. 251, 19 S. W. 723, 20 S. W. 492.

An unconditional written promise, signed by the maker, to pay absolutely and at all events, a sum certain in money, either to the bearer or to a person therein designated or his order. Benj. Chalm. Bills § 271.

By the Negotiable Instruments Act it is an unconditional promise in writing made by one person to another, signed by the maker, engaging to pay on demand or at a fixed or determinable future time, a sum certain in money to order to bearer.

A promissory note differs from a mere acknowledgment of a debt without any promise to pay, as when the debtor gives his creditor an I O U. See 15 M. & W. 23. But see Cummings v. Freeman, 2 Humphr. (Tenn.) 143; Fleming v. Burge, 6 Ala. 373. In its form it usually contains a promise to pay, at a time therein expressed, a sum of money to a certain person therein named or to his order, for value received. It is dated and signed by the maker. It is never under seal; Merritt v. Cole, 9 Hun (N. Y.) 98; even when made by a corporation; Steele v. Mfg. Co., 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 265. But in L. R. 3 Ch. Ap. 758, it was held that a "debenture" under a corporate seal was provable against the company by the indorsee, free from equities between the payee and the corporation, and, semble, that it was a promissory note. In Mackay v. Church, 15 R. I. 121, 23 Atl. 108, 2 Am. St. Rep. 881, it was held that a paper seal of a corporation on an instrument in the form of a promissory note should be regarded as "mere excess." No particular form of words is necessary; but there must be an intention to make a note; see 15 M. & W. 29; Benj. Chalm. Bills 274; and it should amount in legal effect to an absolute promise to pay money; Strickland v. Holbrooke, 75 Cal. 268, 17 Pac. 204.

By the Negotiable Instruments Act, the negotiability of an instrument is not affected by the fact that it is not dated or bears a seal or it does not specify the value given.

He who makes this promise is called the maker, and he to whom it is made is the payee; 3 Kent 46. A writing in the form of a note payable to the maker's order, becomes a note by indorsement; Miller v. Weeks, 22 Pa. 89. A note payable to the maker's order, and indorsed by him in blank, is, in legal effect, a note payable to bearer and is transferable by delivery; Jones v. Shapera, 57 Fed. 457, 6 C. C. A. 423.

Although a promissory note in its original shape bears no resemblance to a bill of exchange, yet when indorsed it is exactly similar to one; for then it is an order by the indorser of the note upon the maker to pay the indorsee. The indorser is as it were the drawer; the maker, the acceptor; and the indorsee, the payee; 4 Burr. 669; 4 Term 148; 3 Burr. 1224.

Most of the rules applicable to bills of exchange equally affect promissory notes.

There are two principal qualities essential to the validity of a note: first, that it be payable at all events, and not dependent on any contingency; Cushman v. Haynes, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 132; nor payable out of any particular fund; Stamps v. Graves, 11 N. C. 102; U. S. v. Bank, 5 How. (U. S.) 382. By the Negotiable Instruments Act the promise or order to pay must be unconditional and such promise is unconditional, though there is an indication of a particular fund out of which reimbursement is to be made, or a statement of the transaction which gives rise to the instrument. But an order or promise to pay out of a particular fund is not unconditional. Second, it is required that it be for the payment of money only; McCor- mick v. Trotter, 10 S. & R. (Pa.) 94; Klauber v. Biggerstaff, 47 Wis. 551, 3 N. W. 357, 32 Am. Rep. 773; Black v. Ward, 27 Mich. 191, 15 Am. Rep. 162; Collins v. Lincoln, 11 Vt. 268 (though statutes in some states have made notes payable in merchandise negotiable); that is, in whatever is legal tender at the place of payment; 2 Ames, Bills 828; and not in bank-notes; though it has been held differently; Judah v. Harris, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 144. The rule on this subject is said to be more strict in England than here, but to have been relaxed there in 2 Q. B. Div. 194. It is said that the tendency here is to use the term money in a very wide sense; Benj. Chalm. Bills, 2d Am. ed. 10. By the Negotiable Instruments Act, the instrument must be payable in money and it is immaterial that a particular kind of current money is designated.

A promissory note payable to order or bearer passes by indorsement, and although a chose in action, the holder may bring suit on it in his own name. Although a simple contract, a sufficient consideration is implied from the nature of the instrument. See 5 Com. Dig. 133, n., 151, 472; 4 B. & C. 235; 1 C. & M. 16. It has been urged that, upon principle, negotiable instruments are contracts binding by their own force, and therefore not requiring any consideration; Langd. Contr. § 49. When the back of a note is covered by various indorsements, an assignment of the note, written on a piece of paper pasted to the note, will pass the legal title.

By the Negotiable Instruments Act, one who puts his name on the back of an instrument prior to or at the time of delivery becomes an endorser; Rockfield v. Bank, 77 Ohio, 311, 83 N. E. 392, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 842; Deahy v. Choquet, 28 R. I. 338, 67 Atl. 421, 14 L. R. A. (N. S.) 847.

See INDORSEMENT; ALLONGE.

A negotiable instrument payable to bearer, by custom of trade, passes from hand to hand by delivery, and the holder for the time being, if he is a bona fide holder for value without notice, has a good title, notwithstanding any defect in title in the person from whom he took it; [1891] 1 Ch. 270.

As to whether a stipulation in an instrument, otherwise in the form of a promissory note, for the payment of an attorney's fee for the collection of the note in case of dishonor renders the instrument non-negotiable, see BILLS OF EXCHANGE.

A promissory note on the face of which, across one end, is written an agreement that the note will be renewed at maturity, is not negotiable; Citizens N. Bk. v. Piollet, 126 Pa. 194, 17 Atl. 603, 4 L. R. A. 190, 12 Am. St. Rep. 860; nor is one indorsed "without recourse"; De Hass v. Roberts, 59 Fed. 853.

A promissory note does not discharge the debt for which it is given unless such be the agreement of the parties; it only operates to extend the period for the payment of the debt; Segrist v. Crabtree, 131 U. S. 287, 9 Sup. Ct. 687, 33 L. Ed. 125.

PROMOTERS. Those who, in popular and penal actions, prosecute offenders in their own name and the king's.

Persons or corporations at whose instance private bills are introduced into and passed through parliament. Especially those who press forward bills for the taking of land for railways and other public purposes, who are then called promoters of the undertaking.

Persons who assist in organizing joint stock companies or corporations. Mozl. & W.

It has been said to be a term usefully summing up in a single word a number of business operations familiar to the commercial world, by which a company is generally brought into existence; 28 W. R. 351. One who does an act with reference to the formation of a company or in aid of its organization, is, as regards that act, a promoter of the company. Lloyd, Corp. Liab. for Acts of Prom. 17. It applies to any person who takes an active part in inducing the formation of a company, whether he afterwards becomes connected with the company or not; Ex-Mission L. & W. Co. v. Flash, 97 Cal. 610, 32 Pac. 600. See Bosher v. Land Co., 89 Va. 455, 16 S. E. 360, 37 Am. St. Rep. 879.

Promoters stand in a relation of trust and confidence to the intended company, and are bound to exercise uberrima fides; Lloyd Corp. Liab. 18; Densmore Oil Co. v. Densmore, 64 Pa. 43; L. R. 6 Ch. Div. 372; their acts are carefully scrutinized; L. R. 3 App. Cas. 1218; they are precluded from a secret advantage over the other stockholders; Densmore Oil Co. v. Densmore, 64 Pa. 43.

The relation of promoters to the company has been considered as similar to that of a trustee to a beneficiary; Brewster v. Hatch, 122 N. Y. 349, 25 N. E. 505, 19 Am. St. Rep. 498; 6 Ch. Div. 371; or of an agent to a principal; id.; or as analogous to that of partners; Densmore Oil Co. v. Densmore, 64 Pa. 43; Smith v. Warden, 86 Mo. 382; Witmer v. Schlatter, 2 Rawle (Pa.) 359; contra, Johnson v. Corser, 34 Minn. 355, 25 N. W. 799; or to be rather that of agency; Gillett v. R. Co., 55 Mo. 315, 17 Am. Rep. 653; promoters may, in fact, be partners. It has also been held that their relation towards each other is that of principal and agent; each is liable for such contracts as he authorizes; Roberts Mfg. Co. v. Schlick, 62 Minn. 332, 64 N. W. 826.

Promoters are personally liable on contracts made by them for the intended company when the latter proves abortive; L. R. 2 C. P. 174; and also for subscriptions paid in to an abortive company, and that without any deduction for expenses incurred; Beach, Priv. Corp. 159; 3 B. & C. 814.

A promoter is not liable ex contractu to a person who has been induced by his fraud to take shares in a company, but he may be liable ex delicto; 2 E. & B. 476. Promoters are liable in damages to subscribers whose subscriptions are obtained by fraud; Paddock v. Fletcher, 42 Vt. 389; Miller v. Barber, 66 N. Y. 558; a bill in equity lies to recover back money which a person has been induced, through fraud, to invest in a bubble; 2 P. Wms. 153. As against a person acting as promoter, the corporation is entitled to the full benefit of all acts done and contracts made by him while acting in that capacity; and the promoter, as between himself and the corporation, is entitled to no secret profits; he may not purchase property for the corporation, and then sell the same to the corporation at an advance; Simons v. Min. Co., 61 Pa. 202, 100 Am. Dec. 628; 5 Ch. Div. 73, 395; s. c. in the House of Lords, 3 App. Cas. 1218. Where one has already purchased a certain property at a good bargain, it is no fraud to organize a company and sell the property to it at an advance; Thomp. Liab. of Off. 222. See 1 Ch. Div. 182; Dorris v. French, 4 Hun (N. Y.) 292. But if at the time of making the sale he occupies towards the corporation a position of trust, as promoter or otherwise, it would seem that he should not be allowed to sell at an exorbitant price; 16 Am. L. Rev. 289; but see Densmore Oil Co. v. Densmore, 64 Pa. 43; and he should faithfully state to the company all material facts relating to the property which would influence it in deciding as to the purchase; Thomp. Liab. of Off. 219; L. R. 5 Eq. 464. See 2 Lind. Part. 580.

Where a promoter acts as the agent of the company, if he is under no special duty to purchase the land in question for the corporation, he may sell his own land to it, or buy any other land, and sell at a profit, provided he do so fairly, but it must appear that the company had an independent board of directors, who could exercise their own discretion in the purchase of the property; 3 App. Cas. 1218; 23 Can. Sup. Ct. 644; Plaquemines T. F. Co. v. Buck, 52 N. J. Eq. 219, 27 Atl. 1094; he must disclose his interest in the property; 3 App. Cas. 1218; Burbank v. Dennis, 101 Cal. 94, 35 Pac. 444; he must state truly all the material facts; 3 App. Cas. 1218; Burbank v. Dennis, 101 Cal. 90, 35 Pac. 444; Pittsburg Min. Co. v. Spooner, 74 Wis. 307, 42 N. W. 259, 17 Am. St. Rep. 149. A promoter who acts as a mere agent for the purchase of the property cannot retain a secret profit out of the transaction; 11 Ch. D. 918; 4 C. P. D. 396; Chandler v. Bacon, 30 Fed. 538; Brewster v. Hatch, 122 N. Y. 349, 25 N. E. 505, 19 Am.

St. Rep. 498; but a profit made with the knowledge and assent of all the members of the corporation may be retained; 14 Ch. D. 390. But where a promoter deals with the corporation at arm's length, he may make such profit as he can; 2 Hare 461.

The remedy for the corporation is either to rescind the contract, if no equities intervene to prevent, or to call upon the promoter to account for his unlawful profit; 4 Russ. 562; Getty v. Devlin, 54 N. Y. 403.

If promoters are guilty of any misrepresentation of facts or suppression of truth in relation to the property or their personal interest in the proposed sale, the company would be entitled to set aside the transaction or recover compensation for any loss which it has suffered; Dickerman v. Trust Co., 176 U. S. 181, 204, 20 Sup. Ct. 311, 44 L. Ed. 423, citing 5 Ch. Div. 73; 11 id. 918.

Where the promoters have the power of selecting directors who are to represent the company in the proposed purchase, they are bound to select competent and trustworthy persons who will act honestly in the interest of the shareholders. A purchase made through promoters under these circumstances will not bind the company unless it was a fair and honest bargain; Dickerman v. Trust Co., 176 U. S. 181, 204, citing L. R. 5 Ch. Div. 73; Brewster v. Hatch, 122 N. Y. 349, 25 N. E. 505, 19 Am. St. Rep. 498; Simons v. Min. Co., 61 Pa. 202, 100 Am. Dec. 628. They are liable to the corporation or its creditors for the difference between the price which they received for such property from the corporation and the price at which they purchased it, without regard to its actual value; Cent. Trust Co. v. Land Co., 116 Fed. 743; Boshier v. Land Co., 89 Va. 455, 16 S. E. 360, 37 Am. St. Rep. 879.

A subordinate fraud practiced by some of the promoters of a corporation upon some of their associates was held a matter wholly between them and the syndicate, which gave rise to no corporate right of action, in the absence of innocent incorporators or stockholders; Old Dominion Copper Co. v. Lewisohn, 210 U. S. 206, 28 Sup. Ct. 634, 52 L. Ed. 1025. But fraud in the purchase of property which is to be conveyed to a corporation composed partly of those purchasing the property and partly of others may become operative against the corporation itself, and give it a right to maintain an action against some or all of those guilty of the fraud, to protect the innocent stockholders who bought in ignorance thereof; Davis v. Las Ovas Co., 227 U. S. 80, 33 Sup. Ct. 197, 57 L. Ed. 426, where it was said: "The distinction between a case in which all of the owners of the property and all of the members of the buying corporation are the same persons and participate in the profit realized, and the case here presented, is fully recognized in Old Dominion Copper Co. v. Lewisohn, 210

U. S. 206, 28 Sup. Ct. 634, 52 L. Ed. 1025, as well as in Phosphate Co. v. Erlanger, 5 Ch. Div. 73, and in the well considered opinion of Judge Severens in Yeiser v. Paper Co., 107 Fed. 340, 46 C. C. A. 567, 52 L. R. A. 724. There was no error in cancelling the shares issued to the plaintiffs in error for promotion of the corporation. They and the other members of the syndicate received the shares upon the assumption that they had in good faith served the corporation in the procurement of the property. Obviously appellants were serving themselves, to the detriment of the corporation and innocent subscribers to its stock. In such a situation the corporation may recover the shares."

There is some difference of opinion in regard to the time when one becomes a promoter within the meaning of the rule. Some cases hold that he is chargeable with a trust when he enters upon the execution of the scheme which is intended to result in the transfer of the property to a company to be organized and controlled by him. All, however, agree that he comes within the rule when he begins to organize the company, and that, from that time, he is bound to deal openly and fairly, and in such a way as that those having independent charge of the company, as well as those who are induced to become subscribers to its stock, may be fully advised of the relation he bears to the property which he proposes to sell; Yeiser v. Paper Co., 107 Fed. 340, 46 C. C. A. 567, 52 L. R. A. 724, citing South Joplin Land Co. v. Case, 104 Mo. 572, 16 S. W. 390; Hebgen v. Koeffler, 97 Wis. 313, 72 N. W. 745; Densmore Oil Co. v. Densmore, 64 Pa. 43; Hayward v. Leeson, 176 Mass. 310, 57 N. E. 656, 49 L. R. A. 725; Burbank v. Dennis, 101 Cal. 90, 35 Pac. 444; Yale Gas Stove Co. v. Wilcox, 64 Conn. 101, 29 Atl. 303, 25 L. R. A. 90, 42 Am. St. Rep. 159; Brewster v. Hatch, 122 N. Y. 349, 25 N. E. 505, 19 Am. St. Rep. 498.

A promoter though he purport to act on behalf of a projected corporation cannot bind it by acts performed before it came into existence; Weatherford, M. W. & N. W. Ry. Co. v. Granger, 86 Tex. 350, 24 S. W. 795, 40 Am. St. Rep. 837; also Perry v. R. Co., 44 Ark. 383; Davis v. Creamery Ass'n, 63 Mo. App. 477; Long v. Bank, 8 Utah 104, 29 Pac. 878; Arapahoe Inv. Co. v. Platt, 5 Colo. App. 515, 39 Pac. 584; Schreyer v. Mills Co., 29 Or. 1, 43 Pac. 719. It has been said in one case, Oakes v. Water Co., 143 N. Y. 420, 38 N. E. 461, 26 L. R. A. 544, that this rule does not apply to a private corporation. The rule does not apply when there was a de facto corporation in existence when the acts were performed; Wood v. Whelen, 93 Ill. 153; or when the charter provides that the company shall be liable; Hill v. Gould, 129 Mo. 106, 30 S. W. 181; Munson v. R. Co., 103 N. Y. 59, 8 N. E. 355. "Except as a fiction, therefore, this doctrine that a company can be bound before it is formed, and enters upon its corporate life 'cum onere,' must be regarded as unfounded in principle. . . . It is discredited in England and has not been followed (as far as can be ascertained) since the decision in 2 Macq. H. of L. 393. The American authorities repudiate it." Lloyd, Corp. Liab. for Acts of Prom. 42, citing 5 H. L. 605. The fact that all the stockholders were promoters and entered into the contract, does not make it binding upon the company when formed; Battelle v. A corporation cannot enforce a subscription to shares made before its formation on the faith of certain promises of its promoters, without fulfilling the promises; Burrows v. Smith, 10 N. Y. 550.

"Both the English and American decisions recognize the possibility of a new contract between the corporation when organized and the third person, the broad line of distinction between the cases being the manner in which such contract can be made out; the English courts taking the position that acts of the corporation which are clearly attributable to the erroneous belief on its part that it is liable on the original contract cannot be received as evidence of a new contract, particularly when coupled with the further fact that direct negotiations between the third party and the corporation cannot be shown. The American courts, on the other hand, receive as evidence of a new contract all acts indicating an intent by the corporation to receive the benefits of the original contract." 19 Harv. L. When a solvent trader converts his business into a limited liability company, complying with all the statutory requirements, the court will not go behind the transaction and decide that the company is not validly constituted on account of the nonfulfilment of conditions which are not found in the company's acts; [1897] A. C. 22. This case sustains the validity of what are known in England as "one man companies."

See Alger, Promoters; Keener Quasi-Contracts; PROSPECTUS.

PROMPT. Quick, sudden, or precipitate. One who is ready is said to be prepared at the moment; one who is prompt is said to be prepared beforehand. Tobias v. Lissberger, 105 N. Y. 412, 12 N. E. 13, 59 Am. Rep. 509.

PROMULGATION. The order given to cause a law to be executed, and to make it public; it differs from publication. 1 Bla. Com. 45; Stat. 6 Hen. VI. c. 4.

In modern practice, it is usually by publishing one or more volumes of the laws and circulating them among public officials and selling them. As to the practice in England at various times, see Record Com. in 7 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. H. 168.

With regard to trade, unless previous notice can be brought home to the party charged with violating their provisions, laws are to be considered as beginning to operate in the respective collection districts only from the time they are received from the proper department by the collector. The appointment of a jury commission and the drawing of a jury by it, under a law which has not been promulgated, are void; State v. Bruno, 48 La. Ann. 1481, 21 South. 30.

As to the rules of a railway company it means made known; brought to the attention of the service affected thereby, so that a servant is bound to take notice; Wooden v. R. Co., 18 N. Y. Supp. 768.

Formerly promulgation meant introducing a bill to the senate; Aust. Jur. Lect. 28.

See STATUTE.

PROMUTUUM (Lat.). In Civil Law. A quasi-contract, by which he who receives a certain sum of money, or a certain quantity of fungible things, which have been paid to him through mistake, contracts towards the payer the obligation of returning him as much. Pothier, de l'Usure, pt. 3, s. 1, a. 1.

This contract is called promutuum, because it has much resemblance to that of mutuum. This resemblance consists in this: first, that in both a sum of money or some fungible things are required; second, that in both there must be a transfer of the property in the thing; third, that in both there must be returned the same amount or quantity of the thing received. But, though there is this general resemblance between the two, the mutuum differs essentially from the promutuum. The former is the actual contract of the parties, made expressly, but the latter is a quasi-contract, which is the effect of an error or mistake. 1 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1125.

PRONEPOS (Lat.). Great-grandson.

PRONEPTIS (Lat.). A niece's daughter. A great-granddaughter. Ainsworth, Dict.

PRONOUN. The use of "his" in a charge may be generic, covering male as well as female witnesses; Wilmette v. Brachle, 110 Ill. App. 356, affirmed 209 Ill. 621, 71 N. E. 41.

PRONURUS (Lat.). The wife of a great-grandson.

PROOF. The conviction or persuasion of the mind of a judge or jury, by the exhibition of evidence, of the reality of a fact alleged. Thus, to prove is to determine or persuade that a thing does or does not exist; 8 Toullier, n. 2; Ayliffe, Parerg. 442; 2 Phil. Ev. 44, n. a; Steph. Ev. 62; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 1; Schloss v. His Creditors, 31 Cal. 203; Perry v. R. Co., 36 Ia. 106. Proof is the perfection of evidence; for without evidence there is no proof, although there may be evidence which does not amount to proof: for example, if a man is found murdered at a spot where another has been seen walking but a short time before, this fact will be evidence to show that the latter was the murderer, but, standing alone, will be very far from proof of it.

Ayliffe defines judicial proof to be a clear and evident declaration or demonstration of a matter which was before doubtful, conveyed in a judicial manner by fit and proper arguments, and likewise by all other legal methods: first, by proper arguments, such as conjectures, presumptions, indicia, and other adminicular ways and means; secondly, by legal methods, or methods according to law, such as witnesses, public instruments, and the like. Ayliffe, Parerg. 442; Aso & M. Inst. b. 3, t. 7.

PROOF OF DEATH. See Loss.

PROOF OF LOSS. See Loss.

PROOF OF SPIRITS. Testing the strength of alcoholic spirits, also the degree of strength; as high proof, first proof, second, third, and fourth proofs. In the internal revenue law it is used in the sense of degree of strength. Louisville P. W. Co. v. Collector, 49 Fed. 561, 1 C. C. A. 371, 6 U. S. App. 53.

PROPER. That which is essential, suitable, adapted, and correct.

Congress is authorized, by art. 1, s. 8, of the constitution of the United States, "to make all laws which shall be necessary and proper for carrying into execution the foregoing powers, and all other powers vested by this constitution of the United States, in any department or officer thereof."

PROPER LAW OF CONTRACT. See LÆX LOCI.

PROPERTY. The right and interest which a man has in lands and chattels to the exclusion of others. Morrison v. Semple, 6 Binn. (Pa.) 98; Soulard v. U. S., 4 Pet. (U. S.) 511, 7 L. Ed. 938; Jackson v. Housel, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 283; 11 East 290, 518.

The sole and despotic dominion which one man claims and exercises over the external things of the world in total exclusion of the right of any other individual in the universe. 2 Bla. Com. 2. The right to possess, use, enjoy, and dispose of a thing. Babcock v. Buffalo, 1 Sheld. 317, affirmed 56 N. Y. 268; which is in itself valuable; Jones v. Vanzandt, 4 McLean 603, Fed. Cas. No. 7-503. The free use and enjoyment by a person of all his acquisitions, without any control or diminution, save only by the law of the land. Stevens v. State, 2 Ark. 291, 35 Am. Dec. 72; People v. Barondess, 61 Hun 571, 16 N. Y. Supp. 436. The right of a person over a thing (in rem) indefinite in point of user. Austin's Lectures.

Literally taken the word is nomen generalissimum, but is not always so used. As ordinarily used it means the thing possessed, but it may include the right to use and enjoy it. The more comprehensive meaning is presumed to have been intended by the use of such a word in a constitution; Wells-Fargo & Co. v. Jersey City, 207 Fed. 871.

That which is peculiar or proper to any person; that which belongs exclusively to one; the first meaning of the word from which it is derived—proprius—is one's own. Drone, Copyr. 6.

A vested right of action is property in the same sense that tangible things are property; Pritchard v. Norton, 106 U. S. 132, 1 Sup. Ct. 102, 27 L. Ed. 104. It is a thing owned, that to which a person has or may have a legal title; Springfield F. & M. Ins. Co. v. Allen, 43 N. Y. 389, 3 Am. Rep. 711. See Barclay v. Plant, 50 Ala. 509; Primm v. Belleville, 59 Ill. 142; 11 East 290.

In the treaty by which Louisiana was acquired, property comprehends every species of title, inchoate or complete, legal or equitable, and embraces rights which lie in contract, executory as well as executed; Bryan v. Kennett, 113 U. S. 179, 5 Sup. Ct. 407, 28 L. Ed. 908.

Property, in the strict legal sense, is an aggregate of rights which are guaranteed and protected by the government, and, in the ordinary sense, indicates the thing itself, rather than the rights attached to it; Fulton Light, Heat & Power Co. v. State, 65 Misc. Rep. 263, 121 N. Y. Supp. 536, affirmed id., 138 App. Div. 931, 123 N. Y. Supp. 1117.

The term "property" embraces every species of valuable right and interest, including real and personal property, easements, franchises, and hereditaments; Caro v. R. Co., 46 N. Y. Super. Ct. 138; it includes money; Washington Co. v. Weld Co., 12 Colo. 152, 20 Pac. 273; credits; Dillingham v. Ins. Co., 120 Tenn. 302, 108 S. W. 1148, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 220; a chose in action; Cincinnati v. Hafer, 49 Ohio St. 60, 30 N. E. 197; a mining claim; Sullivan v. Min. Co., 143 U. S. 431, 12 Sup. Ct. 555, 36 L. Ed. 214; a debt; Knebelkamp v. Fogg, 55 Ill. App. 563; Fontana v. Tel. Co., 83 Fed. 824; a ferry franchise; Conway v. Taylor, 1 Black (U. S.) 603, 17 L. Ed. 191; Carroll v. Campbell, 110 Mo. 557, 19 S. W. 809; the reciprocal rights of the wife to the society, protection, and support of her husband, and his right to her society and services in his household may be regarded as the property of the respective parties; Jaynes v. Jaynes, 39 Hun (N. Y.) 40; Warren v. Warren, 89 Mich. 123, 50 N. W. 842, 14 L. R. A. 545.

The following have been held to be property: A certificate of membership in the Board of Trade; Jones v. Fisher, 116 Ill. 68, 4 N. E. 255; a common law action; Dunlap v. R. Co., 50 Mich. 470, 15 N. W. 555; the right to recover damages from a common carrier for breach of contract; Justis v. R. Co., 12 Cal. App. 639, 108 Pac. 328; the office of a professor of a chartered university who can be removed only for cause; Com. v. Phillips, 1 Del. Co. Rep. (Pa.) 41; a man's right to his calling; Butchers' Union S. H. & L. S. L. Co. v. Slaughter-House Co., 111 U. S. 746, 4 Sup. Ct. 652, 28 L. Ed. 585; People v. Rosenberg, 59 Misc. 342, 112 N. Y. St. Rep. 684; a franchise to build a water works and use the streets for that purpose; Adams v. Bullock, 94 Miss. 27, 47 South. 527, 19 Ann. Cas. 165; all rights in real and personal property, and easements, franchises and incorporeal hereditaments; Metropolitan City R. Co. v. R. Co., 87 Ill. 317; a secret code or system of a mercantile company, containing the cost and selling price of its merchandize, for use of its salesmen; Simmons H. Co. v. Waibel, 1 S. D. 488, 47 N. W. 814, 11 L. R. A. 267, 36 Am. St. Rep. 755.

A person has no property nor vested interest in any rule of the common law; Pacific Tel. Co. v. Oregon, 223 U. S. 150, 32 Sup. Ct. 224, 56 L. Ed. 377; nor in a liquor license; Sprayberry v. Atlanta (Ga.) 13 S. E. 197; nor in a mere idea unprotected by statute or contract; Haskins v. Ryan, 71 N. J. Eq. 575, 64 Atl. 436; nor in a coffin in which a corpse has, with the consent of all persons having a pecuniary interest in it, been buried; Guthrie v. Weaver, 1 Mo. App. 136. Debts have been said not to be the "property" of the debtor; Dibert v. D'Arcy, 248 Mo. 617, 154 S. W. 1116.

The domestic services of a wife and her companionship possess none of the attributes of property; Billingsley v. R. Co., 84 Ark. 617, 107 S. W. 173, 120 Am. St. Rep. 95.

All things are not the subject of property; the sea, the air, and the like cannot be appropriated; every one may enjoy them, but he has no exclusive right in them. When things are fully our own, or when all others are excluded from meddling with them or from interfering about them, it is plain that no person besides the proprietor, who has this exclusive right, can have any claim either to use them, or to hinder him from disposing of them as he pleases: so that property, considered as an exclusive right to things, contains not only a right to use those things, but a right to dispose of them, either by exchanging them for other things, or by giving them away to any other person without any consideration, or even throwing them away. See Story v. R. Co., 90 N. Y. 122, 43 Am. Rep. 146; Thompson v. R. Co., 130 N. Y. 360, 29 N. E. 264, where easements of light and air and ingress and egress to buildings were held to be property.

The ownership of property implies its use in the prosecution of any legitimate business which is not a nuisance in itself; In re Hong Wah, 82 Fed. 623.

Property is said to be real and personal property. See those titles.

Dacey (Conf. Laws, Moore's ed. 72) treats of property as consisting of movables and immovables, but says that this "does not square with the distinction known to English lawyers between things real, or real property, and things personal, or personal property." Movables are equivalent to personal property with the omission of chattels real; immovables are equivalent to realty, with the addition of chattels real or leaseholds. Law is concerned, not with things but with rights over, or in reference to property.

It is also said to be, when it relates to goods and chattels, absolute or qualified. Absolute property is that which is our own without any qualification whatever: as, when a man is the owner of a watch, a book, or other inanimate thing, or of a horse, a sheep, or other animal which never had its natural liberty in a wild state.

Qualified property consists in the right which men have over wild animals which they have reduced to their own possession, and which are kept subject to their power; as, a deer, a buffalo, and the like, which are his own while he has possession of them, but as soon as his possession is lost his property is gone, unless the animals go animus revertendi; 2 Bla. Com. 396; Wallis v. Mease, 3 Binn. (Pa.) 546; but a whale, harpooned, but not connected with a boat by line, is vested in the crew that harpooned it, and not in one which afterwards followed and captured it; Ghen v. Rich, 8 Fed. 159; when killed and marked, it belongs to the person who killed it; Taber v. Jenny, 1 Sprague 315, Fed. Cas. No. 13,720.

But property in personal goods may be absolute or qualified without any relation to the nature of the subject-matter, but simply because more persons than one have an interest in it, or because the right of property is separated from the possession. A bailee of goods, though not the owner, has a qualified property in them; while the owner has the absolute property. See BAILEE; BAILMENT.

Personal property is further divided into property in possession, and property or choses in action. See CHOSE IN ACTION.

Property is again divided into corporeal and incorporeal. The former comprehends such property as is perceptible to the senses, as lands, houses, goods, merchandise, and the like; the latter consists in legal rights, as choses in action, easements, and the like.

In a strict legal sense, land is not property, but the subject of property. The term property, although in common parlance applied to a tract of land or a chattel, in its legal signification means only the right of the owner in relation to it. It denotes a right over a determinate thing. Property is the right of any person to possess, use, enjoy, and dispose of a thing. Wynehamer v. People, 13 N. Y. 378; 1 Bla. Com. 186; 2 Austin, Jurispr. 817. If property in land consists in certain essential rights, and a physical interference with the land substantially subverts one of those rights, such interference takes, pro tanto, the owner's property. The right of using a thing indefinitely is an essential quality of absolute property, without which absolute property can have no legal existence. Use is the real side of property. This right of user necessarily includes the right and power of excluding others from the land; Walker v. R. Co., 103 Mass. 14, 4 Am. Rep. 509. From the very nature of these rights of user and of exclusion, it is evident that they cannot be materially abridged without, ipso facto, taking the owner's property. If the right of indefinite user is an essential element of absolute property or complete ownership, whatever physical interference annuls this right, takes property, although the owner may still have left to him valuable rights in the article of a more limited and circumscribed nature; Eaton v. R. Co., 51 N. H. 512, 12 Am. Rep. 147.

Property is lost by the act of man by—first, alienation; but in order to do this the owner must have a legal capacity to make a contract; second, by the voluntary abandonment of the thing; but unless the abandonment be purely voluntary the title to the property is not lost: as, if things be thrown into the sea to save the ship, the right is not lost; Pothier, n. 270; 3 Toullier, n. 346. But even a voluntary abandonment does not deprive the former owner from taking possession of the thing abandoned at any time before another takes possession of it.

It is lost by operation of law—first, by the forced sale, under a lawful process, of the property of a debtor to satisfy a judgment, sentence, or decree rendered against him, to compel him to fulfil his obligations; second, by confiscation, or sentence of a criminal court; third, by prescription; fourth, by civil death; fifth, by capture by a public enemy. It is lost by the act of God, as in the case of the death of slaves or animals, or in the total destruction of a thing: for example, if a house be swallowed up by an opening in the earth during an earthquake.

It is proper to observe that, in some cases, the moment that the owner loses his possession he also loses his property or right in the thing; animals feræ naturæ, as mentioned above, belong to the owner only while he retains the possession of them. But, in general, the loss of possession does not impair the right of property, for the owner may recover it within a certain time allowed by law. Bouvier, Inst.

Referring to the historical development of the law relating to chattels, it is said that possession is prima facie evidence of ownership. The man with the better right to possession has "the property." This better right to possession was the only form of property, either of lands or chattels, known to the early common law. 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 281.

See STOCK; SITUS; TAXATION; ATTACHMENT; GARNISHMENT.

PROPINQUITY (Lat.). Kindred; parentage. See AFFINITY; CONSANGUINITY; NEXT OF KIN.

PROPIOR SOBRINA, PROPIOR SOBRIÑO (Lat.). The son or daughter of a great-uncle or great-aunt on the father's or mother's side. Calvinus, Lex.

PROPIOS, PROPRIOS. In Spanish Law. Certain portions of ground laid off and reserved when a town was founded in Spanish America, as the inalienable property of the town, for the purpose of erecting public buildings, markets, etc., or to be used in any other way, under the direction of the municipality, for the advancement of the revenues or the prosperity of the place. Strother v. Lucas, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 442, 9 L. Ed. 1137.

PROPONENT. In Ecclesiastical Law. One who propounds a thing; as, "the party proponent doth allege and propound." 6 Eccl. 356, n. Often used of one who offers a will for probate.

PROPORTUM. Intent or meaning. Cowell.

PROPOSAL. An offer. A formal offer to perform some undertaking, stating the time and manner of performance and price demanded, or one or more of these particulars, either directly or by implied or direct reference to some announcement requesting such an offer. See Eppes v. R. Co., 35 Ala. 33. A proposal of this character is not to be considered as subject to different rules from any other offer; Poll. Contr. 13. See OFFER.

PROPOSITUS (Lat.). The person proposed. In making genealogical tables, the person whose relations it is desired to find out is called the propositus.

PROPOUND. To offer; to propose; as, the onus probandi in every case lies upon the party who propounds a will. 1 Curt. Eccl. 637; 6 Eccl. 417.

PROPRES. In French Law. The term propres or biens propres is used to denote that property which has come to an individual from his relations, either in a direct line, ascending or descending, or from a collateral line, whether the same have come by operation of law or by devise. Propres is used in opposition to acquêts. Pothier, Des Propres; 2 Burge, Conf. of Law 61.

PROPRIA PERSONA (Lat. in his own person). It is a rule in pleading that pleas to the jurisdiction of the court must be plead in propria persona, because if pleaded by attorney they admit the jurisdiction, as an attorney is an officer of the court, and he is presumed to plead after having obtained leave, which admits the jurisdiction. Lawes, Pl. 91.

An appearance may be in propria persona, and need not be by attorney.

PROPRIETARY. In its strict sense, this word signifies one who is master of his actions, and who has the free disposition of his property. During the colonial government of Pennsylvania, William Penn was called the proprietary.

Belonging to ownership; as proprietary rights. Ferguson v. Arthur, 117 U. S. 487, 6 Sup. Ct. 861, 29 L. Ed. 979.

PROPRIETATE PROBANDA. See DE PROPRIETATE PROBANDA.

PROPRIETOR. The owner.

One who has the legal right or exclusive title to anything. In many instances it is synonymous with owner. Turner v. Cross, 83 Tex. 218, 18 S. W. 578, 15 L. R. A. 262. A receiver is not a proprietor; Dillingham v. Blake (Tex.) 32 S. W. 77.

PROPRIO VIGORE (Lat.). By its own force and vigor: an expression frequently used in construction. A phrase is said to have a certain meaning proprio vigore.

PROPTER AFFECTUM (Lat.). For or on account of some affection or prejudice. See CHALLENGE.

PROPTER DEFECTUM (Lat.). On account of or for some defect. See CHALLENGE; ESCHEAT.

PROPTER DELICTUM (Lat.). For or on account of crime. See CHALLENGE; ESCHEAT.

PROPTER HONORIS RESPECTUM. On account of respect or honor of rank. See CHALLENGE.

PROROGATION. Putting off to another time. It is generally applied to the British parliament, and means the continuance of it from one time to another; it differs from adjournment, which is a continuance of it from one day to another in the same session. 1 Bla. Com. 186. After prorogation all pending bills fall.

Bouv.—173

In Civil Law. The giving time to do a thing beyond the term prefixed. Dig. 2. 14. 27. 1. See PROLONGATION.

PROSCRIBED. In Civil Law. Among the Romans, a man was said to be proscribed when a reward was offered for his head; but the term was more usually applied to those who were sentenced to some punishment which carried with it the consequences of civil death. Code 9. 49.

PROSECUTION (Lat. prosequor, to follow after). In Criminal Law. The means adopted to bring a supposed offender to justice and punishment by due course of law. See State v. Williams, 34 La. Ann. 1198.

Prosecutions are carried on in the name of the government, and have for their principal object the security and happiness of the people in general. Hawk. Pl. Cr. b. 2, c. 25, s. 3; Bac. Abr. Indictment (A 3).

In England, the modes most usually employed to carry them on are—by indictment; 1 Chitty, Cr. L. 132; presentment of a grand jury; id. 133; coroner's inquest; id. 134; and by an information. In this country, the modes are—by indictment, by presentment, by information, and by complaint, which see. See POSTULATIO; MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

PROSECUTOR. One who prosecutes another for a crime in the name of the government.

The public prosecutor is an officer appointed by the government to prosecute all offences: he is the attorney-general or his deputy.

A private prosecutor is one who prefers an accusation against a party whom he suspects to be guilty.

Every man may become a prosecutor; but no man is bound, except in some few of the more enormous offences, as treason, to be one; but if the prosecutor should compound a felony he will be guilty of a crime. The prosecutor has an inducement to prosecute, because he cannot, in many cases, have any civil remedy until he has done his duty to society by an endeavor to bring the offender to justice. If a prosecutor act from proper motives, he will not be responsible to the party in damages though he was mistaken in his suspicions; but if, from a motive of revenge, he institute a criminal prosecution without any reasonable foundation, he may be punished by being mulcted in damages, in an action for a malicious prosecution (q. v.).

In theory of law in England, any member of the community can prosecute a criminal. In felony, it is the duty of a person injured in person or property to prosecute, or to give information to the police; but there is no such duty in misdemeanors. The police may act as they see fit. By acts in 1879 and 1884, a public prosecutor is provided who institutes and carries on prosecutions in any court under the supervision of the attorney-general. He may take a case out of the hands of a private prosecutor or of the police. The vast bulk of prosecutions are by private prosecutors.

In State v. Tighe, 27 Mont. 327, 71 Pac. 3 (a capital case), the court upheld the practice of private counsel acting for prosecutors, saying that it had existed in Montana for forty years. Milburn, J., dissented on the ground that the private prosecutor represents vengeance, while the state's attorney represents justice. The practice exists in many states; see State v. Bartlett, 55 Me. 200; Keyes v. State, 122 Ind. 527, 23 N. E. 1097. It does not exist in Massachusetts, Michigan and Wisconsin.

In Pennsylvania, a defendant is not bound to plead to an indictment, where there is a private prosecutor, until his name shall have been indorsed on the indictment as such, and on acquittal of the defendant, in all cases except where the charge is for a felony, the jury may direct that he shall pay the costs. See 1 Chitty, Cr. Law 110; Haught v. Com., 2 Va. Cas. 3; The King v. Lukens, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 5; Allen v. Com., 2 Bibb (Ky.) 210; U. S. v. Mundel, 6 Call (Va.) 245, Fed. Cas. No. 15,834; Bish. Cr. Pro. 691; DISTRICT ATTORNEY OF THE UNITED STATES; INFORMER.

PROSECUTOR OF THE PLEAS. The title of the prosecuting officer in each county in New Jersey and one or two other states.

The term is used in the same sense as district attorney in other states.

PROSOCER (Lat.). A father-in-law's father; grandfather of wife. Vicat, Voc. Jur.

PROSOCERUS (Lat.). A wife's grandmother.

PROSPECTIVE (Lat. prospicio, to look forward). That which is applicable to the future: it is used in opposition to retrospective. See RETROSPECTIVE.

PROSPECTUS. A prospectus of an intended company ought not to omit actual and material facts, or to conceal facts material to be known, the misrepresentation or concealment of which may improperly influence the mind of the reader; for if he is thereby deceived into becoming an allottee of shares and suffers loss he may proceed against those who have misled him. The proper purpose of a prospectus of an intended company is held to be only to invite persons to become original shareholders or allottees of shares in the company. When it has performed this office, it is exhausted; Peek v. Gurney, L. R. 6 H. L. 377; but a purchaser of shares from an original allottee may maintain an action for misrepresentations contained in a prospectus, if he can show that it was intended by those issuing it to be, and was, communicated to him prior to his purchase of shares; [1896] 1 Q. B. 372; such an intention may be inferred if the prospectus was circulated after all its shares had been allotted, particularly if they were taken up by the promoters themselves. See [1892] 3 Ch. 566; 17 Ch. D. 467.

The doctrine of Peek v. Gurney is considered by Judge Thompson (Corp. § 1471) as "destitute of any foundation in reason and opposed to the common opinions of justice and business morality." It is not followed in this country, where it is held that it is sufficient if the prospectus was issued to influence the public, and the plaintiff saw it and was induced thereby to purchase shares; id.

A prospectus set forth that a tramway company had the right to use steam power as well as horses; the directors believed the statement to be true, but it was not; it was held that the officers of the company were not liable for deceit; Derry v. Peek, L. R. 14 App. Cas. 337. This decision was overruled in England by an act of 1890.

If a director of a company knowingly issues or sanctions the circulation of a false prospectus, containing untrue statements of material facts tending to deceive the community, and to induce the public to buy the stock in the market, he is responsible to those who are injured thereby; Morgan v. Skiddy, 62 N. Y. 319.

A letter intended to be used to promote the sale of bonds of a trust company is a representation to all persons to whom it is shown; Nash v. Ins. & Trust Co., 159 Mass. 437, 34 N. E. 625.

A prospectus is admissible in evidence in an action at law by a company against its promoters for secret profits; Simons v. Min. Co., 61 Pa. 202, 100 Am. Dec. 628. See Thomp. Liab. of Off. 309.

A statement in a prospectus of the purpose for which money is wanted, is a material statement of fact, and if untrue may be ground for an action of deceit; 29 Ch. Div. 459.

A prospectus of a new company, so far as it alleges facts concerning the position and prospects of the undertaking, is a representation to all persons who may apply for shares therein, but not to subsequent transferees of shares; L. R. 6 H. L. 377; but it may be as to the latter, if actively used to induce the purchase of shares; [1896] 1 Q. B. 372; Poll. Torts 284. The material question as to a prospectus is, "Was there or was there not misrepresentation in point of fact?" id.

By the Companies (Consolidation) Act 1908, every prospectus must contain particulars respecting the memorandum of association, the shares, the directors, the subscribers to the memorandum of association, the vendors to the company, payments in respect to preliminary expenses and disbursements and the dates and parties to material coutracts. Parties cannot contract themselves out of the act; [1906] 75 L. J. C. 450; [1906] 2 Ch. 129; if a prospectus contains untrue statements, or material omissions, any subscriber for shares may avoid his contract and the court will not enquire into the exact importances which he attached to each separate statement; [1906] A. C. 24; but see [1910] 1 Ch. 630. He also has an action of deceit against every director or promoter, or person named in the prospectus as about to become a director, or who has authorized the issue of the prospectus. The defendant will not be liable if he had reasonable ground to believe that the statement was true, or that it was a correct statement from a public official document, or from the report of an expert whom he had reasonable ground to believe was competent; Odgers, C. L. 1401.

See Alger, Promoters; DECEIT; MISREPRESENTATION; PROMOTERS.

PROSTITUTION. The common lewdness of a woman for gain. The act of permitting a common and indiscriminate sexual intercourse for gain. Com. v. Cook, 12 Metc. (Mass.) 97.

The act or practice of prostituting or offering the body to an indiscriminate intercourse with men; common lewdness of a woman for gain; the act of permitting a common and indiscriminate sexual intercourse for hire. State v. Gibson, 108 Mo. 575, 18 S. W. 1109. See State v. Stoyell, 54 Me. 24, 89 Am. Dec. 716; Haygood v. State, 98 Ala. 61, 13 South. 325.

The act of permitting illicit intercourse for hire, an indiscriminate intercourse or what is deemed public prostitution. U. S. v. Bitty, 208 U. S. 393, 28 Sup. Ct. 396, 52 L. Ed. 543.

By the word in its most general sense is understood the act of setting one's self to sale, or of devoting to infamous purposes what is in one's power: as, the prostitution of talents or abilities; the prostitution of the press. etc. Carpenter v. People, 8 Barb. (N. Y.) 610.

In all well-regulated communities this has been considered a heinous offence, for which the woman may be punished; and the keeper of a house of prostitution may be indicted for keeping a common nuisance.

A landlord cannot recover for the use and occupation of a house let for the purpose of prostitution; 1 B. & P. 340, n. It is not a crime to let rooms to prostitutes for quiet and decent occupation, nor to permit a house to be visited by disreputable people, if they visit it for innocent and proper purposes; State v. Smith, 15 R. I. 24, 22 Atl. 1119.

The object of the provisions of the immigration acts of 1907 and 1910, providing for the deportation of prostitutes, was to prevent the introduction and keeping in this country of women of the prohibited class; and even if a woman married to a citizen might be permitted to enter if she does not belong to that class, yet if she is found violating the statute by being in a house of prostitution, she becomes subject to deportation, notwithstanding her marriage to a citizen; Low Wah Suey v. Backus, 225 U. S. 460, 32 Sup. Ct. 734, 56 L. Ed. 1165.

June 25, 1910, congress passed the white slave traffic act forbidding the transportation of women for the purpose of prostitution. It was held constitutional; Paulsen v. U. S., 199 Fed. 423, 118 C. C. A. 97. See WHITE SLAVE ACT; BAWDY-HOUSE.

See Flexner, Prostitution in Europe; Kneeland, Commercialized Prostitution in New York City; PROCURATION; WHITE SLAVE.

In a figurative sense, it signifies the bad use which a corrupt judge makes of the law, by making it subservient to his interest: as, the prostitution of the law, the prostitution of justice.

PROTECTION. In Mercantile Law. The name of a document generally given by notaries public to sailors and other persons going abroad, in which is certified that the bearer therein named is a citizen of the United States.

In Governmental Law. That benefit or safety which the government affords to the citizens.

In English Law. A privilege granted by the king to a party to an action, by which he is protected from a judgment which would otherwise be rendered against him. Of these protections there are several kinds. Fitzh. N. B. 65.

PROTECTION ORDERS. Orders granted by the court upon the application of a wife living apart from her husband to protect her property. Brett, Com. 988.

PROTECTION OF THE LAWS. See EQUAL PROTECTION OF THE LAWS.

PROTECTOR OF THE SETTLEMENT. By the English Fines and Recoveries Act, 1833, no disposition by a person who is tenant in tail under a settlement shall be effectual to bar any person but those claiming by force of the entail, unless it is made with the consent of the "Protector of the Settlement." In the absence of any express provision in the settlement appointing another person, the person who is the owner of the first beneficial estate of freehold, legal or equitable, or for years determinable on a life or lives prior to the estate tail, shall be the Protector. The settlor may appoint any person or persons in esse (not exceeding three) to act as Protector; 1 Steph. Com. 388.

PROTECTION, WRIT OF. A federal court has power to protect a litigant therein from seizure of his person by state authorities while in attendance upon the trial of his case, whether upon process or in the exercise of the police power of the state without process, where necessary for the protection of its own jurisdiction, and where the threatened act must rest for its justification upon a proceeding the validity of which is the very matter it is called upon to determine. In such case the federal court has power to grant protection to enable the party to come into the state, remain during the trial, and depart therefrom in the custody and under the protection of the United States marshal and without interference with his personal liberty by the officers or agents of the state; Chanler v. Sherman, 162 Fed. 19, 88 C. C. A. 673, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 992.

PROTECTORATE. A protectorate is a state which has transferred the management of its more important international affairs to a stronger state. 1 Opp. 144; Salmond, Juris. 210. It implies only a partial loss of sovereignty, so that the protected state still retains a position in the family of nations. Moreover, the protected state remains so far independent of its protector that it is not obliged to be a party to a war carried on by the protector against a third state, nor are treaties concluded by the protector ipso facto binding upon the protected state; 1 Opp. 145-146.

Treaties of protection are treaties in the nature of unequal alliance, from which they are chiefly distinguished by a garrison being kept within the protected state; Twiss, Rights of Nations § 247. The rights of sovereignty must be exercised by the protected state de facto as well as de jure, else it will become a mere dependence of the governing power. See Halleck, Int. L. 69; 1 Kent, Gould's ed. *23.

The character of a protectorate will depend upon the nature of the treaty by which it is established. As exercised, however, by a European power over a smaller civilized state, it differs from the relation which links an Eastern protected state with a European country; a German protectorate inclines to the assumption of more full control than a British.

Formerly protected nations were said to retain their independence and internal sovereignty, placing their foreign relations under a stronger country. It is believed that all the states represented at the Berlin Conference in 1885, except Great Britain, maintained that a Protectorate includes the right of administering justice over the subjects of a protected state. See Hall, For. Jur. of the British Crown.

PROTEST. In Contracts. A notarial act, made for want of payment of a promissory note, or for want of acceptance or payment of a bill of exchange by a notary public, in which it is declared that all parties to such instruments will be held responsible to the holder for all damages, exchanges, re-exchange, etc.

A formal notarial certificate attesting the dishonor of a bill of exchange or promissory note. Benj. Chalm. Bills, art. 176.

There are two kinds of protest, namely, protest for non-acceptance, and protest for non-payment. There is also a species of protest common in England, which is called protest for better security. A similar provision is to be found in the Negotiable Instruments Act.

Protest for non-acceptance or non-payment, when duly made and accompanied by notice to all the parties to the bill or note, has the effect of making all of them responsible to the holder for the amount of the bill or note, together with damages, etc.; 3 Kent 63; Byles, Bills 273, 394; Chitty, Bills 278; Com. Dig. Merchant (F 8, 9, 10); Bac. Abr. Merchant, etc. (M 7). Protest for better security may be made when the acceptor of a bill fails, becomes insolvent, or in any other way gives the holder just reason to suppose it will not be paid. It seems to be of doubtful utility, except that it gives the drawer of a bill on a foreign country an opportunity of availing himself of any attachment law there in force; 1 Ld. Raym. 745.

The protest is a formal paper signed and sealed by a notary wherein he certifies that on the day of its date he presented the original bill attached thereunto, or a copy (a description of the bill is enough; Dennistoun v. Stewart, 17 How. [U. S.] 606, 15 L. Ed. 228), to the acceptor, or the original note to the maker thereof, and demanded payment, or acceptance, which was refused, for reasons given in the protest, and that thereupon he protests against the drawer and indorsers thereof for exchange, re-exchange, damages, costs, and interest. See Benj. Chalm. Bills, art. 176; 2 Ames, Bills & N. 863. It is usual, also, for the notary to serve notices of the protest on all the parties to the bill. The notice contains a description of the bill, including its date and amount, the fact of demand and refusal, and that the holder looks to the person notified for payment. A waiver of notice of protest by an accommodation endorser 18 months after maturity of the note with full knowledge that demand had not been made or notice of protest given, is binding without a new consideration; Burgettstown Nat. Bk. v. Nill, 213 Pa. 456, 63 Atl. 186, 3 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1079, 110 Am. St. Rep. 554, 5 Ann. Cas. 476; notice of protest to a drawer who executed an assignment for the benefit of creditors is sufficient to bind the estate in the hands of the assignee; Moreland's Adm'r v. Bank, 114 Ky. 577, 71 S. W. 520, 61 L. R. A. 900, 102 Am. St. Rep. 293.

Protest of foreign bills is proof of demand and refusal to pay or accept; Bryden v.

Taylor, 2 H. & J. (Md.) 399, 3 Am. Dec. 554; Nicholls v. Webb, 8 Wheat. (U. S.) 333, 5 L. Ed. 628. Protest is said to be part of the constitution of a foreign bill; and the form is governed by the lex loci contractus; Bank of Rochester v. Gray, 2 Hill (N. Y.) 227; Tickner v. Roberts, 11 La. 14, 30 Am. Dec. 706; Townsley v. Sumrall, 2 Pet. (U. S.) 179, 180, 7 L. Ed. 386. Story, Bills 176 (by the place where the protest is made; Benj. Chalm. Bills, art. 180). A protest must be made by a notary public or other person authorized to act as such; Benj. Chalm. Bills, art. 177; but it has been held that the duties of a notary cannot be performed by a clerk or deputy; Ocean Nat. Bank v. Williams, 102 Mass. 141. Inland bills and promissory notes need not be protested; Bailey v. Dozier, 6 How. (U. S.) 23, 12 L. Ed. 328; see Presbrey v. Thomas, 1 App. D. C. 171; but the term protest, as applied to inland bills of exchange, includes only the steps necessary to charge the drawer and indorser; Wood River Bank v. Bank, 36 Neb. 744, 55 N. W. 239. Protest is unnecessary to fix the liability of an indorser on a non-negotiable instrument; Kampmann v. Williams, 70 Tex. 568, 8 S. W. 310.

By the Negotiable Instruments Act a foreign bill, if dishonored by non-acceptance, or, after acceptance, by non-payment, must be protested; if not, the drawer and endorsers are discharged. The protest must be annexed to the bill, or must contain a copy thereof, under the hand and seal of the notary making it, and must specify the time and place of presentment, the fact and manner thereof, the cause or reason for protesting the bill, and the demand made and the answer given, if any, or the fact that the drawee or acceptor could not be found. Protest may be made by a notary; or it may be by any respectable resident of the place of dishonor, in the presence of two or more credible witnesses.

Protest must be made on the day of dishonor, but is dispensed with by any circumstances which would dispense with notice of dishonor. See PRESENTMENT. It must be at the place of dishonor, except that when a bill drawn at the place of business or residence of some person other than the drawee, has been dishonored by non-acceptance, it must be protested for non-payment at the place where it is expressed to be payable, and no further presentment for payment to, or demand on, the drawee is necessary. After protest for non-acceptance a bill may be protested for non-payment.

Where the acceptor has been adjudged bankrupt or insolvent, or has assigned for creditors, before the bill matures, it may be protested for better security against the drawer and indorsers.

If a bill is lost or destroyed, or wrongly detained from the person entitled to hold it, protest may be on a copy or written particulars thereof.

Where a defendant negligently caused an original note to be protested after he had received a renewal note, the maker of the note can recover in tort for the damage to his credit; State Mutual Life Ass'n v. Baldwin, 116 Ga. 855, 43 S. E. 262.

See ACCEPTANCE; BILLS OF EXCHANGE; NOTICE OF DISHONOR; PRESENTMENT.

In Legislation. A declaration made by one or more members of a legislative body that they do not agree with some act or resolution of the body; it is usual to add the reasons which the protestants have for such a dissent.

See 2 Redlich, Proc. in H. of C. 233, as to protest in the House of Lords.

In Maritime Law. A writing, attested by a justice of the peace, a notary public, or a consul, made and verified by the master of a vessel, stating the severity of a voyage by which a ship has suffered, and showing that it was not owing to the neglect or misconduct of the master. See Richette v. Stewart, 1 Dall. 317, 1 L. Ed. 154; Fleming v. Ins. Co., 3 W. & S. (Pa.) 144, 38 Am. Dec. 747. It cannot be made by a notary except under the lex mercatoria, or by statute; Patterson v. Ins. Co., 3 Harr. & J. (Md.) 71, 5 Am. Dec. 419.

The protest is not, in general, evidence for the master of the vessel or his owners in the English or American courts; yet it is often proper evidence against them; Abb. Sh., 13th ed. 457.

PROTEST, PAYMENT UNDER. Internal revenue taxes paid voluntarily cannot be recovered back, and payments, with knowledge and without compulsion, are voluntary; Chesebrough v. U. S., 192 U. S. 253, 24 Sup. Ct. 262, 48 L. Ed. 432. A person who without the compulsion of legal process, or duress of goods or of the person, yields to the assertion of an invalid or unjust claim by paying it, cannot by mere protest, either in writing or oral, change its character from a voluntary to an involuntary payment. The payment overcomes and nullifies the protest; 4 Wait. Act. & Def. 493. Where an illegal tax is paid under protest to one having authority to enforce its collection, it is an involuntary payment and may be recovered back; Lau-man v. Des Moines, 29 Ia. 310; First Nat. Bk. of Sturgis v. Watkins, 21 Mich. 483; but see Detroit v. Martin, 34 Mich. 170, 22 Am. Rep. 512.

A mere apprehension of legal proceedings to collect a tax is not sufficient to make the payment compulsory; there must be an immediate power or authority to institute them; In re Stratton's Estate, 46 Md. 552.

An action will not lie to recover money voluntarily paid to redeem land sold upon a void tax judgment when the party making the payment has at the time full knowledge of the character of the sale and all the facts affecting its validity; Shane v. St. Paul, 26 Minn. 543, 6 N. W. 349.

The payment of illegal fees cannot generally be considered as voluntary, so as to preclude the plaintiff from recovering them back; 2 B. & C. 729; 2 B. & A. 562. Where money is paid under an illegal demand, colore officii, the payment can never be voluntary; 8 Exch. 625.

Where a railway company exacted from a carrier more than they charged to other carriers in breach of the acts of parliament, it was held that sums thus exacted could be recovered back; 7 M. & G. 253. Where a man pays more than he is bound to do by law for the performance of a duty which the law says is owed to him for nothing, or for less than he has paid, he is entitled to recover back the excess; L. R. 4 H. L. C. 249.

The object of the protest is to take from the payment its voluntary character; it serves as evidence that the payment was not voluntary, and in order to be efficacious there must be actual coercion, duress, or fraud, presently existing, or the payment will be voluntary in spite of the protest; Flower v. Lance, 59 N. Y. 603; Emmons v. Scudder, 115 Mass. 367. Whether actual protest, in case of the payment of money illegally demanded by a public officer is a condition precedent to a recovery by the party paying the money is not clearly settled; 4 Wait, Act. & Def. 495. Where the person demanding the money has notice of the illegality of the demand, a protest is not necessary, but otherwise it is necessary; Meek v. McClure, 49 Cal. 624.

When duties are paid in order to get possession of the goods, a protest made within ten days after the ascertainment and liquidation of the duties is sufficient; Saltonstall v. Birtwell, 164 U. S. 54, 17 Sup. Ct. 19, 41 L. Ed. 348, where the statutes on the subject are examined.

The rule that money paid on account of an unlawful demand, voluntarily and with knowledge of all the facts, cannot be recovered back unless paid under protest or to emancipate the property from an actual and existing duress, does not prevent the recovery of money paid on an illegal demand reluctantly by one without ability to regain possession of his property except by making such payment; The John Francis, 184 Fed. 740.

Neither a statute imposing a tax, nor execution thereunder, nor a mere demand for payment is treated as duress. It does not necessarily follow that there will be a levy on goods; or if there is a levy, the citizen, to avoid the consequences may pay the money, regain his property, and maintain a suit for the recovery of what has been exacted from him. The legal remedy redresses the wrong. But he has the same right to sue if he pays under compulsion of a statute whose self-executing provisions amount to duress. An act which declares that, where the franchise tax is not paid by a given date, a penalty of twenty-five per cent. shall be incurred, the license of the company cancelled, and the right to sue be lost, operates much more as duress than a levy on a limited amount of property. Payment to avoid such consequences is not voluntary, but compulsory, and may be recovered back; Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. v. Stranahan, 214 U. S. 320, 29 Sup. Ct. 671, 53 L. Ed. 1013; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. O'Connor, 223 U. S. 280, 32 Sup. Ct. 216, 56 L. Ed. 436, Ann. Cas. 1913C, 1050; Gaar, Scott & Co. v. Shannon, 223 U. S. 468, 32 Sup. Ct. 236, 56 L. Ed. 510.

Where excessive customs duties are paid under a mistake of law and without protest the payment is voluntary and there can be no recovery; Gulbenkian v. U. S., 186 Fed. 133, 108 C. C. A. 245.

After dispute, plaintiff paid tolls to a navigation company whose charter only authorized the collection of reasonable tolls; held that, although the tolls were unreasonable, the excess cannot be recovered back, since no formal protest was made; Monongahela Nav. Co. v. Wood, 194 Pa. 47, 45 Atl. 73. "A party cannot avoid the legal consequences of his acts by protesting, at the time he does them, that he does not intend to subject himself to such consequences;" U. S. v. Lamont, 155 U. S. 310, 15 Sup. Ct. 97, 36 L. Ed. 160, per White, J. Where a life insurance company reduced the amount payable to its members and a member paid assessments at the reduced rate for more than two years under protest, it was held they were voluntary and could not be recovered back; Lippincott v. Supreme Council A. L. H., 130 Fed. 483.

Money paid to a collector under protest, to enable a vessel to clear on the schedule, is paid involuntarily, and, if illegally paid, can be recovered; Oceanic Steam Nav. Co. v. Stranahan, 214 U. S. 320, 29 Sup. Ct. 671, 53 L. Ed. 1013; where an inheritance tax was paid under protest that it was illegal and with notice that suit will be brought to recover, it is a sufficient foundation for such suit; Herold v. Kahn, 159 Fed. 608, 86 C. C. A. 598.

The owner of a cargo of sugar brought from the Philippine Islands, who voluntarily paid the duty assessed thereon as imported merchandise, without objection or protest, cannot maintain an action to recover the same on the ground that the sugar was not imported and the duty was therefore unlawfully exacted; Flint, Eddy & American Trading Co. v. Bidwell, 123 Fed. 200.

See note in 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 476, on recovery back of taxes, etc.; TAX.

PROTESTANDO. See PROTESTATION.

PROTESTANT. It includes all those who believe in the Christian religion and do not acknowledge the supremacy of the pope. Tappan, Appeal of, 52 Conn. 418. See Hale v. Everett, 53 N. H. 57, 16 Am. Rep. 82.

PROTESTATION. In Pleading. The indirect affirmation or denial, by means of the word protesting (in the Latin form of pleadings, protestando), of the truth of some matter which cannot with propriety or safety be positively affirmed, denied, or entirely passed over. See 3 Bla. Com. 311.

The exclusion of a conclusion. Co. Litt. 124.

"A saving to the party who takes it from being concluded by any matter alleged, or objected against him on the other side, upon which he cannot take issue;" 2 Wms. Saund. 103. "It is a safeguard, which keeps the party from being concluded by the plea he is to make, if the issue be found for him;" Co. Litt. 124, b.

Its object was to secure to the party making it the benefit of a positive affirmation or denial in case of success in the action, so far as to prevent the conclusion that the fact was admitted to be true as stated by the opposite party, and at the same time to avoid the objection of duplicity to which a direct affirmation or denial would expose the pleading; Briggs v. Dorr, 19 Johns. (N. Y.) 96; 2 Saund. 103; Com. Dig. Pleader (N). Matter which is the ground of the suit upon which issue could be taken could not be protested; Plowd. 276; Snider v. Croy, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 227. But see 2 Wms. Saund. 103, n. Protestations are no longer allowed; 3 Bla. Com. 312; and were generally an unnecessary form; 3 Lev. 125.

It is of two sorts: 1. When a man pleads anything which he dares not directly affirm, or cannot plead for fear of making his plea double; 2. When a person is to answer two matters, and yet by law he can only plead to one of them, then in the beginning of his plea he may say, protesting, or not acknowledging such part of the matter to be true, and adds, "but for plea in this behalf, &c." By this means he is not concluded by any of the rest of the matter which he has by protestation so denied, but may at another time take issue upon it; 2 Wms. Saund. 103.

The common form of making protestations was as follows: "because protesting that," etc., excluding such matters of the adversary's pleading as are intended to be excluded in the protestando, if it be matter of fact; or, if it be against the legal sufficiency of his pleading, "because protesting that the plea by him above pleaded in bar" (or by way of reply, or rejoinder, etc., as the case might be) "is wholly insufficient in law." See, generally, 1 Chitty, Pl. 534; Com. Dig. Pleader (N); Steph. Pl. 235.

In Practice. An asseveration made by taking God to witness. A protestation is a form of asseveration which approaches very nearly to an oath. Woldius, Inst. § 375.

PROTHONOTARY. The title given to officers who officiate as principal clerks of some courts. Viner, Abr.

It is used in Pennsylvania in all courts other than the orphans' courts.

In ecclesiastical law, the name of prothonotary is given to an officer of the court of Rome. He is so called because he is the first notary,—the Greek word πρωτος signifying primus, or first. These notaries have pre-eminence over the other notaries, and are put in the rank of prelates. There are twelve of them. Dalloz, Dict. de Jur.

PROTOCOL. A record or register. Among the Romans, protocollum was a writing at the head of the first page of the paper used by the notaries or tabelliones. Nov. 44.

In France the minutes of notarial acts were formerly transcribed on registers, which were called protocols. Toullier, Dr. Civ. Fr. liv. 3, t. 3, c. 6, s. 1, n. 413.

By the German law it signifies the minutes of any transaction. Encyc. Amer. In the latter sense the word has of late been received into international law. Id.

In International Law it is a diplomatic expression which signifies the register on which the deliberations of a conference, etc., are inscribed, whence the word comes to signify the deliberations themselves. 1 Halleck, Int. L. 298, note.

It is used to indicate a preliminary treaty, as the instrument of August 12, 1808, entered into between the United States and Spain.

PROTOCOLO. In Spanish Law. The original draft of an instrument which remains in the possession of the notary. White, New Recop. l. 3, t. 7, c. 5, § 2.

PROTUTOR (Lat.). In Civil Law. He who, not being the tutor of a pupil or minor, has administered his property or affairs as if he had been, whether he thought himself legally invested with the authority of a tutor or not.

He who marries a woman who is tutrix becomes, by the marriage, a protutor. The protutor is equally responsible with the tutor.

PROUT PATET PER RECORDUM (Lat.). As appears by the record. This phrase is frequently used in pleading; as, for example, in debt on a judgment or other matter of record, unless when it is stated as an inducement, it is requisite, after showing the matter of record, to refer to it by the prout patet per recordum. 1 Chitty, Pl. *356; Philpot v. McArthur, 10 Me. 127.

PROVER. In Old English Law. One who undertakes to prove a crime against another. 28 Edw. I.; 5 Hen. IV. One who, being indicted and arraigned for treason or felony, confesses before plea pleaded, and accuses his accomplices to obtain pardon; state's evidence. 4 Bla. Com. *330. To prove. Law Fr. & Lat. Dict.; Britton, c. 22.

PROVIDED. The word always expresses a condition, unless it appears from the context to be the intent of the parties that it shall constitute a covenant; Rich v. Atwater, 16 Conn. 419; but it has been held that, though it is apt to create a condition, it does not necessarily do so; it is often used by way of limitation or qualification only, especially when it does not introduce a new clause, but only serves to qualify or restrain the generality of a former clause; Chapin v. Harris, 8 Allen (Mass.) 596. The word is often used as a conjunction to an independent paragraph; Georgia R. & B. Co. v. Smith, 128 U. S. 174, 9 Sup. Ct. 47, 32 L. Ed. 377.

Provided always may introduce a condition, limitation, or covenant, according to circumstances; Heaton v. Board of Com'rs, 20 Ind. 403.

See Proviso.

PROVINCE. Sometimes this signifies the district into which a country has been divided: as, the province of Canterbury, in England; the province of Languedoc, in France. Sometimes it means a dependency or colony: as, the province of New Brunswick. It is sometimes used figuratively to signify power or authority: as, it is the province of the court to judge of the law, that of the jury to decide on the facts.

PROVINCIAL CONSTITUTIONS. The decrees of provincial synods held under divers archbishops of Canterbury.

PROVINCIALE OF LYNDWOOD. An annotated collection of the Accepted Constitutions of the Church of England, by William Lyndwood, Dean of the Arches in the reign of Henry V. Stubbs, Canon Law.

PROVISION. In Common Law. The property which a drawer of a bill of exchange places in the hands of a drawee: as, for example, by remittances, or when the drawee is indebted to the drawer when the bill becomes due, provision is said to have been made. Acceptance always presumes a provision. See Code de Comm. art. 115-117.

In French Law. An allowance granted by a judge to a party for his support,—which is to be paid before there is a definite judgment. In a civil case, for example, it is an allowance made to a wife who is separated from her husband. Dalloz, Dict.

PROVISIONAL INJUNCTION. Sometimes, though not correctly, used for interlocutory injunction.

PROVISIONAL REMEDY. One provided for present need, or for the occasion, that is, one adapted to meet a particular exigency. McCarthy v. McCarthy, 54 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 100.

PROVISIONAL SEIZURE. In Louisiana. A term which signifies nearly the same as attachment of property.

By the Code of Practice, plaintiff may, in certain cases, obtain the provisional seizure of the property which he holds in pledge, or on which he has a privilege (q. v.), in order to secure a payment of his claim. Provisional seizure may be ordered: First, in executory proceedings, when the plaintiff sues on a title importing confession of judgment; second, when a lessor prays for the seizure of furniture or property used in the house, or attached to the real estate which he has leased; third, when a seaman, or other person, employed on board of a ship or water craft, navigating within the state, or person having furnished materials for or made repairs to such ship or water craft, prays that the same may be seized, and prevented from departing, until he has been paid the amount of his claim; fourth, when the proceedings are in rem, that is to say, against the thing itself which stands pledged for the debt, when the property is abandoned, or in cases where the owner of the thing is unknown or absent. See Nolte v. His Creditors, 6 Mart. N. S. (La.) 168.

PROVISIONS. Food for man; victuals.

Corn on the ear in the shuck is provisions within the meaning of a constitutional provision with reference to exemptions; Cochran v. Harvey, 88 Ga. 352, 14 S. E. 580; Atkinson v. Gatcher, 23 Ark. 103; but the word does not include a milch cow; Wilson v. McMillan, 80 Ga. 733, 6 S. E. 182; nor cotton; Butler v. Shiver, 79 Ga. 172, 4 S. E. 115. It has been held to mean only articles of food; Crooke v. Slack, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 177. The sale of unwholesome provisions is a misdemeanor; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 822; 3 Maule & S. 10; 4 Camp. 10. And the rule is that the seller impliedly warrants that they are wholesome; 3 Bla. Com. 166. See ADULTERATION; GROCERIES; SALE; WARRANTY; FOOD AND DRUG ACTS.

In Early English Law. A term used in the reign of Henry III. to designate enactments of the King in Council, perhaps less solemn than statutes. Thus, "the Provisions of Merton." The term "statutes" was a later term, with a changed conception of the solemnity of a statute.

The term "statute" is one that cannot easily be defined. It came into use in Edward I.'s reign, supplanting "provisions," which is characteristic of Henry III.'s reign, which had supplanted "assize," characteristic of the reigns of Henry II., Richard and John. Maitland, 2 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Am. Leg. Hist. 80.

Provisions of Oxford were legislative provisions (1258) forbidding the Chancellor to issue writs, other than those "of course" without the approval of the executive council, as well as the king.

PROVISO. A clause inserted in an act of the legislature, a deed, a written agreement, or other instrument, which generally contains a condition that a certain thing shall or shall not be done, in order that an agreement contained in another clause shall take effect.

A limitation or exception to a grant made, or authority conferred, the effect of which is to declare that the one shall not operate, or the other be exercised, unless in the case provided. Voorhees v. Jackson, 10 Pet. (U. S.) 471, 9 L. Ed. 490; Stockton v. Weber, 98 Cal. 433, 33 Pac. 332.

The general purpose of a proviso is to except the clause covered by it from the provisions of a statute; Deitch v. Staub, 115 Fed. 309, 53 C. C. A. 137; or to qualify the operation of the statute; Georgia R. & Bank. Co. v. Smith, 128 U. S. 174, 9 Sup. Ct. 47, 32 L. Ed. 377. See Ryan v. Carter, 93 U. S. 83, 23 L. Ed. 807. But while this is its primary purpose, it may have a general application; U. S. v. G. Falk & Bros., 204 U. S. 143, 27 Sup. Ct. 191, 51 L. Ed. 411. It might sometimes mean additional legislation; Burlingham v. Crouse, 228 U. S. 459, 33 Sup. Ct. 564, 57 L. Ed. 920, 46 L. R. A. (N. S.) 148; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Baird, 194 U. S. 25, 24 Sup. Ct. 563, 48 L. Ed. 860.

It always implies a condition, unless subsequent words change it to a covenant; Rich v. Atwater, 16 Conn. 419; but when a proviso contains the mutual words of the parties to a deed, it amounts to a covenant; 2 Co. 72; Cro. Eliz. 242; Moore 707.

Ordinarily in statutes it is to be strictly construed and confined to what precedes it, but it may, if necessary, be extended to the entire act; Carter, Webster & Co. v. U. S., 143 Fed. 256, 74 C. C. A. 394; a proviso in one paragraph of a tariff act may be applied to other provisions also; U. S. v. Dry Goods Co., 156 Fed. 940, 84 C. C. A. 440.

A proviso differs from an exception; 1 B. & Ald. 99. An exception exempts, absolutely, from the operation of an engagement or an enactment; a proviso defeats their operation, conditionally. An exception takes out of an engagement or enactment something that would otherwise be part of the subject-matter of it; a proviso avoids them by way of defeasance or excuse; Plowd. 361; 1 Saund. 234 a; Lilly, Reg., and the cases there cited. The natural presumption from a proviso is, that, but for the proviso, the enacting part of the section would have included the subject-matter of the proviso; 5 Q. B. D. 173. See, generally, Bac. Abr. Conditions (A); Com. Dig. Conditions (A 1), (A 2); Dwarris, Stat. 660; PROVIDED.

The proper use of provisos in drafting acts is explained by Coode on Legislative Construction, printed as an appendix to Purdon's Pennsylvania Digest. He considers that the abuse of the proviso is universal, and doubts if it need ever be employed in drafting acts. The early, and, as he thinks, the correct use, is by way of taking special cases out of general enactments and providing for them. The courts have generally assumed that such was the proper mode of using a proviso. It is incorrectly used to introduce mere exceptions to the operation of the enactment where no special provision is made for the exception; these are better expressed as exceptions. If a general provision is merely to be negatived in some particular, the negative should be expressed in immediate contact with the general words. Sometimes a proviso introduces several stages of consecutive operation, which would be better expressed by "and." It is impossible to deduce any general rule from the doctrines laid down by the courts in the multitude of adjudicated cases.

Trial by proviso. A trial at the instance of a defendant in a case in which the plaintiff, after issue joined, does not proceed to trial when by the practice of the court he ought to have done so. The defendant may take out a venire facias to the sheriff, which hath in it these words, Proviso quod, etc., provided that if the plaintiff shall take out any writ to that purpose, the sheriff shall summon but one jury on them both. Jacob; Old Nat. Brev. 159.

PROVISOR. He that hath the care of providing things necessary; but more especially one who sued to the court of Rome for a provision. Jacob; 25 Edw. III. One nominated by the pope to a benefice before it became void, in prejudice of the right of the true patron. 4 Bla. Com. 111*.

PROVISORS, STATUTE OF. A statute passed in 25 Edw. III. forbidding the Pope to nominate to benefices, and declaring that the election of bishops and other dignitaries should be free, and all rights of patrons preserved. Taswell-Langmead, Engl. Constit. Hist. 322. See PRÆMUNIRE.

PROVOCATION. The act of inciting another to do something.

Provocation simply, unaccompanied by a crime or misdemeanor, does not justify the person provoked to commit an assault and battery. In cases of homicide it may reduce the offence from murder to manslaughter; but not if the provocation is by mere words, however exasperating; Allen v. U. S., 164 U. S. 492, 17 Sup. Ct. 154, 41 L. Ed. 528. But when the provocation is given for the purpose of justifying or excusing an intended murder, and the party provoked is killed, it is no justification; Whart. Cr. L. 457. See Honesty v. Com., 81 Va. 298.

The unjust provocation by a wife of her husband, in consequence of which she suffers from his ill usage, will bar her divorce on the ground of the husband's cruelty; her remedy in such cases is to change her manners; 2 Lee 172; 1 Hagg. Cons. 155.

PROVOKE. To excite; to stimulate; to arouse. State v. Warner, 34 Conn. 279. See PROVOCATION.

PROVOST. A title given to the chief of some corporations or societies.

The chief officer of certain colleges, e. g. of the University of Pennsylvania.

The chief dignitary of a cathedral or collegiate church. In France, this title was formerly given to some presiding judges.

PROVOST MARSHAL. An officer appointed by some general officer commanding a body or force of troops, for police duty, or for the general maintenance of order and the repression of all offences in connection with military occupation. He or his assistants may, at any time, arrest and detain for trial, persons subject to military law committing offences, and may carry into execution any punishments to be inflicted in pursuance of a court martial.

PROXENETÆ (Lat.). In Civil Law. Among the Romans these were persons whose functions somewhat resembled those of the brokers of modern commercial nations. Dig. 50. 14. 3; Domat, l. 1, t. 17, § 1, art. 1.

PROXIMATE. In its legal sense, closeness of causal connection. Menger v. Laur, 55 N. J. L. 205, 26 Atl. 180, 20 L. R. A. 61.

PROXIMATE CAUSE. That which, in a natural and continuous sequence, unbroken by any new cause, produces an event, and without which the event would not have occurred. The proximate cause is that which is nearest in the order of responsible causation; Butcher v. R. Co., 37 W. Va. 180, 16 S. E. 457, 18 L. R. A. 519; Lutz v. R. Co., 6 N. M. 496, 30 Pac. 912, 16 L. R. A. 819. That which stands next in causation to the effect, not necessarily in time or space but in causal relation; Pullman Palace Car Co. v. Laack, 143 Ill. 212, 32 N. E. 285, 18 L. R. A. 215. See Clafin v. Houseman, 93 U. S. 130, 23 L. Ed. 833; CAUSA PROXIMA NON REMOTA SPECTATUR; NEGLIGENCE.

PROXIMITY (Lat.). Kindred between two persons. Dig. 38. 16. 8.

PROXY (contracted from procuracy, procurator). A person appointed in the place of another, to represent him.

The wife of a director cannot act as his proxy; State v. Perkins, 90 Mo. App. 603; nor can another so act; Craig Medicine Co. v. Bank, 59 Hun 561, 14 N. Y. Supp. 16.

The instrument by which a person is appointed so to act.

The right of voting at an election of an incorporated company by proxy is not a general right, and the party claiming it must show a special authority for that purpose; Ang. & A. Corp. § 128; Com. v. Bring- hurst, 103 Pa. 134; McKee v. Savings Co., 122 Ia. 731, 98 N. W. 609; but in Walker v. Johnson, 17 App. D. C. 144, it was held that a long continued and unbroken practice of voting by proxy will have the effect of a by-law.

At common law it was allowable only by the peers of England, and that is said to be in virtue of a special permission of the king; Philips v. Wickham, 1 Paige (N. Y.) 590; by standing order in 1868, the house agreed to discontinue the practice, and resolved that two days' notice must be given of a motion of suspension of the standing order. The practice may therefore be regarded as in abeyance; May, Parl. Pr. 370.

Where there was no clause in the act of incorporation empowering the members to vote by proxy, but a by-law provided that the shareholders may so vote, it was held, in view of this by-law, that a vote given by proxy should have been received; State v. Tudor, 5 Day (Conn.) 329, 5 Am. Dec. 162. The court did not say how they would have decided had there been no such by-law, but drew a clear distinction between public and moneyed corporations. A by-law prohibiting voting by proxy has been held unreasonable and invalid; People's Home Sav. Bk. v. San Francisco, 104 Cal. 619, 38 Pac. 452, 29 L. R. A. 844, 43 Am. St. Rep. 147. In Taylor v. Griswold, 14 N. J. L. 222, 27 Am. Dec. 33, it was held that it required legislative sanction before any corporation could make a by-law authorizing members to vote by proxy. So, also, in Brown v. Com., 3 Grant, Cas. (Pa.) 209. See 2 Kent 294; In re Barker, 6 Wend. (N. Y.) 509. Stockholders of national banks may vote by proxy, but no officer, clerk, teller, or bookkeeper of a bank may act as proxy; R. S. § 5144; many of the states have passed statutes regulating the right to vote by proxy.

A vote by the proxy binds the stockholder, whether exercised in his interest or not, to the same extent as if the vote had been cast in person; Mobile & O. R. Co. v. Nicholas, 98 Ala. 92, 12 South. 723; Synnott v. Loan Ass'n, 117 Fed. 379, 54 C. C. A. 553.

Where a proxy was to A, "or in his absence to B," and B acted, though A was present, the act was upheld, no stockholder having objected, and all stockholders having "ratified in a formal way" the act of B; Com. v. Roydhouse, 233 Pa. 234, 82 Atl. 74.

A power of attorney, irrevocable for ten years, executed by joint owners of stock, is not against public policy, nor within an act providing that every proxy shall be revocable at the pleasure of the person issuing it; Hey v. Dolphin, 92 Hun 230, 36 N. Y. Supp. 627; and a by-law providing that no proxy should be voted by any one not a stockholder of the corporation is invalid under an act providing generally that stockholders may be represented by proxies; People's Home Sav. Bk. v. San Francisco, 104

Cal. 649, 38 Pac. 452, 29 L. R. A. 844, 43 Am. St. Rep. 147.

In England, a stockholder who holds a proxy from another stockholder, and votes at a corporate meeting by a show of hands, counts as one person, without regard to the number of proxies he has; [1897] 1 Ch. 1; 52 L. T. N. S. 816; 101 L. T. J. 327; a contrary view is supported in 22 Law Mag. & Rev. 46; but if proxies are held by non-members, every such has one vote (semble); [1897] 1 Ch. 1. It is said that proxyholders cannot demand a poll; 3 Q. B. D. 442.

A stockholder is not estopped by the act of his proxy from questioning the validity of a meeting, because he was appointed only to act at a lawful meeting; Columbia N. Bk. v. Mathews, 85 Fed. 934, 29 C. C. A. 491; but he is estopped as respects any irregularity which his presence would have waived; id. A stockholder is bound by his proxy's act at a meeting unless he exercises the most active diligence in repudiating the same; Synnott v. Loan Ass'n, 117 Fed. 379, 54 C. C. A. 553.

See VOTING TRUST; MEETING; STOCKHOLDER; ELECTIONS IN CORPORATIONS.

In Ecclesiastical Law. A judicial proctor, or one who is appointed to manage another man's law concerns is called a proxy. Ayliffe, Parerg.

An annual payment made by the parochial clergy to the bishop, etc., on visitations. Tomlins, Law Dict.

In Rhode Island and Connecticut the name of an election or day of voting for officers of government. Webst. Dict.

PRUDENCE. That degree of care required by the exigencies or circumstances under which it is to be exercised. Cronk v. R. Co., 3 S. D. 93, 52 N. W. 420. See NEGLIGENCE.

PRUDHOMMES, PRODES HOMMES. This word was used in early Norman times, and before, in a general sense to signify freeholders or respectable burgesses; sometimes a special body of such persons acting as magistrates or judges. Black Book of Adm. IV, 186. There were prudhommes of the sea; of merchants; of the corporation of Barcelona; and of the gild of coopers. Usually two sat. See, generally, id. III.

PRYK. A kind of service of tenure. It signified an old-fashioned spur with one point only, which the tenant, holding land by this tenure, was to find for the king. Blount.

PSEUDOGRAPH. False writing.

PUBERTY. In Civil Law. The age at which a child becomes capable of contracting marriage. It is in boys fourteen, and in girls twelve years. Ayliffe, Pand. 63; Toullier, Dr. Civ. Fr. tom. 5, p. 100; Inst. 1, 22; Dig. 1. 7. 40. 1; Code 5. 60. 3; 1 Bla. Com. 436. See INFANT.

PUBLIC. The whole body politic, or all the citizens of the state. The inhabitants of a particular place.

This term is sometimes joined to other terms, to designate those things which have a relation to the public: as, a public officer, a public road, a public passage, a public house.

A distinction has been made between the terms public and general: they are sometimes used as synonymous. The former term is applied strictly to that which concerns all the citizens and every member of the state; while the latter includes a lesser, though still a large, portion of the community. Greenl. Ev. § 128.

When the public interest and its rights conflict with those of an individual, the latter must yield. Co. Litt. 181. See EMINENT DOMAIN.

PUBLIC ACTS. Acts which concern the whole community and of which courts of law are bound to take judicial notice.

A land patent granted by a sister state is a public act. Lassly v. Fontaine, 4 Hen. & M. (Va.) 146, 4 Am. Dec. 510.

See JUDICIAL NOTICE. As to giving full faith and credit to the public acts of a state, see FOREIGN JUDGMENTS.

PUBLIC ADMINISTRATOR. Statutes providing for an official to administer upon the property of intestates in certain cases have been passed in California and some other states. See Rocca v. Thompson, 223 U. S. 317, 32 Sup. Ct. 207, 56 L. Ed. 453. PUBLIC TRUSTEE.

PUBLIC AMUSEMENT. See PLACE OF AMUSEMENT; THEATRE; NEGLIGENCE.

PUBLIC BUILDING. One of which the possession and use, as well as the property in it, are in the public. State v. Troth, 34 N. J. L. 383. A home for defective children was held not a public building; [1901] 1 Q. B. 668.

PUBLIC CHAPELS. Chapels of ease. See CHAPEL.

PUBLIC CHARACTER. An individual who asks for and desires public recognition. A statesman, author, artist, or inventor who does so may be said to have surrendered his right of protection against the publication of his portrait; Corliss v. E. W. Walker Co., 64 Fed. 280, 31 L. R. A. 283. See INJUNCTION; PRIVACY; LIBEL.

PUBLIC CHARITY. A charity which is so general and indefinite in its objects as to be of common and public benefit. Saltonstall v. Sanders, 11 Allen (Mass.) 456. It would be almost impossible to say what charities are public and what private in their nature; 2 Atk. 87. A devise to the poor of a parish is a public charity; id. An incorporated library association, the object of which is the diffusion of public knowledge and the acquirement of the arts and sciences, and the revenues and income of which are devoted exclusively to such objects and purposes, is an institution of purely public charity under a statute exempting such institutions from taxation; Cleveland Library Ass'n v. Pelton, 36 Ohio St. 253; as is an orphan asylum which restricts its inmates to children of a specified religion; Burd Orphan Asylum v. School Dist., 90 Pa. 21. See CHARITABLE USE.

PUBLIC CORPORATION. See CORPORATIONS.

PUBLIC DEBT. That which is due or owing by the government.

The Constitution of the United States provides, art. 6, s. 1, that "all debts contracted and engagements entered into, before the adoption of this constitution, shall be as valid against the United States under this constitution as under the confederation." The fourteenth amendment provides that "the validity of the public debt of the United States authorized by law, including debts incurred for the payment of pensions and bounties for the services in suppressing insurrection or rebellion shall not be questioned." See FUNDING SYSTEM.

PUBLIC DOCUMENTS. The publications printed by order of congress or either house thereof. McCall v. U. S., 1 Dak. 328, 46 N. W. 608. In an action involving a title to swamp lands the official correspondence and reports of public officers of the United States relating to swamp lands and published by the authority of the legislature are public documents which the court may consult even if not made formal proof in the case; Kirby v. Lewis, 39 Fed. 66.

The term was considered in 5 App. Cas. H. L. 643, not to be taken in the sense of the whole world. The books of a manor are public in the sense that they concern all the world interested in the manor. So of entries in a corporation book of a corporate matter. But it must be a public document and the entry must be made by a public officer and so that all persons concerned may have access to it afterwards.

In many of the states tax returns are made by law public documents and open to inspection; Flint v. Stone Tracy Co., 220 U. S. 107, 31 Sup. Ct. 342, 55 L. Ed. 389, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1312.

PUBLIC ENEMY. This word, used in the singular number, designates a nation at war with the United States, and includes every member of such nation. Vattel 3, c. 5, § 70.

To make a public enemy, the government of the foreign country must be at war with the United States; for a mob, how numerous soever it may be, or robbers, whoever they may be, are never considered as a public enemy; 2 Marsh. Ins. 508; 3 Esp. 131, 132; State v. Moore, 74 Mo. 413, 41 Am. Rep. 322.

A common carrier is exempt from responsibility whenever a loss has been occasioned to the goods in his charge by the act of a public enemy; but the burden of proof lies on him to show that the loss was so occasioned; Murphy v. Staton, 3 Munf. (Va.) 239; Bell v. Reed, 4 Binn. (Pa.) 127, 5 Am. Dec. 398; Edw. Bailm. 547; 2 Bail. 157. See COMMON CARRIER.

In the late rebellion, the federal troops were a public enemy, against whose acts a common carrier within the confederate lines did not insure. Southern Exp. Co. v. Womack, 1 Heisk. (Tenn.) 256.

PUBLIC FUNDS. Where a county treasurer deposited the public funds in a bank to his credit as such, and the bank failed, held that they were earmarked and the county could recover, in preference to general depositors; Watts v. Board of Com'rs, 21 Okl. 231, 95 Pac. 771, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 918.

See FUNDING SYSTEM.

PUBLIC GRANT. See FRANCHISE; CORPORATION; LANDS, PUBLIC.

PUBLIC HEALTH. See ADULTERATION; POLICE POWER; HEALTH; QUARANTINE.

PUBLIC HIGHWAY. One under the control of and kept by the public, established by regular proceedings for the purpose, or generally used by the public for twenty years, or dedicated by the owner of the soil and accepted by the proper authorities and for the maintenance of which they are responsible. State v. Gross, 119 N. C. 868, 26 S. E. 91. It includes roads, streets, alleys, and lanes, laid out or erected as such by the public, or dedicated or abandoned to the public by the owner; Patterson v. Munyan, 93 Cal. 128, 29 Pac. 250. A railroad is a public highway; Venable v. R. Co., 112 Mo. 103, 20 S. W. 493, 18 L. R. A. 68; but not a road on paper; In re Youghiogheny Bridge, 182 Pa. 618, 38 Atl. 478; nor, it is said, is a turnpike; Buncombe Turnpike Co. v. Baxter, 32 N. C. 222.

See HIGHWAY; RATES.

PUBLIC HOSPITALS. Hospitals which appeal to the public for voluntary contributions, or those which are supported by compulsory contributions in the form of a rate.

PUBLIC HOUSE. A house kept for the entertainment of all who come lawfully and pay regularly. Com. v. Cuncannon, 3 Brewst. (Pa.) 344. It does not include a boarding-house; id.; but under a statute, a store-house in the country is included in this term; Huffman v. State, 29 Ala. 40; and a barber shop; Moore v. State, 30 id. 550; and a broker's office; Wilson v. State, 31 id. 371. A room to which persons generally are permitted to resort, to play cards, though not every one has access to it, is a public gambling-house. See many cases collected in 22 Alb. L. J. 24, and Abb. Dic.

In England it applied to a licensed place where liquor is sold. The keeper of a public house is bound to serve any person who presents ready money; 2 Q. B. Div. 136.

PUBLIC INTEREST. If by public permission one is making use of public property and he chances to be the only one with whom the public can deal with respect to the use of that property, his business is affected with a public interest which requires him to deal with the public on reasonable terms; Cooley, Const. Lim. 746.

Business affected with a public interest: 1. Where the business is one, the following of which is not of right but is permitted by the state as a privilege or franchise. 2. Where the state on public grounds renders to the business a special assistance by taxation or otherwise. 3. Where for the accommodation of a business special use is allowed to be made of public property or of a public easement. 4. Where special privileges are granted in consideration of some special return to be made to the public; id.

It brings it within the police power, but does not place it beyond the taxing power; Flint v. Stone Tracy Co., 220 U. S. 140, 31 Sup. Ct. 342, 55 L. Ed. 389, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1312.

See RATES.

As to the publication of matter of public interest, see LIBEL; PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATION.

PUBLIC LANDS. Such lands as are subject to sale or other disposition by the United States, under general laws. Newhall v. Sanger, 92 U. S. 761, 23 L. Ed. 769; Bardon v. R. Co., 145 U. S. 535, 12 Sup. Ct. 856, 36 L. Ed. 806. See LANDS, PUBLIC.

PUBLIC MEETING. See ASSEMBLY; UNLAWFUL ASSEMBLY.

PUBLIC MONEY. As used in the United States statutes, the money of the federal government received from the public revenues, or intrusted to its fiscal officers, wherever it may be. It does not include money in the hands of the marshals and other officers of the courts, held to await the judgment of the court. Branch v. U. S., 12 Ct. Cl. 281. See PUBLIC FUNDS.

PUBLIC OFFICE. Where, by virtue of law, a person is clothed, not as an incidental or transient authority, but for such time as denotes duration and continuance, with independent power to control the property of the public, or with public functions to be exercised in the supposed interest of the people, the service to be compensated by a stated yearly salary, and the occupant having a designation or title, the position so created is a public office. State v. Brennan, 49 Ohio St. 33, 29 N. E. 593.

Where a board of public officials is a continuing body, as is the case of the state board of election in Indiana, a suit will be continued against the successors in office of those who cease to be members of the board; Marshall v. Dye, 231 U. S. 250, 34 Sup. Ct.

92, 58 L. Ed. —; Murphy v. Utter, 186 U. S. 95, 22 Sup. Ct. 776, 46 L. Ed. 1070.

See OFFICER.

PUBLIC PASSAGE. A right to pass over a body of water. This term is synonymous with public highway, with this difference: by the latter is understood a right to pass over the land of another; by the former is meant the right of going over the water which is on another's land. Carth. 193; Hamm. N. P. 195. See PASSAGE.

PUBLIC PEACE. "That invisible sense of security which every man feels so necessary to his comfort, and for which all governments are instituted." Redfield, J., in State v. Benedict, 11 Vt. 236, 34 Am. Dec. 688. See PEACE.

PUBLIC PLACE. Any place so situated that what passes there can be seen by any considerable number of persons, if they happen to look. Steph. Cr. L. 115. Under a statute against gaming, a steamboat carrying passengers and freight is a public place; Coleman v. State, 13 Ala. 602; so is an infirmary; Flake v. State, 19 id. 551; so is a shoemaker's shop into which many went, but a few were excluded during the gaming; Campbell v. State, 17 id. 369; but a secluded place on a mountain, some distance from a roadway and in a dense thicket, is not; Gerrells v. State (Tex.) 26 S. W. 394. Under statutes against indecent exposure, a public omnibus is a public place; 3 C. & K. 360; so is a urinal in a public park; L. R. 1 C. C. 282; and a part of the sea beach, visible from inhabited houses; 2 Campb. 89. See many cases cited in 22 Alb. L. J. 24, and Abb. Dict. See PUBLIC HOUSE; PLACE.

PUBLIC POLICY. That principle of the law which holds that no subject can lawfully do that which has a tendency to be injurious to the public or against the public good. 4 H. L. Cas. 1; Greenh. Pub. Pol. 2. It has been designated by Burroughs, J., as "an unruly horse pursuing us, and when once you get astride of it you never know where it will carry you." 2 Bingh. 229.

"Public policy is a variable quantity; it must and does vary with the habits, capacities, and opportunities of the public." 36 Ch. Div. 359.

Public policy is manifested by public acts, legislative and judicial, and not by private opinion, however eminent; Giant-Powder Co. v. R. Co., 42 Fed. 470, 8 L. R. A. 700. See POLICE POWER; STATUTE; CONSTITUTIONAL. It is said to be determined from legislative declarations, or, in their absence, from judicial decisions; Picket Pub. Co. v. Com'rs, 36 Mont. 188, 92 Pac. 524, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1115, 122 Am. St. Rep. 352, 12 Ann. Cas. 986.

As to public policy in the law of contracts, see VOID CONTRACTS.

PUBLIC PURPOSE. As employed to denote the objects for which taxes may be levied, it has no relation to the urgency of the public need or to the extent of the public benefit which is to follow. It is on the other hand merely a term of classification to distinguish the objects for which, according to settled usage, the government is to provide, from those which by the like usage are left to private inclination, interest, or liberality. People v. Township Board, 20 Mich. 452, 4 Am. Rep. 400. See EMINENT DOMAIN; TAX.

PUBLIC RECORDS. See RECORD.

PUBLIC SALE. See SALE; AUCTION.

PUBLIC SCHOOLS. Common schools. Jenkins v. Andover, 103 Mass. 97. See SCHOOLS.

PUBLIC SERVICE CORPORATION. The supplying of municipalities and their citizens with such public utilities as gas, water, electric light and communication for public and private use, by the municipal corporation or by private capital, is the performance of a public duty and the property so used is charged with a public trust. Such property cannot be sold without statutory authority; Dillon, Mun. Corp. § 991, 1102; Cumberland Tel. & Tel. Co. v. Evansville, 127 Fed. 187; South Pasadena v. Land & Water Co., 152 Cal. 579, 93 Pac. 490. In the absence of statutory authority, a private corporation supplying water to a city cannot lease its property, franchise and contracts to another corporation; New Albany Waterworks v. Banking Co., 122 Fed. 776, 58 C. C. A. 576; this rule does not prevent a transfer thereof to the municipality; Indianapolis v. C. Gas Trust Co., 144 Fed. 640, 75 C. C. A. 442.

Such a corporation has a duty to perform to every private consumer (of water) independently of any contract duty it owes to the municipality. For a breach of this duty the company may be held liable in tort by the aggrieved member of the public, though he was not a party to the contract between the city and the water company; Freeman v. Gas Light & Water Co., 126 Ga. 843, 56 S. E. 61, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 917; Westfield G. & M. Co. v. Mendenhall, 142 Ind. 538, 41 N. E. 1033. A customer may enjoin a company from furnishing water for the supply of railroad locomotives and the generation of motive power, when that would disenable it from furnishing an adequate supply for domestic and other purposes for which the plant was established; Boonton v. Water Co., 69 N. J. Eq. 23, 61 Atl. 390; he has a right to service under the most favorable conditions; Rice v. R. Co., 122 Mich. 677, 81 N. W. 927, 43 L. R. A. 84.

The rights of such corporations, as defined in the franchise cannot be modified by the by-laws of the public service corporation, and so far as such by-laws are inconsistent with the provisions of the franchise, they will be held void: Bourke v. Water Co., 84 Vt. 121, 78 Atl. 715, 33 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1015. Such a company must serve without discrimination all persons who pay the established rates and comply with the reasonable regulations of the company; Watauga Water Co. v. Wolf, 99 Tenn. 429, 41 S. W. 1060, 63 Am. St. Rep. 841; American Waterworks Co. v. State, 46 Neb. 194, 64 N. W. 711, 30 L. R. A. 447, 50 Am. St. Rep. 610; Haugen v. Light & Water Co., 21 Or. 411, 28 Pac. 244, 14 L. R. A. 424; Olmsted v. Morris Aqueduct, 47 N. J. L. 311; Rushville v. Natural Gas Co., 132 Ind. 575, 28 N. E. 853, 15 L. R. A. 321. A water company is a quasi public corporation, and by the acceptance of its franchise is bound to supply all persons along the line of its mains without discrimination and at uniform rates; Griffin v. Water Co., 122 N. C. 206, 30 S. E. 319, 41 L. R. A. 240.

They may discontinue service for non-payment; State v. Board, 105 Minn. 472, 117 N. W. 827, 127 Am. St. Rep. 581. It has been held that the consumer may be required to pay the expenses of service connections; Gleason v. Waukesha Co., 103 Wis. 225, 79 N. W. 249.

It will be presumed that local rates fixed by a state statute, or by a state railroad commission, under the authority of such a statute, are reasonable; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Minnesota, 186 U. S. 257, 22 Sup. Ct. 900, 46 L. Ed. 1151; Chicago, M. & St. P. R. Co. v. Tompkins, 176 U. S. 167, 20 Sup. Ct. 336, 44 L. Ed. 417; Ex parte Young, 209 U. S. 123, 28 Sup. Ct. 441, 52 L. Ed. 714, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 932, 14 Ann. Cas. 764.

In Pennsylvania public service corporations are entitled to look for a rate of return, if their property will earn it, not less than the legal rate of interest; a system of charges that yields no more income than is fairly requisite to maintain the plant, pay fixed charges and operating expenses, provide a suitable sinking fund for the payment of debts and pay a fair profit to the owners of the property is not unreasonable; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Philadelphia Co., 220 Pa. 100, 68 Atl. 676, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 108.

An electric street railway company is a public service corporation and has both public and private duties; the operation of its cars is the former, and any harm done thereby is damnum absque injuria, but the selection of a site for its power house and the generation of power is a thing with which the public has no concern, and as to that the company stands on the footing of an individual, and if it creates a nuisance it is liable; Townsend v. R. & L. Co., 105 Va. 22, 52 S. E. 970, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 87, 115 Am. St. Rep. 842, 8 Ann. Cas. 558.

See POND; PUBLIC UTILITIES; RATES; GAS; WATER COMPANIES; RAILROADS; Wyman, Public Serv. Corp.

PUBLIC SHIP. See SHIPS OF WAR.

PUBLIC SQUARE. In its popular import, the phrase refers almost exclusively to ground occupied by a courthouse and owned by a county. Logansport v. Dunn, 8 Ind. 378; but it may be used as synonymous with park; Church of Hoboken v. Council of Hoboken, 33 N. J. L. 13, 97 Am. Dec. 696. See PARK.

As to the right of a municipality to prohibit lecturing, preaching, etc., in public squares, see LIBERTY OF SPEECH; POLICE POWER; PROCESSION.

PUBLIC STATUTES. See STATUTE.

PUBLIC, TRUE, AND NOTORIOUS. The old form by which charges in the allegations in the ecclesiastical courts were described at the end of each particular.

PUBLIC TRUST. See TRUST.

PUBLIC TRUSTEE. An act of 1906 referring to England and Wales provides for the appointment of a public trustee to administer estates of small value, to act as custodian trustee, or as ordinary trustee or judicial trustee, or to administer the property of a convict under the Forfeiture Act. The Consolidated Fund is made liable to make good all sums required to discharge any liability which the public trustee, if he were a private trustee, would be personally liable to discharge. His fees are fixed by the treasury with the sanction of the Lord Chancellor. He may employ solicitors, bankers, accountants, brokers and such other persons as he may consider necessary, and in doing so may take into consideration—subject to the interests of the trust—the wishes of the creator of the trust, the other trustees (if any) and the beneficiaries. The accounts of any trust are, on the application of any trustee or beneficiary, to be audited by such solicitor or public accountant as may be agreed by the applicant and the trustees, in default of agreement by the public trustee or some person appointed by him. The act took effect January 1, 1908. See Lewin, Trusts, 12th ed., where they are said to be a corporation sole with the right of perpetual succession.

PUBLIC USE. Under Eminent Domain. Implies the use of many, or by the public. It may be limited to the inhabitants of a small or restricted locality, but must be in common, and not for a particular individual. Lewis, Em. Dom. c. 7; Pocantico Water Works Co. v. Bird, 130 N. Y. 249, 29 N. E. 246; St. Helena Water Co. v. Forbes, 62 Cal. 182, 45 Am. Rep. 659. It arises when the sovereign power is essential to an enterprise, and is for that reason therein exercised; Bound v. R. Co., 50 Fed. 312. See EMINENT DOMAIN.

PUBLIC UTILITIES. A municipal corporation may supply water for city purposes and for its inhabitants; Comstock v. Syra- cuse, 5 N. Y. Supp. 874; furnish electricity for its citizens; Ilequembourg v. Dunkirk, 49 Hun, 550, 2 N. Y. Supp. 447; build and operate a rapid transit railway, wholly within its limits; Sun P. & P. Ass'n v. New York, 152 N. Y. 257, 46 N. E. 499, 37 L. R. A. 788; and lease and operate such system in connection with another system, to secure a unified system of transportation; Admiral Realty Co. v. New York, 206 N. Y. 110, 99 N. E. 241; operate a natural gas system for its use and the use of the inhabitants; State v. Toledo, 48 Ohio St. 112, 26 N. E. 1061, 11 L. R. A. 729; build a convention hall; Denver v. Hallett, 34 Colo. 393, 83 Pac. 1066; furnish ice to citizens in connection with its waterworks; Holton v. Camilla, 134 Ga. 560, 6 S. E. 472, 31 L. R. A. (N. S.) 116, 20 Ann. Cas. 199; construct public wharves on navigable rivers; Burlington v. R. Co., 82 Vt. 5, 71 Atl. 826; erect an artistic memorial monument; Parsons v. Van Wyck, 56 App. Div. 329, 67 N. Y. Supp. 1054.

But it cannot build an opera house; Brooks v. Brooklyn, 146 Ia. 136, 124 N. W. 868, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 425; nor manufacture bricks; Attorney General v. Detroit, 150 Mich. 310, 113 N. W. 1107, 121 Am. St. Rep. 625; nor deal in coal and wood; Opinion of Justices, 182 Mass. 605, 66 N. E. 25; nor carry on a plumbing business; Keen v. Waycross, 101 Ga. 588, 29 S. E. 42.

PUBLIC WORSHIP. A negro preacher who interrupted another preacher and began a harangue, but claiming in good faith the superior right to preach in that church, was not guilty of disturbing public worship; Woodall v. State, 4 Ga. App. 783, 62 S. E. 485.

PUBLICAN. In Civil Law. A farmer of the public revenue; one who held a lease of some property from the public treasury. Dig. 39, 4. 1. 1; 39. 4. 12. 3; 39. 4. 13.

PUBLICATION. The act by which a thing is made public.

It differs from promulgation, which see; and see, also, Toullier, Dr. Civ. Fr. titre Préliminaire, n. 59, for the difference in the meaning of these two words.

Publication has different meanings. When applied to a law it signifies the rendering public the existence of the law; when it relates to the opening of the depositions taken in a case in chancery, it means that liberty is given to the officer in whose custody the depositions of witnesses in a cause are lodged, either by consent of parties, or by the rules or orders of the court, to show the depositions openly, and to give out copies of them; Pract. Reg. 297; Blake, Ch. Pr. 143. And when spoken of a will it signifies that the testator has done some act from which it can be concluded that he intended the instrument to operate as his will; 3 Atk. 161; Small v. Small, 4 Greenl. (Me.) 220, 16 Am.

Dec. 253; Appeal of Barnet, 3 Rawle (Pa.) 15; Com. Dig. Estates by Devise (E 2). See Com. Dig. Chancery (Q). As to the publication of an award, see Hunt v. Wilson, 6 N. H. 36.

Some of the state constitutions provide that general laws shall not take effect till published. The mode of publication is for the legislature to determine. A general law printed in a volume of private laws was held to have been published; In re Boyle, 9 Wis. 264; but an unauthorized publication is no publication; Clark v. Janesville, 10 Wis. 136. In Pennsylvania, where the constitution did not require publication, it was held to be necessary before an act could be operative; but nevertheless that publication in the legislative journals was sufficient, and that neglect to publish an act in the pamphlet laws did not invalidate the act; Peterman v. Huling, 31 Pa. 432. An inaccuracy in the publication of a statute which does not change its substance or legal effect, will not invalidate the publication; Smith v. Hoyt, 14 Wisc. 252; a joint resolution of a general nature must be published; State v. Board, 4 Kan. 261. See Cooley, Const. Lim. 189; PROMULGATION.

See COPYRIGHT; PATENT; NEWSPAPER; LIBERTY OF THE PRESS.

A commercial agency book is a publication; Ladd v. Oxnard, 75 Fed. 703.

In a contract for the sale of a serial publication, the word intends the completion of the series; 49 Can. L. J. 161. See LIBEL.

PUBLICI JURIS. Of public right.

PUBLICIANA (Lat.). In Civil Law. The name of an action introduced by the prætor Publicius, the object of which was to recover a thing which had been lost. Inst. 4. 6. 4; Dig. 6. 2. 1. 16 et 17. Its effects were similar to those of our action of trover.

PUBLICITY. The doing of a thing in the view of all persons who chose to be present.

The law requires that courts should be open to the public: there can therefore be no secret tribunal, except the grand jury (q. v.); and all judgments are required to be given in public. See OPEN COURT.

Publicity must be given to the acts of the legislature before they can be in force; but in general their being recorded in a certain public office is evidence of their publicity. See PUBLICATION.

PUBLISH. Primarily it means to make known. State v. Orange, 54 N. J. L. 111, 22 Atl. 1004, 14 L. R. A. 62.

PUBLISHER. One who by himself or his agent makes a thing publicly known; one engaged in the circulation of books, pamphlets, and other papers.

The publisher of a libel is responsible as if he were the author of it, and it is im-material whether he has any knowledge of its contents or not; 9 Co. 59; Odger, L. & Sl. 125, 166, 432; Hawk. Pl. Cr. c. 73, § 10; Dexter v. Spear, 4 Mas. 115, Fed. Cas. No. 3,867; and it is no justification to him that the name of the author accompanies the libel; Dole v. Lyon, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 447, 6 Am. Dec. 346; 2 Mood. & R. 312.

See LIBEL; PUBLICATION.

PUDICITY. Chastity; the abstaining from all unlawful carnal commerce or connection. A married woman or a widow may defend her pudicity as a maid may her virginity. See CHASTITY; RAPE.

PUDZELD. In Old English Law. To be free from the payment of money for taking of wood in any forest. Co. Litt. 233 a. The same as Woodgeld.

PUEBLO. In its original signification, it means people or population, but is used in the sense of the English word "town." It has the indefiniteness of that term, and, like it, is sometimes applied to a mere collection of individuals residing at a particular place, a settlement, or village, as well as to a regularly organized municipality. Trenouth v. San Francisco, 100 U. S. 251, 25 L. Ed. 626.

PUER (Lat. a boy; a child). In its enlarged sense this word signifies a child of either sex; though in its restrained meaning it is applied to a boy only.

A case once arose which turned upon this question, whether a daughter could take lands under the description of puer; and it was decided by two judges against one that she was entitled; Dy. 337 b. In another case, it was ruled the other way; Hob. 33.

PUERILITY. In Civil Law. A condition which commenced at the age of seven years, the end of the age of infancy, and lasted till the age of puberty,—that is, in females till the accomplishment of twelve years, and in males till the age of fourteen years fully accomplished. Ayliffe, Pand. 63.

The ancient Roman lawyers divided puerility into proximus infantia, as it approached infancy, and proximus pubertati, as it became nearer to puberty. 6 Toullier, n. 100.

PUERITIA (Lat.). In Civil Law. Age from seven to fourteen. 4 Bla. Com. 22. The age from birth to fourteen years in the male, or twelve in the female. Calvinus, Lex. The age from birth to seventeen. Vicat, Voc. Jur.

PUFFER. A person employed by the owner of property which is sold at auction to bid it up, who does so accordingly, for the purpose of raising the price upon bona fide bidders.

This is a fraud, which, at the option of the purchaser, invalidates the sale; 3 Madd. 112; 2 Kent 423; 2 Bro. C. C. 326; Steele v. Ellmaker, 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 89; Moncrieff v.

Goldsborough, 4 H. & McH. (Md.) 282, 1 Am. Dec. 407. See AUCTION; BIDDER; BY BIDDER.

PUIS DARREIN CONTINUANCE (L. Fr. since last continuance). In Pleading. A plea which is put in after issue joined, for the purpose of introducing new matter, or matter which has come to the knowledge of the party pleading it subsequently to such joinder.

This plea waives all other pleas and admits the plaintiff's cause of action; Ripley v. Leverenz, 183 Ill. 519, 56 N. E. 166. Under it the defendant may show anything after suit begun to prove that the plaintiff ought not to recover, such as a release by former recovery, or satisfaction; Chicago v. Babcock, 143 Ill. 358, 32 N. E. 271. A release after suit begun, should be so pleaded, but it is said that an action on the case is an exception; Coverdale v. Royal Arcanum, 193 Ill. 91, 61 N. E. 915.

See CONTINUANCE; PLEA.

PUISNE (L. Fr.). Younger; junior. Associate. Puisne judge, an associate judge; not the chief justice.

PULLMAN CAR. See SLEEPING CAR.

PUNCTUALITY. As a general rule, a railroad company is liable to damage accruing to a passenger for a negligent failure on its part to run its trains according to the company's time tables; but there must be proof of negligence. Neither time table nor advertisement is a warrant of punctuality. Whart. Negl. § 662.

The publication of the time table cannot amount to less than this, viz.: a representation that it is ordinarily practicable for the company, by the use of due care and skill, to run according to the table, and an engagement on their part that they will do all that can be done, by the use of due care and skill, to accomplish that result; Gordon v. R. R., 52 N. H. 596, 13 Am. Rep. 97. See also 5 E. & B. 860. The company is undoubtedly liable for any want of punctuality which they could have avoided by the use of due care and skill; nor can they excuse a want of conformity to the time table for any cause, the existence of which was known to them, or ought to have been known to them, at the time of publishing the table; Gordon v. R. R., 52 N. H. 596, 13 Am. Rep. 97. See 8 E. L. & Eq. 362; Sears v. R. Co., 14 Allen (Mass.) 433, 92 Am. Dec. 780, where a ship was held liable for the loss of perishable goods for failure to sail at the advertised time. Time-tables may amount to an offer of a contract to all persons who apply as passengers; but whether punctuality is in fact guaranteed depends on the facts of each case; Leake, Contr. 12. In Ang. Carriers 527 a, it is said that time tables are in the nature of a special contract, so that any deviation from them renders the company liable. But it does not appear that the cases go so far.

PUNCTUATION. The division of a written or printed instrument by means of points, such as the comma, semicolon, and the like.

Courts of law in construing statutes and deeds must read them with such punctuation as will give effect to the whole; 4 Term 65.

In construing deeds, it is said that no regard is to be had to punctuation, and although stops are sometimes used, they are not to be regarded in the construction of the instrument; 3 Washb. R. P. 397. See O'Brien v. Brice, 21 W. Va. 707. Punctuation is not allowed to throw light on printed statutes in England; 24 Beav. 330; nor to interfere with the natural and usual meaning of the language employed; O'Brien v. Brice, 21 W. Va. 704.

In an act of parliament there are no such things as brackets, any more than there are such things as stops; 24 Q. B. D. 478.

Punctuation may be considered in determining the meaning of a contract, when it is doubtful; Com. v. Kelley, 177 Mass. 221, 58 N. E. 691.

Where a comma after a word in a statute, if any force were attached to it, would give the section containing it broader scope than it would otherwise have, it was held that that circumstance should not have a controlling influence. Punctuation is no part of the statute; Hammock v. Trust Co., 105 U. S. 77, 26 L. Ed. 1111; in construing statutes, courts will disregard punctuation; or, if need be, repunctuate, to render the true meaning of the statute; Hamilton v. The R. B. Hamilton, 16 Ohio St. 432, approved in Hammock v. Trust Co., 105 U. S. 77, 26 L. Ed. 1111; President & Co. v. Ruse, 14 C. L. R. (Australia) 224; State v. Prodigon, 34 Nev. 486, 125 Pac. 699; In re Gyger's Estate, 65 Pa. 311; Cushing v. Worrick, 9 Gray (Mass.) 385. It may shed some light on the construction of statutes, but the court will read them with such stops as will give effect to the whole; Crawford v. Burke, 195 U. S. 176, 25 Sup. Ct. 9, 49 L. Ed. 147; it is not decisive of the meaning; Ford v. Land Co., 164 U. S. 662, 17 Sup. Ct. 230, 41 L. Ed. 590. In New York it is part of a statute as passed and as appears on the roll as filed with the secretary of state; Tyrrell v. New York, 159 N. Y. 239, 53 N. E. 1111. Punctuation is a fallible standard in statutes, but commas in the description of a boundary line may be considered; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. U. S., 227 U. S. 356, 33 Sup. Ct. 368, 57 L. Ed. 544.

Punctuation is a most fallible standard by which to interpret a writing; it may be resorted to when all other means fail, but the court will first ascertain the meaning from the four corners of the instrument; Ewing v. Burnet, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 41, 9 L. Ed. 624.

Lord St. Leonards said: "In wills and deeds you do not ordinarily find any stops; but the court reads them as if they were properly punctuated;" 2 Dr. & War. 98.

Judges in the later cases have been influenced in construing wills by the punctuation of the original document; 2 M. & G. 679; 26 Beav. 81; 24 L. J. Ch. 523; but see 1 Mer. 651, where Sir William Grant refused to resort to punctuation as an aid to construction. See, also, Arcularius v. Sweet, 25 Barb. (N. Y.) 405; 16 Can. L. J. 183.

Quotation marks are punctuation; State v. Banfield, 43 Or. 287, 72 Pac. 1093. So are "ditto" marks; Hughes v. Powers, 99 Tenn. 480, 42 S. W. 1.

PUNISHABLE. Liable to punishment. Com. v. Pemberton, 118 Mass. 36. See In re Mills, 135 U. S. 266, 10 Sup. Ct. 762, 34 L. Ed. 107.

PUNISHMENT. In Criminal Law. Some pain or penalty warranted by law, inflicted on a person for the commission of a crime or misdemeanor, or for the omission of the performance of an act required by law, by the judgment and command of some lawful court.

The penalty for the transgression of the law. Whart.; People v. Court of Sessions, 8 N. Y. Crim. R. 355.

"The infliction of pain in vengeance of crime." Dr. Johnson.

The right of society to punish is derived, by Beccaria, Mably, and some others, from a supposed agreement which the persons who composed the primitive societies entered into, in order to keep order, and, indeed, the very existence of the state. According to others, it is the interest and duty of man to live in society; to defend his right, society may exert this principle, in order to support itself; and this it may do whenever the acts punishable would endanger the safety of the whole. And Bentham is of opinion that the foundation of this right is laid in public utility or necessity. Delinquents are public enemies, and they must be disarmed and prevented from doing evil, or society would be destroyed. But, if the social compact has never existed, says Livingstone, its end must have been the preservation of the natural rights of the members; and therefore the effects of this fiction are the same with those of the theory which takes abstract justice as the foundation of the right to punish; for this justice, if well considered, is that which assures to each member of the state the free exercise of his rights. And if it should be found that utility, the last source from which the right to punish is derived, is so intimately united to justice that it is inseparable from it in the practice of law, it will follow that every system founded on one of these principles must be supported by the other.

The proper end of human punishment is not the satisfaction of justice, but the prevention of crime; Paley.

The end of punishment, therefore, is neither to torment sensible beings nor undo a crime already committed, nor yet recall the past, nor reverse the crime. It is to punish the criminal for doing some injury to society; to repair the wrong done to society or to a private individual, and to amend his life for the future, and by his example to prevent others from committing like offences. The chief end of punishment is by punishing the crime and preventing the doing of it again; and that by means of fines, imprisonment, hard labor, moral and physical treatment, and new habits formed. The infliction of pain for its own sake is now condemned by all enlightened governments, statesmen, and philanthropists; 16 L. Mag. & Rev. 99.

The main objects of penal justice are laid down by Bentham: example, reformation, incapacitation, satisfaction for the person injured, economy to the public. He further says that all our forms of punishment should be put to these five tests and should be subjected most especially to all except the last.

To attain their social end, punishments should be exemplary, or capable of intimidating those who might be tempted to imitate the guilty; reformatory, or such as should improve the condition of the convicts; personal, or such as are at least calculated to wound the feelings or affect the rights of the relations of the guilty; divisible, or capable of being graduated and proportioned to the offence and the circumstances of each case; reparable, on account of the fallibility of human justice.

Punishments are either corporal or not corporal. The former are—death, which is usually denominated capital punishment; imprisonment, which is either with or without labor, see PENITENTIARY; whipping, in some states; and banishment.

The punishments which are not corporal are—fines, forfeitures; suspension or deprivation of some political or civil right; deprivation of office, and being rendered incapable to hold office; compulsion to remove nuisances.

The object of punishment is to reform the offender, to deter him and others from committing like offences, and to protect society. See 4 Bla. Com. 7; Whart. Cr. L. 3, 4, 7; Rutherford, Inst. b. 1, c. 18. A state may provide for a severer punishment for a second than for a first offence, provided it is dealt out to all alike; Moore v. Missouri, 159 U. S. 673, 16 Sup. Ct. 179, 40 L. Ed. 301.

The constitution of the United States, Amendments, art. 8, forbids the infliction of cruel and unusual punishments. This applies only to acts of congress and to the federal courts: James v. Com., 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 220; Barker v. People, 3 Cow. (N. Y.) 686, 15 Am. Dec. 322; and does not apply to the states: O'Neil v. Vermont, 144 U. S. 323, 12 Sup. Ct. 693, 36 L. Ed. 450 (Field, Harlan, and Brewer, JJ., dissenting). Punishments are cruel when they involve torture or a lingering death; but the punishment of death is not cruel, within the meaning of that word as used in the federal constitution; In re Kemmler, 136 U. S. 436, 10 Sup. Ct. 930, 34 L. Ed. 519.

A state statute which provides for the punishment of death by electricity, and which is held by the state courts not to inflict a cruel and unusual punishment, does not abridge the privileges or immunities of a convict under the federal constitution; McElvaine v. Brush, 142 U. S. 155, 12 Sup. Ct. 156, 35 L. Ed. 971.

What punishment is suited to a specified offence must in general be determined by the legislature, and the case must be very extraordinary in which its judgment could be brought in question. A punishment may possibly be unlawful because it is so manifestly out of all proportion to the offence as to shock the moral sense with its barbarity, or because it is a punishment long disused for its cruelty until it has become unusual; Cooley, Const. 401. So, for example, is the punishment of depriving a native of China of his hair; 18 Am. L. Reg. 676. Whipping, as a punishment for stealing mules, is not contrary to this provision; Garcia v. Territory, 1 N. M. 415. In New York, where a general law created a crime and fixed the maximum of its punishment, a special statute operating only in localities, or upon particular individuals, whereby, for no perceptible reason, the same identical crime, which consists in the violation of a statute applicable to the whole state, can therein or in those persons be punished with double the severity that it can be elsewhere in the same state, is within the prohibition of section five of article one of the constitution of the state as to "cruel and unusual punishments"; In re Bayard, 61 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 294; State v. Whitaker, 48 La. Ann. 527, 19 South. 457, 35 L. R. A. 562.

Sentence for a term not exceeding that prescribed by the statute cannot be regarded as a cruel or unusual punishment; Jackson v. U. S., 102 Fed. 473, 42 C. C. A. 452. Sterilization by means of vasectomy is not a cruel or unusual punishment; State v. Feilen, 70 Wash. 65, 126 Pac. 75, 41 L. R. A. (N. S.) 418.

Requiring one who has embezzled over $500,000 of state funds to pay a fine equal to the amount of the embezzlement or suffer life imprisonment is a cruel and unusual punishment where the accused cannot pay it; State v. Ross, 55 Or. 450, 104 Pac. 596, 106 Pac. 1022, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 601, 613.

PUNITIVE DAMAGES. See MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

PUPIL. In Civil Law. One who is in his or her minority. See Dig. 1. 7; 26. 7. 1. 2; 50. 16. 239; Code 6. 30. 18. One who is in ward or guardianship. See SCHOOLS; ASSAULT; BATTERY; CORRECTION.

PUPILLARIS SUBSTITUTIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. The nomination of another besides his son as pupil to succeed, if the son should not be able or inclined to accept the inheritance, or should die before he came of age to make a testament.

If the child survived the age of puberty, though he made no testament, the substitute had no right of succession. See Bell, Dict. Substitution; Dig. 28. 6.

PUPILLARITY. In Civil Law. That age of a person's life which included infancy and puerility.

PUR. A corruption of the French word par, by or for. It is frequently used in old French law phrases; as pur autre vie. It is also used in the composition of words: as, purparty, purlieu, purview.

PUR AUTRE VIE (old French, for another's life). See ESTATE PUR AUTRE VIE.

PUR FAIRE PROCLAMER. An ancient writ addressed to the mayor or bailiff of a city or town, requiring him to make proclamation concerning nuisances, etc. Fitz. Nat. B. 392.

PURCHASE. A term including every mode of acquisition of estate known to the law, except that by which an heir on the death of his ancestor becomes substituted in his place as owner by operation of law. 2 Washb. R. Prop., 5th ed. *401; Hoyt v. Van Alstyne, 15 Barb. (N. Y.) 568; McCartee v. Orphan Asylum Soc., 9 Cow. (N. Y.) 437, 18 Am. Dec. 516. A title by purchase is one that is vested in a person by his own act or agreement; 2 Bla. Comm. 241. A title by devise is a title by purchase; Allen v. Bland, 134 Ind. 78, 33 N. E. 774.

There are six ways of acquiring a title by purchase, namely, by deed; by devise; by execution; by prescription; by possession or occupancy; by escheat. In its more limited sense, purchase is applied only to such acquisitions of lands as are obtained by way of bargain and sale for money or some other valuable consideration; Cruise, Dig. tit. 30, §§ 1-4; Hurst v. Dippo, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 20, 1 L. Ed. 19. See Grant v. Bennett, 96 Ill. 535. In common parlance, purchase signifies the buying of real estate and of goods and chattels.

PURCHASE-MONEY. The consideration which is agreed to be paid by the purchaser of a thing in money. See Hoyt v. Van Alstyne, 15 Barb. (N. Y.) 568. As to vendor's lien, see LIEN. See APPLICATION OF PURCHASE-MONEY.

PURCHASE FOR VALUE, IN GOOD FAITH AND WITHOUT NOTICE. The protection given to such purchaser means that from the relation subsisting between the two parties, especially that which is involved in the innocent position of the purchaser, equity refuses to interfere and to aid the plaintiff in what he is seeking to obtain, because it would be unconscientious and inequitable to do so, and the parties must be left to their legal rights, liabilities and remedies; 2 Pomeroy, Eq. Jur. § 738. It is of the essence of the doctrine that equity does not intend to pass upon and decide the merits of the two litigant parties; it does not decide that the title of the defendant is valid, and, therefore, intrinsically better than that of the plaintiff; on the contrary, the protection given by way of defence theoretically assumes that the title of the purchaser is really defective as against that of his opponent; a court of equity wholly ignores the question of validity, declines to examine into the intrinsic merits of the two claims, and bases its action upon entirely different considerations. If a plaintiff, holding some equitable right, sues to enforce it against a defendant who has in good faith obtained the legal estate, the court refuses to interfere and do an unconscientious act by depriving him of the advantage accompanying such an innocent acquisition of the legal title. On the other hand, if the plaintiff is the legal owner, and sues to obtain some equitable relief against a defendant who is the innocent holder of some equitable right or interest, the court in like manner refuses to aid the plaintiff and leaves him to whatever rights would be recognized and reliefs granted by a court of law. The doctrine is not in any sense a rule of property. Whenever the relations between litigants are of such a nature and the suit is of such a kind that equity is called upon to decide the merits of the controversy and determine the validity and sufficiency of the opposing titles or claims, then it does not admit the defence of bona fide purchaser as effectual and conclusive. See 2 Pomeroy, Eq. Jur. § 739.

In the leading case of Phillips v. Phillips, 4 D., F. & J. 208, Lord Westbury classified as follows the cases in which purchase for value would bar equitable relief: 1. When an application is made to the auxiliary jurisdiction of the court. 2. Where one who purchased an equitable interest in property, without notice of a prior equitable incumbrance of the plaintiff, has subsequently got in the outstanding legal title. This was the doctrine of tabula in naufragio. 3. When a plaintiff seeks to charge a purchaser with "an equity as distinguished from an equitable estate, as, for example, an equity to set aside a deed for fraud, or to correct it for mistake." On the other hand, to a bill invoking the concurrent or exclusive jurisdiction of equity against a subsequent equitable incumbrancer, purchase for value without notice would be no defense.

Prof. Ames (Lectures on Legal History, 253) points out that one common case of protection to a purchaser is where one buys a legal title from a misconducting trustee without notice of the trust, and that this does not come within any of these classes, and that the discrimination in the third class between an equity and an equitable estate is an unfortunate one. He states the doctrine as follows: "A court of equity will not deprive a defendant of any right of property, whether legal or equitable, for which he has given value without notice of the plaintiff's equity, nor of any other common-law right acquired as an incident of his purchase. In all other cases the circumstance of innocent purchase is a fact of no legal significance."

In cases where the rule of priority in time would otherwise decide the rights of adverse equitable claimants, it sometimes happens that the later incumbrancer subsequently acquires the outstanding legal title; but it has long been decided that a later incumbrancer could derive no advantage from a long outstanding term got in with notice of the prior equity. This is called the tabula in naufragio doctrine. Prof. Ames points out that it may fairly be said that that doctrine survives only in the unjust and much-criticized English rule of tacking.

He sums up the discussion of the general doctrine as follows: "The purchaser of any right, in its nature transmissible, whether a right in rem or a right in personam, acquires the right free from all equities of which he had no notice at the time of its acquisition. This proposition, it is hoped, will find favor with the reader in point of legal principle. It can hardly fail to commend itself on the score of justice and mercantile convenience."

Prof. Langdell (Summary of Equity Pleading) has discussed the subject, but somewhat from the standpoint of equity pleading. See, also, Bispham, Equity.

To constitute one a purchaser for value, without notice, the whole consideration must be actually paid before notice, and it is not enough that the consideration was secured to be paid. American Vulcanized Fibre Co. v. Taylor (Del.) 87 Atl. 1025.

PURCHASER. A buyer; a vendee. A mortgagee or a conditional vendee is not a purchaser; Campbell Printing Press & Mfg. Co. v. Dyer, 46 Neb. 830, 65 N. W. 904.

See SALE; PARTIES; CONTRACTS.

PURE FOOD LAWS. See FOOD AND DRUG ACTS.

PURE OBLIGATION. One which is not suspended by any condition, whether it has been contracted without any condition, or, when thus contracted, the condition has been performed. Pothier, Obl. n. 176.

PURE PLEA. One which relies wholly on some matter dchors the bill, as, for example, a plea of a release on a settled account.

Pleas not pure are so called in contradistinction to pure pleas; they are sometimes also denominated negative pleas. 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 4275.

PURGATION (Lat. purgo, from purum and ago, to make clean). The clearing one's self of an offence charged, by denying the guilt on oath or affirmation.

Canonical purgation was the act of justifying one's self, when accused of some offence, in the presence of a number of persons worthy of credit, generally twelve, who would swear they believe the accused. See COMPURGATOR; WAGER OF LAW.

Vulgar purgations consisted in superstitious trials by hot and cold water, by fire, by hot irons, by battel, by corsned, etc.

See OATH PURGATORY.

PURGE. See CONTEMPT.

PURGING A TORT. Is like the ratification of a wrongful act by a person who has power of himself to lawfully do the act. But, unlike ratification, the purging of the tort may take place even after commencement of the action. 1 Brod. & B. 282.

PURLIEU. In English Law. A space of land near a forest, known by certain boundaries, which was formerly part of a forest, but which has been separated from it.

The history of purlieu is this. Henry II., on taking possession of the throne, manifested so great a taste for forests that he enlarged the old ones wherever he could, and by this means enclosed many estates which had no outlet to the public roads; forests increased in this way until the reign of king John, when the public reclamations were so great that much of this land was disforested,—that is, no longer had the privileges of the forests—and the land thus separated bore the name of purlieu. See FOREST LAWS.

PURPART. The same as purparty. Cent. Dict.

PURPARTY. That part of an estate which, having been held in common by parceners, is by partition allotted to any of them. To make purparty is to divide and sever the lands which fall to parceners. Old, N. B. 11. Formerly pourparty. See Jacob. The word purpart is commonly used to indicate a part of an estate in any connection.

PURPORT. In Pleading. The substance of a writing as it appears on the face of it to the eye that reads it. It differs from tenor. 2 Russ. Cr. 365; 1 East 179.

PURPOSELY. Intentionally; designedly. Fahnestock v. State, 23 Ind. 231.

PURPRESTURE. An enclosure by a private individual of a part of a common or public domain.

An inclosure by a private person of a part of that which belongs to, and ought to be open and free to the enjoyment of the public at large. Attorney General v. Booming Co., 34 Mich. 472; Grand Rapids v. Powers, 89 Mich. 94, 50 N. W. 661, 14 L. R. A. 498, 28 Am. St. Rep. 276. See People v. R. Co., 76 Cal. 156, 18 Pac. 141.

In early times, an encroachment on the forest. 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 342.

According to Lord Coke, purpresture is a close or enclosure, that is, when one encroaches or makes several to himself that which ought to be in common to many: as, if an individual were to build between high and low water mark on the side of a public river. In England this is a nuisance, and in cases of this kind an injunction will be granted, on ex parte affidavits, to restrain such a purpresture and nuisance; Co. 2d Inst. 28. And see Skene, Purpresture; Glanville, lib. 9, ch. 11, p. 239, note; Spelman, Gloss. Purpresture; Hale, de Port. Mar.; Hargrave, Law Tracts 84; 2 Anstr. 606; Bisph. Eq. 443; Callis, Sew. 174; Rawle, Exmoor Forest.

PURSER. The person appointed by the master of a ship or vessel, whose duty it is to take care of the ship's books, in which everything on board is inserted, as well the names of mariners as the articles of merchandise shipped. Roccius, Ins. note.

By statute pursers in the navy are now called paymasters. R. S. § 1383.

PURSUE. To execute or carry out. Co. Litt. 52 a.

PURSUER. The name by which the complainant or plaintiff is known in the ecclesiastical courts. 3 Eccl. 350.

PURVIEW. That part of an act of the legislature which begins with the words, "Be it enacted," etc., and ends before the repealing clause. Cooke 330; Payne v. Conner, 3 Bibb (Ky.) 181.

According to Cowell, this word also signifies a conditional gift or grant. It is said to be derived from the French pourvu, provided. It always implies a condition.

PUT. In Pleading. To select; to demand: as, "the said C D puts himself upon the country;" that is, he selects the trial by jury as the mode of settling the matter in dispute, and does not rely upon an issue in law. Gould, Pl. c. 6, part 1, § 19.

PUT OFF. To postpone. In a bargain for the sale of goods, it may mean to postpone its completion or to procure a resale of the goods to a third person. 11 Ex. 302.

PUTATIVE. Reputed to be that which is not. The word is frequently used: as, putative father, putative marriage, putative wife, and the like. And Toullier, tome 7, n. 29, uses the words putative owner, proprietaire putatif. Lord Kames uses the same expression. Princ. of Eq. 391.

PUTATIVE FATHER. The reputed father.

This term is usually applied to the father of a bastard child.

The putative father is bound to support his children; and is entitled to the guardianship and care of them in preference to all persons but the mother; Com. v. Anderson, 1 Ashm. (Pa.) 55. And see 1 B. & Ald. 491; 1 C. & P. 268; 1 Ball & B. 1.

PUTATIVE MARRIAGE. A marriage which is forbidden but which has been contracted in good faith and ignorance of the impediment on the part of at least one of the contracting parties.

Three circumstances must concur to constitute this species of marriage. There must be bona fides. One of the parties at least must have been ignorant of the impediment, not only at the time of the marriage, but must also have continued ignorant of it during his or her life, because if he became aware of it he was bound to separate himself from his wife. The marriage must be duly solemnized. The marriage must have been considered lawful in the estimation of the parties or of that party who alleges the bona fides.

A marriage in which these three circumstances concur, although null and void, will have the effect of entitling the wife, if she be in good faith, to enforce the rights of property which would have been competent to her if the marriage had been valid, and of rendering the children of such marriage legitimate.

This species of marriage was not recognized by the civil law: it was introduced by the canon law. It is unknown to the law of the United States, and in England and Ireland. In France it has been adopted by the Code Civil, art. 201, 202. In Scotland the question has not been settled. Burge, Conf. Laws 151.

PUTS AND CALLS. As used in a board of brokers, a "put" is defined to be a privilege of delivering or not delivering the grain, and a "call" is a privilege of calling or not calling for the grain. Pixley v. Boynton, 79 Ill. 353. See OPTION.

PUTTING IN FEAR. These words are used in the definition of a robbery from the person: the offence must have been committed by putting in fear the person robbed. Co. 3d Inst. 68; 4 Bla. Com. 243.

This is the circumstance which distinguishes robbery from all other larcenies. But what force must be used or what kind of fears excited are questions very proper for discussion. The goods must be taken against the will of the possessor.

There must either be a putting in fear or actual violence, though both need not be positively shown, for the former will be inferred from the latter, and the latter is sufficiently implied in the former. For example, when a man is suddenly knocked down, and robbed while he is senseless, there is no fear, yet in consequence of the violence, it is presumed; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 711; Com. v. Snelling, 4 Binn. (Pa.) 379; U. S. v. Jones, 3 Wash. C. C. 209, Fed. Cas. No. 15,494.

In an indictment for robbery, at common law, it is not necessary to allege a putting in fear in addition to the allegation of force and violence; Com. v. Humphries, 7 Mass. 242; Com. v. Clifford, 8 Cush. (Mass.) 217.

PYROMANIA. An irresistible propensity to burn property.

Pyromania always occurs in young subjects, and is supposed to be connected with disordered menstruation, or that physiological evolution which attends the transition from youth to manhood. See MANIA.

PYX, TRIAL OF THE. Under the British Coinage Acts this occurs annually at Goldsmiths' Hall. The coins of the realm are assayed and weighed by a jury of goldsmiths over which the King's Remembrancer is usually appointed by the treasury to preside. Formerly the specimen coins put into the Pyx or box were produced at Westminster, from the treasure-house of the Abbey, where the Pyx was kept; the duty of presiding at the trial belonged to the office of the Remembrancer.

See Remembrances of Sir F. Pollock.

Q

Q. C. An abbreviation of Queen's Counsel. See BARRISTER.

QUACK. One who, without sufficient knowledge, study, or previous preparation, undertakes to practice medicine or surgery, under the pretence that he possesses secrets in those arts.

To call a regular physician a quack is actionable. A quack is criminally answerable for his unskillful practice, and also civilly to his patient in certain cases. See MALPRACTICE; PHYSICIAN.

QUADRAGESIMS. Part V of the Year Books of 40-50 Edw. III. are so known.

QUADRANS (Lat.). In Civil Law. The fourth part of the whole. Hence the heir ex quadrante; that is to say, of the fourth part of the whole.

QUADRIPARTITE (Lat.). Having four parts, or divided into four parts: as, this indenture quadripartite, made between A B, of the one part, C D, of the second part, E F, of the third part, and G H, of the fourth part.

QUADRIPARTITUS. The name of an Anglo-Latin legal treatise. The two extant books were completed in 1114. The compiler was a secular clerk who entered into relations with the archbishop of York; his name is unknown. See Brunner, Sources of English Law in 2 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. H. 8.

QUADROON. A person who is descended from a white person and another person who has an equal mixture of the European and African blood. State v. Davis, 2 Bail. (S. C.) 558. See MULATTO; NEGRO.

QUADRUPLATORES. Informers among the Romans, who, if their information were followed by conviction, had the fourth part of the confiscated goods for their trouble.

QUADRUPLICATION. In Pleading. A pleading in admiralty, third in order after a replication; now obsolete. Formerly this word was used instead of surrebutter. 1 Brown, Civ. Law. 469, n.

QUÆ EST EADEM (Lat. which is the same). A clause containing a statement that the trespass, or other fact mentioned in the plea, is the same as that laid in the declaration, where from the circumstances there is an apparent difference between the two. 1 Chitty, Pl. *582; Gould, Pl. c. 3, § 79, 80; Watson v. Joslyn, 29 Vt. 455.

The form is as follows: "which are the same assaulting, beating, and ill-treating, the said John, in the said declaration mentioned, and whereof the said John hath above thereof complained against the said James." See 1 Saund. 14, 208, n. 2; 2 id. 5 a., n. 3; Arch.

Civ. Pl. 217; Com. Dig. Pleader (E 31); Cro. Jac. 372.

QUÆ PLURA. A writ which lay where an inquisition had been taken by an escheator of lands, etc. of which a man, died seised, and all the land was supposed not to be found by the office or inquisition; it was to inquire of "what more" lands or tenements the party dies seised. Reg. Orig. 293.

QUÆRE (Lat.). Query: noun and verb. A word frequently used to denote that an inquiry ought to be made of a doubtful thing. 2 Lilly, Abr. 406. Commonly used in the syllabi of the reported cases, to mark points of law considered doubtful.

QUÆRENS NON INVENIT PLEGIUM (Lat.). The plaintiff has not found pledge. The return made by the sheriff to a writ directed to him with this clause, namely, si A fecerit B securum de clamore suo prosecuendo, when the plaintiff has neglected to find sufficient security. Fitz. N. B. 38.

QUÆSTIO. In Roman Law. A sort of commission (ad quærendum) to inquire into some criminal matter given to a magistrate or citizen, who was called quæstor or quæstor, who made report thereon to the senate or the people, as the one or the other appointed him. In progress of time he was empowered (with the assistance of a counsel) to adjudge the case; and the tribunal thus constituted was called quæstio.

This special tribunal continued in use until the end of the Roman republic, although it was resorted to, during the last times of the republic, only in extraordinary cases.

The manner in which they were constituted was this. If the matter to be inquired of was within the jurisdiction of the comitia, the senate, on the demand of the consul, or of a tribune, or of one of its members, declared by a decree that there was cause to prosecute a citizen. Then the consul ex auctoritate senatus asked the people in comitia (rogabat) to enact this decree into a law. The comitia adopted it, either simply or with amendment, or they rejected it.

The increase of population and of crimes rendered this method, which was tardy at best, onerous, and even impracticable. In the year A. U. C. 604, or 149 B. C., under the consulship of Censorinus and Manilius, the tribune Calpurnius Piso procured the passage of a law establishing a questio perpetua, to take cognizance of the crime of extortion committed by Roman magistrates against strangers de pecuniis repetundis. Cicero, Brut. 27; de Off. li. 21; in Verr. iv. 25.

Many such tribunals were afterwards established, such as Quæstiones de majestate, de ambitu, de peculatu, de vi, de sodalitiis, etc. Each was composed of a certain number of judges taken from the senators, and presided over by a prætor, although he might delegate his authority to a public officer, who was called judeæ quæstionis. These tribunals continued a year only; for the meaning of the word perpetuus is non interruptus, not interrupted during the term of its appointed duration.

The establishment of these quæstiones deprived the comitia of their criminal jurisdiction, except for the crime of treason; they were, in fact, the depositories of the judicial power during the sixth and seventh centuries of the Roman republic, the last of which was remarkable for civil dissensions and replete with great public transactions. Without some knowledge of the constitution of the Quæstio perpetua, it is impossible to understand the forensic speeches of Cicero, or even the political history of that age. But when Julius Cæsar, as dictator, sat for the trial of Ligarius, the ancient constitution of the republic was, in fact, destroyed, and the criminal tribunals, which had existed in more or less vigor and purity until then, existed no longer but in name. Under Augustus, the concentration of the triple power of the consuls, pro-consuls, and tribunes in his person transferred to him, as of course, all judicial powers and authorities.

QUÆSTOR (Lat.). The name of a magistrate of ancient Rome.

QUÆSTORES CLASSICI (Lat.). In Roman Law. Officers entrusted with the care of the public money.

Their duties consisted in making the necessary payments from the ærarium, and receiving the public revenues. Of both they had to keep correct accounts in their tabula publicæ. Demands which any one might have on the ærarium, and outstanding debts were likewise registered by them. Fines to be paid to the public treasury were registered and exacted by them. They were likewise to provide proper accommodations for foreign ambassadors and such persons as were connected with the republic by ties of public hospitality. Lastly, they were charged with the care of the burials and monuments of distinguished men, the expenses for which had been decreed by the senate to be paid by the treasury. Their number at first was confined to two; but this was afterwards increased as the empire became extended. There were questors of cities and of provinces, and questors of the army; the latter were in fact paymasters.

QUÆSTORES PARRICIDII (Lat.). In Roman Law. Public accusers, two in number, who conducted the accusation of persons guilty of murder or any other capital offence, and carried the sentence into execution. They ceased to be appointed at an early period. Smith, Dict. Gr. & Rom. Antiq.

QUALE JUS. A judicial writ, which lay where a man of religion had judgment to recover land before execution was made of the judgment.

QUALIFICATION. The endowment or acquirement which renders eligible to place or position. Hyde v. State, 52 Miss. 672; State v. Seay, 64 Mo. 89, 27 Am. Rep. 206. It relates to the fitness or capacity of a party for a particular pursuit or profession; Cummings v. Missouri, 4 Wall. (U. S.) 319, 18 L. Ed. 356. It has been held not only to imply the presence of every requisite demanded, but the absence of every disqualification imposed. Hall v. Hostetter, 17 B. Monr. (Ky.) 786.

As to qualification shares, see DIRECTORS.

QUALIFIED ELECTOR. A person who is legally qualified to vote. Sanford v. Prentice, 28 Wis. 358. See QUALIFIED VOTER.

QUALIFIED FEE. One which has a qualification subjoined to it, and which must be determined whenever the qualification annexed to it is at an end. A limitation to a man and his heirs on the part of his father affords an example of this species of estate. Littleton § 254; 2 Bla. Com. 109. See BASE FEE.

QUALIFIED INDORSEMENT. See INDORSEMENT.

QUALIFIED OATH. See OATH.

QUALIFIED PROPERTY. Property not in its nature permanent, but which may sometimes subsist and at other times not subsist. A defeasible and precarious ownership, which lasts as long as the thing is in actual use and occupation. 2 Bla. Com. 391, 395*; 2 Kent 347.

Any ownership not absolute.

QUALIFIED VOTER. A person qualified to vote generally. In re House Bill No. 166, 9 Colo. 629, 21 Pac. 474; or, it may mean a person qualified and actually voting. Carroll Co. v. Smith, 111 U. S. 565, 28 L. Ed. 517.

QUALIFY. To become qualified or fit for any office or employment. To take the necessary steps to prepare one's self for an appointment: as, to take an oath to discharge the duties of an office, to give the bond required of an executor, etc.

It is held synonymous with probate in a statute authorizing probate judges to qualify wills by receiving the evidence of witnesses, etc. Bent v. Thompson, 5 N. M. 408, 23 Pac. 238.

QUALITY. Of Persons. The state of condition of a person.

Two contrary qualities cannot be in the same person at the same time. Dig. 41. 10. 4. Every one is presumed to know the quality of the person with whom he is contracting. In the United States the people are all upon an equality in their civil rights.

In Pleading. That which distinguishes one thing from another of the same kind.

It is, in general, necessary, when the declaration alleges an injury to the goods and chattels, or any contract relating to them, that the quality should be stated; and it is also essential, in an action for the recovery of real estate, that its quality should be shown: as, whether it consists of houses, lands, or other hereditaments, whether the lands are meadow, pasture, or arable, etc. The same rule requires that in an action for an injury to real property, the quality should be shown; Steph. Pl. 214, 215. See, as to the various qualities, Ayliffe, Pand. [60].

It is often allowable to omit from the indictment, and it is seldom necessary to prove with precision, allegations of quality, or, in other words, those allegations which describe the mode in which certain acts have been done. Thus, if the charge is of a felonious assault with a staff, and the proof is of such an assault with a stone, or if a wound, alleged to have been given with a sword, is proved to have been inflicted by an axe, or if a pistol is stated to have been loaded with a bullet, and it turns out to have been loaded with some other destructive material, the charge is substantially proved, and no variance occurs: 5 C. & P. 128; 9 id. 525, 548.

QUAMDIU SE BENE GESSERIT (Lat. as long as he shall behave himself well). A clause inserted in commissions, when such instruments were written in Latin, to signify the tenure by which the officer held his office.

By the British Act of Settlement (1700) the commissions of the judges were so established; before then they held their office durante bene placito, during the king's will.

QUANDO ACCIDERINT (Lat. when they fall in). When a defendant, executor, or administrator pleads plene administravit, the plaintiff may pray to have judgment of assets quando acciderint; Bull. N. P. 169; Bac. Abr. Executor (M). A similar judgment may be taken at the plaintiff's election, in an action against an heir, on a plea of riens perdescent, instead of taking issue on the plea. In either of these cases if assets afterwards come to the hands of the executor or heir a scire facias must be sued out before execution can issue, or there may be an action of debt, suggesting a devastavit; 2 Bouv. Inst. 3708. It is also sometimes termed a judgment of assets in futuro.

By taking a judgment in this form the plaintiff admits that the defendant has fully administered to that time; 1 Pet. C. C. 442, n.; and therefore the plaintiff will not be allowed to give evidence of effects come to defendant's hands before the judgment. For this reason the scire facias on a judgment of assets quando acciderint must only pray execution of such assets as have come to the defendant's hands since the former judgment, and if it pray judgment of assets generally, it cannot be supported. See 2 Com. Dig. Pleader (2 D 9).

QUANTI MINORIS (Lat.). The name of a particular action in Louisiana. An action quanti minoris is one brought for the reduction of the price of a thing sold, in consequence of defects in the thing which is the object of the sale.

QUANTITY. In Pleading. That which is susceptible of measure.

It is a general rule that, when the declaration alleges an injury to goods and chattels, or any contract relating to them, their quantity should be stated; Gould, Pl. § 35. And in actions for the recovery of real estate the quantity of the land should be specified; 11 Co. 25 b, 55 a; 1 East 441; 13 id. 102; Steph. Pl., Andr. ed. § 163.

QUANTITY OF ESTATE. Its time of continuance, or degree of interest, as in fee, during life, or for years. See ESTATE.

QUANTUM DAMNIFICATUS (Lat.). In Equity Practice. An issue directed by a court of equity to be tried in a court of law, to ascertain by a trial before a jury the amount of damages suffered by the non-performance of some collateral undertaking which a penalty has been given to secure. When such damages have thus been ascertained, the court will grant relief upon their payment. 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3913.

QUANTUM MERUIT (Lat.). In Pleading. As much as he has deserved.

When a person employs another to do work for him, without any agreement as to his compensation, the law implies a promise from the employer to the workman that he will pay him for his services as much as he may deserve or merit. In such case the plaintiff may suggest in his declaration that the defendant promised to pay him as much as he reasonably deserved, and then aver that his trouble was worth such a sum of money, which the defendant has omitted to pay. This is called an assumpsit on a quantum meruit. 2 Bla. Com. 162, 163; 1 Viner, Abr. 346. See Thomas v. Coal Co., 43 Mo. App. 653.

When there is an express contract for a stipulated amount and mode of compensation for services, the plaintiff cannot abandon the contract and resort to an action for a quantum meruit on an implied assumpsit; Clark v. Smith, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 326; Algeo v. Algeo, 10 S. & R. (Pa.) 236; Ans. Contr. 278; Newcomb v. Ins. Co., 51 Fed. 725. But see Bank of Columbia v. Patterson, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 299, 3 L. Ed. 351; Stark, 277; Holt, N. P. 236; Linningdale v. Livingston, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 36; 5 M. & W. 114; 4 C. & P. 93; 1 Ad. & E. 333; Miller v. Eldridge, 126 Ind. 461, 27 N. E. 132.

See COMMON COUNTS.

QUANTUM VALEBAT (Lat. as much as it was worth). When goods are sold without specifying any price, the law implies a promise from the buyer to the seller that he will pay him for them as much as they were worth.

The plaintiff may, in such case, suggest in his declaration that the defendant promised to pay him as much as the said goods were worth, and then aver that they were worth so much, which the defendant has refused to pay. See the authorities cited under the article QUANTUM MERUIT.

QUARANTINE. In Maritime Law. The space of forty days, or less, during which the crew of a ship or vessel coming from a port or place infected or supposed to be infected with disease are required to remain on board after their arrival, before they can be permitted to land. It was probably established by the Venetians in 1484. Baker, Quar. 3. In England it is governed by 6 George IV. c. 78, and the Public Health Act of 1875. Ships of war are bound, equally with merchant ships, to respect municipal quarantine regulations.

By act of congress of April 29, 1878, ch. 66, vessels from foreign ports where contagious and other diseases exist, are forbidden to enter the United States, excepting subject to certain regulations prescribed.

The object of the quarantine is to ascertain whether the crew are infected or not. To break the quarantine without legal authority is a misdemeanor; 1 Russ. Cr. 133.

Quarantine regulations made by the states are sustainable as the exercise of the police power; Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Husen, 95 U. S. 465, 24 L. Ed. 527; Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. R. Co. v. Milner, 57 Fed. 276. The detention and disinfection of immigrants by order of a state board of health, with the purpose of preventing infectious disease, is not a regulation of foreign commerce by a state, within the meaning of the constitution; Minneapolis, St. P. & S. S. M. R. Co. v. Milner, 57 Fed. 276.

In cases of insurance of ships, the insurer is responsible when the insurance extends to her being moored in port twenty-four hours in safety, if before the twenty-four hours are expired she is ordered to perform quarantine, and any accident contemplated by the policy occur; 1 Marsh. Ins. 264. Where a ship was prevented from complying with her charter party by quarantine regulations, it was held that this was "restraint of princes or rulers and people"; The Progreso, 3 U. S. App. 147, 50 Fed. 835, 2 C. C. A. 45; Clyde C. S. S. Co. v. S. S. Co., 169 Fed. 275, 94 C. C. A. 551. Lay days do not begin to run until a ship is out of quarantine; MacLachlan, Merch. Shipping 598.

An act of congress of February 2, 1903, authorizes the secretary of agriculture to establish regulations concerning the exportation and transportation of live stock from any place in the United States where he may have reason to believe that pleuropneumonia or other contagious diseases exist, into and through any state, etc., and to foreign countries, which regulations have the force of laws; also, regulations to prevent the introduction or dissemination of any contagious, infectious or communicable disease of animals from a foreign country into the United States or from one state, etc., to another; and to seize, quarantine and dispose of in-fectured hay, straw, etc., or meats, hides, or other products.

The act of congress of Feb. 15, 1893, granting additional quarantine powers and imposing additional duties upon the marine hospital service, did not contemplate the overthrow of the existing state quarantine systems and the abrogation of the power over the subject of health and quarantine practised by the states, because the enactment of state laws on those subjects would, in particular instances, affect interstate and foreign commerce; Compagnie Francaise de Navigation à Vapeur v. Board of Health, 156 U. S. 380, 22 Sup. Ct. 811, 46 L. Ed. 1209.

An unconstitutional burden on interstate commerce is not imposed by an act (Colorado) prohibiting the importation of cattle from certain sections between April 1 and November 1, unless first kept for ninety days at some place near the prohibited section, or unless a certificate of freedom from contagious disease has been obtained from the state veterinary sanitary board; Reid v. Colorado, 187 U. S. 137, 23 Sup. Ct. 92, 47 L. Ed. 108; nor an act giving the live stock sanitary commission authority to prohibit the importation of cattle into the state on the ground that infectious disease had broken out among the cattle of such other state; Smith v. R. Co., 181 U. S. 248, 21 Sup. Ct. 603, 45 L. Ed. 847; an act authorizing the governor of a state, when he has reason to believe there is an epidemic infectious disease of sheep in localities outside the state, to investigate the matter, and, if he finds the disease exists, to make a proclamation declaring such localities infected and prohibiting the introduction therefrom of sheep into the state, except under such restrictions as, after consultation with the state sheep inspector, he may deem proper, is within the police power and is not in violation of the constitution or a regulation of interstate commerce; Rasmussen v. Idaho, 181 U. S. 198, 21 Sup. Ct. 594, 45 L. Ed. 820, affirming 7 Idaho 1, 59 Pac. 933, 52 L. R. A. 78, 97 Am. St. Rep. 234.

A Louisiana statute empowering a board of health to exclude healthy persons from an infected locality, is valid and extends to persons seeking to enter the infected district whether they come from within or without the state; Compagnie Francaise de Navigation à Vapeur v. Board of Health, 156 U. S. 380, 22 Sup. Ct. 811, 46 L. Ed. 1209.

State quarantine regulations established by the governor of the state on the recommendation of a live stock sanitary commission are a proper exercise of the police power of the state; Smith v. R. Co., 181 U. S. 248, 21 Sup. Ct. 603, 45 L. Ed. 847.

The purpose of quarantine regulations against diseases is to limit its spread to the fewest possible number of persons by isolating persons already afflicted or exposed from all others, as far as possible. Where not exceeding nine persons were supposed to have died from bubonic plague and no living persons were known to have contracted the disease, a regulation establishing a general quarantine district covering twelve blocks with more than 10,000 inhabitants, which prohibits persons from entering or leaving the district, but permits free intercourse in the district, cannot be upheld as a reasonable regulation; its effect must necessarily be to facilitate the spread of the disease among all persons confined in the district; Jew Ho v. Williamson, 103 Fed. 10.

The act of congress providing for the regulation of animal industry is limited to cases where the animal in question has an infectious or contagious disease, and the Secretary of Agriculture has no authority to prohibit the taking of a horse out of a quarantine district without first having it inspected and regardless of whether it was diseased or had been exposed to disease; U. S. v. Hoover, 133 Fed. 950.

Where sound cattle had been destroyed by a state live stock sanitary commission, as diseased cattle, the remedy of the owner is against the commissioners individually, and not against the state; Shipman v. State, etc., Com., 115 Mich. 488, 73 N. W. 817.

See Baker, Quarantine; 47 Am. St. Rep. 540, note; 25 Am. L. Rev. 45; Food AND DRUGS ACTS; HEALTH; LIVE STOCK.

In Real Property. The space of forty days during which a widow has a right to remain in her late husband's principal mansion immediately after his death. The right of the widow is also called her quarantine.

In some of the states provision has been made by statute securing to the widow this right for a greater or less space of time. See 4 Kent 62; 3 Washb. R. P., 5th ed. *272. Quarantine is a personal right, forfeited, by implication of a law, by second marriage; Co. Litt. 32. See Bacon, Abr. Dower (B); Co. Litt. 32. b, 34 b; Co. 2d. Inst. 16, 17.

See ASSIGNMENT OF DOWER.

QUARE (Lat.). In Pleading. Wherefore. This word is used sometimes in the writ in certain actions, but is inadmissible in a material averment in the pleadings, for it is merely interrogatory; and, therefore, when a declaration began with complaining of the defendant, "wherefore with force, etc., he broke and entered" the plaintiff's close, it was considered ill; Bacon, Abr. Pleas (B. 5, 4); Gould, Pl. c. 3, § 34.

QUARE CLAUSUM FREGIT. See TRESPASS; TRESPASS QUARE CLAUSUM FREGIT.

QUARE EJECIT INFRA TERMINUM. See EJECTMENT.

QUARE IMPEDIT (Lat. why he hinders). In English Law. A real possessory action which can be brought only in the court of common pleas, and lies to recover a presentation when the patron's right is disturbed, or to try a disputed title to an advowson. See DISTURBANCE; 2 Saund. 336 a.

QUARE INCUMBRAVIT. Why he incumbered. A writ which lay against a bishop, who, within six months after the vacation of a benefice, conferred it on his clerk, whilst two others were contending at law for the right of presentation, calling upon him to show cause why he had incumbered the church. Reg. Orig. 32.

QUARE OBSTRUXIT (Lat. why he obstructs). The name of a writ formerly used in favor of one who, having a right to pass through his neighbor's grounds, was prevented enjoying such right, because the owner of the grounds had obstructed the way.

QUARREL. A dispute; a difference. In law, particularly in releases, which are taken most strongly against the releasor, when a man releases all quarrel he is said to release all actions, real and personal. 8 Co. 153.

QUARRY. A place whence stones are dug for the purpose of being employed in building, making roads, and the like. In mining law it is said to be an open excavation where the works are visible at the surface. It is said to be derived from quadratarius, a stone-cutter or squarer. Bainbr. Mines 2.

When a farm is let with an open quarry, the tenant may, when not restrained by his contract, take out the stone; but he has no right to open new quarries. See MINES; WASTE.

QUART. A liquid measure, containing one-fourth part of a gallon.

QUARTER. A measure of length, equal to four inches. See MEASURE.

In the Law of War. The sparing of the life of a fallen or captured enemy on the battlefield. By the end of the seventeenth century quarter became a recognized usage of war. It is forfeited only under exceptional circumstances. 1. In case of absolute and overwhelming necessity, as where a small force is incumbered with a large number of prisoners in a savage and hostile country, and may be justified in killing them for their own self-preservation. 2. Where belligerents violate the laws of war they may be refused quarter. 3. By way of retaliation against an enemy who has denied quarter without a cause. Risley, The Law of War; Spaight, War Rights on Land, 88-95.

In former times it was considered justifiable to refuse quarter to the garrison of a fortress carried by assault, especially when a weak garrison held out against greatly superior numbers, the justification being that the attempted defense of an indefensible place involved an unnecessary loss of life to the capturing party. But this rule is now obsolete.

Art. 23 (d) of the Convention Concerning the Laws and Customs of War on Land, adopted at The Hague in 1899, provides that belligerents are forbidden to declare that no quarter shall be given.

QUARTER DAYS. The four days of the year on which rent payable quarterly becomes due.

QUARTER DOLLAR. A silver coin of the United States, of the value of twenty-five cents.

Previous to the act of Feb. 21, 1853, c. 79, 10 U. S. Stat. at Large 160, the weight of the quarter-dollar was one hundred and three and one-eighth grains; but coins struck after the passage of that act were of the weight of ninety-six grains. The fineness was not altered by the act cited: of one thousand parts, nine hundred are pure silver and one hundred alloy. By the act of 12th of Feb. 1873, the weight of the quarter-dollar is fixed at one-half that of the half-dollar (twelve and one-half grams); R. S. § 3573; and by act of July 22, 1876, it is made legal tender in all sums public and private not exceeding ten dollars; 1 Supplement R. S. p. 488.

See HALF-DOLLAR; ANNUAL ASSAY; LEGAL TENDER.

QUARTER-EAGLE. A gold coin of the United States, of the value of two and a half dollars. See MONEY; COIN.

QUARTER-SALES. In New York a certain fraction of the purchase-money is often conditioned to be paid back on alienation of the estate; and this fine on alienation is expressed as a tenth-sales, a quarter-sales, etc. Jackson v. Groat, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 285.

QUARTER SESSIONS. A court bearing this name, mostly invested with the trial of criminals. It takes its name from sitting quarterly, or once in three months. See COURT OF QUARTER SESSIONS.

The English courts of quarter sessions were erected during the reign of Edward III. See stat. 36 Edw. III.; Crabb, Eng. Law 278.

QUARTER-YEAR. In the computation of time, a quarter-year consists of ninety-one days. Co. Litt. 135b; 2 Rolle, Abr. 521, l. 40.

QUARTERING. A barbarous punishment formerly inflicted on criminals by tearing them to pieces by means of four horses, one attached to each limb. See HUNG, DRAWN AND QUARTERED.

QUARTERING OF SOLDIERS. Furnishing soldiers with board or lodging or both. The constitution of the United States, Amendm. art. 3, provides that "no soldier shall, in time of peace, be quartered in any house without the consent of the owner, nor in time of war but in a manner to be prescribed by law." See Cooley, Const. Lim., 6th ed. 373; Rawle, Const. 126.

QUARTEROON. One who has had one of his grandparents of the black or African race.

QUARTO DIE POST (Lat. fourth day after). Appearance-day, which is the fourth day inclusive from the return of the writ; and if the person summoned appears on that day, it is sufficient. On this day, also, the court begins to sit for despatch of business. These three days were originally given as an indulgence. 3 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 278*; Tidd, New Pr. 134. But this practice is now altered. 15 & 16 Vict. c. 76. It still obtains in Pennsylvania.

QUASH. In Practice. To overthrow or annul.

When proceedings are clearly irregular and void, the courts will quash them, both in civil and criminal cases: for example, when the array is clearly irregular, as, if the jurors have been selected by persons not authorized by law, it will be quashed.

In criminal cases, when an indictment is so defective that no judgment can be given upon it, should the defendant be convicted, the court, upon application, will, in general, quash it: as, if it have no jurisdiction of the offence charged, or when the matter charged is not indictable; 1 Burr. 516, 543; U. S. v. Wardell, 49 Fed. 914. It is in the discretion of the court to quash an indictment or to leave the defendant to a motion in arrest of judgment; Com. v. Eastman, 1 Cush. (Mass.) 189, 48 Am. Dec. 596; State v. Miller, 100 N. C. 543, 5 S. E. 925. When the application to quash is made on the part of the defendant, in English practice, the court generally refuses to quash the indictment when it appears some enormous crime has been committed; Comyns, Dig. Indictment (II); 3 Term 621; 3 Burr. 1841; Bacon, Abr. Indictment (K).

When the application is made on the part of the prosecution, the indictment will be quashed whenever it is defective so that the defendant cannot be convicted, and the prosecution appears to be bona fide. If the prosecution be instituted by the attorney-general, he may, in some states, enter a nolle prosequi, which has the same effect; 1 Dougl. 239, 240. The application should be made before plea pleaded; Leach 11; 4 How. State Tr. 232; State v. Clark, 4 Idaho 7, 35 Pac. 710; and before the defendant's recognizance has been forfeited; 1 Salk. 380. See CASSETUS BREVE.

QUASI (Lat. as if, almost). A term used to mark a resemblance, and which supposes a difference between two objects. Dig. 11. 7. 1. 8. 1. See People v. Bradley, 60 Ill. 402. It is exclusively a term of classification. Prefixed to a term of Roman law, it implies that the conception to which it serves as an index is connected with the conception with which the comparison is instituted by a strong superficial analogy or resemblance. It negatives the idea of identity, but points out that the conceptions are sufficiently similar for one to be classed as the equal of the other;

Maine, Anc. Law 332. Civilians use the expressions quasi-contractus, quasi-delictum, quasi-possessio, quasi-traditio, etc.

QUASI-AFFINITY. In Civil Law. The affinity which exists between two persons, one of whom has been betrothed to the kindred of the other, but who have never been married. See AFFINITY.

QUASI-CONTRACT. See QUASI-CONTRACTUS.

QUASI-CONTRACTUS (Lat.). In Civil Law. An obligation similar in character to that of a contract, but which arises not from an agreement of parties but from some relation between them, or from a voluntary act of one of them.

An obligation springing from voluntary and lawful acts of parties in the absence of any agreement. Howe, Stud. Civ. L. 171.

An obligation which grows out of certain relations between persons whereby they become bound to each other by duties similar to those arising from a contract. Morey, Rom. L. 371.

Quasi-contracts were a well-defined class under the civil law. By the civil code of Louisiana they are defined to be "the lawful and purely voluntary acts of a man, from which there results any obligation whatever to a third person and sometimes a reciprocal obligation between parties. In quasi-contracts the obligation arises not from consent, as in the case of contracts, but from the law or natural equity.

According to Prof. Ames (Lect. on Leg. Hist. 160) the term was not found in the common law, but it has been taken by writers of the common law from the Roman law. It may be considered now as quite domesticated even to the extent of being used as the title of a very valuable common-law textbook: Keener, Quasi-Contract. They are "founded (1) upon a record, (2) upon a statutory, official or customary duty, or (3) upon the fundamental principle of justice that no one ought unjustly to enrich himself at the expense of another." Also, at p. 255, they "are really equitable liabilities upon which the law assumes to give a remedy."

In (1890) 44 Ch. D. p. 107, Lindley, L. J., remarks that owing to the unfortunate terminology of our law, . . . the expression "implied contract" has been used not only to denote a genuine contract established by inference, but also an obligation which does not arise from any real contract, but which can be enforced as if it had a contractual origin. Obligations of this class are called by the civilians obligationes quasi ex contractu.

The subject will be found treated in a subtitle of CONTRACT, supra. See also CONTRACTUAL OBLIGATION.

It need only be added here that quasi-contracts were in the Roman law of almost infinite variety but were divided into five classes:—1. Negotiorum gestio, the management of the affairs of another, without authority. 2. Tutela administratio, the administration of a tutorship. 3. Rei communis administratio, or communio bonorum, the management of common property. 4. Hereditatis aditio, the entering upon an inheritance. 5. Indebiti solutio, payment by mistake of money not due. They all have certain general features, as that from their nature each has an affinity with some contract; and persons under disabilities may be affected by them though incapable of contracting.

A common error which should be avoided is the confusion of quasi-contracts with implied contracts. The latter are real contracts, differing from express contracts in the nature of the proof by which they are established; but in quasi-contracts the essential part of the contract, the agreement or convention, is wanting; Maine, Anc. L. 332. See, generally, Inst. 3. 28; Dig. 3. 5; Ayl. Pand. b. 4, tit. 31; 1 Bro. Civ. L. 386; Poth. Obl. n. 113; Merl. Rép. h. t.; Keener, Quasi-Contract; Howe, Stud. Civ. L. Lect. x.; Morey, Rom. Law 371; Sohm, Inst. Rom. Law 315-21; Woodward, Quasi-Contracts (1913).

QUASI-CORPORATIONS. A term applied to those bodies or municipal societies which, though not vested with the general powers of corporations, are yet recognized, by statutes or immemorial usage, as persons or aggregate corporations, with precise duties which may be enforced, and privileges which may be maintained by suits at law. They may be considered quasi-corporations, with limited powers, co-extensive with the duties imposed upon them by statute or usage, but restrained from a general use of the authority which belongs to those metaphysical persons by the common law. See Fourth School Dist. v. Wood, 13 Mass. 192; L. R. 1 H. L. 293; Boone, Corp. § 10.

Among quasi-corporations may be ranked counties, and also towns, townships, parishes, hundreds, and other political divisions of counties, which are established without an express charter of incorporation; commissioners of a county, most of the commissions instituted for public use, supervisors of highways, overseers, or guardians of the poor, loan officers of a county, trustees of a school fund, trustees of the poor, school districts, trustees of schools, judges of a court authorized to take bonds to themselves in their official capacity, and the like, who are invested with corporate powers sub modo and for a few specified purposes only. The governor of a state has been held a quasi-corporation sole; The Governor v. Allen, 8 Humph. (Tenn.) 176; so has a trustee of a friendly society in whom, by statute, property is vested, and by and against whom suits may be brought; see 1 B. & Ald. 157; so of a levee district organized by statute to reclaim land from overflow; Dean v. Leary, 51 Cal. 406; and fire departments having by statute certain powers and duties which necessarily invest them with a limited capacity to sue and be sued; 1 Sweeny 224. It may be laid down as a general rule that where a body is created by statute possessing powers and duties which involve incidentally a qualified capacity to sue and be sued, such body is to be considered a quasi-corporation; id.; Dean v. Davis, 51 Cal. 406. See, generally, Ang. & A. Corp. § 24; 13 Am. Dec. 524, note; but not such a body as the general assembly of the Presbyterian church, which has not the capacity to sue and be sued; Com. v. Green, 4 Whart. (Pa.) 531. See CORPORATION; MUNICIPAL CORPORATION; PUBLIC SERVICE CORPORATIONS; PUBLIC UTILITIES; ASSOCIATION.

QUASI-CRIMES. Offences for which some person other than the actual perpetrator is responsible, the perpetrator being presumed to act by command of the responsible party.

Injuries which have been unintentionally caused. See MASTER AND SERVANT.

All offences not crimes or misdemeanors, but which are in the nature of crimes; a class of offences against the public which have not been declared crimes, but wrongs against the general or local public which it is proper should be repressed or punished by forfeitures and penalties. Wiggins v. Chicago, 68 Ill. 375. See State v. Snure, 29 Minn. 132, 12 N. W. 347.

They have recently increased in number. The name of commercial crimes has been applied to them.

QUASI-DELICT. In Civil Law. An act whereby a person, without malice, but by fault, negligence, or imprudence not legally excusable, causes injury to another.

A quasi-delict may be public or private; the neglect of the affairs of a community, when it is our duty to attend to them, may be a crime; the neglect of a private matter, under similar circumstances, may be the ground of a civil action. Bowyer, Mod. Civ. Law, c. 43, p. 265.

QUASI-DEPOSIT. A kind of involuntary bailment, which takes place where a person acquires possession of property lawfully, by finding. Story, Bailm. § 85.

QUASI-DERELICT. The condition of a vessel which is not abandoned, but those on board of which are physically incapable of doing anything for their safety. 1 Newb. Adm. 452.

QUASI-ENTAIL. An estate pur autre vie, to a man and the heirs of his body.

The interest so granted is not properly an estate tail, but so far in the nature of one that it will go to the heir of the body as special occupant during the life of the cestui que vie in the same manner as an estate of inheritance would descend, if limited to the grantee and the heirs of his body.

QUASI-FEE. An estate gained by wrong.

QUASI-OFFENCES. See QUASI-CRIMES.

QUASI-PARTNERS. Partners of lands, goods, or chattels, who are not actual partners, are sometimes so called. Pothier, de Société App. n. 184. See PART-OWNERS.

QUASI-PERSONALTY. Things immovable in point of law; though fixed to things real either actually or fictitiously.

QUASI-POSTHUMOUS CHILD. In Civil Law. One who, born during the life of his grandfather or other male ascendant, was not his heir at the time he made his testament, but who by the death of his father became his heir in his lifetime. Inst. 2. 13. 2; Dig. 28. 3. 13.

QUASI-PUBLIC CORPORATIONS. Those corporations, which are technically private, but of quasi-public character, having in view some public enterprise in which the public are involved, such as railroad companies, etc., Miners' Ditch Co. v. Zellerbach, 37 Cal. 543, 99 Am. Dec. 300; 1 Thomps. Corp. § 22. See CORPORATION; QUASI-CORPORATIONS.

QUASI-PURCHASE. This term is used in the civil law to denote that a thing is to be considered as purchased from the presumed consent of the owner of a thing; as, if a man should consume a cheese, which is in his possession and belonging to another, with an intent to pay the price of it to the owner, the consent of the latter will be presumed, as the cheese would have been spoiled by keeping it longer. Wolff, Dr. de la Nat. § 691.

QUASI-REALTY. Things which are fixed in contemplation of law to realty, but movable in themselves, as heirlooms (or limbs of the inheritance), title deeds, court rolls, etc. Whart. Law Lex.

QUASI-TRADITIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. A term used to designate that a person is in the use of the property of another, which the latter suffers and does not oppose. Lec. Elem. § 396. It also signifies the act by which the right of property is ceded in a thing to a person who is in possession of it; as, if I loan a boat to Paul, and deliver it to him, and afterwards I sell him the boat, it is not requisite that he should deliver the boat to me to be again delivered to him: there is a quasi-tradition or delivery.

QUATUOR MARIA. See EXTRA QUATUOR MARIA.

QUATUORVIRI (Lat. four men). In Roman Law. Magistrates who had the care and inspection of roads. Dig. 1. 2. 3. 30.

QUAY. A wharf at which to load or land goods. (Sometimes spelled key.)

In its enlarged sense the word quay means the whole space between the first row of houses of a city, and the sea or river; De Armas v. New Orleans, 5 La. 152, 215. So much of the quay as is requisite for the public use of loading and unloading vessels is public property, and cannot be appropriated to private use, but the rest may be private property.

A public quay in a city, dedicated to public use, does not cease to be locus publicus and become private property because it is leased by the public authorities for a purpose subservient to the public use; 140 U. S. 654.

QUE ESTATE (quem statum, or which estate). A plea by which a man prescribes in himself those whose estate he holds. 2 Bla. Com. 270; 18 Viner, Abr. 133-140; Co. Litt. 121 a. See 24 L. Q. R. 366.

QUEAN. A worthless woman; a strumpet. The meaning of this word, which is now seldom used, is said not to be well ascertained. 2 Rolle, Abr. 296; Bacon, Abr. Slander (U 3).

QUEEN. A woman who is sovereign of a kingdom. The wife of a king.

QUEEN ANNE'S BOUNTY. By stat. 2 & 3 Anne, c. 11, all the revenue of first-fruits and tenths was vested in trustees forever, to form a perpetual fund for the augmentation of poor livings in the established church. 1 Bla. Com. 286; 2 Burn, Eccl. Law 260; [1906] 2 Ch. 513. Numerous acts have since been passed: see 2 Steph. Com. 603.

QUEEN CONSORT. The wife of a reigning king. 1 Bla. Com. 218. She is looked upon by the law as a feme sole, as to her power of contracting, suing, etc. Id. She is in all respects a subject.

QUEEN DOWAGER. The widow of a king. She retains most of the privileges belonging to a queen consort. 1 Bla. Com. 229. If she marries a commoner, she does not lose her regal dignity.

QUEEN-GOLD. A royal revenue belonging to every queen consort during her marriage with the king, and due from every person who has made a voluntary fine or offer to the king of ten marks or upwards, in consideration of any grant or privilege conferred by the crown. It is due or record on the recording of the fine. It was last exacted (or proceedings therefor begun) in the reign of Charles I. It became, in effect, extinct at the Restoration, 1660. 1 Bla. Com. 220.

QUEEN REGNANT. She who holds the crown in her own right. She has the same duties and prerogatives, etc., as a king. Stat. 1 Car. I. st. 3, c. 1; 1 Bla. Com. 218.

QUEEN'S ADVOCATE. See ADVOCATE.

QUEEN'S COUNSEL. Barristers appointed as counsel to the crown on the nomination of the lord chancellor, taking precedence over ordinary barristers, and having the privilege of wearing a silk gown as their professional robe. See [1898] App. Cas. 252.

If the sovereign is a king, they are king's counsel. See BARRISTERS; KING'S COUNSEL.

QUEEN'S ENEMIES. A phrase used in bills of lading importing a limitation upon the liability of the ship owner under the contract therein contained.

It includes the enemies of the sovereign of the carrier; 34 L. J. C. P. 14. It does not include the acts of an armed band of depredators; 1 Term 27; or a seizure of goods by a foreign revenue official for a breach of revenue laws; 10 Q. B. 517. It is less extensive in its scope than Restraint of Rulers and Princes (q. v.). See PUBLIC ENEMY.

QUEEN'S PROCTOR. A proctor or solicitor representing the crown in the former practice of the courts of probate and divorce. Moz. & W. Law Dict.

QUEEN'S REMEMBRANCER. See REMEMBRANCER.

QUERELA (Lat.). An action preferred in any court of justice. The plaintiff was called querens, or complainant, and his brief, complaint, or declaration was called querela. Jacob, Law Dict.

QUERELA CORAM REGE ET CONCILIO DISCUTIENDA ET TERMINANDA (Lat.). A writ by which one was called to justify a complaint of a trespass made to the king himself, before the king and his council. Reg. Orig. 124.

QUERELA INOFFICIOSI TESTAMENTI (Lat. complaint of an undutiful or unkind will). In Civil Law. A species of action allowed to a child who had been unjustly disinherited, to set aside the will, founded on the presumption of law, in such cases, that the parent was not in his right mind. Calvinus, Lex.; 2 Kent 327. See INOFFICIOUS TESTAMENT.

QUESTION. Something in controversy or which may be the subject of controversy. McFarlane v. Clark, 39 Mich. 45, 33 Am. Rep. 346.

A means sometimes employed, in some countries, by torture, to compel supposed great criminals to disclose their accomplices or to acknowledge their crimes.

This torture is called question because, as the unfortunate person accused is made to suffer pain, he is asked questions as to his supposed crime or accomplices. This is unknown in the United States. See Pothier, Procédure Criminelle, sect. 5, art. 2, § 3. See 4 Bla. Com. 325.

In Evidence. An interrogation put to a witness, requesting him to declare the truth of certain facts as far as he knows them.

Questions are either general or leading. By a general question is meant such a one as requires the witness to state all he knows, without any suggestion being made to him: as, Who gave the blow?

A leading question is one which leads the mind of the witness to the answer, or suggests it to him: as, Did A B give the blow?

The Romans called a question by which the fact or supposed fact which the inter-rogator expected or wished to find asserted in and by the answer was made known to the proposed respondent, a suggestive interrogation: as, Is not your name A B? See LEADING QUESTION.

In Practice. A point on which the parties are not agreed, and which is submitted to the decision of a judge and jury.

When the doubt or difference arises as to what the law is on a certain state of facts, this is said to be a legal question; and when the party demurs, this is to be decided by the court; when it arises as to the truth or falsehood of facts, this is a question of fact, and is to be decided by the jury. See JURY.

Proof beyond reasonable question is held synonymous with proof beyond reasonable doubt; Harding v. Long, 103 N. C. 1, 9 S. E. 445, 14 Am. St. Rep. 775.

QUESTUS EST NOBIS. A writ of nuisance, which, by 15 Edw. I., lay against him to whom a house or other thing that caused a nuisance descended or was alienated; whereas, before that statute the action lay only against him who first levied or caused the nuisance to the damage of his neighbor. Cowell.

QUI IMPROVIDE. A supersedeas granted where a writ was erroneously sued out or misawarded.

QUI TAM (Lat. who as well). An action under a statute which imposes a penalty for the doing or not doing an act, and gives that penalty in part to whomsoever will sue for the same, and the other part to the commonwealth, or some charitable, literary, or other institution, and makes it recoverable by action. The plaintiff describes himself as suing as well for the commonwealth, for example, as for himself. Espinasse, Pen. Act 5, 6; 1 Viner, Abr. 197; 1 Salk. 129, n.; Bac. Abr. See INFORMER; 10 Harv. L. Rev. 265.

The action for a penalty is a civil suit; Brophy v. Perth Amboy, 44 N. J. L. 217, reversing State v. Brophy, 43 N. J. L. 589; Waters v. Day, 10 Vt. 487; while the action for a statutory penalty is civil, the information qui tam is criminal; Canfield v. Mitchell, 43 Conn. 169; State v. R. Co., 30 Mo. App. 494.

Previous conviction on an indictment for violation of a statute is not necessary to sustain a qui tam action or action of debt for the penalty; Agnew v. McElhare, 18 Pa. 484; McAher v. Chattanooga, 1 Head (Tenn.) 74. Such an action will not lie for a penalty prescribed by Stat. 32 Hen. VIII. for the sale of a pretended title to land; Milsaps v. Johnson, 22 Ga. 105.

QUIA (Lat.). In Pleading. Because. This word is considered a term of affirmation. It is sufficiently direct and positive for introducing a material averment. 1 Saund. 117, n. 4; Com. Dig. Pleader (C 77).

QUIA EMPTORES (Lat.). A name sometimes given to the English Statute of Westminster 3, 18 Edw. I. c. 1, which prohibited sub-infeudation; so called from its initial words. 2 Bla. Com. 91. It is expressly limited to estates in fee simple. It authorized every free man to sell his lands and tenants, but so that the feoffee should hold them of the same chief lord of the fee and by the same service and custom as his feoffor.

See MANOR; SUB-INFEOUDATION; TENURE; ALOD.

QUIA TIMET (Lat. because he fears). A term applied to preventive or anticipatory remedies. According to Lord Coke, "there be six writs of law that may be maintained quia timet, before any molestation, distress, or impleading: as, First, a man may have his writ or mesne before he be distrained. Second, a warrantia chartæ, before he be impleaded. Third, a monstraverunt, before any distress or vexation. Fourth, an audita querela, before any execution sued. Fifth, a curia claudenda, before any default of enclosure. Sixth, a ne injuste vexes, before any distress or molestation. And these are called brevia anticipantia, writs of prevention." Co. Litt. 100. And see 7 Bro. P. C. 125.

These writs are generally obsolete. In chancery, when it is contemplated to prevent an expected injury, a bill quia timet is filed. See BILL QUIA TIMET.

QUIBBLE. A slight difficulty raised without necessity or propriety; a cavil.

QUICK DESPATCH. A steamer chartered to be discharged with customary "quick despatch" arrived in port, March 8th, was ordered to berth March 10th, and began to discharge March 11th at one o'clock, and completed March 20th at noon; discharged by "sticks" instead of platform scales, and from but one hatch, while there were four to be discharged from. It was held that this was not "customary quick despatch"; Harrison v. Smith, 28 U. S. App. 383, 67 Fed. 354, 14 C. C. A. 656. See DEMURRAGE; LAY DAYS.

QUICK WITH CHILD. See QUICKENING.

QUICKENING. In Medical Jurisprudence. The sensation a mother has of the motion of the child she has conceived.

The period when quickening is first experienced varies from the tenth to the twenty-fifth, but is usually about the sixteenth week from conception; Denman, Midw. 129.

It was formerly supposed that either the child was not alive until the time of quickening, or that it had acquired some new kind of existence that it did not possess before: hence the presumption of law that dates the life of the child from that time.

The child is, in truth, alive from the first moment of conception, and, according to its age and state of development, has different modes of manifesting its life, and, during a portion of the period of gestation, by its motion. By the growth of the embryo, the womb is enlarged until it becomes of too great a size to be contained in the pelvis, it then rises to the abdomen, when the motion of the fetus is for the first time felt.

Quickening as indicating a distinct point in the existence of the fetus has no foundation in physiology; for it arises merely from the relation which the organs of gestation bear to the parts that surround them; it may take place early or late, according to the condition of these different parts, but not from any inherent vitality for the first time manifested by the fetus.

As life, by law, is said to commence when a woman first becomes quick with child, so procuring an abortion after that period is a misdemeanor. Before this time, formerly the law did not interfere to prevent a pregnant woman convicted of a capital offence from being executed; 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. 413. If, however, the humanity of the law of the present day would not allow a woman to be executed who is, as Blackstone terms it, privement enceinte, Com. 129, i. e. pregnant, although not quick, it would be but carrying out the same desire to interfere with long-established rules, to hold that the penalty for procuring abortion should also extend to the whole period of pregnancy.

"Quick with child is having conceived; Evans v. People, 49 N. Y. 86; with quick child is where the child has quickened." 8 C. & P. 265; 2 Whar. & St. Med. Jur., 4th ed. III. § 7. See 26 Am. Dec. 60, n.; State v. Cooper, 22 N. J. L. 52, 51 Am. Dec. 248.

QUID JURIS CLIMAT. A judicial writ issued out of the record of a fine which lay for the grantee of a reversion or remainder, when the particular tenant would not attorn. Cowell.

QUID PRO QUO (Lat. what for what). A term denoting the consideration of a contract. See Co. Litt. 47 b; 7 M. & G. 998.

It was used in the fifteenth century to express the equivalent or recompense without which a debt could not be established. Poll. Contr. 178. See, also, Ames, Lect. Leg. Hist., where the phrase is discussed.

QUIDAM (Lat. some one; somebody). A term used to express an unknown person, or one who cannot be named.

A quidam is usually described by his features, the color of his hair, his height, clothing, and the like, in any process which may be issued against him. Merlin, Répert.

QUIET ENJOYMENT. The name of a covenant in a lease, by which the lessor agrees that the lessee shall peaceably enjoy the premises leased. This covenant goes to the possession, and not to the title; Tobey v. Webster, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 471. A covenant for quiet enjoyment does not extend as far as a covenant of warranty; Williams v. Wetherbee, 1 Alk. (Vt.) 233.

The covenant for quiet enjoyment is broken only by an entry, or lawful expulsion from, or some actual disturbance in, the possession; Whitbeck v. Cook, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 483, 8 Am. Dec. 272; Ham. Cov. 35; Donahoe v. Emery, 9 Metc. (Mass.) 63; Frost v. Earnest, 4 Whart. (Pa.) 86. But the tortious entry of the covenantor, without title, is a breach of the covenant for quiet enjoyment; Sedgwick v. Hollenback, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 376. The covenant for quiet possession in a deed merges all previous representatives as to the possession, and limits the liability growing out of them; Andrus v. Refining Co., 130 U. S. 643, 9 Sup. Ct. 645, 32 L. Ed. 1054.

See COVENANT FOR QUIET ENJOYMENT.

QUIET TITLE. See BILL TO QUIET POSSESSION AND TITLE; BILL QUIA TIMET.

QUIETUS (Lat. freed or acquitted). In English Law. A discharge; an acquittance.

An instrument by the clerk of the pipe and auditors in the exchequer, as proof of their acquittance or discharge of accountants. Cowell.

Discharge of a judge or attorney-general. 3 Mod. *99.

In American Law. The discharge of an executor by the probate court. Taylor v. Deblouis, 4 Mas. 131, Fed. Cas. No. 13,790.

QUINTO EXACTUS (Lat.). In Old English Law. The fifth call or last requisition of a defendant sued to outlawry.

QUIT-CLAIM. A form of deed of the nature of a release containing words of grant as well as release. 3 Washb. R. P., 5th ed. 606.

The term is in constant and general use in American law to denote a deed substantially the same as a release in English law. It presupposes a previous or precedent conveyance or a subsisting estate and possession; Thornt. Conv. 44. It is a conveyance at common law, but differs from a release in that it is regarded as an original conveyance, at least in some states; Rogers v. Hillhouse, 3 Conn. 398; Hall's Lessee v. Ashby, 9 Ohio, 96, 34 Am. Dec. 424; Doe v. Reed, 4 Scam. (Ill.) 117, 38 Am. Dec. 124. The operative words are remise, release, and forever quitclaim; Thornt. Conv. 44. Covenants of warranty against incumbrances by the grantor are usually added. See a full article in 12 Cent. L. J. 127; 34 id. 174.

The rule that a purchaser by a quitclaim deed is not to be regarded as a bona fide purchaser without notice of a prior incumbrance; O'Neal v. Seixas, 85 Ala. 80, 4 South. 745; Huff v. Crawford, 89 Tex. 214, 34 S. W. 606; has no application where the registry laws require the recording of such an incumbrance in order to make it a lien on lands in the hands of a subsequent purchaser; White v. McGarry, 47 Fed. 420. One accepting a quit-claim deed from his grantor is bound, at his peril, to ascertain what equities, if any, exist against his title; Bowman v. Griffith, 35 Neb. 361, 53 N. W. 140; but the receipt of the quit-claim deed does not of itself prevent the grantee from showing that he is a bona fide purchaser; Moelle v. Sherwood, 148 U. S. 21, 13 Sup. Ct. 426, 37 L. Ed. 350; U. S. v. Land Co., 148 U. S. 31, 13 Sup. Ct. 458, 37 L. Ed. 354; and the grantee under such deed may be a bona fide purchaser under the recording acts; Smith v. McClain, 146 Ind. 77, 45 N. E. 41.

A quit-claim deed conveys only the interest of the grantor at the time of the conveyance; Pleasants v. Blodgett, 39 Neb. 741, 58 N. W. 423, 42 Am. St. Rep. 624; but such a deed is as effectual to divest and transfer a complete title as any other form of conveyance; Moelle v. Sherwood, 148 U. S. 21, 13 Sup. Ct. 426, 37 L. Ed. 350. Such a deed from a judgment debtor of land, sold under execution, passes merely the right of redemption and does not relieve the land of dower of the debtor's wife, though she did not reside in the state when the deed was executed; Lynde v. Wakefield, 19 Mont. 23, 47 Pac. 5. A title acquired subsequently to the execution of a quit-claim, with special warranty simply, does not enure to the grantee, and a subsequent purchaser from the grantor is not affected by the recording of the deed executed before the grantor acquired the title; Bennett v. Davis, 90 Me. 457, 38 Atl. 372.

A grantee in a warranty deed whose immediate grantor also took under a warranty deed, is entitled to protection as a bona fide purchaser notwithstanding the fact that remotely in the chain of title there exists a quit-claim deed; Sherwood v. Moelle, 36 Fed. 478, 1 L. R. A. 797; Snowden v. Tyler, 21 Neb. 199, 31 N. W. 661; but one who takes a quit-claim deed is presumed to do so with notice of any outstanding equity interest and he therefore knows that he is taking a doubtful title and is put on inquiry concerning it. "The very form of the deed indicates to him that the grantor has doubts concerning the title; and the deed itself is notice to him that he is getting only a doubtful title;" Johnson v. Williams, 37 Kan. 179, 14 Pac. 537, 1 Am. St. Rep. 243, per Valentine, J., who is quoted on this point by Brewer, J., in Sherwood v. Moelle, 36 Fed. 478, 1 L. R. A. 797, and referred to as "one of the most painstaking and thoughtful judges I know. He has collected the various authorities."

Under a Massachusetts statute, a quit-claim deed takes precedence over a prior deed, recorded subsequently to the quit-claim, where the grantee in the latter is without notice of the other; Stark v. Boynton, 167 Mass. 443, 45 N. E. 764. A quit-claim deed, duly recorded, is held to be within the protection of a statute providing that deeds shall take effect only on delivery for record; Schott v. Dosh, 49 Neb. 187, 68 N. W. 346, 59 Am. St. Rep. 531; where will be found much learning on the subject of these deeds.

QUIT-RENT. A rent paid by the tenant of the freehold, by which he goes quit and free,—that is, discharged from any other rent. 2 Bla. Com. 42.

In England, quit-rents were rents reserved to the king or a proprietor, on an absolute grant of waste land, for which a price in gross was at first paid, and a mere nominal rent reserved as a feudal acknowledgment of tenure. Inasmuch as no rent of this description can exist in the United States, when a quit-rent is spoken of some other interest must be intended. Marshall v. Conrad, 5 Call (Va.) 364. A perpetual rent reserved on a conveyance in fee-simple is sometimes known by the name of quit-rent in Massachusetts.

See GROUND-RENT; RENT.

It was in England a survival of feudalism. During the Middle Ages the villeins of England gradually commuted their food and labor dues to an annual money payment, which came to be known as a quit-rent, because by it the land was freed of all feudal dues except fealty. It became an annual fixed and heritable charge upon the land and created a socage tenure. At the beginning of the sixteenth century money rents had become general. The feudal notion of land tenure, that the soil belonged to the crown, was carried to the new world. It may be traced in all the early charters. Sometimes it was granted to the proprietors and subinfeudation was permitted. Quit-rents were mentioned in the grants to the Duke of York and in the charter of Georgia. It was a part of the general colonial policy of the British crown. As a means of emphasizing the imperial control its success became of the utmost importance. The system broke down in New England, met opposition in New York and was ineffective in Pennsylvania; in the southern colonies it became firmly rooted. The rent usually varied between 2 shillings and 4 shillings per 100 acres. In Pennsylvania it fell as low as one-half penny per acre, and sometimes the rent was a red rose, a bushel of wheat, or a beaver skin. In all the colonies except Maryland the history of the quit-rent was one of persistent struggle between the governor and the assembly, the former representing the crown or proprietor and the latter the tenants. B. W. Bond, Jr., in 17 Am. Hist. Rev. 496.

QUO ANIMO (Lat. with what intention). The intent; the mind with which a thing has been done: as, the quo animo with which the words were spoken may be shown by the proof of conversations of the defendant relating to the original defamation. Kennedy v. Gifford, 19 Wend. (N. Y.) 296.

QUO JURE, WRIT OF. In English Law. The name of writ commanding the defendant to show by what right he demands common of pasture in the land of the complainant who claims to have a fee in the same. Fitzh. N. B. 299.

QUO MINUS (Lat.). The name of a writ. In England, when the king's debtor is sued in the court of the exchequer, he may sue out a writ of quo minus, in which he suggests that he is the king's debtor, and that the defendant has done him the injury or damage complained of, quo minus sufficiens existit, by which he is less able to pay the king's debt. This was originally requisite in order to give jurisdiction to the court of exchequer; but now this suggestion is a mere form. 3 Bla. Com. 46.

QUO WARRANTO (Lat. by what authority). In Practice. The name of a writ (and also of the whole pleading) by which the government commences an action to recover an office or franchise from the person or corporation in possession of it.

The writ commands the sheriff to summon the defendant to appear before the court to which it is returnable, to show (quo warranto) by what authority he claims the office or franchise. It was a writ of right, a civil remedy to try the mere right to the franchise or office, where the person in possession never had a right to it or has forfeited it by neglect or abuse; 3 Bla. Com. 262, 263.

The action of quo warranto was prescribed by the Statute of Gloucester, 6 Edw. I., and is a limitation upon the royal prerogative. Before this statute, the king, by virtue of his prerogative, sent commissions over the kingdom to inquire into the right to all franchises, quo jure quove nomine illi retinent, etc.; and, as they were grants from the crown, if those in possession of them could not show a charter, the franchises were seized into the king's hands without any judicial proceeding. Like all other original civil writs, the writ of quo warranto issued out of chancery, and was returnable alternatively before the king's bench or justices in eyre; Co. 2d Inst. 277, 494; 2 Term 549.

Originally it was a proceeding of a criminal nature by the attorney general to punish usurpation of office; State v. Lawrence, 38 Mo. 535. This writ fell into disuse and its place was taken at an early date by an information in the nature of a quo warranto.

The statute of 9 Anne was passed to make the practice more speedy and effective. The writ could issue by leave of court at the relation of any person or persons desiring to sue or prosecute the same. The law is now chiefly statutory. Statutes referring to "quo warranto" are usually held to include information in the nature of quo warranto; State v. Gleason, 12 Fla. 190; State v. R. Co.,

34 Wis. 197 (so of a state constitution; State v. Inv. Ass'n, 142 Mo. 325, 41 S. W. 916); but it has been held otherwise; State v. Ins. Co., 8 Mo. 330.

An information in the nature of quo warranto, though in form a criminal; see Robinson v. Jones, 14 Fla. 256; is in substance a civil proceeding, to try the mere right to the franchise or office; 3 Bla. Com. 263; Com. v. County Com'rs, 1 S. & R. (Pa.) 382; 2 Kent 312; Thompson v. People, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 537, 591; but see People v. R. Co., 13 Ill. 66.

It is a matter of sound discretion to grant or refuse a writ of quo warranto, or an information in the nature thereof; Lynch v. Martin, 6 Houst. (Del.) 487; Com. v. Reigart, 14 S. & R. (Pa.) 216; People v. Keeling, 4 Colo. 129; but it has been held that this absolute discretion is only when a mere public right is asserted and that when a private right is involved, as when one is claiming an office, he is entitled to the writ as a matter of right; State v. Burnett, 2 Ala. 140; but when the information has been allowed to be filed, the court has no more power to dispense with the law applicable, or to refuse to enforce it, on the ground that the case is unimportant or impolitic, than in any other case; when the information is filed, all the discretionary power of the court is expended; State v. Brown, 5 R. I. 1.

A statutory election contest and quo warranto proceedings are accumulative remedies unless it is otherwise provided by statute; State v. Elliott, 117 Ala. 150, 23 South. 124.

A constitutional provision that the right of trial by jury shall remain inviolate, does not guarantee the right of trial by jury in quo warranto proceedings; State v. Doherty, 16 Wash. 382, 47 Pac. 958, 58 Am. St. Rep. 39.

If the proceedings refer to the usurpation of the franchises of a municipal corporation, the right to file the information is in the state, at the discretion of the attorney-general; Robinson v. Jones, 14 Fla. 256; see Rice v. Bk., 126 Mass. 300; Gibbs v. Somers Point, 49 N. J. L. 515, 10 Atl. 377; not of citizens; id. Individuals cannot take proceedings to dissolve a corporation; Centre & K. T. P. R. Co. v. McConaby, 16 S. & R. (Pa.) 144; but in regard to the election of a corporate officer, the writ may issue at the suit of the attorney-general or of any person interested; State v. Turnpike Co., 21 N. J. L. 9; Murphy v. Bank, 20 Pa. 415; but a private citizen must have some interest; State v. Vail, 53 Mo. 97. See Chicago v. People, 80 Ill. 496; State v. Martin, 46 Conn. 479. A stock-holder, whose votes were wrongly rejected at a corporate election, is the proper party to institute proceedings of quo warranto against the officers who claimed to have been elected, though the petitioner was at the same time elected to an office and his title was in dispute; Com. v. Stevens, 168 Pa. 582, 32 Atl. 111. The attorney-general may act without leave of court; Com. v. Walter, 83 Pa. 105, 24 Am. Rep. 154; Atty. Gen. v. R. Co., 38 N. J. L. 282; State v. Gleason, 12 Fla. 190; but a private relator may not; Com. v. Arrison, 15 S. & R. (Pa.) 127, 16 Am. Dec. 531. Leave is granted on a petition or motion with affidavits, upon which a rule to show cause is granted; People v. Waite, 70 Ill. 25. The writ lies against the corporate body, if it is to restrain a usurpation; Miller v. Ins. Co., 50 Mo. 56; or enforce a forfeiture; State v. Barron, 57 N. H. 498; but if it is to inquire whether a corporation has been legally organized, the writ lies against the individuals; People v. R. Co., 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 113, 30 Am. Dec. 34. Whether a corporation de facto is also one de jure can be determined only in quo warranto; Samuels v. Drainage Com'rs, 125 Ill. 536, 17 N. E. 829. Corporators and corporate officers need not be made parties; New Orleans D. R. Co. v. Louisiana, 180 U. S. 320, 21 Sup. Ct. 378, 45 L. Ed. 550.

In New York a statutory action in the nature of a quo warranto has been substituted. Code Civ. Proc. § 1983. This is a civil writ of legal, not equitable, cognizance; People v. Clute, 52 N. Y. 576. So in other states it is subject to the rules strictly applicable to civil proceedings; State v. Price, 50 Ala. 568; State v. Kupferle, 44 Mo. 154, 100 Am. Dec. 265. The terms "quo warranto" and "information in the nature of a quo warranto" are synonymous; State v. R. Co., 34 Wisc. 197; contra, State v. Stone, 25 Mo. 555; State v. Johnson, 26 Ark. 281.

Although quo warranto proceedings will lie against a municipal corporation in this country, yet they are seldom employed. See a case in State v. Bradford, 32 Vt. 50; and see State v. Miller, 66 Mo. 328; State v. Cahaba, 30 Ala. 66. They will lie against members of a city council; Com. v. Allen, 70 Pa. 465; People v. Hall, 80 N. Y. 117; State v. Gray, 23 Neb. 365, 36 N. W. 577; contra, Wyatt v. Buell, 47 Cal. 624; State v. Tomlinson, 20 Kan. 692; school trustees; Renwick v. Hall, 84 Ill. 162; a sheriff; People v. Mayworm, 5 Mich. 146; Com. v. Walter, 83 Pa. 105, 24 Am. Rep. 154; a lieutenant-governor; State v. Gleason, 12 Fla. 265; a governor; Attorney General v. Barstow, 4 Wisc. 567; a judge of probate; People v. Heaton, 77 N. C. 18; a mayor; People v. Thacher, 55 N. Y. 525, 14 Am. Rep. 312; an elector of president of the United States, proceedings being taken in the name of the United States; State v. Bowen, 8 S. C. 400; a major-general of militia; State v. Brown, 5 R. I. 1; so of other militia officers; Com. v. Small, 26 Pa. 31; State v. Utter, 14 N. J. L. 84; but see State v. Wadkins, 1 Rich. (S. C.) 42; superintendent of the poor; Taggart v. James, 73 Mich. 234, 41 N. W. 426; but not against a policeman; Atty. Gen. v. Cain, 84 Mich. 223, 47 N. W. 484. There must first be a user of the office; People v. Callaghan, 83 Ill. 128;

5 T. R. 85; but taking the oath; id.; or exercising its functions without taking the oath; Hyde v. State, 52 Miss. 665; is enough.

The writ lies to test the validity of a dram-shop license; Martens v. People, 186 Ill. 314, 57 N. E. 871; contra, Hargett v. Bell, 134 N. C. 394, 46 S. E. 749; but not against the sheriff for a failure to suppress a mob; State v. McLain, 58 Ohio St. 313, 50 N. E. 907; nor in the name of a state at the relation of a private person to dissolve a corporation or seize its franchise; 7 N. J. L. J. 82.

Mandamus will not lie to compel the Attorney-General to give leave to begin quo warranto proceedings, a discretion being entrusted to him in such matters; People v. Healy, 230 Ill. 280, 82 N. E. 599, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 603; if he refuses, one claiming election to an office may by leave of court bring quo warranto by his own relation; State v. Sadler, 25 Nev. 131, 58 Pac. 284, 59 Pac. 546, 63 Pac. 128, 83 Am. St. Rep. 573.

Quo warranto lies against a corporation to determine whether there has been a misuser or a nonuser of corporate franchises, or whether the corporation has usurped franchises never granted to it; but does not lie to test the legality of any act of the corporation; State v. Road Co., 37 Mo. App. 496.

Quo warranto is the only direct and adequate remedy for trying title to public office. The review of an election to public office by certiorari may determine collateral questions respecting validity of laws or ordinances, but can have no effect as a bar in a subsequent information in the nature of a quo warranto. The validity of proceedings for the election of a minor officer such as janitor of a court-house, may be reviewed on certiorari. An incumbent cannot proceed in quo warranto against one not in possession of the office, he must await the attack of his adversary; State v. Board, 58 N. J. L. 340, 33 Atl. 737.

Pleadings in quo warranto are anomalous. In ordinary legal proceedings, the plaintiff, whether he be the state or a person, is bound to show a case against the defendant. But in an information of quo warranto, as well as in the writ for which it is substituted, the order is reversed. The state is not bound to show anything, but the defendant is bound to show that he has a right to the franchise or office in question; and if he fail to show authority, judgment must be given against him; 4 Burr. 2146, 2127; Ang. & A. Corp. 636. To the writ of quo warranto the defendant simply pleaded his charter, which was a full answer to the writ; just as before the statute of Edward I. the production of the charter to the king's commissioners was full authority for the possession of the franchise or office. But to an information of quo warranto the plea of the defendant consists of his charter, with an absque hoc denying that he usurped the franchise, and concludes with a verification. The plea is in form a special traverse, but in substance it is not such. The information was originally a criminal proceeding, to punish the usurpation of the franchise by a fine, as well as to seize the franchise; therefore the information charged usurpation, and the defendant was compelled to deny the usurpation, as well as to show his charter, which he did in the form of an absque hoc to his plea. But when the proceeding ceased to be criminal, and, like the writ of quo warranto, was applied to the mere purpose of trying the civil right to the franchise, the absque hoc denying the usurpation became immaterial, though it is still retained in the forms; 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 106, with full and learned note. In Coke's Entries 351, there is a plea to an information of quo warranto without the absque hoc. The absque hoc, being immaterial, should not be answered by the replication, as it must always be in a special traverse; but the charter, in the first part of the plea, though occupying the place of an inducement, must be denied by the replication, its existence and character being the sole question in controversy upon which the legality of the acts of the corporation turns; Gilb. Ev. 6, 145; 10 Mod. 111, 296.

Until the statute 32 Geo. III. c. 58, the defendant could not plead double in an information of quo warranto to forfeit an office or franchise; 1 P. Wms. 220; People v. Richardson, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 113; State v. Roe, 26 N. J. L. 215.

In information of quo warranto there are two forms of judgment. When it is against an officer or against individuals, the judgment is ouster; but when it is against a corporation by its corporate name, the judgment was ouster and seizure. In the first case, there being no franchise forfeited, there is none to seize; in the last case, there is; consequently the franchise is seized; 2 Kent 312, and note; 2 Term 521, 550. The judgment is ouster and dissolution; People v. R. Co., 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 113, 30 Am. Dec. 34; but there may be a judgment of ouster of a particular franchise, and not of the whole charter; People v. R. Co., 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 113, 30 Am. Dec. 33. See as to the judgment, State v. Bradford, 32 Vt. 50; People v. Richardson, 4 Cow. (N. Y.) 120. By such judgment of ouster and seizure the franchises are not destroyed, but exist in the hands of the state; but the corporation was destroyed, and ceased to be the owner or possessor of lands or goods, or rights or credits. The lands reverted to the grantor and his heirs, and the goods escheated to the state. But, later, it has been held that the judgment must be confined to seizure of the franchises; if it be extended to seizure of the property, so far it is erroneous; State Bk. v. State, 1 Blackf. (Ind.) 267, 12 Am. Dec. 234.

After judgment of ouster in quo warranto, a de jure officer may recover the emoluments of the office, less the reasonable expenses incurred in earning the same, where the de facto officer entered the office in good faith and under color of title; Albright v. Sandoval, 216 U. S. 331, 30 Sup. Ct. 318, 54 L. Ed. 502.

Quo warranto lies against a corporation to determine its right to exercise its franchises, but not to divest it of the ownership of property, unless acquired by a usurpation of the rights of the state; State v. R. Co., 50 Ohio St. 239, 33 N. E. 1051. See SCIRE FACIAS.

The principle of forfeiture is that the franchise is a trust; and all the terms of the charter are conditions of the trust; and if any one of the conditions of the trust be violated, it will work a forfeiture of the charter. And the corporate powers must be construed strictly, and must be exercised in the manner and in the forms and by the agents prescribed in the charter; 2 Kent 298, 299; 1 Bla. Com. 485; People v. Trustees of College, 5 Wend. (N. Y.) 211; Chesapeake & O. Canal Co. v. R. Co., 4 Gill & J. (Md.) 121.

Cases of forfeiture may be divided into two great classes. Cases of perversion: as where a corporation does an act inconsistent with the nature, and destructive of the ends and purposes, of the grant. In such cases, unless the perversion is such as to amount to an injury to the public who are interested in the franchise; Cleaver v. Com., 34 Pa. 283; it will not work a forfeiture. Cases of usurpation: as, where a corporation exercises a power which it has no right to exercise. In such cases the cause of forfeiture is not determined by any question of injury to the public, but the abuse which will work a forfeiture need not be of any particular measure or extent; 3 Term 216, 246; People v. Turnpike Road, 23 Wend. (N. Y.) 242; State v. Brown, 34 Miss. 688; People v. Ridgley, 21 Ill. 65. See State v. Cahaba, 30 Ala. 66. In case of usurpation of an office or franchise by an individual, it must be of a public nature to be reached by this writ; People v. Ridgley, 21 Ill. 65; State v. Hutton, 28 Vt. 594; State v. Fisher, 28 Vt. 714; Hastings v. R. Co., 9 Cush. (Mass.) 596.

A corporation may in quo warranto be subjected to a substantial fine as well as a judgment of ouster; Standard Oil Co. v. Missouri, 224 U. S. 270, 32 Sup. Ct. 406, 56 L. Ed. 760, Ann. Cas. 1913D, 936.

By the statute of Anne, an information in the nature of quo warranto may by leave of court be applied to disputes between party and party about the right to a corporate office or franchise; State v. Gummersall, 24 N. J. L. 529; Field v. Com., 32 Pa. 478; Lindsey v. Atty. Gen., 33 Miss. 508; People v. Scannell, 7 Cal. 432. And the person at whose instance the proceeding is instituted is called the relator; 3 Bla. Com. 264. The court will not give leave to private informers to use the king's name and suit to call in question the validity of a franchise, when such persons apply under very unfavorable circumstances; 4 Burr. 2123. As to where the burden falls of showing the lawful or unlawful character of a franchise or right, see Com. v. Bk., 28 Pa. 383; People v. Mayworm, 5 Mich. 146; People v. Toll-Road Co., 100 Cal. 87, 34 Pac. 522.

The information, it is said, may be filed after the expiration of the term of office; Burton v. Patton, 47 N. C. 124, 62 Am. Dec. 194; but see High, Extr. Leg. Rem. § 633.

As to the right to maintain such proceedings for the vindication of a private right, see State R. Commission v. People, 44 Colo. 345, 98 Pac. 7, 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 810. As to the right to trial by jury, see State v. Cobb, 24 Okl. 662, 104 Pac. 361, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 639.

QUODAD HOC (Lat. as to this). A term frequently used to signify, e. g., as to the thing named, the law is so and so.

QUOD BILLA CASSETUR. See BILLA CASSETUR; CASSETUR BREVE.

QUOD CLERICI BENEFICIATI DE CANCELLARIA. A writ to exempt a clerk of the chancery from the contribution towards the proctors of the clergy in parliament, etc. Reg. Orig. 261.

QUOD COMPUTET (Lat. that he account). The name of an interlocutory judgment in an action of account-render; also the name of a decree in the case of creditors' bills against executors or administrators. Such a decree directs the master to take the accounts between the deceased and all his creditors, to cause the creditors, upon due and public notice, to come before him to prove their debts, at a certain place and within a limited period, and also directs the master to take an account of all personal estate of the deceased in the hands of the executor or administrator; Story, Eq. Jur. § 548. See JUDGMENT; ACCOUNT; CAPIAS AD COMPUTANDUM.

QUOD CUM (Lat.). In Pleading. For that whereas. A form of introducing matter of inducement in those actions in which introductory matter is allowed to explain the nature of the claim; as, assumpsit and case. Hardr. 1; 2 Show. 180.

This form is not allowable to introduce the matter which constitutes the gravamen of the charge, as such matter must be stated by positive averment, while quod cum introduces the matter which depends upon it by way of recital merely. Hence in those actions, as trespass vi et armis, in which the complaint is stated without matter of inducement, quod cum cannot be properly used; 2 Bulstr. 214. But its improper use is cured by verdict; Horton v. Monk, 1 P. A. Browne (Pa.) 68; Comyns, Dig. Pleader (C 86).

QUOD EI DEFORCEAT (Lat.). The name of a writ given by stat. Westm. 2, 13 Edw. I. c. 4, to the owners of a particular estate, as for life, in dower, by the curtesy, or in fee-tail, who are barred of the right of possession by a recovery had against them through their default or non-appearance in a possessory action; by which the right was restored to him who had been thus unwarily deforced by his own default. 3 Bla. Com. 193.

QUOD PERMITTAT (Lat.). In English Law. That he permit. The name of a writ which lies for the heir of him who is disseised of his common of pasture against the heir of the disseisor, he being dead. Termes de la Ley.

QUOD PERMITTAT PROSTERNERE (Lat. that he give leave to demolish). In English Law. The name of a writ which commands the defendant to permit the plaintiff to abate the nuisance of which complaint is made, or otherwise to appear in court and to show cause why he will not. On proof of the facts, the plaintiff is entitled to have judgment to abate the nuisance and to recover damages. This proceeding, on account of its tediousness and expense, has given way to a special action on the case.

QUOD PERSONA NEC PREBENDARIUS. A writ which lay for spiritual persons, distrained in their spiritual possessions for payment of a fifteenth with the rest of the parish. Fitz. Nat. Brev. 391.

QUOD PROSTRAVIT (Lat.). The name of a judgment upon an indictment for a nuisance, that the defendant do abate such nuisance.

QUOD RECUPERET. See JUDGMENT QUOD RECUPERET.

QUORUM. Used substantively, quorum signifies the number of persons belonging to a legislative assembly, a corporation, society, or other body, required to transact business. A quorum is such a number of the officers or members of any body as is competent by law or constitution to transact business. Snider v. Rinehart, 18 Colo. 18, 31 Pac. 716. There is a difference between an act done by a definite number of persons, and one performed by an indefinite number; in the first case a majority is required to constitute a quorum, unless the law expressly directs that another number may make one; in the latter case any number who may be present may act, the majority of those present having, as in other cases, the right to act; Ex parte Willcocks, 7 Cow. (N. Y.) 402, 17 Am. Dec. 525; 9 B. & C. 856; Horton v. Baptist Church, 34 Vt. 316.

It has been said that there are two rules as to quorum in legislative bodies: one, where the quorum is fixed by the power creating the body, in which case a majority of the specified quorum may transact business; the other, where the quorum is not fixed by such power, in which case the general rule is that a quorum is a majority of all the members: Cleveland Cotton Mills v. Co. Com'rs, 108 N. C. 678, 13 S. E. 271; Cush. Elect. § 247.

In England where the articles of a company provide that the business of a corporation shall be conducted by not less than a specified number of directors, the words are mandatory, and at least the specified number must join in the performance of any act; 16 Ch. D. 681.

In a private corporation a majority of the directors must be present to constitute a quorum, unless the charter, a valid by-law, or a usage provides a different number; 3 Thomps. Corp. § 3913; Edgerly v. Emerson, 23 N. H. 555, 55 Am. Dec. 207; but when a quorum is present a majority may act; Foster v. Planing-Mill Co., 92 Mo. 79, 4 S. W. 260; Wells v. Rubber Co., 19 N. J. Eq. 402. It is settled that those stockholders who attend a duly called stockholders' meeting may transact the business of that meeting although a majority in interest or number are not present; 1 Cook, St. & Stockh. § 607. Where a meeting is composed of an indefinite number of persons like stockholders, that is the rule; but where a definite number is involved, as directors, a majority must be present; Craig v. Church, 88 Pa. 42, 32 Am. Rep. 417.

Where articles of association did not prescribe the number of directors necessary for a quorum, it was held that the number who usually transacted the business constituted a quorum; L. R. 4 Eq. 233. A single shareholder was held not to constitute a meeting; 2 Q. B. Div. 26; at least two persons are necessary to make a corporate meeting; 46 L. J. 104. Where one stockholder, holding also proxies of the three remaining stockholders, held a meeting and voted and elected officers, the meeting was held invalid; W. N. [1877] 223. But see MEETINGS. When an authority is confided to several persons for a private purpose, all must join in the act, unless otherwise authorized; Gildersleeve v. Board, 17 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 201; otherwise if the trust is a continuous public duty; Gildersleeve v. Board, 17 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 201. See AUTHORITY; MAJORITY; PLURALITY; MEETINGS; Cook, Stockholders.

The rule of the lower house of congress, that the names of the members present who do not vote shall be noted and counted in determining the presence of a quorum to transact business, is a constitutional mode of ascertaining the presence of a quorum; U.

S. v. Ballin, 144 U. S. 1, 12 Sup. Ct. 507, 36 L. Ed. 321. In such case no quorum is present until such a number convene.

QUORUM, JUSTICES OF THE. The ancient commissions to justices of the peace ran: "Assignavimus etiam vos et quolibet duos vel plures vestrum (quorum aliquem vestrum A, B, C, D, etc., unum esse volumus) justitarios nostros ad enquirendum," etc. We have appointed you and any two or more of you (of whom we wish any one of the following, A, B, C, D, etc., to be one) as our justices, etc. The intention was that only those justices who were learned in the law should be of the quorum. They are said to have existed in Massachusetts; see Taylor's Life of Judge Philips 347.

QUOTA. That part which each one is to bear of some expense: as, his quota of this debt; that is, his proportion of such debt.

QUOTATION. In Practice. The allegation of some authority or case, or passage of some law, in support of a position which it is desired to establish.

The transcript of a part of a book or writing from a book or paper into another.

If the quotation is fair, and not so extensive as to extract the whole value or the most valuable part of an author, it will not be a violation of the copyright. It is mostly difficult to define what is a fair quotation. When the quotation is unfair, an injunction will lie to restrain the publication. See 17 Ves. 424; 1 Bell, Com. 121.

"That part of a work of one author found in another," observed Lord Ellenborough, "is not of itself piracy, or sufficient to support an action; a man may adopt part of the work of another; he may so make use of another's labors for the promotion of science and the benefit of the public." 1 Camp. 94. See Curtis, Copyr. 242; 3 Myl. & C. 737; 17 Ves. 422; Folsom v. Marsh, 2 Sto. 100, Fed. Cas. No. 4,901; 2 Beav. 6; ABRIDGMENT; COPYRIGHT; PIRACY.

See MARKET QUOTATION; PROPERTY.

QUOTIENT VERDICT. See VERDICT.

QUOUSQUE. A Latin adverb, which signifies how long, how far, until.

In old conveyances it is used as a word of limitation; 10 Co. 41.

In practice, it is the name of an execution which is to have force until the defendant shall do a certain thing. Of this kind is the capias ad satisfaciendum, by virtue of which the body of the defendant is taken into execution, and he is imprisoned until he shall satisfy the execution; 3 Bouvier, Inst. n. 3371.

R

R.; R. ET I. Rex (or Regina); Rex (or Regina) and Imperator (or Imperatrix). King (or queen); king (or queen) and emperor (or empress). Abbreviations of the titles of the British sovereign.

RACE. The term primarily means an ethnical stock; a great division of mankind having in common certain distinguishing physical peculiarities constituting a comprehensive class appearing to be derived from a distinct primitive source. A tribal or national stock, a division or subdivision of one of the great racial stocks of mankind distinguished by minor peculiarities. The word "race" connotes descent; In re Halladjian, 174 Fed. 834.

RACE DISTINCTIONS. See NEGRO.

RACING. See HORSE RACE.

RACK. An engine with which to torture a supposed criminal, in order to extort a confession of his supposed crime and the names of his supposed accomplices.

RACK RENT. In English Law. The full extended value of land left by lease, payable by a tenant for life or years. Wood, Inst. 192.

RADIOTELEGRAPHY. See WIRELESS TELEGRAPH.

RADIUS. A straight line drawn from the centre of a circle to any point of the circumference. Its length is half the diameter of that circle, or is the space between the centre and the circumference. State v. Berard, 40 La. Ann. 174, 3 South. 463.

An act prohibiting private markets within a radius of six squares of any public market was held to mean six squares measured on city streets; State v. Barthe, 41 La. Ann. 46, 6 South. 531.

A contract not to practise dentistry within a radius of ten miles was held a valid contract not to practise within ten miles of the centre point of the village; Cook v. Johnson, 47 Conn. 175, 36 Am. Rep. 64.

RADOUR. In French Law. A term including the repairs made to a ship, and a fresh supply of furniture and victuals, munitions, and other provisions required for the voyage. Pardessus, n. 602.

RAFFLE. A kind of lottery. A raffle may be described as a species of "adventure or hazard," but has been held not to be a lottery. State v. Pinchback, 2 Mills (S. C.) 128. See LOTTERY.

RAFT. See LOGS.

RAGMAN'S-ROLL, or RAGIMUND'S ROLL. A roll, called from one Ragimund, or Ragimont, a legate in Scotland, who, summoning all the beneficed clergymen in that kingdom, caused them on oath to give in the true value of their benefices, according to which they were afterwards taxed by the court of Rome. Whart. Law Lex.

RAILROAD. A road graded and having rails of iron or other material for the wheels of railroad cars to run upon.

In their modern form, railroads are usually owned by corporations; Denver & S. R. Co. v. R. Co., 2 Colo. 673. But a private individual may construct and work a railroad if he can obtain a right of way by purchase; Appeal of McCandless, 70 Pa. 210; L. R. 4 H. L. 171; Bank of Middlebury v. Edgerton, 30 Vt. 182.

Railroads were once regarded as public highways upon which private individuals might place their cars, to be drawn by the company; Com. v. R. Co., 12 Gray (Mass.) 180; Trunick v. Smith, 63 Pa. 18. A land grant conditioned that the road should be a public highway for the government, free of toll, applied only to the tracks; Lake Superior & M. R. Co. v. U. S., 93 U. S. 442, 23 L. Ed. 965.

Railroad and railway are ordinarily interchangeable terms; Gyger v. R. Co., 136 Pa. 96, 20 Atl. 399; Old Colony Trust Co. v. Rapid T. Co., 192 Pa. 596, 44 Atl. 319; State v. Brin, 30 Minn. 522, 16 N. W. 406; Massachusetts L. & T. Co. v. Hamilton, 88 Fed. 588, 32 C. C. A. 46; where a summons was against a railroad company and a judgment was entered against a railway, it was held immaterial; Chicago & I. A. L. R. Co. v. Johnston, 89 Ind. 88; so in Georgia P. R. Co. v. Propst, 83 Ala. 518, 3 South. 764. But in Munkers v. R. Co., 60 Mo. 334, railway was held to mean the rails when laid, and railroad the highway in which the railway is laid.

A railroad and a street railway are also held to be distinct and different things; Louisville & P. R. Co. v. R. Co., 2 Duv. (Ky.) 175. Whether "railroad" in a statute includes street railways depends upon the general intent of the act and the circumstances. There is probably no rule of law on the subject. See article in 33 Amer. L. Rev. 465. Thus an act forbidding the obstruction of a railroad track applies to both; Carr v. R. R., 74 Ga. 78; so does an act giving powers to railroad companies to enter into operating contracts; Chicago v. Evans, 24 Ill. 52; and an act authorizing the lease of one railroad to another; Hestonville, M. & F. P. R. Co. v. Philadelphia, 89 Pa. 210; and an act giving a right of action against any railroad for death by negligence; Johnson's Adm'r v. Ry. Co., 10 Bush (Ky.) 231; and an act relating to crossing the tracks of a railroad; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Anchors, 114 Ala. 492, 22 So. 279, 62 Am. St. Rep. 116; but a constitutional clause forbidding the merger of competing railroads was held not to apply to street railways; Gyger v. R. Co., 136 Pa. 96, 20 Atl. 399; and so of an act giving a mechanic's lien upon a "railroad or other structure." Front St. C. R. Co. v. Johnson, 2 Wash. St. 115, 25 Pac. 1084, 11 L. R. A. 693 (contra, 3 Mo. App. 559); and an early act (1857) giving a penal action against railroad companies for demanding fares in excess of the amount allowed by law; Money Penny v. R. Co., 4 Abb. Pr. n. s. (N. Y.) 357; and an act giving a laborer's lien upon a railroad or other structure and the land upon which it is erected; Front St. C. R. Co. v. Johnson, 2 Wash. St. 112, 25 Pac. 1084, 11 L. R. A. 693. A passenger railway in Fairmount Park, Philadelphia, where there are no streets but only country roads, is not a street passenger railway within the constitution of the state which requires local consent for building; Philadelphia v. McManes, 175 Pa. 33, 34 Atl. 331.

A railroad company is defined as an association of men who engage in the business of hauling passengers and freight; In re Ferguson Contracting Co., 183 Fed. 882. Neither a logging road; Ellington v. Lumber Co., 93 Ga. 53, 19 S. E. 21; McKivergan v. Lumber Co., 124 Wis. 60, 102 N. W. 332; nor a road of rails used only in the construction of a railroad; Beeson v. Busenbark, 44 Kan. 669, 25 Pac. 48, 10 L. R. A. 839; nor a construction train; Griggs v. Houston, 104 U. S. 553, 26 L. Ed. 840; come within the legal conception.

A railroad corporation is a person within the meaning of the 14th amendment; Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 18 Sup. Ct. 418, 42 L. Ed. 819.

A railroad company is a quasi-public corporation and owes certain duties to the public; Chicago, M. & St. R. Co. v. Ry. Co., 27 U. S. App. 1, 61 Fed. 993, 9 C. C. A. 659. In Georgia R. & Bank Co. v. Smith, 128 U. S. 182, 9 Sup. Ct. 47, 32 L. Ed. 377, it was said that a railroad company is a private corporation though its uses are public. In Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 18 Sup. Ct. 418, 42 L. Ed. 819, it was said that a railroad is a public highway and is created for public purposes.

The duty arising from the ownership of the franchise of a railroad is merely to meet the public requirements, and where the traffic is not sufficient to pay its operating expenses, such duty does not require its operation, and it may be abandoned; State v. Jack, 145 Fed. 281, 76 C. C. A. 165.

The charter of a public railroad requires the grant of the supreme legislative authority of the state; it is usually made to a private corporation, but sometimes upon a public one, where the stock is owned and the company controlled by the state; Redf. Railw. 17; Bradley v. R. Co., 21 Conn. 304; Turnpike Co. v. Wallace, 8 Watts (Pa.) 316.

It is sometimes by special act, but now, more commonly, under general laws. A railroad may be chartered by act of congress; Union P. R. Co. v. Lincoln Co., 1 Dill. 314, Fed. Cas. No. 14,378. If created by two states, it is a corporation of each state; Covington & C. R. Co. v. Mayer, 31 Ohio St. 317. See MERGER. Such charter, when conferred upon a private company or a natural person, as may be, is, in the absence of constitutional or statutory provisions to the contrary, irrevocable, and only subject to general legislative control, the same as other persons natural or artificial; Dartmouth College v. Woodward, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 668, 4 L. Ed. 629; 2 Kent 275; Thorpe v. R. Co., 27 Vt. 140, 62 Am. Dec. 625.

The operation of railroads, including the running of trains, is within legislative power; it may be delegated in details to an administrative body. This regulation cannot be exercised by the courts; Honolulu R. T. & L. Co. v. Hawaii, 211 U. S. 282, 29 Sup. Ct. 55, 53 L. Ed. 186; such a body is not a court; Central V. R. Co. v. Redmond, 189 Fed. 683.

See IMPAIRING THE OBLIGATION OF CONTRACTS.

But a company must be held to have accepted its rights, etc., subject to the condition that the legislature may protect the people against the exaction of unreasonable charges for the services rendered by it, subject to the constitutional guarantee for the protection of its property; Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 18 Sup. Ct. 418, 42 L. Ed. 819.

An act requiring that all regular passenger trains shall stop at all railroad stations and county seats is unconstitutional when its effect is to compel a fast interstate mail train to turn aside from its direct route to a county seat three and a half miles away, the company having provided ample accommodations for travel from such county seat; Illinois Cent. R. Co. v. Illinois, 163 U. S. 143, 16 Sup. Ct. 1096, 41 L. Ed. 107; otherwise, if applicable only to trains running within a state; Gladson v. Minnesota, 166 U. S. 427, 17 Sup. Ct. 627, 41 L. Ed. 1064. An act requiring railroad companies where there is a telegraph office to note on a blackboard in each station whether trains are late, etc., and if so, how late, is constitutional; Pennsylvania Co. v. State, 142 Ind. 428, 41 N. E. 937.

A state statute which requires railroad companies to provide separate accommodations for white and colored persons and makes a passenger who insists upon occupying a coach other than the one set apart for his race, liable to a penalty, does not violate either the thirteenth or the fourteenth amendment; Plessy v. Ferguson, 163 U. S. 537, 16 Sup. Ct. 1138, 41 L. Ed. 256.

Their charters are now usually subject to legislative control, either by virtue of a right reserved in the charter or in general laws subject to which they are organized. In either case legislation is binding upon the company. But where there is a right to repeal the charter for cause, it cannot be done without inquiry; Baltimore v. R. Co., 1 Abb. (U. S.) 9, Fed. Cas. No. 827. They are subject to the condition that the legislature may protect the people against the exaction of unreasonable charges for the services rendered by it, but under the constitutional guarantee for the protection of its property; Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 18 Sup. Ct. 418, 42 L. Ed., 819.

The power of a municipality to reduce street railway fares is subject to limitations; (1) that there is reasonable need on the part of the public of lower rates; (2) that the rates fixed by the ordinance are not unreasonable in view of all the conditions; Milwaukee Elec. Ry. & L. Co. v. Milwaukee, 87 Fed. 577. See the important case of Cent. T. Co. of New York v. R. Co., 82 Fed. 1, as to the constitutionality of an act regulating fares, and the case contra, on the same act, of Indianapolis v. Navin, 151 Ind. 139, 47 N. E. 525, 51 N. E. 80, 41 L. R. A. 337.

The right of way is generally obtained by the exercise of the right of eminent domain. This can only be done in strict conformity to the charter or grant; 4 Engl. Railw. Cas. 235, 513, 524; State v. R. Co., 6 Gill (Md.) 363. In this country, in many cases, the provisions of the charter enable companies to obtain land by purchase; Hatch v. R. Co., 25 Vt. 49. The company may enter upon lands for the purpose of making preliminary surveys, by legislative permission, without becoming trespassers, and without compensation; Cushman v. Smith, 34 Me. 247; Polly v. R. Co., 9 Barb. (N. Y.) 449; but compensation must be made or secured before the permanent occupation of the lands. See Graham v. R. Co., 27 Ind. 260, 89 Am. Dec. 498. A company may not take land for speculation, or to prevent competition; Rensselaer & S. R. Co. v. Davis, 43 N. Y. 137. It may make any use of the land acquired for the right of way, which contributes to the safe and efficient operation of the road, and which does not interfere with the rights of property pertaining to the adjacent lands; Elyton L. Co. v. R. Co., 95 Ala. 631, 10 South. 270. See EMINENT DOMAIN. The right of way of a railroad is the entire strip or tract it owns or is entitled to use for railroad purposes, and not any specific or limited part thereof upon which its main track or other specified improvements are located; St. Louis, K. C. & C. R. Co. v. R. Co., 217 U. S. 253, 30 Sup. Ct. 510, 54 L. Ed. 752; id., 152 Fed. 849, 81 C. C. A. 643. It has been said to be an easement; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Maxey, 139 Ga. 541, 77 S. E. 801; Mahar v. R. Co., 174 Mich. 138, 140 N. W. 535.

In construing the nature of the estate or interest condemned by railways under the various eminent domain statutes, the American courts arrive at three different results: (1)

That the right acquired is an absolute fee; (2) that it is a fee conditioned on the continuance of the user, with a reversionary interest over on abandonment; and (3) that it is essentially like an easement in gross; Prather v. Tel. Co., 89 Ind. 501; Currie v. Transit Co., 66 N. J. Eq. 313, 58 Atl. 308, 105 Am. St. Rep. 647; Pittsburgh, Ft. W. & C. R. Co. v. Peet, 152 Pa. 488, 25 Atl. 612, 19 L. R. A. 467.

Where by condemnation proceedings a railroad company acquired the right to enter upon and occupy the plaintiff's land for railway purposes, and later granted to the defendant the privilege of erecting poles and wires on its right of way for purposes not primarily concerning the railway business, it was held that the plaintiff could maintain trespass against the defendant telephone company; Pitcock v. Tel. Co., 31 Pa. Super. Ct. 589; 20 H. L. R. 501.

Railroad corporations possess the powers conferred upon them by charter and such as are fairly incidental thereto; and they cannot, except with the consent of the state, disengage themselves from the discharge of their functions, duties, and obligations. The general rule is that a contract by which a railroad company renders itself incapable of performing its duties to the public, or contracts beyond the scope of its powers, cannot be rendered enforceable by the doctrine of estoppel; but where the subject-matter is not foreign to the purposes of its creation, a contract embracing whatever may be fairly regarded as incidental to the things authorized, ought not, unless expressly prohibited, to be held to be ultra vires; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Gentry, 163 U. S. 364, 16 Sup. Ct. 1104, 41 L. Ed. 186.

The construction and operation of a part of its road proves an acceptance of its charter where no particular mode of acceptance is designated; St. Joseph & I. R. Co. v. Shambaugh, 106 Mo. 557, 17 S. W. 581.

The company may lay their road across a highway, but not without making compensation to the owner of the fee for the additional servitude thus imposed upon the land; Chase v. R. Co., 26 N. Y. 526; Stetson v. R. Co., 75 Ill. 74; Southern P. R. Co. v. Reed, 41 Cal. 256; 1 Exch. 723.

Steam railroads on highways impose an additional burden thereby and cannot be built without compensation to abutting land-owners; Cox v. R. Co., 48 Ind. 178; Attorney General v. R. Co., 19 N. J. Eq. 386; Pennsylvania S. V. R. Co. v. Walsh, 124 Pa. 544, 17 Atl. 186, 10 Am. St. Rep. 611; contra, Taggart v. R. Co., 16 R. I. 668, 19 Atl. 326, 7 L. R. A. 205; Newell v. R. Co., 35 Minn. 112, 27 N. W. 839, 59 Am. Rep. 303; Fulton v. Ry. T. Co., 85 Ky. 640, 4 S. W. 332, 7 Am. St. Rep. 619. In the absence of constitutional provisions, the legislature may authorize the use of streets by a steam or street railroad without municipal consent; Atlantic & P. R. Co. v. St. Louis, 66 Mo. 228; Savannah & T. R. Co. v. Savannah, 45 Ga. 602.

The legislature may authorize a railroad to be constructed under, as well as upon, highways; and when so constructed, the rights of the land-owners are determined upon the same principles as if they were built upon the surface; Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Reaney, 42 Md. 117. It may also authorize elevated railroads, or railroads built upon structures raised above the highway; Peirce, Railr. 248. See In re New York Elev. R. Co., 70 N. Y. 327; Gilbert Elev. R. Co. v. Kobbe, 70 N. Y. 361; Currier v. R. Co., 6 Blatchf. 487, Fed. Cas. No. 3,493; In re Kings Co. Elev. R. Co., 82 N. Y. 95. But a company incorporated as a street passenger railroad cannot build an elevated railroad over and along the streets of Philadelphia; Com. v. El. Ry. Co., 161 Pa. 409, 29 Atl. 112.

The construction of the road must be within the prescribed limits of the charter. The right of deviation secured by the charter or general laws is lost when the road is once located; Little Miami R. Co. v. Naylor, 2 Ohio St. 235, 59 Am. Dec. 667; Morris & E. R. Co. v. R. Co., 31 N. J. L. 205. The location can then be changed only by act of legislature; Mason v. R. Co., 35 Barb. (N. Y.) 373; Mississippi & T. R. Co. v. Devaney, 42 Miss. 555, 2 Am. Rep. 608; Morris & E. R. Co. v. R. Co., 31 N. J. L. 205. Distance, having reference either to the length of the line or to deviation, is to be measured in a straight line through a horizontal plane; 9 Q. B. 76; Barker v. R. Co., 27 Vt. 766. But charters must be taken to allow such discretion in the location of the route as is incident to an ordinary practical survey thereof, with reference to the nature of the country; Southern Min. R. Co. v. Stoddard, 6 Minn. 150 (Gil. 92). A right to build to a city named imports a right to extend within the city limits; Rio Grande R. Co. v. Brownsville, 45 Tex. 88. Where a location of a terminus was fixed at or near P. it was held that a point a mile and a half from P. was a compliance with the charter; Appeal of Parke, 64 Pa. 137. A deviation from the line specified in the charter will not be permitted; Com. v. R. Co., 27 Pa. 339, 67 Am. Dec. 471; but slight deviations may be allowed; Wood, Ry. 1104. A charter power to change the location of the line in case of any obstacle to the one first selected, will authorize a relocation before, but not after, the line has been constructed; Atkinson v. R. Co., 15 Ohio St. 21. Ordinarily the courts will not interfere with the selection of a route; Hentz v. R. Co., 13 Barb. (N. Y.) 646.

A railroad company constructing its line is bound to do so in a careful manner; and if it is so constructed it is not liable to adjacent property owners; but if it appears that it exceeded its authority, or exercised it negligently, it will become liable; Cairo & St. L. R. Co. v. Woosley, 85 Ill. 370; Woodman v. R. Co., 149 Mass. 335, 21 N. E. 482, 4 L. R. A. 213, 14 Am. St. Rep. 427; Slatten v. R. Co., 29 Ia. 153, 4 Am. Rep. 205. So if the injury amounts to taking property, as by the destruction of an easement.

A company cannot build only part of its charter line; People v. R. Co., 126 N. Y. 29, 26 N. E. 961. It cannot abandon a part; G. C. R. Co. v. R. Co., 63 Tex. 529.

Liability for the acts of contractors, subcontractors, and agents. The company are not liable for the act of a contractor or subcontractor, or their agents, if it be not in doing precisely what is contemplated in the contract; 6 M. & W. 499; Hilliard v. Richardson, 3 Gray (Mass.) 349, 63 Am. Dec. 743.

See INDEPENDENT CONTRACTOR.

Railroad companies are liable for the acts of their agents within the range of their employment; and for all acts of their agents within the most extensive range of their charter-powers; Philadelphia & R. R. Co. v. Derby, 14 How. (U. S.) 483, 14 L. Ed. 502; Noyes v. R. Co., 27 Vt. 110; but not for the wilful acts of their agents, out of the range of their employment, unless directed by the company or subsequently adopted by them; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Divinney, 66 Kan. 776, 71 Pac. 855.

Railroad companies are liable for any injury accruing to the person or property of another through any want of reasonable care and prudence on the part of their employes.

A railroad company operating its road through the streets of a populous city is bound to observe extraordinary precautions for the safety of the public, particularly at street crossings; Curley v. R. Co., 40 Ia. Ann. 810, 6 South. 103; Gulf, C. & S. F. R. Co. v. Walker, 70 Tex. 126, 7 S. W. 831, 8 Am. St. Rep. 582; Norfolk & W. R. Co. v. Burge, 84 Va. 63, 4 S. E. 21; Shelby's Admr v. R. Co., 85 Ky. 224, 3 S. W. 157.

It is the duty of the company to use on its cars, etc., all the modern improvements in machinery commonly used; Costello v. R. Co., 65 Barb. (N. Y.) 92; Forbes v. R. Co., 76 N. C. 454; Georgia P. R. Co. v. Propst, 83 Ala. 518, 3 South. 764; Metzgar v. R. Co., 76 Ia. 387, 41 N. W. 49, 14 Am. St. Rep. 224. See SAFETY APPLIANCE ACT.

Railroad companies are not required to transport the traffic of independent express companies over their lines in the manner in which such traffic is usually carried; or to do more as express carriers than to provide the public at large with reasonable express accommodation. They need not furnish all express companies equal facilities on their passenger trains; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. Co. v. Exp. Co., 117 U. S. 1, 6 Sup. Ct. 542, 628, 29 L. Ed. 791, Miller and Field, JJ., dissenting; Pfister v. R. Co., 70 Cal. 169, 11 Pac. 686, 59 Am. Rep. 404; Ilwaco R. & Nav. Co. v. R. Co., 57 Fed. 673, 6 C. C. A. 495. But it has been held that they may be compelled to admit the agents of express companies on their trains, with their safes; Alsop v. Exp. Co., 104 N. C. 278, 10 S. E. 297, 6 L. R. A. 271. An early case held that a contract giving exclusive privileges to one express company is void; Sanford v. R. Co., 2 Phila. (Pa.) 107; and in Maine a statute provides for equal facilities to all; International Exp. Co. v. Ry., 81 Me. 92, 16 Atl. 370. It may grant to an individual the exclusive privilege of entering station grounds to solicit passengers and baggage; New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Scovill, 71 Conn. 136, 41 Atl. 246, 42 L. R. A. 157, 71 Am. St. Rep. 159; Kates v. Cab Co., 107 Ga. 636, 34 S. E. 372, 46 L. R. A. 431; or to furnish lunches to passengers on its trains at a given place; Fluker v. R. & B. Co., 81 Ga. 461, 8 S. E. 529, 2 L. R. A. 843, 12 Am. St. Rep. 328; or to a corporation the exclusive right to supply drawing-room and sleeping cars for the use of passengers; Chicago, St. L. & N. O. R. Co. v. Car Co., 139 U. S. 80, 11 Sup. Ct. 490, 35 L. Ed. 97.

Hackmen have no right without permission to use station property to solicit business; Oregon S. L. R. Co. v. Davidson, 33 Utah 370, 94 Pac. 10, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 777, 14 Ann. Cas. 489; the company may confer the right on whom it chooses; New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Scovill, 71 Conn. 136, 41 Atl. 246, 42 L. R. A. 157, 71 Am. St. Rep. 159; Barney v. Steamboat Co., 67 N. Y. 301, 23 Am. Rep. 115; Oregon S. L. R. Co. v. Davidson, 33 Utah 370, 94 Pac. 10, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 777, 14 Ann. Cas. 489; Kates v. Cab Co., 107 Ga. 636, 34 S. E. 372, 46 L. R. A. 431; Boston & M. R. Co. v. Sullivan, 177 Mass. 230, 58 N. E. 689, 83 Am. St. Rep. 275; [1897] A. C. 479; Donovan v. Penn. Co., 199 U. S. 279, 26 Sup. Ct. 91, 50 L. Ed. 192; contra, Kalamazoo H. & B. Co. v. Sootsma, 84 Mich. 194, 47 N. W. 667, 10 L. R. A. 819, 22 Am. St. Rep. 693; Indianapolis U. R. Co. v. Dohn, 153 Ind. 10, 53 N. E. 937, 45 L. R. A. 427, 74 Am. St. Rep. 274; Cravens v. Rodgers, 101 Mo. 249, 14 S. W. 106; State v. Reed, 76 Miss. 211, 24 South. 308, 43 L. R. A. 134, 71 Am. St. Rep. 528; McConnell v. Pedigo, 92 Ky. 465, 18 S. W. 15. See notes in 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 777, 14 Ann. Cas. 489, and 13 L. R. A. 848; but a hackman employed by a passenger must be admitted to the station; Godbout v. Depot Co., 79 Minn. 188, 81 N. W. 835, 47 L. R. A. 532; New York, N. H. & H. R. Co. v. Scovill, 71 Conn. 136, 41 Atl. 246, 42 L. R. A. 157, 71 Am. St. Rep. 159; Griswold v. Webb, 16 R. I. 649, 19 Atl. 143, 7 L. R. A. 302.

The carrier's contract to transport and deliver freight imposes on it the obligation to transport the freight safely and promptly to the point of destination and then to deliver the same to the consignee; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. King, 104 Ark. 215, 148 S. W. 1035; who is bound to receive it when tendered at the proper place, though there may be delay; Higgins v. Exp. Co., 83 N. J. L. 398, 85 Atl. 450.

A carrier is not required to keep a car equipment sufficiently extensive to meet the maximum output of freight offered by shippers for transportation at any time of the year, but is only required to furnish car facilities to shippers to meet a demand, adjusted and regulated to utilize the company's car equipment with uniformity and regularity throughout the year; Montana, W. & S. R. Co. v. Morley, 198 Fed. 991. A carrier is not required to provide in advance for an unexpected and unprecedented rush of business. It will be excused for delay in shipping or receiving goods for shipment until such emergency is removed; St. Louis S. W. R. Co. v. Clay Co., 77 Ark. 357, 92 S. W. 531.

See EXPRESS COMPANIES; FACILITIES; INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION. See infra as to the Hepburn Act.

Since the enactment of the Hepburn Act, it is beyond the power of a state to regulate the delivery of cars for interstate shipments. It was so held as to the reciprocal demurrage law of Minnesota of 1907; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. Elevator Co., 226 U. S. 426, 33 Sup. Ct. 174, 57 L. Ed. 284, 46 L. R. A. (N. S.) 203; and of Arkansas; St. Louis, I. M. & S. R. v. Edwards, 227 U. S. 265, 33 Sup. Ct. 262, 57 L. Ed. 506.

The exclusive grants to railroad companies are to be strictly construed in favor of the corporation, and liberally expounded in favor of public rights and interests; Charles River Bridge v. Warren Bridge, 11 Pet. (U. S.) 420, 9 L. Ed. 773; Richmond, F. & P. R. Co. v. R. Co., 13 How. (U. S.) 71, 14 L. Ed. 55; Com. v. R. Co., 27 Pa. 339, 67 Am. Dec. 471 (Judge Black's celebrated opinion).

The power to build a railroad includes the power to build switches; Cleveland & P. R. Co. v. Speer, 56 Pa. 325, 94 Am. Dec. 84; but all customers have not an equal right to have switches built for them; Butchers' & D. S. Co. v. R. Co., 67 Fed. 35, 14 C. C. A. 290, 31 U. S. App. 252.

Railroad grants of lands by congress are granted in presenti, and take effect upon the section of the land when the road is definitely located, by relation, as of the date of the grant; St. Paul, M. & M. R. Co. v. Phelps, 137 U. S. 528, 11 Sup. Ct. 168, 34 L. Ed. 767. See Wisconsin Cent. R. Co. v. Price Co., 133 U. S. 496, 10 Sup. Ct. 341, 33 L. Ed. 687. When different grants cover the same premises, the earlier takes the title; Oregon Ry. & Nav. Co. v. R. Co., 130 U. S. 1, 9 Sup. Ct. 409, 32 L. Ed. 837; U. S. v. R. Co., 152 U. S. 284, 14 Sup. Ct. 598, 38 L. Ed. 443. Title does not pass until the act is complied with. Merchants Ex. Bank v. McGraw, 59 Fed. 972, 8 C. C. A. 420, 15 U. S. App. 339. See LAND GRANTS.

A company is not liable for injuries to a person who goes into its yard, merely because such yard is a dangerous place, but it must be shown to be unnecessarily dangerous and that the injury resulted from the negligence of the company; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Whitbeck, 57 Kan. 729, 48 Pac. 16.

Where a number of passengers who have right to take a certain train is in excess of its capacity, the company must exercise the same care and forethought in providing additional cars as it is bound to exercise in relation to its other passengers; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. Dumser, 161 Ill. 190, 43 N. E. 698.

It is the duty of a company to heat its cars in cold weather; Ft. Worth & D. C. R. Co. v. Hyatt, 12 Tex. Civ. App. 435, 34 S. W. 677.

When a person (in this case a physician) is, while driving along a public highway, detained for twenty minutes at a grade crossing by the negligent delay of the employees of the railroad company in opening the gates, the company is liable in damages for delay; [1895] 2 Ir. R. 255.

When no legislative prohibition is shown, a company may lease and maintain a summer hotel at its terminus; Jacksonville, M., P. Ry. & N. Co. v. Hooper, 160 U. S. 514, 16 Sup. Ct. 379, 40 L. Ed. 515.

Mandamus will lie to compel a railroad company to operate its road; People v. R. Co., 28 Hun (N. Y.) 543; Union P. R. Co. v. Hall, 91 U. S. 343, 23 L. Ed. 428 (though the business be unprofitable; State v. R. Co., 7 Neb. 357; but not where it carries traffic on another line owned by it; People v. R. Co., 103 N. Y. 95, 8 N. E. 369); also to build a bridge; People v. R. Co., 70 N. Y. 569. The remedy for abandonment of a railroad may also be by indictment or by proceedings to forfeit the charter; People v. R. Co., 24 N. Y. 261, 82 Am. Dec. 295.

An agreement whereby a railroad company has the right to run its trains into the depot of another railroad company is not a lease; Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. R. Co., 143 U. S. 596, 12 Sup. Ct. 479, 36 L. Ed. 277. See a contract for trackage in Chicago, R. I. & P. R. Co. v. R. Co., 45 Fed. 304.

A state can require a railroad company to establish stations at all villages and boroughs along its lines; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Minnesota, 193 U. S. 53, 24 Sup. Ct. 396, 48 L. Ed. 614.

It is held that the company owes no duty to a trespasser walking on its track except that of ordinary care to prevent his injury after discovering his peril; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Modawell, 151 Fed. 421, 80 C. C. A. 651, 9 L. R. A. (N. S.) 646; the obligation on the part of the company is not pre-existing, but arises at the moment of discovery, and is negative in its nature; Sheehan v. R. Co., 76 Fed. 201, 22 C. C. A. 121, 46 U. S. App. 498; Singleton v. Felton, 101 Fed. 526, 42 C. C. A. 57; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. McClish, 115 Fed. 268, 53 C. C. A. 60; it owes a trespasser no duty to keep a lookout before he is discovered, because he is unlawfully there; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Bennett, 69 Fed. 525, 16 C. C. A. 300, 32 U. S. App. 621.

It is held that a duty rests upon the company to keep a lookout for live stock on or near the track and to use reasonable, ordinary care to prevent injury to animals; Central of Georgia R. Co. v. Dumas, 131 Ala. 172, 30 South. 867; Robbins v. R. Co., 62 W. Va. 535, 59 S. E. 512; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Klee, 109 Ky. 786, 60 S. W. 705; Harris v. R. Co., 24 Okl. 341, 103 Pac. 758, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 858; that it is not enough that due care was used after discovering the animals, if by proper care they could have been discovered in time to avert the injury, is held in other cases; Carlton v. R. Co., 104 N. C. 365, 10 S. E. 516; Woodland v. R. Co., 27 Utah 543, 26 Pac. 298; Wasson v. McCook, 70 Mo. App. 393. That the track is fenced is held not to excuse failure to keep a lookout for animals; Cincinnati & Z. R. Co. v. Smith, 22 Ohio St. 227, 10 Am. Rep. 729.

It is held that no duty exists to keep a lookout in places where it is unlawful for animals to be at large; Palmer v. R. Co., 37 Minn. 223, 33 N. W. 707, 5 Am. St. Rep. 839; Ft. Worth & R. G. R. Co. v. Hudgens, 43 Tex. Civ. App. 201, 94 S. W. 378; contra, Rockford, R. I. & St. L. R. Co. v. Irish, 72 Ill. 404; Seaboard A. L. R. Co. v. Collier, 118 Ga. 463, 45 S. E. 300. See 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 858, note.

One who goes to the premises of a railroad company to meet an incoming or to accompany a departing passenger goes there under an implied invitation; Tobin v. R. Co., 59 Me. 183, 8 Am. Rep. 415; McKone v. R. Co., 51 Mich. 601, 17 N. W. 74, 47 Am. Rep. 596; Atchison, T. & S. F. R. Co. v. Cogswell, 23 Okl. 181, 99 Pac. 923, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 837; Denver & R. G. R. Co. v. Spencer, 27 Colo. 313, 61 Pac. 606, 51 L. R. A. 121; Izlar v. R. Co., 57 S. C. 332, 35 S. E. 583; Montgomery & E. R. Co. v. Thompson, 77 Ala. 448, 54 Am. Rep. 72; Sullivan v. R. Co., 39 La. Ann. 800, 2 South. 586, 4 Am. St. Rep. 239; Atlantic & B. R. Co. v. Owens, 123 Ga. 393, 51 S. E. 404.

Mere personal discomfort to neighboring property owners because of the location and operation, without negligence, of railroad tracks, depots and side yards, under legislative authority, will not give such owners ground of action against the company, but must be considered a damnum absque injuria; St. Louis, S. F. & T. R. Co. v. Shaw, 99 Tex. 559, 92 S. W. 30, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 245, 122 Am. St. Rep. 663; Aldrich v. R. Co., 195 Ill. 456, 63 N. E. 155, 57 L. R. A. 237. That occupants are disquieted and kept in a state of alarm and apprehension (if it does not result in sickness or physical injury) will give no right of action; Gossett v. R. Co., 115 Tenn. 376, 89 S. W. 737, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 97, 112 Am. St. Rep. 846. Discomfort caused solely by the growth and increase of travel gives no right of action; Louisville & N. T. Co. v. Lellyett, 114 Tenn. 368, 85 S. W. 881, 1 L. R. A. (N. S.) 49. It is said the location and operation upon a public highway may occasion incidental inconvenience to an abutting landowner, but until it cuts off or materially interrupts his means of access to his property, or imposes some additional burden upon the soil, his injury is the same in kind as the community in general. Injuries which result from a careful construction and operation of a railroad on the land of another are common to all those whose lands are in close proximity to such road; and for such injuries there can be no recovery in the absence of a statute entitling the owner to maintain such action; Decker v. R. Co., 133 Ind. 493, 33 N. E. 349. An adjoining proprietor can never be entitled to recover from a railroad company organized under the general railroad law of the state for the depreciation of the rental or sale value of the premises, because of the location of the track in the street, except upon the assumption that the location itself is unlawful. If he owns the soil in the street, the location will be unlawful; but if he does not, he must submit to the incidental losses without redress; Grand Rapids & I. R. Co. v. Heisel, 38 Mich. 62, 31 Am. Rep. 306. Legislative authority is no ground for the commission by a corporation of a private nuisance, for the legislature has no authority to grant such an exemption, but the annoyance, to constitute a nuisance, must be so great as to cause destruction to health or of property value; St. Louis, S. F. & T. R. Co. v. Shaw, 99 Tex. 559, 92 S. W. 30, 6 L. R. A. (N. S.) 245, 122 Am. St. Rep. 663.

As to injuries to property caused by blasting, see BLASTING.

In Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Fifth Baptist Church, 108 U. S. 318, 2 Sup. Ct. 719, 27 L. Ed. 739, it was held that legislative grants of privileges or powers to corporate bodies, like a railroad company, to bring its tracks and construct its works within a city, confer no license to use them in disregard of the private rights of others and with immunity for their invasion; here an engine house and repair shop were erected by legislative authority on land adjoining a place of worship, and it was held that the church could recover damages in a court of law and that equity would interfere and restrain the nuisance. In this case it was not shown that there was negligence in the operation of the company's business, but it was said that no permission given to conduct such an occupation within the limits of a city would exempt the parties from liability for damages occasioned to others, however carefully they might conduct their business; Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Fifth Baptist Church, 108 U. S. 318, 2 Sup. Ct. 719, 27 L. Ed. 739, citing Fish v. Dodge, 4 Den. (N. Y.) 312, 47 Am. Dec. 254; and see Cogswell v. R. Co., 103 N. Y. 10, 8 N. E. 537, 57 Am. Rep. 701, which is said to be nearly, if not exactly, on all fours with Baltimore & P. R. Co. v. Fifth Baptist Church, 108 U. S. 318, 2 Sup. Ct. 719, 27 L. Ed. 739; and also Cogswell v. R. Co., 103 N. Y. 10.

A state acting through an administrative body may require a railroad company to make track connections; Wisconsin, M. & P. R. Co. v. Jacobson, 179 U. S. 287, 21 Sup. Ct. 115, 45 L. Ed. 194; but such a body cannot compel a company to build branch lines, connect roads lying at a distance from each other, or make connections at every point, regardless of necessity; and an order of a railroad commission, requiring a railroad company to expend money and use its property in a specified manner, is not a mere administrative order, but is a taking of property. To be valid there must be more than mere notice and opportunity to be heard. The order itself must be justified by public necessity and not unreasonable or arbitrary; State v. Fairchild, 224 U. S. 510, 32 Sup. Ct. 535, 56 L. Ed. 863.

Neither a railroad, nor any part of its property, is subject to levy under execution, unless by statute. See East Alabama R. Co. v. Doe, 114 U. S. 340, 5 Sup. Ct. 869, 29 L. Ed. 136; Youngman v. R. Co., 65 Pa. 278; Louisville, N. A. & C. R. Co. v. Boney, 117 Ind. 501, 20 N. E. 432, 3 L. R. A. 435. See LEASE.

As to 999-year leases, see REVERSION.

As to running trains on time, see PUNCTUALITY.

Congress has passed laws affecting interstate commerce and relating to hours of service, safety appliances on railroads, and employers' liability, as to which see the various titles.

STREET RAILWAYS. As to the difference between street and steam railways, see supra.

When a railway is laid in a street, to facilitate its use by the public, it is a street railway; Nichols v. R. Co., 87 Mich. 371, 49 N. W. 538, 16 L. R. A. 371, so, if confined within the limits of a city and to be used exclusively under the streets; In re New York Dist. R. Co., 107 N. Y. 52, 14 N. E. 187. It makes no difference whether it be on, above, or below the surface; id.; see supra; or what kind of motor power it uses; Williams v. R. Co., 41 Fed. 556. The difference between street railroads and steam railroads lies in their use and not in their motive power; Massachusetts L. & T. Co. v. Hamilton, 88 Fed. 588, 32 C. C. A. 46.

Street railroads belong to the surface of an open highway. They must conform to the grade of the highway. A street railway has been said to be one which is used expressly for the transportation of passengers, and which stops its cars at frequent intervals to take on passengers. Halsey v. R. Co., 47 N. J. Eq. 380, 20 Atl. 859; Du Bois T. P. R. Co. v. R. Co., 149 Pa. 1, 24 Atl. 179. But the carriage of freight is now commonly allowed.

The right to permit their construction or refuse consent, is often vested in the local authorities. A city cannot, without legislative authority, grant the right to build a street railway; Des Moines St. R. R. Co. v. R. Co., 73 Ia. 513, 33 N. W. 610, 35 N. W. 602; Chicago v. Evans, 24 Ill. 52; Atlantic & P. R. Co. v. St. Louis, 66 Mo. 228; Covington St. Ry. Co. v. Covington, 9 Bush (Ky.) 127. See People's Railroad v. R. R., 10 Wall. (U. S.) 38, 19 L. Ed. 844. But the power to open and improve streets has been held to confer such authority; State v. Ry. Co., 85 Mo. 263, 55 Am. Rep. 361; so of a power to regulate and improve streets and regulate vehicles thereon; Brown v. Duplessis, 14 La. Ann. 842. It is also held that it cannot grant an exclusive right without legislative authority; Jackson Co. Horse R. Co. v. Ry. Co., 24 Fed. 306; New Orleans City & L. R. Co. v. New Orleans, 44 La. Ann. 748, 11 South. 77; which must be express: Booth, Rys. § 17. Where the authority is express, it cannot be delegated; State v. Bell, 34 Ohio St. 194.

A city cannot grant to individuals the exclusive right to lay tracks; Heath v. Ry. Co., 61 Ia. 11, 15 N. W. 573; State v. Trenton, 36 N. J. L. 79; Coleman v. R. Co., 38 N. Y. 201; contra, Henderson v. Ry. Co., 7 Utah 199, 26 Pac. 286.

Ordinarily, and apart from constitutional or statutory provisions, a second company may be authorized to lay additional tracks; Oakland R. Co. v. R. Co., 45 Cal. 365, 13 Am. Rep. 181; Koch v. Ry. Co., 75 Md. 222, 23 Atl. 463, 15 L. R. A. 377.

It is held that the local authorities, when their consent to building a street railway is required by law, may impose any conditions they choose; Detroit v. Ry. Co., 37 Mich. 558; Plymouth Tp. v. Ry., 168 Pa. 181, 32 Atl. 19; but it has been also held that if the conditions imposed by the local authorities relate to matters over which the legislature has entire control, the acts of the legislature cannot be affected by the local authorities; In re Kings Co. Elev. R. Co., 105 N. Y. 97, 13 N. E. 18. The legislature may impose conditions other than, and in addition to, those prescribed by the constitution, and the local authorities may prescribe conditions additional to both the constitutional and statutory provisions on the subject; In re Thirty-Fourth St. R. Co., 102 N. Y. 343, 7 N. E. 172. Where a municipality has the right to control the use of its streets, its action is not subject to judicial control; Hogencamp v. R. Co., 17 N. J. Eq. 83; Forman v. R. Co., 40 La. Ann. 446, 4 South. 246; Booth, Rys. § 40.

Where local authorities have granted a right to construct a street railway, they cannot, without the consent of the company and in the absence of a reserved right so to do, impose additional obligations; Electric Ry. Co. v. Grand Rapids, 84 Mich. 257, 47 N. W. 567; as, the use of iron poles instead of wooden poles; id.; or requiring the railway company to pave and keep in repair a portion of the street outside of the tracks; Western P. & S. Co. v. R. Co., 128 Ind. 525, 26 N. E. 188, 28 N. E. 88, 10 L. R. A. 770, 25 Am. St. Rep. 462.

The consent of the local authorities once given and accepted and acted upon, cannot be revoked; Asheville St. Ry. Co. v. Asheville, 109 N. C. 688, 14 S. E. 316; Rio Grande R. Co. v. Brownsville, 45 Tex. 88; unless reserved; Medford & C. R. Co. v. Somerville, 111 Mass. 232.

The use of its tracks by a railway company may be temporarily interrupted by municipal authorities, when necessary for the purpose of repairs on the streets; Kirby v. R. Co., 48 Md. 168, 30 Am. Rep. 455; Philadelphia & G. F. P. R. Co. v. Philadelphia, 11 Phila. (Pa.) 358; Middlesex R. Co. v. Wakefield, 103 Mass. 262.

Where a route has been established under the direction of the local authorities, the company cannot change the location so fixed without a new consent for that purpose; In re South Beach Ry. Co., 53 Hun 131, 6 N. Y. Supp. 172. The local authorities may permit the tracks to be relaid on another part of the street; Hoyle v. R. Co., 23 La. Ann. 535; and may compel a change where it has reserved the right so to do; West Philadelphia Passenger Ry. Co. v. Philadelphia, 10 Phila. (Pa.) 70. A railway company may adopt any gauge for its track which it sees fit and afterwards change the same, in the absence of anything to the contrary; Millvale v. Ry. Co., 131 Pa. 1, 18 Atl. 993, 7 L. R. A. 369; and it may ordinarily adopt any kind of rails and change the same from time to time; Trenton v. R. Co. (N. J.) 19 Atl. 263; but the rails used must be such as not to interfere with the use of the street by the public; Easton S. E. & W. E. P. Ry. Co. v. Easton, 133 Pa. 505, 19 Atl. 486, 19 Am. St. Rep. 658.

A city cannot grant the use of its streets to so many companies as to impair its public use; Grand Rapids St. R. Co. v. Ry. Co., 48 Mich. 433, 12 N. W. 643. It cannot, ordinarily, grant the right to build in a city park; New Orleans, M. & C. R. Co. v. New Orleans, 26 La. Ann. 478; Jacksonville v. Ry. Co., 67 Ill. 540. But see People v. R. Co., 76 Cal. 156, 18 Pac. 141; Philadelphia v. McManes, 175 Pa. 33, 34 Atl. 331; PARK.

The legislature, unless forbidden by the constitution, may grant a right to lay a street railway in a street; People's Passenger R. Co. of Memphis v. R. Co., 10 Wall.

(U. S.) 38, 19 L. Ed. 844; Paterson & P. H. R. Co. v. Paterson, 24 N. J. Eq. 158.

Many cases hold that a street railway is not a new servitude on the street, for which the owners of abutting lands are entitled to compensation; Phillips v. R. Co., 89 Kan. 835, 133 Pac. 429; Baker v. R. Co., 130 Ala. 474, 30 South. 464; Barsaloux v. Chicago, 245 Ill. 598, 92 N. E. 525; Stein v. Ry. Co., 132 Ky. 322, 116 S. W. 733; Paterson & P. H. R. Co. v. Paterson, 24 N. J. Eq. 158; Hodges v. R. Co., 58 Md. 603; Grand Rapids & I. R. R. Co. v. Heisel, 38 Mich. 66, 31 Am. Rep. 306; Hobart v. R. Co., 27 Wis. 194, 9 Am. Rep. 461; Elliott v. R. Co., 32 Conn. 579; Attorney General v. R. Co., 125 Mass. 515, 28 Am. Rep. 264; contra, Jaynes v. R. Co., 53 Neb. 631, 74 N. W. 67, 39 L. R. A. 751; and their consent to the construction of such railways is not necessary; but see an able dissenting opinion, Detroit City Ry. v. Mills, 85 Mich. 634, 48 N. W. 1007. It has been held that the abutting owner may recover where the tracks were laid next the curb; Cincinnati & S. G. A. St. R. Co. v. Cummins-ville, 14 Ohio St. 523.

It is held that this is so even if steam motors are used in propelling the cars; Briggs v. R. Co., 79 Me. 363, 10 Atl. 47, 1 Am. St. Rep. 316; Newell v. R. Co., 35 Minn. 112, 27 N. W. 839, 59 Am. Rep. 303; or electricity; Detroit City Ry. v. Mills, 85 Mich. 634, 48 N. W. 1007; Koch v. R. Co., 75 Md. 222, 23 Atl. 463, 15 L. R. A. 377; Taggart v. St. Ry. Co., 16 R. I. 668, 19 Atl. 326, 7 L. R. A. 205. But as to whether the use of steam on street railways imposes an additional servitude, the weight of judicial opinion is said to be very nearly evenly balanced; Booth, Rys. § 86.

The substitution of cable propulsion for horse power was held to impose no new servitude on the street; People v. Newton, 112 N. Y. 396, 19 N. E. 831, 3 L. R. A. 174; In re Third Ave. Ry. Co., 121 N. Y. 536, 24 N. E. 951, 9 L. R. A. 124; Lorie v. Ry. Co., 32 Fed. 270.

In New York it is held that street railways impose an additional burden on the streets; Craig v. R. Co., 39 N. Y. 404; Fobes v. R. Co., 121 N. Y. 505, 24 N. E. 919, 8 L. R. A. 453; unless the fee of the soil of the street is vested in the city; Chenango B. Co. v. Bridge Co., 27 N. Y. 108; but even then the abutting owner has a right of action if access to his property is cut off; Rasch v. R. Co., 198 N. Y. 385, 91 N. E. 785, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 645; Reining v. Ry. Co., 128 N. Y. 157, 28 N. E. 640, 14 L. R. A. 133.

An elevated railroad is an additional burden on the highway; Koch v. Ry. Co., 75 Md. 222, 23 Atl. 463, 15 L. R. A. 377; Story v. R. Co., 90 N. Y. 123, 43 Am. Rep. 146; American Bank Note Co. v. R. Co., 129 N. Y. 252, 29 N. E. 302; De Geofroy v. R. Co., 179 Mo. 698, 79 S. W. 386, 64 L. R. A. 959, 101 Am. St. Rep. 524; In re Opinion of the Justices, 208 Mass. 603, 94 N. E. 849. Their structures are incompatible with the free and unobstructed use of the street and abutting property owners are entitled to an injunction unless their rights have been properly acquired by the company and they have received compensation therefor. See Story v. R. Co., 90 N. Y. 122, 43 Am. Rep. 146; Reining v. Ry. Co., 128 N. Y. 157, 28 N. E. 640, 14 L. R. A. 133; Kane v. R. Co., 125 N. Y. 164, 26 N. E. 278, 11 L. R. A. 640; Hughes v. Ry. Co., 130 N. Y. 14, 28 N. E. 765; Fobes v. R. Co., 121 N. Y. 505, 24 N. E. 919, 8 L. R. A. 453. Though not owning the soil of the street, they have easements of light, air, and access therein; Hughes v. Ry. Co., 130 N. Y. 14, 28 N. E. 765; Story v. Ry. Co., 90 N. Y. 122, 43 Am. Rep. 146.

Non-abutting property owners are not entitled to damages by reason of the use of a street by an elevated railway; Mooney v. R. Co., 16 Daly (N. Y.) 145; Ottinger v. R. Co., 18 N. Y. Supp. 238.

An elevated railway in New York which has not acquired the right from abutting proprietors is a continuous trespass upon their property which gives rise to a separate cause of action at law for damages. See Pappenheim v. R. Co., 128 N. Y. 436, 28 N. E. 518, 13 L. R. A. 401, 26 Am. St. Rep. 486. Equity will prevent the continuance of trespass by including as damages injuries permanently resulting from the interference of easement with light, air, and access. An abutting owner has a right of action for the pollution of air by smoke.

Constructing an elevated railroad on pillars in a public street is held not to constitute a new servitude or an unlawful use of the street; Morris v. Traction Co., 143 Ala. 246, 38 South. 834; contra, Muhlker v. R. Co., 173 N. Y. 549, 66 N. E. 558; Calumet & C. C. & D. Co. v. Morawetz, 195 Ill. 398, 63 N. E. 165.

Constructing a subway under the surface of streets is an additional servitude, so that compensation must be made for the property actually taken and for injury done to the remainder; In re Board of Rapid Transit R. Com'rs, 197 N. Y. 81, 90 N. E. 456. The owner of the soil may recover damages from the construction of a railroad on a street dedicated by him for ordinary street purposes; Jarrett Lbr. Corp. v. Christopher, 63 Fla. 379, 61 South. 831.

In Pennsylvania a street railway on a country road in a township is an additional burden on the highway and cannot be constructed without the consent of abutting property owners, though it is otherwise as to the streets of a city or borough; Pennsylvania R. R. v. P. Ry., 167 Pa. 62, 31 Atl. 468, 27 L. R. A. 766, 46 Am. St. Rep. 659.

An electric street railway between cities and towns for the transportation of passengers, merchandise, and baggage imposes an additional servitude on the highway; Chicago & N. W. R. Co. v. R. Co., 95 Wis. 561, 70 N. W. 678, 37 L. R. A. 856, 60 Am. St. Rep. 136; contra, Mordhurst v. Traction Co., 163 Ind. 268, 71 N. E. 642, 66 L. R. A. 105, 106 Am. St. Rep. 222, 2 Ann. Cas. 967.

It is said that equity will not relieve an abutting property owner but will leave him to his remedy at law; D. M. Osborne v. R. Co., 147 U. S. 248, 13 Sup. Ct. 299, 37 L. Ed. 155. But the rule appears to be otherwise in Pennsylvania. See Pennsylvania R. R. v. P. Ry., 167 Pa. 62, 31 Atl. 468, 27 L. R. A. 766, 46 Am. St. Rep. 659.

See HIGHWAYS.

Abutting owners have sufficient interest in the streets to entitle them to question the validity of a franchise to construct, and operate a street railway system thereon; Specht v. R. Co. (N. J.) 68 Atl. 785; such an owner may enjoin the laying of a railway track on the street in front of his premises, where it is about to be laid without authority of law; Allen v. Clausen, 114 Wis. 244, 90 N. W. 181; but it has also been held that the validity of an ordinance granting the use of the streets for telegraph and telephone lines (attacked on the ground that it imposes an additional burden on the street and also grants an exclusive franchise) will not be inquired into in behalf of private citizens who do not suffer injuries not inflicted upon the general body of citizens; Patton v. Chattanooga, 108 Tenn. 197, 65 S. W. 414.

Ordinarily, a franchise to build a street railway is not exclusive; Grand Rapids St. R. Co. v. R. Co., 48 Mich. 433, 12 N. W. 643.

Ordinarily street railways have no right of eminent domain.

In Reeves v. Traction Co., 152 Pa. 163, 25 Atl. 516, the court seemed to consider that the right to build a passenger railway carries with it, at least in the absence of specific denial, the right from time to time, to operate it by new methods, but the point was not decided. An ordinance permitting the building of a horsecar railway covers an electric railway; Hudson R. Tel. Co. v. Ry. Co., 135 N. Y. 393, 32 N. E. 148, 17 L. R. A. 674, 31 Am. St. Rep. 838.

The erection of trolley poles in the middle of the street does not entitle the abutting owners to compensation; Halsey v. Ry. Co., 47 N. J. Eq. 380, 20 Atl. 859. Where electric railways are authorized the authority extends to the necessary and proper apparatus for operating them; Lockhart v. Ry. Co., 139 Pa. 419, 21 Atl. 26; including poles and wires; Halsey v. Ry. Co., 47 N. J. Eq. 380, 20 Atl. 859. But where this right encroaches on property rights of an abutting owner it should be so exercised by the company as to minimize the inconveniences and danger to such rights; Paterson Ry. Co. v. Grundy, 51 N. J. Eq. 213, 26 Atl. 788.

Poles must be so placed as not to interfere with the rights of ingress and egress to abutting property; Detroit City Ry. v. Mills, 85 Mich. 634, 48 N. W. 1007; stringing a wire along the street twenty feet above the surface is no interference with the right to light and air; Paterson Ry. Co. v. Grundy, 51 N. J. Eq. 213, 26 Atl. 788. See POLES; WIRES.

If a street railway is constructed and operated without lawful authority, it is a nuisance; Larimer & L. St. Ry. Co. v. Ry. Co., 137 Pa. 533, 20 Atl. 570; Denver & S. Ry. Co. v. Ry. Co., 2 Colo. 673; Nichols v. Ry. Co., 87 Mich. 361, 49 N. W. 538, 16 L. R. A. 371; and a railroad company cannot grant to an individual a right to operate a railroad for his private purposes over a part of its line which it does not use; Fanning v. Osborne, 102 N. Y. 441, 7 N. E. 307.

Where the use of a street is unlawful, an injunction will lie at the suit of an abutting owner; Roberts v. Easton, 19 Ohio St. 78; contra, State v. Ry. Co., 16 R. I. 533, 18 Atl. 161; Glaessner v. Brew. Ass'n, 100 Mo. 508, 13 S. W. 707; McCartney v. R. Co., 112 Ill. 611; or at the suit of a duly authorized public officer; Coast Line R. Co. v. Cohen, 50 Ga. 451; Fanning v. Osborne, 102 N. Y. 441, 7 N. E. 307; a company so operating a steam road may be indicted for a nuisance; Com. v. R. Co., 14 Gray (Mass.) 93; and, by analogy, a street railway; Booth, Rys. § 4.

A municipality can maintain proceedings in the nature of quo warranto to oust a street railway company of its franchises for non-user; State v. R. Co., 140 Mo. 539, 41 S. W. 955, 38 L. R. A. 218, 62 Am. St. Rep. 742.

A right or permit from a municipality to construct a street railway on a given street, is not a part of the company's franchise, but is property, and is an incorporeal right; Metropolitan City Ry. Co. v. R. Co., 87 Ill. 317.

Street railway companies are subject to regulation by statutes and by ordinances under the police power; Booth, Rys., § 221; such as ordinances regulating the speed of cars; Robertson v. R. Co., 84 Mo. 119; Haulon v. R. Co., 129 Mass. 310; requiring cars to stop at designated places; Citizens' St. Ry. v. Steen, 42 Ark. 321; requiring the watering of tracks; City & S. R. Co. v. Savannah, 77 Ga. 731, 4 Am. St. Rep. 106; forbidding the use of sand upon tracks; Dry Dock, E. B. & B. R. Co. v. New York, 47 Hun (N. Y.) 221.

The legislature can compel an interchange of transfers between two street railways that are independently owned and operated; District of Columbia v. Traction Co., 41 Wash. L. Rep. 766.

Where a railway company has not built all the line specified in its charter and has abandoned a part of what it had built its charter is subject to forfeiture; People v. R. Co., 126 N. Y. 29, 26 N. E. 961; G. C. R. Co. v. R. Co., 63 Tex. 529.

A street railway company owns the structure laid by it in the highway, and has a superior right to the space covered by its track; Peirce, Railr. 252. See Com. v. Temple, 14 Gray (Mass.) 69; Adolph v. R. Co., 76 N. Y. 530. The public, on foot or in carriages, may cross its tracks, and travel on the spaces covered by it, and even incidentally drive ordinary carriages on the rails. But a person driving a carriage on the track should leave it without retarding the cars; Adolph v. R. Co., 76 N. Y. 530; Chicago W. D. R. Co. v. Bert, 69 Ill. 388. It is also held that an electric street railway company has a common right in the highway with other travellers, not a superior right, and they must be so managed as not unnecessarily to interfere with the like rights of others; Laufer v. Traction Co., 68 Conn. 475, 37 Atl. 379, 37 L. R. A. 533. But its rails cannot be used by other competing common carriers driving railway or other carriages, without special legislative authority; Sixth Ave. R. Co. v. Kerr, 72 N. Y. 330; Camden H. R. Co. v. Coach Co., 31 N. J. Eq. 525; Central City H. R. Co. v. R. Co., 81 Ill. 523.

A street railway company has the use of tracks which it maintains under a claim of right, though not actually used by it; Pennsylvania Steel Co. v. Ry. Co., 191 Fed. 216.

A company may remove snow from its track to another part of the street, but in so doing, it must avoid unnecessary injury to the owners of property; Short v. R. Co., 50 Md. 73, 33 Am. Rep. 298.

When an electric street railway car is stopping at a crossing, it should not run its car in an opposite direction on the other track without warning pedestrians; Consolidated Traction Co. v. Scott, 58 N. J. L. 682, 34 Atl. 1094, 33 L. R. A. 122, 55 Am. St. Rep. 620; Driscoll v. Ry. Co., 97 Cal. 553, 32 Pac. 591, 33 Am. St. Rep. 203; contra, Scott v. R. Co., 61 Hun 627, 16 N. Y. Supp. 350; but one who crosses a street behind a moving car at a place which is not a regular crossing, is bound to look for cars on the other track; Thompson v. R. Co., 145 N. Y. 196, 39 N. E. 709; though it is held that a passenger alighting from a car has a right to presume that the other track will be kept clear; Chicago City Ry. Co. v. Robinson, 127 Ill. 9, 18 N. E. 772, 4 L. R. A. 126, 11 Am. St. Rep. 87; Dobert v. Ry. Co., 91 Hun 28, 36 N. Y. Supp. 105; but it is also held that it is a question of ordinary care; Buzby v. Traction Co., 126 Pa. 559, 17 Atl. 895, 12 Am. St. Rep. 919. Where a passenger alights from a car on a double track trolley line, it is the duty of the company to regulate the speed of its cars and to give such warning of their approach as will reasonably protect the passenger from injury; Cincinnati St. Ry. Co. v. Snell, 54 Ohio St. 197, 43 N. E. 207, 32 L. R. A. 276.

That an injury was caused by a street car running at a greater rate of speed than that prescribed by a municipal ordinance is held in some cases to establish negligence per se; Weber v. Ry. Co., 100 Mo. 194, 12 S. W. 804, 13 S. W. 587, 7 L. R. A. 819, 18 Am. St. Rep. 541; Moore v. Transit Co., 194 Mo. 1, 92 S. W. 390; to constitute negligence as a matter of law; San Antonio Traction Co. v. Upson, 31 Tex. Civ. App. 50, 71 S. W. 565; Anniston El. & G. Co. v. Elwell, 144 Ala. 317, 42 South. 45; Chicago & E. I. R. Co. v. Mochell, 193 Ill. 208, 61 N. E. 1028, 86 Am. St. Rep. 318; Tacoma Ry. & P. Co. v. Hays, 110 Fed. 496, 49 C. C. A. 115. It is evidence of negligence and admissible as such; Atlanta Consol. St. Ry. Co. v. Foster, 108 Ga. 223; 33 S. E. 886; Davis v. Traction Co., 141 N. C. 134, 53 S. E. 617; Cogswell v. Ry. Co., 5 Wash. 46, 31 Pac. 411; Huerzeler v. R. Co., 139 N. Y. 490, 34 N. E. 1101; Omaha St. Ry. Co. v. Larson, 70 Neb. 591, 97 N. W. 824; Clark v. Bennett, 123 Cal. 275, 55 Pac. 908; Baltimore City Passenger Ry. Co. v. McDonnell, 43 Md. 534; such a fact is admissible, not as evidence of negligence, but as a fact to be considered by the jury from which they may infer negligence; Creavin v. Ry. Co., 176 Mass. 529, 57 N. E. 994; Wall v. Ry. Co., 12 Mont. 44, 29 Pac. 721; Hall v. Ry. Co., 13 Utah 243, 44 Pac. 1046, 57 Am. St. Rep. 726. But such a fact has been held to be in itself no evidence of negligence; Ford's Adm'r v. City Ry., 124 Ky. 488, 99 S. W. 355, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1093, 124 Am. St. Rep. 412.

See DEPOT; FENCE; RATES; INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION; COMMON CARRIER; PASSENGER; BAGGAGE; GRADE CROSSING; RAILROAD COMMISSIONERS; LATERAL RAILROADS; STATION.

RAILROAD-AID BONDS. See BOND.

RAILROAD COMMISSIONERS. Officers appointed in various states for the supervision of the construction and operation of railroads.

A suit against railroad commissioners to restrain the enforcement of rates, as unjust, is not a suit against the state; Reagan v. Farmers' L. & T. Co., 154 U. S. 362, 14 Sup. Ct. 1047, 38 L. Ed. 1014.

RAILROAD PROPERTY. The property which is essential to a railroad company to enable it to discharge its functions and duties as a common carrier by rail. It includes the road bed, right of way, tracks, bridges, stations, rolling stock, and such like property. Lands owned and held for sale, or other disposition for profit, and in no way connected with the use or operation of the railroad, are not railroad property in the sense mentioned, but are property of the company independently of its functions and duties as a common carrier. Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Walker, 47 Fed. 681.

See RAILROAD.

RAILROAD RELIEF FUNDS. A term applied to funds raised by periodical contributions of corporation employees, or by them jointly with the corporation, for the purpose of providing relief to the employees in case of injury, and the payment of money to their families in case of death, in the service. They are usually managed jointly by the corporation and representatives of the employees, the business facilities being furnished by the corporation, which usually guarantees the funds and undertakes to make good deficiencies. Their management usually constitutes a department of the corporation business. They have been instituted in England and in some of the largest railroad systems in the United States. Compulsory contribution to funds for charitable, financial, etc., purposes, is forbidden in some states. In Massachusetts, acts provide for such societies for employees of railroad, street railroad, and steamboat companies.

Members are usually required to contract that the acceptance of relief benefits from the fund in case of injury or death shall operate as a release to the company of all rights of action for damages for injury or death made by, or on behalf of, the member or his legal representatives. Such contracts are sustained as defences to actions for personal injuries; Eckman v. R. Co., 169 Ill. 312, 48 N. E. 496, 38 L. R. A. 750; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Bell, 44 Neb. 44, 62 N. W. 314; Maine v. R. Co., 109 Ia. 260, 70 N. W. 630, 80 N. W. 315; Shaver v. Pennsylvania Co., 71 Fed. 931; Lease v. Pennsylvania Co., 10 Ind. App. 47, 37 N. E. 423; O'Neil v. Iron Co., 63 Mich. 690, 30 N. W. 688; Martin v. R. Co., 41 Fed. 125; State v. R. Co., 36 Fed. 655; 9 Q. B. Div. 357; L. R. 3 Q. B. 555.

A provision in a relief agreement that the acceptance of benefits shall bar a suit for damages for personal injury is not contrary to public policy; Hamilton v. R. Co., 118 Fed. 92; Shaver v. Pennsylvania Co., 71 Fed. 931; Day v. R. Co., 179 Fed. 26, 102 C. C. A. 654; contra, State v. Mfg. Co., 18 R. I. 16, 25 Atl. 246, 17 L. R. A. 856; Barden v. R. Co., 152 N. C. 318, 67 S. E. 971.

A contract by which, if the member or his representatives accept benefits, he or they thereby release all rights of action against the company, for damages for injury, etc., is valid; and when the injured party after the right of action has arisen accepts the benefits, he is merely settling for the past; Johnson v. R. R., 163 Pa. 133, 29 Atl. 854. See Reese v. R. Co., 233 Pa. 363, 82 Atl. 461.

But it was held that where, under such a contract, the widow of a member accepted a benefit upon her husband's death, and personally released the fund and the company, the contract of the husband did not waive a right of action, and that neither the contract nor the widow's receipt of the benefit discharged her right of action; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Wymore, 40 Neb. 645, 58 N. W. 1120. In Miller v. Ry. Co., 65 Fed. 308, the court, on a demurrer to such a defence, upheld the demurrer and held the contract and release void, and expressed its surprise at finding that several courts of unquestionable dignity and authority had sustained such defences. This case was affirmed on appeal, though not quite on such broad ground as was taken below; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Miller, 76 Fed. 439, 22 C. C. A. 264.

Where a widow had collected part of the benefits and then was defeated in an action on that ground, still she could recover the residue of the relief benefits; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Bigley, 1 Neb. (Unof.) 225, 95 N. W. 344; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Healy, 76 Neb. 783, 107 N. W. 1005, 111 N. W. 598, 10 L. R. A. (N. S.) 198, 124 Am. St. Rep. 830; contra, Snyder v. R. Co., 237 Pa. 620, 85 Atl. 991.

Disability means inability to perform such labor as the injured person was engaged in at the time of his injury or similar labor which would enable him to earn wages equally remunerative; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Olsen, 70 Neb. 570, 99 N. W. 847.

The federal Employers' Liability Act of April 22, 1908, provides that a carrier's liability for injuries to an employé is not released by his acceptance of benefits from the relief department, but the amount received must be deducted from amount of recovery. This applies to a contract made before the act was passed; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Finn, 195 Fed. 685, 117 C. C. A. 1.

A rule of a railway relief department which provides that all claims of beneficiaries shall be submitted to the superintendent, with the right of appeal to an advisory committee whose decision shall be final, does not bar the holder of a claim which has been rejected by such committee from the right of action in the courts; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Stankard, 56 Ohio St. 224, 46 N. E. 577, 49 L. R. A. 381, 60 Am. St. Rep. 745.

An Ohio act which provides that no railroad company shall require any stipulation with any person in or about to enter its employ, whereby such person agrees to waive any right of action against the company for personal injuries, and that all such agreements shall be void, is in violation of the fourteenth amendment to the federal constitution as taking away liberty of contract; Shaver v. Pennsylvania Co., 71 Fed. 931.

A railroad company maintaining a relief department is not thereby engaging in the insurance business, and an agreement by an employé that he will accept benefits from the fund in discharge of any claim for personal injuries is not invalid on that ground; King v. R. Co., 157 N. C. 44, 72 S. E. 801.

RAILROAD STATION. See STATION.

RAILWAY COMMISSIONERS. A body of three commissioners appointed under the English regulation of railways act, 1873, principally to enforce the provisions of the railway and canal traffic act, 1854, by compelling railway and canal companies to give reasonable facilities for traffic, to abstain from giving unreasonable preference to any company or person, and to forward through traffic at through rates.

RAIN-WATER. The water which naturally falls from the clouds.

No one has a right to build his house so as to cause the rain-water to fall over his neighbor's land; 1 Rolle, Abr. 107; 1 Stra. 643; Fortesc. 212; Bacon, Abr. Action on the Case (F); 5 Co. 101; unless he has acquired a right by a grant or prescription.

When the land remains in a state of nature, said a learned writer, and by the natural descent the rain-water would descend from the superior estate over the lower, the latter is necessarily subject to receive such water; 1 Lois des Batiments 15, 16. See 2 Rolle 140.

RAINY DAYS. Where a charter party (a cargo of wheat) provided that rainy days should not be counted as lay days, it excludes only rainy days on which, with reference to the facilities of the port in the way of covered docks, etc., the cargo could not be safely landed; Kerr v. Schwaner, 177 Fed. 659, 101 C. C. A. 285.

RAISE. To create. A use may be raised; i. e. a use may be created. 1 Spence, Eq. Jur. 449.

When a child has reached the age of twenty-one years, he is raised; Shoemaker v. Stobaugh, 59 Ind. 598.

RAISE REVENUE. Is to collect revenue, not necessarily to increase the amount; Perry Co. v. R. Co., 58 Ala. 546. Authority to raise money for prosecuting and defending suits only authorizes raising money by taxation and not by borrowing; Wells v. Salina, 119 N. Y. 280, 23 N. E. 870, 7 L. R. A. 759.

RANGE. A word used in the land-laws of the United States to designate the order of the location of public lands. In patents from the United States to individuals for public lands, they are described as being within a certain range.

RANGER. An officer of the forest to prevent trespassers and to drive the beasts of the forest out of the disafforested land into the forest. Their duties were limited to districts outside the forest known as purlieus.

RANK. The order or place in which officers are placed in the army and navy, in relation to others.

It is a maxim that officers of an inferior rank are bound to obey all the lawful commands of their superiors, and are justified for such obedience.

Rank is often used to express something different from office. It then becomes a designation or title of honor, dignity, or distinction conferred upon an officer in order to fix his relative position in reference to other officers in matters of privilege, precedence, and sometimes of command, or by which to determine his pay and emoluments. This is the case with the staff officers of the army; Wood v. U. S., 15 Ct. Cl. 159.

Military Rank is that character or quality bestowed on military persons which marks their station and confers eligibility to exercise command in the service. It is divided into grades which mark the different positions and powers of the different classes of persons possessing it; Army Reg. 1895. It is generally held by virtue of office in a regiment &c., but may be conferred independently of office. In each grade, date of commission &c., determines precedence. The determination by the legislative or executive branch as to the relations among officers is binding on the judicial department; De Celis's Adm'r v. U. S., 13 Ct. Cl. 117. Command is exercised by virtue of office and special assignment. Without orders an officer cannot put himself on duty except under Art. of War 22 (to quell an affray in his own or another corps, &c.), or Art. of War 122 (providing that where different corps come together the officer highest in rank shall command the whole). See Davis, Mil. Law. 560.

A Vice Admiral ranks with a Lieut. General; Rear Admiral with Major General; Commodore (abolished from the active list March 3, 1899) with Brig. General; Captain with Colonel; Commander with Lieut. Colonel; Lieut. Commander with Major; Lieutenant with Captain; Lieutenant (junior grade) with First Lieutenant; Ensign with Second Lieutenant. See R. S. § 1406. Officers of the Marine Corps are on a similar footing as those of similar grades in the army; R. S. § 1603. Precedence between officers in each branch is according to the dates of commissions; Op. A. G. Oct. 7, 1905.

The distinction between rank and office is more clearly apparent with reference to staff officers than to officers of the line, because in the latter case the words used to designate the rank and the office are usually the same, while in the former case they are always different.

In some cases, officers of the line have a rank assigned to them different from the title of their office. Selections are usually made from among officers whose rank is raised to a higher degree by the service assigned to them, but the new rank does not confer a new office.

In the army, all officers, except chaplains, are paid according to their rank; in the navy, the pay of staff officers does not depend upon their rank; and there rank only determines matter of precedence, etc., among officers.

Grade is a step or degree in either office or rank. See Wood v. U. S., 15 Ct. Cl. 151.

RANSOM. A redemption for money or other consideration of that which is taken in war. 8 Term 277.

The custom of ransom of prisoners of war, which superseded slavery, has given place to the exchange of prisoners; Risley,

LAW OF WAR 127. See PRISONERS OF WAR; RANSOM BILL.

RANSOM BILL. A contract for payment of ransom of a captured vessel, with stipulations of safe conduct if she pursue a certain course and arrive at a certain time. If found out of time or course, the safe conduct is void; Wheat. Int. L. 107. Payment cannot be enforced in England, during the war, by an action on the contract, but can in this country: 1 Kent 104; Phillips v. McCall, 4 Wash. C. C. 141, Fed. Cas. No. 11,104; Maisonnaire v. Keating, 2 Gall. 325, Fed. Cas. No. 8,978.

In England the imprisoned hostage may bring an action, based on the ransom bill for which he is hostage, for the recovery of his freedom, and thus indirect payment of the debt be compelled. Hall, Int. L. § 151.

By the general maritime law ransoms are allowed and the master of a ship may bind the whole cargo as well as the ship, by his contract for ransom; 3 C. Rob. 240. They were formerly prohibited in England, but now the queen in council may make rules for prohibiting or allowing them, under the act of 1864.

Ransoms have never been prohibited by the United States; Goodrich v. Gordon, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 6; nor by the other nations, except England; 1 Kent 112.

A belligerent may deliver up neutral property on ransoms as well as enemy's property; per Story, J., in Maisonnaire v. Keating, 2 Gall. 325, Fed. Cas. No. 8,978, where the subject of ransom is discussed.

A ransom strictly speaking is not a repurchase of the captured property, it is rather a repurchase of the actual right of the captors at the time, be it what it may, or, more properly, it is a relinquishment of all the interest or benefit which the captors might acquire or consummate in the property by the regular adjudications of a prize tribunal. There seems to be no legal difference between the case of a ransom of the property of an enemy and of a neutral, for if the property be neutral and yet there be probable cause of capture, or if the delinquency be such that the penalty of confiscation might be justly applied, there can be no intrinsic difficulty in supporting a contract by which the captors agree to waive their rights in consideration of a sum of money voluntarily paid or agreed to be paid by the captured; 3 Phil. Int. L. 645.

In the absence of stipulation, if the ransomed vessel be lost, the contract is still binding; but usually there is a clause excepting loss on the high seas, but not by stranding; 2 Halleck, Int. L., 331. Should the captor vessel, with ransom bill or hostage on board, be itself captured by the other belligerent, the ransom bill need not be paid. 2 Opp. § 195.

RAPE (Lat. rapere, to seize with violence). The carnal knowledge of a woman by a man forcibly and unlawfully against her will. Russ. Cr. L. 904.

The statute of Westminster 2, c. 34, defines the crime to be where "a man do ravish a woman, married, maid, or other, where she did not consent neither before nor after." And this statute definition has been adopted in several very recent cases. Addenda to 1 Den. Cr. Cas.; 1 Bell, Cr. Cas. 63, 71.

Much difficulty has arisen in defining the meaning of carnal knowledge, and different opinions have been entertained,—some judges having supposed that penetration alone is sufficient, while others deemed emission an essential ingredient in the crime; Hawk. Pl. Cr. b. 1, c. 41, s. 3; 12 Co. 37; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 638; 2 Chitty, Cr. Law 810. Penetration is the act of inserting the penis into the female organs of generation. 9 C. & P. 118. It was once held that in order to commit the crime of rape it is requisite that the penetration should be such as to rupture the hymen; 5 C. & P. 321. But this case has since been expressly overruled; 2 Mood. Cr. Cas. 90; 9 C. & P. 752; Whart. Cr. L. 554. In the United States in modern times the better opinion seems to be that both penetration and emission are not necessary; Pennsylvania v. Sullivan, Add. (Pa.) 143; 3 Greenl. Ev. § 410; 2 Bish. N. Cr. Law § 1131; Taylor v. State, 111 Ind. 279, 12 N. E. 400; Comstock v. State, 14 Neb. 205, 15 N. W. 355; State v. Burton, 1 Houst. Cr. Cas. (Del.) 363; Ellis v. State, 25 Fla. 702, 6 South. 768; contra, Williams v. State, 14 Ohio 222, 45 Am. Dec. 536; but later cases in that state intimated that if the question were new, the decision would be the other way; Blackburn v. State, 22 Ohio St. 102; Noble v. State, 22 Ohio St. 541. See State v. Hargrave, 65 N. C. 466. Slight penetration has been held to be sufficient; Brown v. State, 76 Ga. 623. By statute in England carnal knowledge is completely proved by proof of penetration; 9 Geo. IV. c. 31, § 18. Statutes to the same effect have been passed in some of the states; but these statutes have been thought to be merely declaratory of the common law; 3 Greenl. Ev. § 210. See, on this subject, 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 628; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 437; 1 Chitty, Med. Jur. 386; 1 Russ. Cr. Law 860. By 24 & 25 Vict. the slightest penetration is sufficient. It is to be remarked, also, that very slight evidence may be sufficient to induce a jury to believe there was emission; Pennsylvania v. Sullivan, Add. (Pa.) 143; 2 Const. 351; 1 Beck, Med. Jur. 140; 4 Chitty, Bla. Com. 213, note 8. See [1891] 2 Q. B. 149. In Scotland, emission is not requisite; 1 Swint. 93. See EMISSION.

By the term man in this definition is meant a male of the human species, of the age of fourteen years and upwards; for an infant under fourteen years is presumed by law incapable of committing this offence; Whart. Cr. L. 551; 1 Hale, Pl. Cr. 631; 8

C. & P. 738; McKinny v. State, 29 Fla. 565, 10 South. 732, 30 Am. St. Rep. 140. It cannot be shown that he was physically competent; 9 C. & P. 118. But this presumption has been held by some authorities not to be conclusive, but capable of removal by proof; Wagoner v. State, 5 Lea (Tenn.) 352, 40 Am. Rep. 36. But not only can an infant under fourteen years, if of sufficient mischievous discretion, but even a woman may be guilty as principal in the second degree; State v. Jones, 83 N. C. 605, 35 Am. Rep. 586. And such infant can be convicted of an indecent assault; Odgers, C. L. 316. And the husband of a woman may be a principal in the second degree of a rape committed upon his wife; as, where he held her while his servant committed the rape; 1 Hargr. St. Tr. 388. See People v. Chapman, 62 Mich. 280, 28 N. W. 896, 4 Am. St. Rep. 857; 2 Bish. N. Cr. L. § 1135.

Drunkenness is no excuse for rape; nor can it excuse or mitigate an assault with intent to commit a rape; State v. Carter, 98 Mo. 176, 11 S. W. 624.

The knowledge of the woman's person must be forcibly and against her will; and if her consent has not been voluntarily and freely given (when she has the power to consent), the offence will be complete, nor will any subsequent acquiescence on her part do away the guilt of the ravisher. A consent obtained from a woman by actual violence, by duress or threats of murder, or by the administration of stupefying drugs, is not such a consent as will shield the offender or turn his crime into adultery or fornication; and if the connection took place when she was in a state of insensibility from liquor, having been made drunk by the prisoner, though the liquor was given only for the purpose of exciting her, it is a rape; 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 89; 1 C. & K. 746; 12 Cox, C. C. 311; or if the woman be asleep; 14 Cox, 114. Having carnal knowledge of a woman by a fraud which induces her to suppose it is her husband, does not amount to a rape; 8 C. & P. 265, 286; 1 C. & K. 415. But there can be no doubt that the party is liable in such case to be indicted for an assault.

The injured party cannot condone the crime of rape by excusing or forgiving the guilty party; Com. v. Slaterry, 147 Mass. 423, 18 N. E. 399; or by marrying him; State v. Bartlett, 127 Ia. 689, 104 N. W. 285.

If a man has intercourse with a woman by pretending that he is performing a medical operation upon her, it is rape; 2 Q. B. D. 410. There must be an actual resistance of the will on the part of the woman; 19 L. J. M. C. 174; 1 Den. C. C. 580; Don Moran v. People, 25 Mich. 356, 12 Am. Rep. 283; and it has been held that this must be shown beyond a reasonable doubt; Huber v. State, 126 Ind. 185, 25 N. E. 904. If it appear that the intercourse was effected without her consent, the crime of rape is proved, although no positive resistance by her is shown; Mings v. Com., 85 Va. 638, 8 S. E. 474. Some authorities have held that the woman's resistance is not sufficient to render the crime rape, if finally she consent through fear, duress, or fraud, and that it must appear that she showed the utmost reluctance and resistance; Whittaker v. State, 50 Wis. 518, 7 N. W. 431, 36 Am. Rep. 856; People v. Dohring, 59 N. Y. 374, 17 Am. Rep. 349. But this is not the general rule, the better opinion being that a consent obtained by fear of personal violence is no consent—and though a man puts no hand on a woman, yet if, by the array of physical force, he so overpowers her mind that she dares not resist, he is guilty of rape; 2 Bish. Cr. L. § 1125; Whittaker v. State, 50 Wis. 518, 7 N. W. 431, 36 Am. Rep. 860. The offence of rape is complete where prosecutrix is rendered unconscious in consequence of the assault and violence; State v. Reid, 39 Minn. 277, 39 N. W. 796. It has been said that consent during any part of the act will prevent its being rape; Brown v. People, 36 Mich. 203; Whittaker v. State, 50 Wis. 518, 7 N. W. 431, 36 Am. Rep. 860; but Bishop takes the view that after the offence has been completed by penetration, no subsequent consent is of any avail to relieve the man from the charge of rape; 2 Bish. N. Cr. L. § 1122. A written statement by the prosecutrix on a trial for rape cannot be used to contradict her where she admits making it, but testifies that she did so under compulsion and that it is false; State v. Baker, 136 Mo. 74, 37 S. W. 810.

The matrimonial consent of the wife cannot be retracted; and, therefore, her husband cannot be guilty of a rape on her, as his act is not unlawful. But he may be guilty if he procure or assist another to do the act; State v. Haines, 51 La. Ann. 731, 25 South. 372, 44 L. R. A. 837.

As a child under ten years of age is incapable in law to give her consent, it follows that the offence may be committed on such a child whether she consent or not. See stat. 18 Eliz. c. 7, s. 4.

There is a recent trend in legislation in this country in the direction of raising the age of consent. This has resulted from a very active agitation on the subject largely promoted by the societies for the prevention of cruelty to children and persons who devote themselves especially to the promotion of social purity. In most of the states there are statutes, some of which are extremely drastic. The age of consent is made twelve years in Kentucky, Louisiana, Virginia; fourteen years in Alabama, Illinois, Indiana, South Carolina, Wisconsin; fifteen years in Texas; sixteen years in Arkansas, Minnesota, Montana, Oregon, Pennsylvania; eighteen years in Delaware, Colorado, Florida, Kansas, Missouri, Nebraska (chaste female, otherwise fifteen), Tennessee (chaste female, otherwise twelve), Washington, and Wyoming. See Kerr's Wharton's Cr. L. § 682.

By act of congress of March 4, 1909, it is 16 years on the high seas or on any waters within the maritime jurisdiction of the United States and out of the jurisdiction of any state, or out of the jurisdiction of any state on board any United States vessel; or on registered vessels on the Great Lakes, and on lands under the exclusive jurisdiction of the United States.

In England (act of 1888) carnal knowledge of a girl under 13 with or without consent is a felony; between 13 and 16, a misdemeanor; it is a defence that the prisoner had reasonable cause to believe that the girl was above 16. One who has such carnal knowledge, without her consent, can also be convicted of rape.

Belief that the girl was over the consent age is not a defence; People v. Ratz, 115 Cal. 132, 46 Pac. 915; State v. Sherman, 106 Ia. 684, 77 N. W. 461; nor such belief after using reasonable care to ascertain her age; Manning v. State, 43 Tex. Cr. R. 302, 65 S. W. 920, 96 Am. St. Rep. 873. Such belief cannot be used by the jury in mitigation of punishment; Smith v. State, 44 Tex. Cr. R. 137, 68 S. W. 995, 100 Am. St. Rep. 849. Want of knowledge is no defence; People v. Griffin, 117 Cal. 583, 49 Pac. 711, 59 Am. St. Rep. 216; nor the fact that the girl was large for her age and was strong; State v. Bailor, 104 Ia. 1, 73 N. W. 344.

Her relations with other men cannot be shown as tending to prove want of chastity; People v. Currie, 14 Cal. App. 69, 111 Pac. 108; nor that she made no complaint; Levy v. Territory, 13 Ariz. 425, 115 Pac. 415.

It has been questioned whether rape was a felony at common law, or was made one by a statute in the reign of Edward I. The benefit of clergy was first taken away by a statute of Elizabeth.

The proofs on the person of the woman of the commission of rape may be completely wanting; the relaxed condition of the vulva and vagina in women who have borne children, or who have experienced frequent connections, frequently precludes the appearance of the signs of violence.

Signs of implanted venereal disease may be found, and in young girls and virgins the indications of a recently ruptured hymen are to be looked for.

In English Law. A division of a county found only in Sussex, and intermediate between a county and a hundred. Vinogradoff, Engl. Soc. 97.

RAPE OF THE FOREST. Trespass committed in a forest by violence. Cowell.

RAPINE. The felonious taking of another man's personal property, openly and by violence, against his will. The civilians define rapine to be the taking with violence the movable property of another, with the fraudulent intent to appropriate it to one's own use. Leg. El. Dr. Rom. § 1071.

RAPPORT À SUCCESSION (Fr.; similar to hotchpot). In Louisiana. The reunion to the mass of the succession of the things given by the deceased ancestor to his heir, in order that the whole may be divided among the co-heirs.

The obligation to make the rapport has a triple foundation. First, it is to be presumed that the deceased intended, in making an advancement, to give only a portion of the inheritance. Second, it establishes the equality of a division, at least, with regard to the children of the same parent, who all have an equal right to the succession. Third, it preserves in families that harmony which is always disturbed by unjust favors to one who has only an equal right. Dalloz, Dict. See ADVANCEMENT; COLLATION; HOTCHPOT.

RATABLE ESTATE. Within the meaning of a tax law, taxable estate. Marshfield v. Middlesex, 55 Vt. 545.

RATABLE PROPERTY. Property in its quality and nature capable of being rated, i. e. appraised, assessed. 10 B. & S. 323; Coventry Co. v. Assessors, 16 R. I. 240, 14 Atl. 877.

RATE. A public valuation or assessment of every man's estate; or the ascertaining how much tax every one shall pay. See Pow. Mortg.; McWhorter v. Benson, 1 Hopk. Ch. (N. Y.) 37.

RATE OF EXCHANGE. In Commercial Law. The price at which a bill drawn in one country upon another may be sold in the former.

RATES. The effect of the commerce clause of the federal constitution and of the interstate commerce act must always be considered in the treatment of rates. That branch of the subject will be found under INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION, but some cases are here given.

State control over rates has been exercised as follows: Bridges; Canada Southern Ry. Co. v. Bridge Co., 8 Fed. 190. See Covington & C. Bridge Co. v. Kentucky, 154 U. S. 204, 14 Sup. Ct. 1087, 38 L. Ed. 962. Ferries; Chosen Freeholders of Hudson Co. v. State, 24 N. J. Ed. 757. Electric Light Companies; Armour Packing Co. v. Illuminating Co., 115 App. Div. 51, 100 N. Y. Supp. 605.

This power cannot be delegated to private persons or corporations; Attorney General v. R. Co., 160 Mass. 62, 35 N. E. 252, 22 L. R. A. 112; Stimson v. Booming Co., 100 Mich. 350, 59 N. W. 142. An act fixing minimum rates for railroad freight and passenger fares does not apply to the transportation of messengers and freight of express companies; Texas Exp. Co. v. R. Co., 6 Fed. 426.

The authority of a city under a street railway charter to fix the rates of fare thereon is exhausted by fixing such rates in an ordinance granting it the use of the streets; Old Colony Trust Co. v. Atlanta, 83 Fed. 39.

The right to regulate railroad rates is one of the powers of the state, inherent in every sovereignty, to be exercised by the legislature at its pleasure and one legislature cannot, by a charter granted to a railroad company though for a valuable consideration, confer on such railroad company the right to charge rates which shall be beyond the control of subsequent legislatures; Laurel Fork & S. H. R. Co. v. Transp. Co., 25 W. Va. 324; it rests upon the police power; In re Arkansas Rate Cases, 187 Fed. 290. A state may regulate in the absence of congressional action; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. R. Commission of Alabama, 208 Fed. 35.

A state requiring connecting lines to receive and carry all freight coming from their connections at rates fixed by the railroad commission is not an unlawful violation of liberty of contract; Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Big-ham (Tex.) 47 S. W. 814.

The equal protection of the laws is not denied to a railroad company by a constitutional provision which prohibits it from charging more for a shorter than for a longer haul except by permission of a railroad commission; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Kentucky, 183 U. S. 503, 22 Sup. Ct. 95, 46 L. Ed. 298.

The power to determine what compensation a public service corporation, as a telephone company, may charge for its service is a legislative and not a judicial function; Nebraska Tel. Co. v. State, 55 Neb. 627, 76 N. W. 171, 45 L. R. A. 113; Knoxville v. Water Co., 212 U. S. 1, 29 Sup. Ct. 148, 53 L. Ed. 371. Whether existing rates are reasonable is a judicial question; Madison v. Gas & Electric Co., 129 Wis. 249, 108 N. W. 65, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 529, 9 Ann. Cas. 819; Covington & L. T. R. Co. v. Sanford, 20 S. W. 1031, 14 Ky. L. Rep. 689 (a turnpike company); or whether they are so unreasonably low as to deprive the carrier of its property without compensation and therefore without due process of law; Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 18 Sup. Ct. 418, 42 L. Ed. 819. A state may authorize its railroad commission to reduce, as unreasonable, a joint through rate agreed upon by two or more railroad companies and apportion the same among the companies; Minneapolis & St. L. R. Co. v. Minnesota, 186 U. S. 257, 22 Sup. Ct. 900, 46 L. Ed. 1151.

The legislature may act directly, or, in the absence of constitutional restriction, it may commit the authority to fix rates to a subordinate body; Atlantic Coast Line R. Co. v. Com., 206 U. S. 1, 27 Sup. Ct. 585, 51 L. Ed. 933, 11 Ann. Cas. 398; Honolulu Rapid Transit & L. Co. v. Hawaii, 211 U. S. 282, 29 Sup. Ct. 55, 53 L. Ed. 186. The state may create a commission and give it the power of regulating rates and the judiciary will only interfere with such commission when it appears that it has clearly transcended its powers; Grand Trunk Ry. Co. v. R. Com., 231 U. S. 457, 34 Sup. Ct. 152, 58 L. Ed. —. The state may delegate its power to regulate charges of common carriers to a municipal corporation; Chicago Union T. Co. v. Chicago, 199 Ill. 484, 65 N. E. 451, 59 L. R. A. 631; but a county board of supervisors could not delegate its power to fix rates by entering into a contract that the question of charges should be referred, though, after a decision under the reference, it could adopt the rates fixed with the same effect as if they had been fixed by it in the beginning; San Francisco Gas Light Co. v. Dunn, 62 Cal. 580. An order of a railroad commission fixing rates is a legislative act under its delegated power. It has the same force as if made by the legislature; Grand Trunk

R. Co. v. Ind. R. R. Comm., 221 U. S. 400, 31 Sup. Ct. 537, 55 L. Ed. 786; within the meaning of the contract clause of the constitution it is a law passed by the state; St. Paul Gas Light Co. v. St. Paul, 181 U. S. 142, 21 Sup. Ct. 575, 45 L. Ed. 788. But as such an order had full legislative effect, a provision of a contract which had previously become subject to legislative operation could not be asserted against its operation; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Garrett, 231 U. S. 318, 34 Sup. Ct. 48, 58 L. Ed. —.

Every legislative rate case presents three questions of prime importance: Reasonable value of the plant; probable effect of the reduced rate upon the net income; deductions from gross receipts as a fund to preserve the plant from depreciation; Lincoln Gas & E. L. Co. v. Lincoln, 223 U. S. 349, 32 Sup. Ct. 271, 56 L. Ed. 466.

A statute regulating railroad rates does not impair the obligation of contracts unless the effect is to take from the company all the profits; Beardsley v. R. Co., 162 N. Y. 230, 56 N. E. 488.

"Reasonable" rates must be based upon the "fair value of the property being used by it for the convenience of the public"; Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 18 Sup. Ct. 418, 42 L. Ed. 819, where evidence was taken at the trial as to the investments and earnings of the railroad company, and the court said: "The question is not how much he makes out of his volume of business, but whether in each particular transaction the charge is an unreasonable exaction for the services rendered. . . . He has a right to charge for each separate service that which is a reasonable compensation therefor; and the legislature may not deny him such reasonable compensation and may not interfere simply because, out of the multitude of his transactions, the amount of his profits is large."

A state may prescribe what shall be reasonable charges for intrastate transportation. The Commerce Act expressly leaves it with the states; Minnesota Rate Cases, 230 U. S. 352, 33 Sup. Ct. 729, 57 L. Ed. 1511. This is a legislative and not a judicial act, and the legislature may act directly or, in the absence of constitutional restriction, commit the authority to a subordinate body; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Garrett, 231 U. S. 298, 34 Sup. Ct. 48, 58 L. Ed. —. Such rates are presumptively valid, but the company is entitled to have the question of whether they are confiscatory determined in judicial proceedings. And while a state may double or treble damages upon a carrier for overcharging, it cannot impose a fixed amount as liquidated damages in every case, regardless of, and in many cases many times in excess of, the actual damages; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Tucker, 230 U. S. 340, 33 Sup. Ct. 961, 57 L. Ed. 1507.

The Supreme Court does not sit as a board of review to substitute its judgment for that of the state. The question is whether the state rates are confiscatory. Where a carrier does both interstate and intrastate business, in order to determine whether intrastate rates offer a fair return, the value of the property therein employed and the rates prescribed must be considered separately, and profits and losses on interstate business cannot be offset. Property of the carrier not used in the transportation business cannot be included in the valuation as a basis for rate making; and it cannot be filed as such basis at a price above other similar property solely because it is used as a railroad, and increases in value over cost cannot be allowed over the normal increase of other similar property. There should be proper deductions for depreciation; Minnesota Rate Cases, 230 U. S. 352, 33 Sup. Ct. 729, 57 L. Ed. 1511.

The Missouri acts establishing maximum rates, wholly intrastate, are not unconstitutional. Such acts will not be declared confiscatory, in the absence of clear and convincing proof as to the value of the property used by the carrier and on which returns are based. General evidence as to assessed valuations, without showing the method of appraisement, are insufficient. The values of property used in interstate and intrastate business cannot be established by an apportionment based on the gross revenue received from each class. One person attacking an act as confiscatory cannot rely on the fact that it deprives others of their property without due process of law; Missouri Rate Cases, 230 U. S. 474, 33 Sup. Ct. 975, 57 L. Ed. 1571.

An order of a state railroad commission prescribing maximum freight rates on intrastate traffic will not be declared confiscatory when there is no proof of the value of the company's property within the state or of the receipts from its intrastate traffic or the value of that part of its property affected by the order; Wood v. Vandalia R. Co., 231 U. S. 1, 34 Sup. Ct. 7, 58 L. Ed. —.

Stockholders are not the only persons to be considered; if the establishment of new lines of transportation should cause a diminution in the tolls collected, that, in itself, is not a sufficient reason why the corporation maintaining the road should be allowed to maintain rates that would be unjust to those who use its property. It is not necessary that all corporations exacting tolls should be placed upon the same footing as regards rates; Covington & L. T. R. Co. v. Sandford, 164 U. S. 578, 17 Sup. Ct. 198, 41 L. Ed. 560.

The right to contest rates as confiscatory is not impaired by putting the rates into effect; Allen v. R. Co., 230 U. S. 553, 33 Sup. Ct. 1030, 57 L. Ed. 1625. Equity should hesitate to interfere by injunction before the rates go into operation and a fair test has been made; and where, in an action brought before the rate took effect, the complainant failed to sustain the burden of showing clearly that a rate act was confiscatory, the bill should be dismissed without prejudice to bringing another action after the rate goes into effect if it then proves to be confiscatory; Willcox v. Gas Co., 212 U. S. 19, 29 Sup. Ct. 192, 53 L. Ed. 382, 15 Ann. Cas. 1034.

Failure, in a state statute establishing a railroad commission, to provide for an appeal from its orders, does not deny to the carrier access to the courts; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Garrett, 231 U. S. 298, 34 Sup. Ct. 48, 58 L. Ed. —.

The only mode of judicial relief is by suit against the governmental authority that established the rates or is charged with the duty of enforcing them; In re Engelhard & Sons Co., 231 U. S. 646, 34 Sup. Ct. 258, 58 L. Ed. —.

Although the determination of whether a railway rate prescribed by a state statute is so low as to be confiscatory involves a question of fact, its solution raises a federal question over which the federal court has jurisdiction as one arising under the constitution of the United States; Ex parte Young, 209 U. S. 123, 28 Sup. Ct. 441, 52 L. Ed. 714, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 932, 14 Ann. Cas. 764.

A statute requiring railroads to issue mileage books at certain rates does not impair the obligation of the contract in a previous law allowing a certain company to regulate its charges, since this grant is subject to the common-law rule that charges must be reasonable and the legislature can declare what is reasonable; Dillon v. R. Co., 19 Misc. 116, 43 N. Y. Supp. 320. Contra, Attorney General v. R. Co., 160 Mass. 62, 35 N. E. 252, 22 L. R. A. 112.

As to classification affecting lines less than fifty miles in length, see Knott v. R. Co., 230 U. S. 512, 33 Sup. Ct. 983, 57 L. Ed. 1596. Electric lines and street railways may be excepted from railroad rates; id.

Where a carrier by mistake charged less for an interstate shipment of freight than the rate scheduled in accordance with the Interstate Commerce Act, the carrier may recover the sum due him under the act, for any contract at variance with the schedule rate is void; Louisiana R. & Nav. Co. v. Holly, 127 La. 615, 53 South. 882.

The right of a municipality to prescribe rates for distributing water to its inhabitants is not an exercise of the taxing power, but merely fixing the price of a commodity; Preston v. Board, 117 Mich. 589, 76 N. W. 92. It is a rightful exaction as compensation for the use of the water, and the obligation of one using the water is one of contract; St. Louis Brewing Ass'n v. St. Louis, 140 Mo. 419, 37 S. W. 525, 41 S. W. 911; under which he is obliged to pay for the water according to the published terms and conditions; Rieker v. Lancaster, 7 Pa. Super. Ct. 149.

A water company is a quasi public corporation and by the acceptance of its franchises is obliged to supply all persons along the line of its mains without discrimination and at uniform rates; Griffin v. Water Co., 122 N. C. 206, 30 S. E. 319, 41 L. R. A. 240; but the maximum rates which it is allowed to charge under its charter are not binding on consumers if discriminating and unreasonable; id. But where the city water works were extended to an outlying section of the city to serve persons living in summer cottages for a part of the year only, the city could lawfully charge a higher rate for water so furnished than in the centre of the city, notwithstanding that the construction of the works was a public use to be paid for by taxation; Souther v. Gloucester, 187 Mass. 552, 73 N. E. 558, 69 L. R. A. 309; and the placing of water meters in supplying pipes to some but not all of the buildings of a city is not a violation of a statute requiring the establishment of a uniform scale of water rates; Frothingham v. Bensen, 20 Misc. 132, 44 N. Y. Supp. 879.

In determining what is a fair rate to be charged for water the actual present value of the property and not its cost is to be taken as the basis; San Diego L. & T. Co. v. Jasper, 89 Fed. 274.

Under a constitutional provision reserving to the legislature the power to regulate by its own act or through the instrumentality of a municipality the rates to be charged by a water company supplying such municipality with water, the exercise of the power does not impair the obligation of a contract between the company and the city for higher rates, where the company was created and the contract made subsequent to the adoption of the constitution; Tampa Waterworks Co. v. Tampa, 199 U. S. 241, 26 Sup. Ct. 23, 50 L. Ed. 170, affirming Tampa v. Waterworks Co., 45 Fla. 600, 34 South. 631.

A gas company cannot discriminate by charging higher rates for gas used for lighting than for heating; Baily v. Gas-Fuel Co., 193 Pa. 175, 44 Atl. 251.

The regulation of prices to be charged consumers by gas companies is not one of the general powers of municipal government and in order to its exercise must be expressly delegated or fairly implied from some express power granted; Mills v. Chicago, 127 Fed. 731.

The courts may determine whether rates of a gas company established by statute or municipal ordinance are reasonable, but they have no power to fix such rates; People's Gas Light & Coke Co. v. Hale, 94 Ill. App. 406.

The rates charged by a gas company having the right to charge reasonable rates will be presumed to be such in the absence of proof to the contrary; Noblesville v. Gas & Imp. Co., 157 Ind. 162, 60 N. E. 1032.

In the absence of a statute, a gas company may fix its own rates, subject to common-law limitations and municipal regulations in its charter; Madison v. Gas & El. Co., 129 Wis. 249, 108 N. W. 65, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 529, 9 Ann. Cas. 819; so of an electric light company; Snell v. El. Light Co., 196 Ill. 626, 63 N. E. 1082, 58 L. R. A. 284, 89 Am. St. Rep. 341.

Where a public service corporation has a monopoly (furnishing gas in a large city), its "good-will" cannot be considered as an element in ascertaining the value of the property. Its franchises are property, and where the state has permitted it to capitalize them, their value at the time of such capitalization, but not their increased value, should be included in the value of the property. The value of the property should be determined at the time when the inquiry is made, and, as a general rule, the corporation is entitled to the benefit of increased value. Franchises, where the state has permitted them to be capitalized, may be included at their valuation at the time of such capitalization, but not their increased value; Willcox v. Gas Co., 212 U. S. 19, 29 Sup. Ct. 192, 53 L. Ed. 382, 15 Ann. Cas. 1034.

Under a statute authorizing the consolidation of gas companies and the issue of capital stock to the amount of the aggregate value of the property, franchises, etc., of the consolidated company, it has no contract right to charge such a rate as to pay in perpetuity a return on the original capitalization without regard to depreciation; In re Rebecchi, 51 Misc. 327, 100 N. Y. Supp. 335.

An act regulating the price of gas is not unconstitutional, as impairing the right of contract, provided the rate is not so low as to deprive the stockholders of the right to a reasonable profit on the actual value of the plant and property; Richman v. Gas Co., 186 N. Y. 209, 78 N. E. 871.

A municipal ordinance authorizing a natural gas company to charge certain monthly or annual rates does not authorize the company to exact a meter rate from one person alone if it is substantially higher than the flat rate charged to other customers, but the mere requirement that one consumer shall pay by the meter rate, while others pay by the flat rate, is not a violation of equal protection of the laws; Indiana N. & I. Gas Co. v. State, 158 Ind. 516, 63 N. E. 220, 57 L. R. A. 761.

Where a statute fixing the maximum rates for gas was attacked by the gas company as unconstitutional, the consumers were entitled to a continuance of the service on a payment of the rates so prescribed until determination of the constitutional question, the constitutionality of the statute being presumed until a judicial determination to the contrary; Richman v. Gas Co., 114 App. Div. 216, 100 N. Y. Supp. 81, id., 186 N. Y. 209, 78 N. E. 871.

The power of a state legislature to regulate telephone rates is plenary notwithstanding the instruments are patented; Central Union Tel. Co. v. Bradbury, 106 Ind. 1, 5 N. E. 721; after the company has accepted an ordinance imposing limitations of rates, it is estopped to deny its validity on the ground of unreasonableness; Charles Simons Sons Co. v. Tel. Co., 99 Md. 141, 57 Atl. 193, 63 L. R. A. 727.

The police power of the state to regulate street car fares does not give the legislature power to violate a charter contract fixing them; Indianapolis v. Trust Co., 83 Fed. 529, 27 C. C. A. 580.

An act of legislature limiting the fares of a street railroad company to three cents does not impair the obligation of any contract made with the city when the company took possession of the streets, as the city has no power to determine such fares as against the legislature; Indianapolis v. Navin, 151 Ind. 139, 47 N. E. 525, 51 N. E. 80, 41 L. R. A. 337.

An ordinance, legally adopted, providing that a street railway company shall not exceed a five cent fare, gives the company, upon accepting it, a contract right to charge that rate, which cannot be reduced by the city without the consent of the company; Detroit v. R. Co., 184 U. S. 368, 22 Sup. Ct. 410, 46 L. Ed. 592.

An act merely fixing the maximum rate of toll to be charged by a turnpike does not constitute a contract between the state and the turnpike company, so as to deprive the state of its power thereafter to modify or regulate the rates; Covington & L. T. R. Co. v. Sanford, 20 S. W. 1031, 14 Ky. Law Rep. 689; but the right to regulate tolls on a railroad may be granted to the company by the legislature, so as to render an attempt by a succeeding legislature to fix the rates an impairment of a contract within the federal constitution; Pingree v. R. Co., 118 Mich. 314, 76 N. W. 635, 53 L. R. A. 274.

Rates charged on a turnpike must be established by the company where there is no law or valid usage to the contrary; Wayne P. Co. v. Bosworth, 91 Ind. 210.

Where a steamship company made a lower rate to those merchants who would not ship by a rival line, it was held there was no illegal discrimination, since the concession was offered to all who would conform to the condition; Lough v. Outerbridge, 143 N. Y. 271, 38 N. E. 292, 25 L. R. A. 674, 42 Am. St. Rep. 712. It is held not illegal to make reductions to large customers as such; as transportation in large and small quantities does not involve the same amount of trouble and expense; 4 Nev. & M. 7; 4 C. B. N. S. 366; Silkman v. Board, 152 N. Y. 327, 46 N. E. 612, 37 L. R. A. 827 (a water company); contra, Scotfield v. R. Co., 43 Ohio St. 571, 3 N. E. 907, 54 Am. Rep. 846; to charge lower proportionate rates upon long press messages than upon ordinary short commercial messages; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Pub. Co., 181 U. S. 92, 21 Sup. Ct. 561, 45 L. Ed. 765, affirming id. 58 Neb. 192, 78 N. W. 519; or for hauling coal to a manufacturing company than to a coal dealer; Hoover v. R. Co., 156 Pa. 220, 27 Atl. 282, 22 L. R. A. 263, 36 Am. St. Rep. 43; or for the transportation of ten or more persons at a rate less than to a single individual for a like transportation on the same trip; Interstate Commerce Commission v. R. Co., 145 U. S. 263, 12 Sup. Ct. 844, 36 L. Ed. 699; or to charge a higher rate to persons paying their fare on the train than to those purchasing tickets at the place provided for that purpose; Wilsey v. R. Co., 83 Ky. 511; or to charge a higher freight rate on live stock than on dressed meat and packing house products; Interstate Commerce Commission v. R. Co., 209 U. S. 108, 28 Sup. Ct. 493, 52 L. Ed. 705. Railroads may not discriminate against the people of any one state, but are not necessarily bound to give the same rates to the people of all the states as the kind and amount and cost of business vary in the several states; Smyth v. Ames, 169 U. S. 466, 18 Sup. Ct. 418, 42 L. Ed. 819.

The charging or receiving a greater compensation for the shorter than for the longer haul is only forbidden when both are under substantially similar circumstances and conditions; Interstate Commerce Commission v. R. Co., 50 Fed. 295; Behlmer v. R. Co., 71 id. 835; and competition in transportation does not prevent substantially similar circumstances and conditions; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Com., 104 Ky. 226, 46 S. W. 707, 47 S. W. 210, 598, 43 L. R. A. 541 (this suit involved the construction of a state statute including a long and short haul provision similar to that in the act of congress to regulate commerce); but the right of the carrier to take into consideration the existence of competition as the producing cause of dissimilar circumstances and conditions was recognized; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Behlmer, 175 U. S. 648, 20 Sup. Ct. 209, 44 L. Ed. 309; and allowed; East Tennessee, Va. & G. R. Co. v. Commission, 181 U. S. 1, 21 Sup. Ct. 516, 45 L. Ed. 719, where it was held that competition which is controlling on traffic and rates produces in and of itself the dissimilarity of circumstances and conditions described in the statute (reversing East Tennessee, Va. & G. R. Co. v. Commission, 99 Fed. 52, 39 C. C. A. 413); Interstate Commerce Commission v. R. Co., 168 U. S. 144, 18 Sup. Ct. 45, 42 L. Ed. 414; Behlmer v. R. Co., 71 Fed. 835; Interstate Commerce Commission v. R. Co., 73 Fed. 409; Interstate Commerce Commission v. R. Co., 209 U. S. 108, 28 Sup. Ct. 493, 52 L. Ed. 705. Ocean competition may constitute a dissimilar condition; and circumstances and conditions which exist beyond the seaboard of the United States can be legitimately regarded for the purpose of justifying a difference in rates charged by railroads between import and domestic traffic; Texas

& P. Ry. Co. v. Commission, 162 U. S. 197, 16 Sup. Ct. 666, 40 L. Ed. 940. The possibility of competition arising at a particular point does not render freight rates to that point, though higher than those for a longer haul to a point where competition prevails, obnoxious to the prohibition of the interstate commerce act against a greater charge for a shorter than for a longer haul under substantially similar circumstances and conditions; Interstate Commerce Commission v. R. Co., 190 U. S. 273, 23 Sup. Ct. 687, 47 L. Ed. 1047.

Where a railroad company charged one coal company less for transportation than it charged the plaintiffs, it was not a justification that it was done in consideration of the coal company selling coal to the railroad company for its own use at a certain price and of the compromise and settlement of a claim of the coal company against the railroad company; Union Pac. Ry. Co. v. Goodridge, 149 U. S. 680, 13 Sup. Ct. 970, 37 L. Ed. 896, 149 U. S. 680.

In the absence of congressional legislation, public service corporations are amenable to common law rules of the state of the forum relative to discrimination in rates for interstate service; Western Union Tel. Co. v. Pub. Co., 181 U. S. 92, 21 Sup. Ct. 561, 45 L. Ed. 765, affirming id. 58 Neb. 192, 78 N. W. 519.

See INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION; REBATE.

RATIFICATION. An agreement to adopt an act performed by another for us.

Express ratifications are those made in express and direct terms of assent. Implied ratifications are such as the law presumes from the acts of the principal; as, if Peter buy goods for James, and the latter, knowing the fact, receive them and apply them to his own use.

Ratification of a contract implies an existing person on whose behalf the contract might have been made at the time. There cannot, in law, be a ratification of a contract which could not have been made binding on the ratifier at the time it was made, because the ratifier was not then in existence. McArthur v. Print. Co., 48 Minn. 319, 51 N. W. 216, 31 Am. St. Rep. 653.

A party from whom a contract has been wrung by duress must disclaim it on the recovery of freedom, subsequent recognition is the equivalent of ratification; Sternback v. Friedman, 23 Misc. Rep. 173, 50 N. Y. Supp. 1025.

A ratification, to be efficacious, must be made by a party who had power to do the act in the first place, and it must be made with knowledge of the material facts; Western N. Bank v. Armstrong, 152 U. S. 346, 14 Sup. Ct. 572, 38 L. Ed. 470.

Where there has been actual and positive fraud, or the adverse party has acted mala fide, there can be no such thing as a confirmation; Chamberlain v. McClurg, 8 W. & S. (Pa.) 36. The ratification of the signing of a bond by an obligor whose signature has been forged, does not render him liable thereon, there being no new consideration; Mellugh v. Schuylkill Co., 67 Pa. 391, 5 Am. Rep. 445; Workman v. Wright, 33 Ohio St. 405, 31 Am. Rep. 546; Pollock, Contr. 114. But if a contract be merely against conscience, then if a party, being fully informed of all the circumstances of it and objections to it, voluntarily confirms it, his ratification will stand; Negley v. Lindsay, 67 Pa. 217, 5 Am. Rep. 427; Hefner v. Vandolah, 62 Ill. 483, 14 Am. Rep. 106.

As to the ratification of a contract made or an act done by a person claiming to act as the agent, and as to the creation of an agency by the ratification of acts previously done, see PRINCIPAL AND AGENT.

As to ratification of treaties, see TREATY.

RATIFICATION. Confirmation; approbation of a contract; ratification.

RATIO (Lat.). A reason; a cause; a reckoning of an account.

RATIONABILIBUS DIVISIS, WRIT DE. See DE RATIONABILIBUS DEVISIS.

RATIONABILIS PARS BONORUM. See DE RATIONABILE PARTE BONORUM; REASONABLE PART.

RATIONE TENURÆ. By reason of tenure.

RATTENING. The offence on the part of members of a trades union, of causing the tools, clothes, or other property of a workman to be taken away or hidden, in order to compel him to join the union or cease working. 38 & 39 Vict. c. 86.

RAVINE. A long, deep, and narrow hollow, worn by a stream or torrent of water; a long, deep, and narrow hollow or pass through the mountains. Long v. Boone Co., 36 Ia. 60.

RAVISHED. In Pleading. A technical word necessary in an indictment for rape. No other word or circumlocution will answer. The defendant should be charged with having "feloniously ravished" the prosecutrix, or woman, mentioned in the indictment; Bac. Abr. Indictment (G 1); Com. Dig. Indictment (G 6); Hawk. Pl. Cr. 2, c. 25, s. 26; Cro. Car. 37; Co. Litt. 184, n. p; Co. 2d Inst. 180; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 447. The words "feloniously did ravish and carnally know" imply that the act was done forcibly and against the will of the woman; Harman v. Com., 12 S. & R. (Pa.) 70. See 3 Chitty, Cr. L. 812.

RAVISHMENT. In Criminal Law. An unlawful taking of a woman, or of an heir in ward. Rape, which see.

RAVISHMENT OF WARD. In English Law. The marriage of an infant ward without the consent of the guardian. It is punishable by statute Westminster 2, c. 35.

RE. FA. LO. See REFALO.

READING. The act of pronouncing aloud, or of acquiring by actual inspection, a knowledge of the contents of a writing or of a printed document.

When a person signs or executes a paper, it will be presumed that it has been read to him; see Pacific Guano Co. v. Anglin, 82 Ala. 496, 1 South. 852; New York L. Ins. Co. v. Fletcher, 117 U. S. 532, 6 Sup. Ct. 837, 29 L. Ed. 934; Pennsylvania R. Co. v. Shay, 82 Pa. 203; but this presumption may be rebutted.

See SIGNATURE.

In the case of a blind testator, if the will was not read to him, it cannot be sustained; Harrison v. Rowan, 3 Wash. C. C. 580, Fed. Cas. No. 6,141. When the testator was blind and there are any circumstances giving reasonable ground for suspicion of fraud or imposition, the burden is on those who support the will to show that it was read to him; Davis v. Rogers, 1 Houst. (Del.) 44.

Where one who cannot read or write is disqualified for jury service, the words mean that he must be able to do so in the English language; Wright v. State, 12 Tex. App. 167.

READY. Prepared. The words, "I will be ready to," are held to imply a covenant. 1 Rolle, Abr. 519, pl. 8.

READY AND WILLING. Implies capacity to act as well as disposition. 11 L. J. Ex. 322. See 5 Bing. N. C. 399; Tout Temps Priest.

READY MONEY. A bequest of ready money includes cash at the banker's, whether balance on current account, or a deposit, or withdrawable after notice; 12 L. J. Ch. 385; 27 id. 797; but not unreceived dividends on stock; 18 L. J. Ch. 401; nor money in the hands of a sales-master; 9 Ir. Eq. Rep. 398; but it has been held that a debt would pass under a bequest of ready money. 23 L. J. Ch. 496.

REAL. At Common Law. A term which is applied to land in its most enlarged signification. Real security, therefore, means the security of mortgages or other incumbrances affecting lands. 2 Atk. 806; s. c. 2 Ves. Sen. 547.

In Civil Law. That which relates to a thing, whether it be movable or immovable, lands or goods: thus, a real injury is one which is done to a thing, as a trespass to property, whether it be real or personal in the common-law sense. A real statute is one which relates to a thing, in contradistinction to such as relate to a person.

REAL ACTION. In Civil Law. One by which a person seeks to recover his property which is in the possession of another. Dig. 50. 16. 16. It is to be brought against the person who has possession.

At Common Law. One brought for the specific recovery of lands, tenements, or hereditaments. Stephen, Pl. 3.

They are droitural when they are based upon the right of property, and possessory when based upon the right of possession. They are either writs of right; writs of entry upon disseisin (which lie in the per, the per et cui, or the post), intrusion, or alienation; writs ancestral possessory, as mort d'ancestor, aiel, besaiel, coffinage, or nuper obiit. Com. Dig. Actions (D 2). The former class was divided into droitural, founded upon demandant's own seisin, and ancestral droitural upon the demandant's claim in respect of a mere right descended to him from an ancestor. Possessory actions were divided in the same way—as to the demandant's own seisin and as to that of his ancestor.

These actions were always local, and were to be brought in the country where the land lay; Bracton 189, 414. They are now pretty generally laid aside in practice, upon account of the great nicety required in their management, and the inconvenient length of their process,—a much more expeditious method of trying titles being since introduced by other actions, personal and mixed. See Stearns; Booth, Real Act.; Bac. Abr. Actions; Com. Dig. Actions; 3 Bla. Com. 118; ACTION.

REAL ASSETS. See ASSETS.

REAL CHATTELS. See CHATTEL.

REAL CONTRACT. A contract respecting real property. 3 Rep. 22 a.

In Civil Law. Those contracts which require the interposition of a thing (res) as the subject of them. See CONTRACT.

REAL COVENANT. A covenant whereby a man binds himself to pass a real thing, as lands or tenements; as, a covenant to levy a fine, etc. Shepp. Touchst. 161; Fitzh. N. B. 145; Co. Litt. 384 b.

A covenant, the obligation of which is so connected with the realty that he who has the latter is either entitled to the benefit of or liable to perform the other. 2 Bla. Com. 304, Coleridge's note; Stearns, Real Act. 134; 4 Kent 472.

A covenant by which the covenantor binds his heirs. 2 Bla. Com. 304.

Those by which a single covenantor undertakes the performance of the covenant. It frequently happens that each one of several covenantors binds himself to perform singly the whole undertaking. The words commonly used for this purpose are "severally," "each of us." Still more commonly the undertaking is both joint and several.

It is the nature of the interest, and not the form of the covenant, which determines its character in this respect; Calvert v. Bradley, 16 How. (U. S.) 580, 14 L. Ed. 1066; Capen v. Barrows, 1 Gray (Mass.) 376.

Very considerable confusion exists among the authorities in the use of the term real covenants. The definition of Blackstone which determines the character of covenants from the insertion or noninsertion of the word "heir" by the covenantor, is pretty generally rejected. Of the other definitions, that which makes a real covenant an obligation to pass realty is the most ancient. The second definition is that now ordinarily understood when the term "real covenant" is employed. The benefit of such covenants will always run with the land and can be enforced by any vendee, no matter how remote. The burden, however, will not run with the land so as to be capable of enforcement unless there be privity either of contract or estate between the plaintiff and the defendant; Spencer's Case, 1 Sm. L. C. 115. These covenants are of various kinds. Some are used in lieu of the ancient warranty. Of these the most common are covenants of warranty, both general and special, covenants of seisin, that the vendor has a good right to convey, for quiet enjoyment, for freedom from incumbrances, and for further assurance. Wms. R. P. 447. In regard to all these, it may be said that in England the right of action passes to and vests in the party in whose time the substantial breach occurs, and who ultimately sustains injury: Rawle, Cov. 324. In the United States, however, the covenants for seisin, for right to convey, and against incumbrances are usually construed to be broken as soon as made and cannot enure to the advantage of subsequent grantees. Covenants of warranty and for quiet enjoyment are, however, prospective, and no breach occurs until eviction, actual or constructive; id. 313. See COVENANT, and the various titles thereunder.

Other real covenants now in use are as follows: either to preserve the inheritance, as to keep in repair; 9 B. & C. 505; Norman v. Wells, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 148; Pollard v. Shaffer, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 210, 1 L. Ed. 104; Kellogg v. Robinson, 6 Vt. 276, 27 Am. Dec. 550; 38 E. L. & E. 462; to keep buildings insured, and reinstate them if burned; 5 B. & Ald. 1; Thomas' Adm'rs v. Vonkappff's Ex'rs, 6 Gill & J. (Md.) 372; to continue the relation of landlord and tenant, as to pay rent; Herbaugh v. Zentmyer, 2 Rawle (Pa.) 159; Hurst v. Rodney, 1 Wash. C. C. 375, Fed. Cas. No. 6,937; to do suit to the lessor's mill; 5 Co. 18; 1 B. & C. 410; to grind the tenant's corn; Dunbar v. Jumper, 2 Yeates (Pa.) 74; for the renewal of leases; Moore 159; or to protect the tenant in his enjoyment of the premises, as to warrant and defend, never to claim or assert title; Fairbanks v. Williamson, 7 Greenl. (Me.) 97; Trull v. Eastman, 3 Metc. (Mass.) 121, 37 Am. Dec. 126; to release suit and service; Co. Litt. 384 b; to produce title-deeds in defence of the grantee's title; Dig. tit. xxxii. c. 27, § 99; 1 S. & S. 449; to supply water to the premises; 4 B. & Ald. 266; to draw water off from a mill-pond; Morse v. Aldrich, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 449; not to establish another mill on the same stream; Norman v. Wells, 17 Wend. (N. Y.) 136; not to erect buildings on adjacent land; Trustees of Waretown v. Cowen, 4 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 510; to use the land in a specified manner; 13 Sm. 228; generally to create or preserve easements for the benefit of the land granted; Keteltas v. Penfold, 4 E. D. Sm. (N. Y.) 122; Weyman's Ex'rs v. Ringold, 1 Bradf. (N. Y.) 40. See 2 Greenl. Ev. § 240; 2 Washb. R. P. 648; Spencer's Case, 1 Sm. L. C. 115.

REAL EFFECTS. Real property. 1 Cowp. 307. See EFFECTS; REAL PROPERTY.

REAL ESTATE. Landed property. See LAND; REAL PROPERTY.

REAL ESTATE BROKER. One who engages in the purchase and sale of real estate as a business, and holds himself out to the public in that character and capacity. Chadwick v. Collins, 26 Pa. 138.

Where a broker contracts to produce a purchaser who shall actually buy, he has performed his contract by the production of one financially able, with whom the owner actually makes an enforceable contract of sale; Lunney v. Healey, 56 Neb. 313, 76 N. W. 558, 44 L. R. A. 593; Condict v. Cowdrey, 139 N. Y. 273, 34 N. E. 781; Middleton v. Thompson, 163 Pa. 112, 29 Atl. 796; Halsey v. Monteiro, 92 Va. 581, 24 S. E. 258; Donohue v. Padden, 93 Wis. 20, 66 N. W. 804; Carpenter v. Rynders, 52 Mo. 278; Phelps v. Prusch, 83 Cal. 628, 23 Pac. 1111; Hungerford v. Hicks, 39 Conn. 259; Wilson v. Mason, 158 Ill. 304, 42 N. E. 134, 49 Am. St. Rep. 162; Cassady v. Seeley, 69 Ia. 509, 29 N. W. 432.

In order to entitle a broker to commissions, there must be an actual sale, vesting a right to the purchase money in the vendor and transferring the right of property to the purchaser; Ormsby v. Graham, 123 Ia. 202, 98 N. W. 724, where a consummated sale is defined to be one consummated by such a contract as will be enforced by the courts, if enforcement be demanded.

If the purchaser is unable to complete the sale and is obliged to pay a forfeit for his default, the broker can recover no share of such forfeit money, as his commission; Kimberly v. Henderson, 29 Md. 515; and so where a part of the purchase price has been paid and the purchaser is unable to pay the residue; Riggs v. Turnbull, 105 Md. 135, 66 Atl. 13, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 824, 11 Ann. Cas. 783.

Although the broker has spent time and money in finding a buyer, yet if he fails or abandons his effort or his authority is duly terminated, he earns no commission although he may have actually helped to bring about a sale subsequently made and to parties introduced by him, unless the broker's sale fails by the fault of the principal or he capriciously changes his mind, or the title is defective; Sibbald v. Iron Co., 83 N. Y. 378, 38 Am. Rep. 441; Muldoon v. Muldoon, 133 Mass. 110; Rockwell v. Newton, 44 Conn. 337; or because of certain erroneous representations of the owner; Dotson v. Milliken, 209 U. S. 237, 28 Sup. Ct. 489, 52 L. Ed. 768.

A broker did not lose his commissions for procuring a mortgage loan where it failed because the lender demanded an indemnity bond against liens, the time for filing which had elapsed, and refused to accept a cash deposit with written evidence that no liens existed; Silberberg v. Chipman, 42 Colo. 20, 93 Pac. 1130, 15 L. R. A. (N. S.) 187.

A statute providing that contracts with brokers for the sale of land must be in writing and subscribed by the parties is constitutional, and means no more than an extension of the statute of frauds; Covey v. Henry, 71 Neb. 118, 98 N. W. 434; under a like statute it was held that, where there was no writing, a broker who had rendered services could not recover commissions; Leimbach v. Regner, 70 N. J. L. 608, 57 Atl. 138; to the same effect, Jamison v. Hyde, 141 Cal. 109, 74 Pac. 695; Marshall v. Terise, 33 Mont. 28, 81 Pac. 400.

Authority to close a binding contract must be sufficiently conferred; Weatherhead v. Ettinger, 78 Ohio St. 104, 84 N. E. 598, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 210. Instructions to sell if he can, and for certain price, is not authority to make a binding contract; Morris v. Ruddy, 20 N. J. Eq. 236; nor is a letter stating what he would sell for; Gilbert v. Baxter, 71 Ia. 327, 32 N. W. 364; Simmons v. Kramer, 88 Va. 411, 13 S. E. 902; nor leaving a list of property with a broker; Halsell v. Renfrow, 14 Okl. 674, 78 Pac. 118, 2 Ann. Cas. 286. But it is held in England that instructions to a broker to sell property, with an agreement to pay a commission, authorized the broker to make a binding contract and sign it; [1900] 2 Ch. 267.

Where the contract with the agent stipulates a definite time within which the agent may sell, it gives the agent the exclusive right to sell within the time and the principal cannot revoke the agency; Levy v. Rothe, 17 Misc. Rep. 402, 39 N. Y. Supp. 1057; Green v. Cole, 127 Mo. 587, 30 S. W. 135. The broker takes the chance of the owner making a sale himself; Gilbert v. Coons, 37 Ill. App. 448; Dole v. Sherwood, 41 Minn. 535, 43 N. W. 569, 5 L. R. A. 720, 16 Am. St. Rep. 731; and in the absence of bad faith the owner may, after the broker's time limit has expired, sell to a customer introduced by the broker within the time limit; Page v. Griffin, 71 Mo. App. 524; Neal v. Lehman, 11 Tex. Civ. App. 461, 34 S. W. 153; for a higher price; Decker v. Klingman, 149 Mich. 96, 112 N. W. 727; or a lower price; Loxley v. Studebaker, 75 N. J. L. 599, 68 Atl. 98; Brown v. Mason, 155 Cal. 155, 99 Pac. 867, 12 L. R. A. (N. S.) 328.

If, after the broker has been allowed a reasonable time within which to produce a buyer and effect a sale, he has failed to do so and the seller fairly and in good faith has terminated the agency and sought other assistance by the aid of which a sale is consummated, it does not give the original broker a right to commissions because the purchaser is one whom he introduced and the final sale is in some degree aided or helped forward by his previous unsuccessful efforts; Sibbald v. Iron Co., 83 N. Y. 378, 38 Am. Rep. 441, which was followed in Crowe v. Trickey, 204 U. S. 228, 27 Sup. Ct. 275, 51 L. Ed. 454 (in the New York case the agent's authority was revoked in bad faith before the completion of the sale); Donovan v. Weed, 182 N. Y. 43, 74 N. E. 563; Kelly v. Marshall, 172 Pa. 396, 33 Atl. 690; Fultz v. Wimer, 34 Kan. 576, 9 Pac. 316; Zeimer v. Antisell, 75 Cal. 509, 17 Pac. 642; Ropes v. Rosenfeld's Sons, 145 Cal. 679, 79 Pac. 354; [1907] 2 Ir. Rep. 212.

Where two brokers endeavor to sell the property to the same person, who afterwards buys it, that agent earns the commission who was the efficient and procuring cause of the sale; Votaw v. McKeever, 76 Kan. 870, 92 Pac. 1120; Jennings v. Trummer, 52 Or. 149, 96 Pac. 874, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 164, 132 Am. St. Rep. 680.

REAL EVIDENCE. Evidence of which any object belonging to the class of things is the source, persons also being included in respect of such properties as belong to them in common with things. This sort of evidence may be either immediate, where the thing comes under the cognizance of our senses; or reported, where its existence is related to us by others. Chamb. Best, Ev. 16.

REAL LAW. At Common Law. A popular term used to denote such parts of the system of common law as concern or relate to real property.

In Civil Law. A law which relates to specific property, whether movable or immovable.

If real law in any given case relate to immovable property, it is limited in its operation to the territory within which that property is situate, real estate being, both by the common and continental laws, subject exclusively to the laws of the government within whose territory it is situate; Story, Conf. L. 426. See LEX REI SITÆ.

REAL PROPERTY. Land, and generally whatever is erected or growing upon or affixed to land. Lanpher v. Glenn, 37 Minn. 4, 33 N. W. 10. Also rights issuing out of, annexed to, and exercisable within or about the same. Annexations made by a stranger to the soil of another without his consent become the property of the owner of the soil; Britton, bk. 2, ch. 2, sec. 6, p. 856; 2 Kent 334; Simpkins v. Rogers, 15 Ill. 397; Webster v. Potter, 105 Mass. 414; Bass v. R. Co., 82 Fed. 857, 27 C. C. A. 147, 39 L. R. A. 711. When annexations are made by the owner of the soil with the materials of another, so long as the identity of the original materials can be proved, the right of the original owner is not lost; White v. Twitchell, 25 Vt. 620, 60 Am. Dec. 294; Cochran v. Flint, 57 N. H. 514. Such property has the quality of passing on the death of the owner to the heir and not the executor. It may either be corporeal or incorporeal. See Will. Real Pr. 12.

In respect to property, real and personal correspond very nearly with immovables and movables of the civil law. By the latter "biens" is a general term for property; and these are classified into movable and immovable, and the latter are subdivided into corporeal and incorporeal. Guyot, Répert. Biens.

By immovables the civil law intended property which could not be removed at all, or not without destroying the same, together with such movables as are fixed to the freehold, or have been so fixed and are intended to be again united with it, although at the time severed therefrom. Taylor, Civ. L. 475.

Real property includes also some things not strictly land or rights exercised or engaged in reference thereto—such are offices and dignities, which are so classed because in ancient times such titles were annexed to the ownership of various lands; Wms. R. P. 8. Corodies and annuities are also sometimes classed as real property. Shares of stock in railway and canal companies are in England real property unless made personally by act of parliament. In the United States they are personally independent of statutory enactment; 2 Kent 340. Some interests in lands are regarded as personal property, and are governed by the rules relating thereto—such are terms of years of lands. Such interests are known as chattels real; 2 Bla. Com. 386.

Though the term real, as applied to property, in distinction from personal, is now so familiar, it is one of a somewhat recent introduction. While the feudal law prevailed, the terms in use in its stead were lands, tenements, or hereditaments. These acquired the epithet of real from the nature of the remedy applied by law for the recovery of them, as distinguished from that provided in case of injuries, contracts broken, and the like. In the one case the claimant or demandant recovered the real thing sued for,—the land itself,—while, ordinarily, in the other he could only recover recompense in the form of pecuniary damages.

The term, it is said, as a means of designation, did not come into general use until after the feudal system had lost its hold, nor till even as late as the commencement of the seventeenth century. One of the earliest cases in which the courts applied the distinctive terms of real and personal to estates, without any words of explanation, is said to have been that of Wind v. Jekyl, 1 P. Wms. 575; Wms. R. P. 66.

Corporeal hereditaments comprise land and whatever is erected or growing upon or affixed thereto, including whatever is beneath or above the surface, "usque ad orcum" as well as "usque ad cælum;" 2 Bla. Com. 17;

Co. Litt. 4a. Houses, trees, growing crops, and other articles fixed to the soil, though usually classed as realty, may under certain circumstances and for certain purposes acquire the character of personalty. Thus if one erect a building on the land of another with the latter's consent, it is the personal estate of the builder and may be levied on by his creditors as such; Ashmun v. Williams, 8 Pick. (Mass.) 402; Merchants' N. Bk. v. Stanton, 55 Minn. 211, 56 N. W. 821, 43 Am. St. Rep. 491; see Richards v. Elevator Co., 159 U. S. 483, 16 Sup. Ct. 53, 40 L. Ed. 225; but if he fail to remove it within a reasonable time after being ejected from the land, it becomes a part of the realty; Turner v. Kennedy, 57 Minn. 104, 58 N. W. 823. If it is sold to the owner of the soil, it becomes real property; Oliver v. Brown, 80 Me. 542, 15 Atl. 599. So if a nurseryman plant trees upon land leased for the purpose of growing them for the market, the trees are deemed personalty; Miller v. Baker, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 27; 4 Taunt. 316. So where the owner of land sells growing trees (not in a nursery to be cut by the vendee), they will be deemed to pass as personalty where the contract gives no right to the vendee to allow them to remain upon the land; Clafin v. Carpenter, 4 Metc. (Mass.) 580, 38 Am. Dec. 381; 9 B. & C. 561. But where there is an understanding, express or implied, that the trees may remain upon the land and be cut at the pleasure of the vendee, then the property in the trees is deemed real; Clap v. Draper, 4 Mass. 266, 3 Am. Dec. 215; Olmstead v. Niles, 7 N. H. 522. So crops, while growing, planted by the owner of the land, are a part of the real estate; but if sold by him when fit for harvesting, they become personalty; 5 B. & C. 829; and a sale of such crops, though not fit for harvest, has been held good as personalty; Craddock v. Riddlesbarger, 2 Dana (Ky.) 206; Stambaugh v. Yeates, 2 Rawle (Pa.) 161. See EMBLEMENTS; MINES AND MINING.

Profits which are the spontaneous fruits of the earth or its permanent fruits are real estate, but the corn and other growth of the earth which are produced annually by labor and industry, called fructus industriales, are regarded as personal chattels; Mabry v. Harp, 53 Kan. 398, 36 Pac. 743; O'Donnell v. Brehen, 36 N. J. L. 257.

Turpentine run into boxes in a state to be dipped up is personal property; Branch v. Morrison, 50 N. C. 16, 69 Am. Dec. 770; Richburger v. Rose, 90 Miss. 806, 44 South. 69; so of crude turpentine which has formed on the body of a tree and is usually known as "scrape"; it belongs to the person who has lawfully produced it by cultivation and is property classed with fructus industriales; Lewis v. McNatt, 65 N. C. 63.

Rails not set in a fence are no part of the realty; Robertson v. Phillips, 3 G. Greene (Iowa) 220.

A dam is not necessarily real estate. If built by one person on the land of another, with his consent, it would be personal estate; Southard v. Hill, 44 Me. 92, 69 Am. Dec. 85.

Improvement claims are regarded as chattels; McTeer's Lessee v. Buttorff, 4 Yeates (Pa.) 300.

A title deed is a personal chattel, but it is so connected with and essential to the ownership of real estate that it descends with it to the heir; Wilson v. Rybolt, 17 Ind. 391, 79 Am. Dec. 486.

Manure made upon a farm in the usual manner for consumption of its products would be a part of the real estate; while if made from products purchased and brought onto the land by the tenant, as in case of a livery-stable, it would be personal; Daniels v. Pond, 21 Pick. (Mass.) 367, 32 Am. Dec. 269; Middlebrook v. Corwin, 15 Wend. (N. Y.) 169; Plumer v. Plumer, 30 N. H. 558. See MANURE.

There are a large number of articles known as fixtures, which, though originally wholly movable and personal in their nature, have acquired, by having been affixed to real estate or applied to use in connection with it, the character of realty. See FIXTURES.

The intention of the parties immediately concerned, who have agreed that property annexed to the soil shall retain its character as personalty, will prevail except as against innocent purchasers without notice, unless the property be of such a nature that it necessarily becomes incorporated into and a part of the realty by the act and manner of annexation; Binkley v. Forkner, 117 Ind. 176, 19 N. E. 753, 3 L. R. A. 33.

The debris of a fire is realty; Guernsey v. Phinizy, 113 Ga. 898, 39 S. E. 402, 84 Am. St. Rep. 270.

Equity will, in many instances, for the sake of enforcing and preserving the rights of parties interested, regard realty as converted into personalty and personalty as converted into realty, although no such change may actually have taken place. So where realty is devised to executors with direction to sell, it is immediately considered as personalty; 1 Bro. C. C. 497; Craig v. Leslie, 3 Wheat. (U. S.) 563, 4 L. Ed. 460; Appeal of McClure, 72 Pa. 417. So where money is directed to be laid out in lands, it will be deemed realty for purposes of descent even before the purchase; 1 Bro. C. C. 503. But such direction must be imperative, otherwise no such result ensues; 3 Atk. 255; L. R. 7 Eq. 226; Bleight v. Bank, 10 Pa. 131. So realty owned by a partnership will be deemed personalty for the purposes of the partnership; 3 Kent 39; Foster v. Barnes, 81 Pa. 377; Clagett v. Kilbourne, 1 Black (U. S.) 346, 17 L. Ed. 213; Sigourney v. Munn, 7 Conn. 11. And in Pennsylvania the moment a corporation has exercised its right to condemn land, conversion takes place.

REAL STATUTES. Statutes which have property for their principal object, and do not speak of persons, except in relation to property. Sto. Conf. L. § 13.

REAL THINGS. Things substantial and immovable, and the rights and profits annexed to or issuing out of them. 1 Steph. Com. 167.

REALM. A kingdom; a country. 1 Taunt. 270; 4 Camp. 289; Rose 387.

REALTY. A term sometimes used as a collective noun for real property or estate—more generally to imply that that of which it is spoken is of the nature or character of real property or estate. See REAL PROPERTY.

REAR. The word has been held not necessarily to mean directly behind. Read v. Clarke, 109 Mass. 82.

REASON. That power by which we distinguish truth from falsehood and right from wrong, and by which we are enabled to combine means for the attainment of particular ends. Encyclopédie; Shelf. Lun. Introd. xxvi. Ratio in jure aquitas integra.

A man deprived of reason is not, in many cases, criminally responsible for his acts, nor can he enter into any contract.

Reason is called the soul of the law; for when the reason ceases the law itself ceases. Co. Litt. 97, 183: 1 Bla. Com. 70: 7 Toullier, n. 566; MAXIMS, Cessante ratione, etc.

REASONABLE. Conformable or agreeable to reason; just; rational.

REASONABLE ACT. This term signifies such an act as the law requires. When an act is unnecessary, a party will not be required to perform it as a reasonable act; 9 Price 43; Platt, Cov. 342, 157.

REASONABLE AND PROBABLE CAUSE. In Malicious Prosecution. See that title.

REASONABLE CARE. That care and foresight which men of ordinary prudence are accustomed to employ. Johnson v. R. Co., 6 Duer (N. Y.) 646. It is synonymous with ordinary care; Cronk v. R. Co., 3 S. Dak. 93, 52 N. W. 420; see Levering v. Ins. Co., 42 Mo. 95, 97 Am. Dec. 320; or due care; Butterfield v. R. Corp., 10 Allen (Mass.) 532, 87 Am. Dec. 678. See CARE; DUE CARE; NEGLECT; ORDINARY CARE.

REASONABLE DOUBT. See DOUBT.

REASONABLE EXPECTATION. Within the meaning of the English bankruptcy act of 1883, one who begins business without capital and with a mortgage on all his assets, is held to have contracted his debts without reasonable or probable ground of expectation of being able to pay. 14 Q. B. D. 600.

REASONABLE FACILITIES. See FACILITIES.

REASONABLE PART. The share of a wife and children in a man's personal estate, of which, in early times, they could not be deprived.

REASONABLE PORTION. A power to charge an estate with reasonable portions or fortunes for younger children and for their maintenance and education is sufficiently certain to be capable of execution, and the word reasonable there is applicable not only to the amount of the portion, but also to the time and occasion on which the child would want it. Beatty 318.

REASONABLE QUESTION. See QUESTION.

REASONABLE RATES. See INTERSTATE COMMERCE COMMISSION; RATES.

REASONABLE SKILL. Such skill as is ordinarily possessed and exercised by persons of common capacity, engaged in the same business or employment. Mechanics Bank at Baltimore v. Bank, 6 Metc. 26.

REASONABLE TIME. The English law, which in this respect has been adopted by us, frequently requires things to be done within a reasonable time; but what a reasonable time is, it does not define: quam longum debet esse rationabile tempus non definitur in lege, sed pendet ex discretione judiciorum. Co. Litt. 50.

The question of reasonable time is left to be fixed by circumstances and the usages of business. A bill of exchange must be presented within a reasonable time; Chitty, Bills 197-202. An abandonment must be made within a reasonable time after advice received of the loss; Marsh. Ins. 589.

The commercial code of France fixes a time in both these cases, which varies in proportion to the distance. See Code de Com. l. 1, t. 8, s. 1, § 10, art. 160; id. l. 5, t. 10, s. 3, art. 373. See NOTICE OF DISHONOR; PROTEST.

Where the facts are admitted or clearly proved, what is a reasonable time is a question of law for the court depending upon all the circumstances of the case; Paine v. R. Co., 118 U. S. 152, 6 Sup. Ct. 1023, 30 L. Ed. 193.

It has been held that where the question of reasonable time is one affected by many different circumstances with respect to which no definite rule of law has been laid down, it is a question for the jury; Loomis v. Supply Co., 81 Conn. 343, 71 Atl. 358 (in a sale). It is a question for the court when by a series of decisions on the same data it has been rendered certain; Hamilton v. Ins. Co., 61 Fed. 379, 9 C. C. A. 530, 22 U. S. App. 164.

REASSURANCE. When an insurer is desirous of lessening his liability, he may procure some other insurer to insure him from loss for the insurance he has made: this is called reinsurance.

RE-ATTACHMENT. A second attachment of him who has formerly attached and dismissed the court without day, by the not coming of the justices, or some such casualty. Reg. Orig. 35.

REBATE. In Mercantile Law. Discount; the abatement of interest in consequence of prompt payment. An allowance by way of discount or drawback.

The allowance of rebates is a common method by which common carriers discriminate between shippers; the practice is unlawful; and a contract to procure rebates from railroad companies for a shipper is void as being in violation of the provisions of the interstate commerce law; Parks v. Packing Co., 6 Misc. 570, 27 N. Y. Supp. 289.

Rebate, as used in the interstate commerce act and its amendments, refers only to such a discount, reduction or draw-back as creates a discrimination in favor of a particular shipper and against other shippers in like situations, and destroys that equality of treatment which it is the great purpose of the law to enforce; American Sugar Ref. Co. v. R. Co., 207 Fed. 733, 125 C. C. A. 251.

Under the act of Congress of February 4, 1887 (Cullom Act), the standard of comparison was the treatment of other shippers. It was necessary to prove, not only that the favored shipper really paid less than the published rate, but also that other shippers paid the full rate, or a greater rate than that of the favored shipper. Under the Elkins Act the standard of comparison is the published rate. It is only necessary to prove that the favored shipper has had his property transported at a less rate than that published and filed; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. U. S., 156 Fed. 558, 84 C. C. A. 324, 26 L. R. A. (N. S.) 551.

An allowance to a packer of a certain sum per car for the use of his plant tracks in hauling his freight to the railroad line, being in the form of a refund of terminal charges, is an illegal rebate under the Elkins Act; Chicago & A. R. Co. v. U. S., 212 U. S. 563, 29 Sup. Ct. 689, 53 L. Ed. 653.

An allowance to a shipper for the use of his private tap line is a rebate and illegal under the Elkins Act; Central Yellow Pine Ass'n v. Ry. Co., 10 Inter-St. Com. Rep. 193, 505; or for elevator service; In re Allowances to Elevators by Union Pac. R. Co., 13 Inter-St. Com. Rep. 498; or for the handling of cars by a shipper within its plant; General Electric Co. v. R. Co., 14 Inter-St. Com. Rep. 237; or for the construction and use by the shipper of a tie hoist; Chesapeake & O. Ry. Co. v. Lumber Co., 174 Fed. 107, 98 C. C. A. 81; but it is also held that a carrier may compensate a shipper for services rendered and instrumentalities furnished in connection with its own shipments; if the amount is reasonable, it is not a prohibited rebate or discrimination, even if the carrier does not allow other shippers to render and furnish similar services and instrumentalities and compensate them therefor; U. S. v. R. Co., 231 U. S. 274, 34 Sup. Ct. 75, 58 L. Ed. —.

Where there is a continuous carriage from Kansas City to New York at a concession from the legal rate for part of the carriage, it is a single continuing offense and not a series of offenses, although it is continuously committed in each district through which the goods are transported, at the prohibited rate; Armour Packing Co. v. U. S., 209 U. S. 57, 28 Sup. Ct. 428, 52 L. Ed. 681; and the provision of the Elkins Act, making the offense triable in any Federal district through which such transportation is had, is not in violation of the sixth amendment to the constitution requiring a prosecution to be had in the state or district where the offense is committed; Armour Packing Co. v. U. S., 209 U. S. 57, 28 Sup. Ct. 428, 52 L. Ed. 681. The court within whose jurisdiction a fraudulent scheme is first devised has jurisdiction of the offense, regardless of where the formal contract was executed; Thomas v. U. S., 156 Fed. 897, 84 C. C. A. 477, 17 L. R. A. (N. S.) 720 (under the Elkins Act).

The return to an applicant for life insurance by the agent of a part of his commission is not within a statute forbidding rebates by life insurance companies, so as to avoid the policy; Interstate Life Assur. Co. v. Dalton, 165 Fed. 176, 91 C. C. A. 210, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 722; contra, Heffron v. Daly, 133 Mich. 613, 95 N. W. 714. If the agent rebate against his company's consent, it is not liable to the statutory penalty; Equitable Life Assur. Soc. v. Com., 121 Ky. 543, 89 S. W. 537.

REBEL. A citizen or subject who unjustly and unlawfully takes up arms against the constituted authorities of the nation, to deprive them of the supreme power, either by resisting their lawful and constitutional orders in some particular matter or to impose on them conditions. Vattel, Droit des Gens, liv. 3, § 328. In another sense, it signifies a refusal to obey a superior or the commands of a court.

REBELLION. The taking up arms traitorously against the government. The forcible opposition and resistance to the laws and process lawfully issued.

Insurrection, sedition, rebellion, revolt, and mutiny express action directed against government or authority, while riot has this implication only incidentally, if at all. They express actual and open resistance to authority. Except sedition, which may be secret or open, and often is only of a nature to lead to overt acts. An insurrection goes beyond sedition, in that it is an actual arising against the government. Rebellion goes beyond insurrection in aim, being an attempt actually to overthrow the government, while an insurrection seeks only some change of minor importance. A rebellion is generally on a larger scale than an insurrection. A revolt has generally the same aim as a rebellion, but it is on a smaller scale. A revolt may be against military government, but is generally like insurrection, sedition, and rebellion against civil government. A mutiny is organized resistance to law in an army or navy, and sometimes a similar act by an individual. The success of a rebellion often dignifies it with the name of a revolution. Cent. Dict.

One who incites, etc., rebellion or insurrection against the United States or gives aid or comfort thereto shall be imprisoned not more than ten years or fined not more than $10, or both; and be incapable of holding office under the United States Cr. Code, § 4.

When a rebellion has broken out in any state, the rebel cruisers may be treated as pirates by the established government, if the rebel government has not been recognized as belligerent by the parent state or by foreign nations; but the right ceases to exist on the recognition of the rebels as belligerents; Miller v. U. S., 11 Wall. (U. S.) 268, 20 L. Ed. 135; Boyd's Wheat. Int. Law 169.

REBELLION, COMMISSION OF. In Old English Practice. A writ issuing out of chancery to compel the defendant to appear.

REBOUTER. To repel or bar. The action of the heir by the warranty of his ancestor is called to rebut or repel.

REBUS SIC STANTIBUS. A name given to a tacit condition, said to attach to all treaties, that they shall cease to be obligatory so soon as the state of facts and conditions upon which they were founded has substantially changed. Taylor, Int. L. § 394; 1 Oppenheim, Int. L. 550; Grotius, ch. XVI, § XXV; Vattel B. 2, c. 13, § 200; Hall, Int. L. § 116; Hershey, Int. Pub. L. 319.

The change of government from a monarchy to a republic was treated as not terminating treaties; 5 Moore, Dig. Int. L. 335; nor a successful revolution; id. 337; nor an alliance of one of the treaty powers with a third power; id. But as the result of the changes in the state of Europe effected by the wars of Napoleon, all the treaties of the United States with European powers were considered as terminated, excepting only one with Spain of 1795; id. 338.

REBUT. To contradict; to do away.

REBUTTABLE PRESUMPTION. See PRESUMPTION.

REBUTTAL. See REBUTTING EVIDENCE.

REBUTTER. In Pleading. The name of the defendant's answer to the plaintiff's surrejoinder. It is governed by the same rules as the rejoinder. Comyns, Dig. Pleader (K). See PLEADINGS.

REBUTTING EVIDENCE. That evidence which is given by a party in the cause to explain, repel, counteract, or disprove facts given in evidence on the other side. The term rebutting evidence is more particularly applied to that evidence given by the plaintiff to explain or repel the evidence given by the defendant.

It is a general rule that anything may be given as rebutting evidence which is a direct reply to that produced on the other side; Scott v. Woodward, 2 McCord (S. C.) 161; and the proof of circumstances may be offered to rebut the most positive testimony; Nelson v. U. S., 1 Pet. C. C. 235, Fed. Cas. No. 10,116. It is within the discretion of the court to allow evidence in rebuttal which should have been offered in chief; Simons v. People, 150 Ill. 1019, 36 N. E. 1019.

But there are several rules which exclude all rebutting evidence. A party cannot impeach his own witness, though he may disprove, by other witnesses, matters to which he has testified; Gray v. Gray, 3 Litt. (Ky.) 465; nor can he rebut or contradict what a witness has sworn to which is immaterial to the issue; Smith v. Henry, 2 Bail. (S. C.) 118.

Parties and privies are estopped from contradicting a written instrument by parol proof; but this rule does not apply to strangers; Overseers of Berlin v. Overseers, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 229. But the parties may prove that before breach the agreement was abandoned, or annulled by a subsequent agreement not in writing; Buel v. Miller, 4 N. H. 196. And when the writing was made by another, as where the log-book stated a desertion, the party affected by it may prove that the entry was false or made by mistake; Orne v. Townsend, 4 Mas. 541, Fed. Cas. No. 10,583. It is within the discretion of a trial court to permit witnesses to be called in rebuttal whose testimony is in support of that given in chief; Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. v. McDonald, 51 Fed. 178, 2 C. C. A. 153, 4 U. S. App. 563.

RECALL. In International Law. To deprive a minister of his functions; to supersede him.

Where a mission to a foreign country is terminated by a formal letter of recall, the minister usually delivers a copy thereof to the minister or secretary of foreign affairs, obtains an audience of the sovereign or chief executive, and delivers or exhibits the original of his recall. If he is recalled at the request of the government to which he is accredited, he would neither ask nor receive an audience of leave. If recalled on account of a misunderstanding between the two governments, it must depend upon circumstances whether a formal letter of recall is to be sent to him or whether he may quit the residence without waiting for it; also as to whether he shall demand or the sovereign shall grant him an audience of leave; 1 Hall. Int. L. 365. See LETTER OF RECALL; MINISTER.

As to the recall of officials and of judicial decisions, see INITIATIVE, REFERENDUM AND RECALL.

RECALL A JUDGMENT. To reverse a judgment on a matter of fact.

RECAPTION. The act of a person who has been deprived of the custody of another, to which he is legally entitled, by which he regains the peaceable custody of such person; or of the owner of personal or real property who has been deprived of his possession, by which he retakes possession peaceably.

In each of these cases the law allows the recaption of the person or of the property, provided he can do so without occasioning a breach of the peace or an injury to a third person who has not been a party to the wrong. Co. 3d Inst. 134; 2 Rolle, Abr. 565; 3 Bla. Com. 5.

The right of recaption of a person is confined to a husband, in retaking his wife; a parent, his child, of whom he has the custody; a master, his apprentice; and, according to Blackstone, a master, his servant,—but this must be limited to a servant who assents to the recaption: in these cases, the party injured may peaceably enter the house of the wrong-doer, without a demand being first made, the outer door being open, and take and carry away the person wrongfully detained. He may also enter peaceably into the house of a person harboring, who was not concerned in the original abduction; 8 Bingh. 186.

The same principles extend to the right of recaption of personal property. The true owner of goods wrongfully taken may retake them if he can, even from a third party, using (it is said) whatever force is reasonably necessary; Pollock. Torts 361; and may enter, for that purpose, on the first taker's land, but not on a third person's land, unless, it is said, the original taking was felonious, or, perhaps, after the goods have been claimed and the occupier of the land has refused to deliver them up; id.

In the recaption of real estate, the owner may, in the absence of the occupier, break open the outer door of a house and take possession; but if in regaining his possession the party be guilty of a forcible entry and breach of the peace, he may be indicted; but the wrong-doer, or person who had no right to the possession, cannot sustain any action for such forcible regaining possession merely; 1 Chitty, Pr. 646. See Cooley; Pollock, Torts.

RECAPTURE. The recovery from the enemy, by a force friendly to the former owner, of a prize by him captured.

It seems incumbent on fellow-citizens, and it is of course equally the duty of allies, to rescue each other from the enemy when there is a reasonable prospect of success; 3 C. Rob. 224.

By R. S. § 4652, if a vessel or other property shall have been captured by any force hostile to the United States, and shall be recaptured, not having been condemned as prize before recapture, meet and competent salvage shall be awarded, according to the circumstances of each case. If it be United States property, it shall be restored to the United States, and the court shall order the Treasury to pay salvage, costs and expenses. If it belonged to persons residing within or under the protection of the United States, it shall be restored to them upon payment of salvage, etc.; if under any foreign country in amity with the United States, and by the law or usage of such country the property of a citizen of the United States would be restored in like circumstances, it shall be restored upon such terms as the law of such country would require of a United States citizen in like circumstances, otherwise upon the payment of salvage, etc., as the court shall order. The salvage is decreed to the captors. Where there has been no capture there can be no recapture; Oakes v. U. S., 174 U. S. 793, 19 Sup. Ct. 864, 43 L. Ed. 1169.

Salvage is not generally allowed on the recapture of neutral property, unless there be danger of condemnation, or such unjustifiable conduct on the part of the government of the captors as to bring the property into jeopardy; 6 C. Rob. 410; Talbot v. Seeman, 1 Cra. (U. S.) 1, 2 L. Ed. 15. To entitle a party to salvage there must have been actual or constructive capture; but it is sufficient if the property was completely under the dominion of the enemy; 3 C. Rob. 305; it is a recapture if the prize was actually rescued from the grasp of the hostile captor; id.; 3 Phill. Int. L. 638. Where the enemy has captured a ship and then abandoned her and she is recaptured, she is to be restored on payment of salvage, but the rate of salvage is discretionary; 6 C. Rob. 273; but if the abandonment be caused by terror of a hostile fleet, it is a recapture; id.

The distinction between the recapture of the property of a belligerent and that of a neutral must be carefully observed. In the former case international law decrees that title to the recaptured property vests immediately in the state making the capture, leaving it to the municipal law of that state to decide whether the property shall be restored to the original owners and upon what conditions. In the case of a neutral vessel, recapture can only confer upon the recaptor state the rights which were possessed by the state from which the vessel was recaptured, that is to say, a title subject to the decision of a prize court that the neutral vessel is subject to condemnation. When the courts of the captor state have decided that the vessel would have been subject to condemnation, it then remains for the municipal law of the state to determine the amount of salvage due by the neutral.

Where a prize is abandoned and brought into court by neutral salvors, a neutral court has jurisdiction to decree salvage, but cannot restore the property to the original owner; neutral nations ought not to inquire into the validity of a capture as between belligerents; McDonough v. Dannery, 3 Dall. (U. S.) 188, 1 L. Ed. 563.

Recapture can be made by a non-commissioned vessel; 3 C. Rob. 229.

In Great Britain prize statutes were formerly passed at the beginning of every war. The Naval Prize Act, 1864, provides that, as between subjects, the right to recover possession is preserved forever, except where the vessel, after capture, has been fitted out by the enemy for war. The right is subject, when the recapture is by a public ship, to the payment of one-eighth salvage or when the recapture is made under circumstances of special difficulty or danger, more than one-eighth, but not exceeding one-fourth. The French rule is to restore a vessel recaptured by a public vessel on the payment of one-thirtieth of the value, if recaptured within twenty-four hours; if after that time, the salvage is one-tenth.

If the prize has been duly condemned and sold to a neutral purchaser by the captors, that title prevails against the original owners and the recaptors, both under the English and American rule. But such condemnation must be in a competent prize court of the belligerents and not one held in neutral territory; 1 C. Rob. 135.

A recaptured vessel may be permitted, under the English act of 1864, to continue her voyage, or be brought in at once for adjudication; in the former case the recaptor does not lose his right to salvage. If she does not return to a port of the kingdom within six months, the recaptor may proceed in the admiralty, for his salvage.

See INFRA PRÆSIDIA; NEUTRALITY; POST-LIMINIUM; PRIZE; SALVAGE.

RECEIPT. A written acknowledgment of payment of money or delivery of chattels.

It is executed by the person to whom the delivery or payment is made, and may be used as evidence against him, on the general principle which allows the admission or declaration of a party to be given in evidence against himself. As an instrument of evidence, the receipt of one person is, in general, inoperative against another, although often useful as a voucher in the private settlement of accounts; and the statutes of some states make receipts for small payments made by executors, etc., evidence of the payment on a settlement of their accounts. And receipts of public officers are sometimes admissible per se; State Bank v. Kain, 1 Breese (Ill.) 75. It is essential to a receipt that it acknowledge the payment or delivery referred to; Russ. & R. 227; 7 C. & P. 549. And under the stamp laws a delivery or payment must be stated; 1 Camp. 499. Also the receipt must, from the nature of the case, be in writing, and must be delivered to the debtor; for a memorandum of payment made by the creditor in his own books is no receipt; 2 B. & Ald. 501, n.; Hunter v. Campbell, 1 Spears (S. C.) 53. See Nelson v. Boland, 37 Mo. 432.

A debtor is not bound to pay unless the creditor is ready and willing to give a receipt; 9 S. C. 248 (So. Africa).

Receipts, effect of. The mere acknowledgment of payment made is not treated in law as binding or conclusive in any high degree. So far as a simple acknowledgment of payment or delivery is concerned, it is presumptive evidence only; Rollins v. Dyer, 16 Me. 475; Johnson v. Johnson, 11 Mass. 363; 1 Perr. & D. 437; Robinet v. Wilson, 8 Gill (Md.) 179; Salazar v. Taylor, 18 Colo. 538, 33 Pac. 369; Danziger v. Hoyt, 46 Hun (N. Y.) 270; Harris v. Hay, 111 Pa. 562, 4 Atl. 715; and is, in general, open to explanation; House v. Low, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 378; Hogan & Co. v. Reynolds, 8 Ala. 59; Thomas v. Austin, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 265; St. Louis, Ft. S. & W. R. Co. v. Davis, 35 Kan. 464, 11 Pac. 421; Davison v. Davis, 125 U. S. 90, 8 Sup. Ct. 825, 31 L. Ed. 635; being an exception to the general rule that parol evidence cannot be admitted to contradict or vary a written instrument; Tobey v. Barber, 5 Johns. (N. Y.) 68, 4 Am. Dec. 326; Brooks v. White, 2 Metc. (Mass.) 283, 37 Am. Dec. 95. Thus, a party may always show, in explanation of a receipt limited to such acknowledgment, the actual circumstances under which it was made; Putnam v. Lewis, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 389; e. g., that it was obtained by fraud; Trisler v. Williamson, 4 H. & McH. (Md.) 219, 1 Am. Dec. 396; or given under a mistake; Egleston v. Knickerbacker, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 458; Whittemore v. Stout's Adm'r, 3 Dana (Ky.) 427; or that, in point of fact, no money was actually paid as stated in it; Davis v. Allen, 3 N. Y. 168; Beach v. Packard, 10 Vt. 96, 33 Am. Dec. 185; State v. Cumiskey, 34 Mo. App. 189; Ditch v. Vollhardt, 82 Ill. 134; but see Hillyer v. Vaughan, 1 J. J. Marsh. (Ky.) 583; or that the medium of remittance on which the receipt was based has failed; Nat. L. Ins. Co. v. Goble, 51 Neb. 5, 70 N. W. 503; or where it is given by a contractor under an assurance that it is only a receipt for moneys then paid, and would not preclude him from making a claim for extra work; White v. Ellisburgh, 18 App. Div. 514, 45 N. Y. Supp. 1122. A receipt in full for part of an undisputed claim does not prevent recovery of the balance, though given with knowledge and there was no error or fraud; Jones v. Rice, 19 Misc. 357, 43 N. Y. Supp. 491. A receipt is an admission only; Greenl. Ev. 1, 212; 3 B. & Ad. 318; State v. Branch, 112 Mo. 661, 20 S. W. 693; it is but prima facie evidence against the creditor; Whiting v. L. Assur. Soc., 60 Fed. 197, 8 C. C. A. 558, 13 U. S. App. 597; and may be explained, unless executed with the formalities of a deed: Leake, Contr. 901; in law as well as equity: L. R. 6 Ch. 534. As against a stranger thereto, it is incompetent evidence of the payment thereby acknowledged; Ellison v. Albright, 41 Neb. 93, 59 N. W. 703, 29 L. R. A. 737. Mere negligence in signing a receipt without reading it will not conclude the signer or preclude explanation of its contents, particularly if the signing were induced by fraud: Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Lovelace, 57 Kan. 195, 45 Pac. 590.

Receipts "in full." When, however, we find a receipt acknowledging payment "in full" of a specified debt, or "in full of all accounts" or of "all demands," the instrument is of a much higher and more conclusive character. It does not, indeed, like a release, operate upon the demand itself, extinguishing it by any force or virtue in the receipt, but it is evidence of a compromise and mutual settlement of the rights of the parties. The law infers from such acknowledgment an adjustment of the amount due, after consideration of the claims of each party, and a payment of the specified sum as a final satisfaction; Paige v. Perno, 10 Vt. 491; Reid v. Reid, 13 N. C. 247, 18 Am. Dec. 570; Emrie v. Gilbert, Wright (Ohio) 764; Danziger v. Hoyt, 120 N. Y. 190, 24 N. E. 294. This compromise thus shown by the receipt will often operate to extinguish a demand, although the creditor may be able to show he did not receive all that he justly ought. Papers showing a receipt of money in full satisfaction of a decree appealed from, cannot be varied or contradicted by parol evidence; Bofinger v. Tuyes, 120 U. S. 198, 7 Sup. Ct. 529, 30 L. Ed. 649. See ACCORD AND SATISFACTION.

If the rights of a party are doubtful, are honestly contested, and time is given to allow him to satisfy himself, a receipt in full, though given for less than his just rights, will not be set aside. Thus, in general, a receipt in full is conclusive when given with a knowledge of the circumstances, and when the party giving it cannot complain of any misapprehension as to the compromise he was making, or of any fraud; Holbrook v. Blodget, 5 Vt. 520; 1 Camp. 392; Eve v. Mosely, 2 Strobb. (S. C.) 203; and unless given in ignorance of its purport, or under circumstances constituting duress, it is an acquittance in bar of any further demand; De Arnaud v. U. S., 151 U. S. 483, 14 Sup. Ct. 374, 38 L. Ed. 744. It is held to be a contract and not to be explained; Conant v. Kimball's Estate, 95 Wis. 550, 70 N. W. 74.

But receipts of this character are not wholly exempt from explanation; fraud or misrepresentation may be proved, and so may such mistake as enters into and vitiates the compromise of the demand admitted; 1 Camp.

394; Trisler v. Williamson, 4 H. & McH. (Md.) 219, 1 Am. Dec. 396; Thomas v. Austin, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 265; 2 C. & P. 44. The evidence in explanation must be clear and full, and addressed to the point that there was not in fact an intended and valid compromise of the demand. For if the compromise was not binding, the receipt in full will not aid it. The receipt only operates as evidence of a compromise which extinguished the claim; Bailey v. Day, 26 Me. 88; Palmerton v. Huxford, 4 Denio (N. Y.) 166; McDowall v. Lemaitre, 2 McCord (S. C.) 320; Lawrence v. Nav. Co., 4 Wash. C. C. 562, Fed. Cas. No. 8,143.

A receipt for a specified amount of money and designated notes executed by a defendant to the plaintiff's intestate may be used as evidence that it was a deposit with the latter and not a payment to him where there is other evidence to the same effect; Northrop v. Knott, 114 Cal. 612, 46 Pac. 599.

Though a receipt in full is presumed to be in full settlement the presumption is not conclusive; Newton's Ex'r v. Field, 98 Ky. 186, 32 S. W. 623; and where it is given for work and labor, a receipt in full for the bill rendered is not conclusive evidence of a final settlement unless it purports to be so; O'Hehir v. Traction Co., 91 Hun 639, 36 N. Y. Supp. 140. Where the question is raised whether the purchase price of an article has been paid notwithstanding a receipt, and there is evidence to the contrary, the question is for the jury; Mosel v. Brewing Co., 2 App. Div. 93, 37 N. Y. Supp. 525; and a jury is not precluded from finding that a receipt in full was not intended to be such by the fact that he who signed it gave no explanation for doing so; Duncan v. Grant, 87 Me. 429, 32 Atl. 1000.

Receipts in deeds. The effect to be given to a receipt for the consideration-money, so frequently inserted in a deed of real property, has been the subject of numerous and conflicting adjudications. The general principle settled by weight of authority is that for the purpose of sustaining the conveyance as against the vendor and his privies the receipt is conclusive: they are estopped to deny that a consideration was paid sufficient to sustain the conveyance; Wilt v. Franklin, 1 Binn. (Pa.) 502, 2 Am. Dec. 474; Green-vault v. Davis, 4 Hill (N. Y.) 643. But in a subsequent action for the purchase-money or upon any collateral demand, e. g. in an action to recover a debt which was in fact paid by the conveyance, or in an action for damages for breach of a covenant in the deed, and the like, the grantor may show that the consideration was not in fact paid—that an additional consideration to that mentioned was agreed for, etc.; McCrea v. Purmort, 16 Wend. (N. Y.) 460, 30 Am. Dec. 103; Bullard v. Briggs, 7 Pick. (Mass.) 533, 19 Am. Dec. 292; Johnson v. Taylor, 15 N. C. 355; Schillinger v. McCann, 6 Greenl. (Me.) 364;

5 B. & Ald. 606; Saunders v. Hendrix, 5 Ala. 224; Harris v. Harris, 2 Harr. (Del.) 354; Moore v. McKie, 5 Smedes & M. (Miss.) 238; Sparrow v. Smith, 5 Conn. 113; Ayres v. McConnell, 15 Ill. 230; Herbert v. Scofield, 9 N. J. Eq. 492. But there are many contrary cases. See Steele v. Adams, 1 Greenl. (Me.) 2; Maigley v. Hauer, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 341; Dixon v. Swiggett, 1 Harr. & J. (Md.) 252; Steele v. Worthington, 2 Ohio 182; 1 B. & C. 704. And when the deed is attacked for fraud, or is impeached by creditors as voluntary and therefore void, or when the object is to show the conveyance illegal, the receipt may be explained or contradicted; Den v. Shotwell, 23 N. J. L. 465; Cox v. Sartwell, 21 Pa. 480; Clapp v. Tirrell, 20 Pick. (Mass.) 247; Kimball v. Fenner, 12 N. H. 248. See ASSUMPSIT; DEED; RECITAL.

With this exception of receipts inserted in a sealed instrument having some other purpose to which the receipt is collateral, a receipt under seal works an absolute estoppel, on the same principles and to the same general extent as other specialties; Spiers v. Clay's Adm'rs, 11 N. C. 22. Thus, where an assignment of seamen's wages bore a sealed receipt for the consideration money, even though the attesting witness testified that no money was paid at the execution of the papers, and defendant offered no evidence of any payment ever having been made, and refused to produce his account with the plaintiff (the assignor), on the trial, it was held that the receipt was conclusive; 2 Taunt. 141. See SEAL; SPECIALTY.

Receipt embodying contract. A receipt may embody a contract; and in this case it is not open to the explanation or contradiction permitted in the case of a simple receipt; Langdon v. Langdon, 4 Gray (Mass.) 186; Tarbell v. Elevator Co., 44 Minn. 471, 47 N. W. 152. An agreement in a receipt is as conclusive as any other paper executed between the parties; Davison v. Davis, 125 U. S. 90, 8 Sup. Ct. 825, 31 L. Ed. 635. The fact that it embodies an agreement brings it within the rule that all matters resting in parol are merged in the writing. See EVIDENCE. Thus, a receipt which contains a clause amounting to an agreement as to the application to be made of the money paid—as when it is advanced on account of future transactions—is not open to parol evidence inconsistent with it; Kellogg v. Richards, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 116; Wakefield v. Stedman, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 562. A bill of parcels with prices affixed, rendered by a seller of goods to a purchaser, with a receipt of payment executed at the foot, was held in one case to amount to a contract of sale of the goods, and therefore not open to parol explanation; while in another case a similar bill was held merely a receipt, the bill at the head being deemed only a memorandum to show to what the receipt applied; Harris v. Johnston, 3 Cra. (U. S.) 311, 2 L. Ed. 450; Querry v. White, 1 Bibb (Ky.) 271. A bill of lading, which usually contains words of receipt stating the character, quantity, and condition of the goods as delivered to the carrier, is the subject of a somewhat peculiar rule. It is held that so far as the receipt is concerned it may be explained by parol; Peck v. Mallams, 10 N. Y. 529; 1 Abb. Adm. 209, 397; Hossack v. Moody, 39 Ill. App. 17. But see Benjamin v. Sinclair, 1 Bail. (S. C.) 174.

Receipts given by a landlord to different tenants are not admissible to show the character of the tenancy by a difference in the form of receipts, the receipt being in the one case for one month only and in the other not specifying the time, and the effort being to establish a monthly tenancy; Schneider v. Hill, 19 Misc. 56, 42 N. Y. Supp. 879.

But as respects the agreement to carry and deliver, a receipt is a contract, to be construed, like all other contracts, according to the legal import of its terms, and cannot be varied by parol; Wolfe v. Myers, 3 Sandf. (N. Y.) 7.

In this connection may also be mentioned the receipt customarily given in the New England states, more particularly for goods on which an attachment has been levied. The officer taking the goods often, instead of retaining them in his own manual control, delivers them to some third person, termed the "receiptor," who gives his receipt for them, undertaking to redeliver upon demand. This receipt has in some respects a peculiar force. The receiptor having acknowledged that the goods have been attached cannot afterwards object that no attachment was actually made, or that it was insufficient or illegal; Lyman v. Lyman, 11 Mass. 317; Smith v. Cudworth, 24 Pick. (Mass.) 196. Nor can he deny that the property was that of the debtor, except in mitigation of damages or after redelivery; Wakefield v. Stedman, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 562; Bursley v. Hamilton, 15 Pick. (Mass.) 40, 25 Am. Dec. 423. He may show that the property has been taken from him; Maxwell v. Warner, 11 N. H. 570. And in the absence of fraud, the value of the chattels stated in the receipt is conclusive upon the receiptor; Wakefield v. Stedman, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 562.

Where the payment is made in some particular currency or medium, as doubtful bank bills, a promissory note of another person, etc., clauses are often inserted in receipts specifying the condition in which such mode of payment is accepted. In most states negotiable paper given in payment is presumed to have been accepted on the condition that it shall not work a discharge of the demand unless the paper shall ultimately produce satisfaction; and if an intent to accept it absolutely does not affirmatively appear, the creditor is entitled, in case the paper turned out to him is dishonored, to return it and claim to be paid anew. See PAYMENT. If the receipt is silent on that subject, it is open to explanation, and the creditor may rebut it by proof that the payment admitted was in fact made by a note, bill, check, bank-notes afterwards ascertained to be counterfeit, or notes of a bank in fact insolvent though not known to be so to the parties, etc.; Murray v. Gouverneur, 2 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 438, 1 Am. Dec. 177; Ontario Bank v. Lightbody, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 101, 27 Am. Dec. 179; Weed v. Snow, 3 McLean 265, Fed. Cas. No. 17,347. But see Robert v. Garnie, 3 Caines (N. Y.) 14; Phillips v. Blake, 1 Metc. (Mass.) 156. But if the agreement of the parties is specified in the receipt, the clause which contains it will bind the parties, as being in the nature of a contract; Glenn v. Smith, 2 Gill & J. (Md.) 493, 20 Am. Dec. 452; Proctor v. Mather, 3 B. Monr. (Ky.) 353. A receipt for a note taken in payment of an account will not, in general, constitute a defence to an action on the account, unless it appears by proof that the creditor agreed to receive the note as payment and take the risk of its being paid; Berry v. Griffin, 10 Md. 27, 69 Am. Dec. 123.

Receipts, uses of. A receipt is often useful as evidence of facts collateral to those stated in it. It proves the payment; and whatever inference may be legally drawn from the fact of the payment described will be supported by the receipt. Thus, receipts for rent for a given term have been held prima facie evidence of the payment of all rent previously accrued; Decker v. Livingston, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 479; Brewer v. Knapp, 1 Pick. (Mass.) 332. And they have been admitted on trial of a writ of right, as showing acts of ownership on the part of him who gave them; 7 C. B. 21. A receipt given by A to B for the price of a horse, afterwards levied on as property of A, but claimed by B, has been admitted as evidence of ownership against the attaching creditor; Obart v. Letson, 17 N. J. L. 78, 34 Am. Dec. 182. A receipt "in full of all accounts," the amount being less than that called for by the accounts of the party giving it, was held in his favor evidence of a mutual settlement of accounts on both sides, and of payment of the balance ascertained to be due after setting off one account against the other; Alvord v. Baker, 9 Wend. (N. Y.) 323. A receipt given by an attorney for securities he was to collect and account for has been held presumptive evidence of the genuineness and justness of the securities; Hair v. Glover, 14 Ala. 500. And a general receipt by an attorney for an evidence of debt then due, is presumed to have been received by him as attorney, for collection; and he must show the contrary to avoid an action for neglect in not collecting; Smedes Ex'rs v. Elmen-dorf, 3 Johns. (N. Y.) 185.

A receipt signed in the name of a certain person by another person, constitutes no evidence of the receipt of the money by the latter; Perkins v. Tooley, 74 Mich. 220, 41 N. W. 903.

Receipts, larceny and forgery of. A receipt may be the subject of larceny; Brower v. Peabody, 2 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 211; or of forgery; 7 C. & P. 459. Punched railroad tickets shown to be receipts to the conductor and vouchers to him for the amount of fare between stations, are receipts within a statute making it larceny to steal any receipt; State v. Wilson, 95 Ia. 341, 64 N. W. 266.

And it is a sufficient "uttering" of a forged receipt to place it in the hands of a person for inspection with intent fraudulently to induce him to make an advance on the faith that the payment mentioned in the spurious receipt has been made; 14 E. L. & Eq. 556. See FORGERY.

See RELEASE.

RECIPTOR. See RECEIPT.

RECEIVABLE. In a legacy, payable; vested. 29 L. J. Ch. 822; L. R. 6 Eq. 59.

RECEIVER. One who receives money to the use of another to render an account. Story, Eq. Jur. § 446. Receivers were at common law liable to the action of account-render for failure in the latter portion of their duties.

In Equity. A receiver is an indifferent person between the parties appointed by the court to collect and receive the rents, issues, and profits of land, or the produce of personal estate, or other things, which it does not seem reasonable to the court that either party should do; or where a party is incompetent to do so, as in the case of an infant. The remedy of the appointment of a receiver is one of the very oldest in the court of chancery, and is founded on the inadequacy of the remedy to be obtained in the courts of ordinary jurisdiction; Bisph. Eq. 606.

He is a ministerial officer of the court; 2 S. & S. 98; Field v. Jones, 11 Ga. 413; Texas & P. Ry. Co. v. Bledsoe, 2 Tex. Civ. App. 88, 20 S. W. 1135 (not a party in a full sense; Youtsey v. Hoffman, 108 Fed. 693); with no powers but those conferred by his order of appointment and the practice of the court; Verplanck v. Ins. Co., 2 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 452; which do not extend beyond the jurisdiction of the court which appoints him; Booth v. Clark, 17 How. (U. S.) 322, 15 L. Ed. 164 (U. S.) (but see infra); appointed on behalf of all parties who may establish rights in the cause; Thom v. Pittard, 62 Fed. 232, 10 C. C. A. 352, 8 U. S. App. 597; on behalf of no particular interest; Pennsylvania Steel Co. v. Ry. Co., 198 Fed. 721, 117 C. C. A. 503; he stands in the shoes of the company; Central Trust Co. of New York v. Ry. Co., 59 Fed. 523; 3 Atk. 564; Iddings v. Bruen, 4 Sandf. Ch. (N. Y.) 417; and after his appointment neither the owner nor any other party can exercise any acts of ownership over the property; 2 S. & S. 96. Neither party is responsible for his acts; Milwaukee & M. R. Co. v. Soutter, 2 Wall. (U. S.) 519, 17 L. Ed. 900. His custody is that of the court, and leaves the right of the parties concerned to be controlled by the ultimate decree of the court; 10 Bank. Reg. 517. A receiver of a railroad is a common carrier under the Federal Hours of Labor Law; U. S. v. Ramsey, 197 Fed. 144, 116 C. C. A. 568, 42 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1031.

The appointment of a receiver does not change the title or right of possession of the property, but puts it into his custody for the benefit of the party ultimately entitled; Union Bank v. Bank, 136 U. S. 223, 10 Sup. Ct. 1013, 34 L. Ed. 341; it does not affect any lien on the property; Pennsylvania Steel Co. v. Ry. Co., 198 Fed. 721, 117 C. C. A. 503; nor does it work a dissolution of the corporation, but only suspends the function of its officers as far as provided in the decree; State v. Ry. Co., 115 Ind. 466, 17 N. E. 909, 1 L. R. A. 179.

A court will protect its receiver in the possession and use of franchises and property committed to him; Fidelity Trust & S. V. Co. v. Ry. Co., 53 Fed. 687.

The rule that property in the hands of a receiver is in custodia legis, and that interference with such possession without leave of the court is a contempt, is as applicable in the seizure thereof to enforce payment of taxes due the state as in any other case; In re Tyler, 149 U. S. 164, 13 Sup. Ct. 785, 37 L. Ed. 689.

A receiver is an officer of the court which appointed him, and a judgment in another court in a suit affecting the receiver's right of possession, begun without the permission of the court appointing him, is void; Comer v. Felton, 61 Fed. 731, 10 C. C. A. 28, 22 U. S. App. 313. A receiver is not the agent of the corporation nor a substitute for the board of directors. He is but the hand of the court appointing him. His acts are not the acts of the corporation, and his servants are not the servants of the corporation; Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Hoechner, 67 Fed. 456, 14 C. C. A. 469, 31 U. S. App. 644. A decree appointing a receiver is an act of such notoriety that all persons have constructive notice thereof; Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Hoechner, 67 Fed. 456, 14 C. C. A. 469, 31 U. S. App. 644. A receivership is not personal, but continuous, and claims arising against different successive receivers stand on the same footing; State v. Ry. Co., 84 Fed. 67; Phinizy v. R. Co., 62 Fed. 771; he is analogous to a corporation sole; id.

A receiver is appointed only in those cases where in the exercise of a sound discretion it appears necessary that some indifferent person should have charge of the property; Ex parte Walker, 25 Ala. 81; only during the pendency of a suit; 1 Atk. 578; 2 Du. 632; except in extreme cases; 2 Atk. 315;

Bissell v. Besson, 47 N. J. Eq. 580, 22 Atl. 1077; as when a fund in litigation is in peril; Parkhurst v. Kinsman, 2 Blatch. 78, Fed. Cas. No. 10,760; and ex parte; 14 Beav. 423; Sandford v. Sinclair, 8 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 373; or before answer; 4 Price 346; Bloodgood v. Clark, 4 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 574; in special cases only; and, generally, not till all the parties are before the court; 2 Russ. Ch. 145; 1 Hog. Ir. 93. Ordinarily a receiver will not be appointed on an ex parte application; Maish v. Bird, 59 Ia. 307, 13 N. W. 298. The action of the court in the appointment of a receiver is not reviewable on appeal; Crane v. McCoy, 1 Bond. 422, Fed. Cas. No. 3,354; Williamson v. R. Co., 1 Biss. 198, Fed. Cas. No. 17,753; but by the Judicial Code (March 3, 1911) an appeal to the circuit court of appeals lies from an interlocutory decree appointing a receiver; it must be taken in thirty days; it takes precedence in the appellate court; and proceedings below are not stayed unless otherwise ordered by the district court, or the appellate court, or a judge thereof.

The appointment of a receiver is authorized when the party seeking the appointment shows prima facie a title reasonably free from doubt, or a lien upon the subject-matter of controversy to which he has a right to resort for the satisfaction of his claim, and that it is in danger of loss from waste, misconduct, or insolvency if the defendant is permitted to retain the possession; Ashurst v. Lehman, 86 Ala. 370, 5 South. 731; Elwood v. Bank, 41 Kan. 475, 21 Pac. 673; Durant v. Crowell, 97 N. C. 367, 2 S. E. 541.

One will not be appointed, except under special circumstances making a strong case, where a party is already in possession of the property under a legal title; 19 Ves. 59; 2 Y. & C. 351; as a trustee; 2 Bro. C. C. 158; 1 My. & C. 163; Poythress v. Poythress, 16 Ga. 406; 2 J. & W. 294; an executor; 13 Ves. 266; tenant in common; 2 Dick. Ch. 800; 4 Bro. C. C. 414; 2 S. & S. 142; a mortgagee; Patten v. Transit Co., 4 Abb. Pr. (N. Y.) 235; 13 Ves. 377; 1 J. & W. 176, 627; 1 Hog. Ir. 179; or a mortgagor when the debt is not wholly due; Bank of Ogdensburgh v. Arnold, 5 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 38; a director of a corporation in a suit by a stockholder; Hager v. Stevens, 6 N. J. Eq. 374; where the property is or should be already in the possession of some court, as during the contestation of a will in the proper court; 2 Atk. 378; 7 Sim. 512; 1 My. & C. 97; but see In re Colvin's Estate, 3 Md. Ch. Dec. 278; when admiralty is the proper forum; Frith v. Crowell, 5 Barb. (N. Y.) 209; or where there is already a receiver; 1 Hog. Ir. 199; Howell v. Ripley, 10 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 43; or where a public office is in litigation; Tappan v. Gray, 9 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 507; where the equitable title of the party asking a receiver is incomplete as made out, as where he has delayed asking for one; 1 Hog. Ir.

118: 1 Donn. Min. Cas. 71; or where the necessity is not very apparent, as on account merely of the poverty of an executor; 12 Ves. 4; 18 Beav. 161; pending the removal of a trustee; Poythress v. Poythress, 16 Ga. 406; where a trustee mixes trust-money with his own; Orphan Asylum Soc. v. McCartee, 1 Hopk. Ch. (N. Y.) 429.

A person holding an unliquidated claim against a corporation is not entitled to the appointment of a receiver, which would be a denial of trial by jury; Swan L. & C. Co. v. Frank, 148 U. S. 604, 13 Sup. Ct. 691, 37 L. Ed. 577; Hollins v. Iron Co., 150 U. S. 385, 14 Sup. Ct. 127, 37 L. Ed. 1113; mere insolvency of a corporation does not authorize the appointment of a receiver at the suit of general creditors, but one will be appointed where it is no longer able to proceed with its business; Doe v. Transp. Co., 64 Fed. 928.

A receiver will not be appointed without the consent of the corporation on the application of a mere contract creditor, and especially where he cannot claim a definite sum as due; Leary v. Nav. Co., 82 Fed. 775.

Where the business of a corporation is being mismanaged, a receiver will be appointed at the suit of a stockholder; St. Louis & S. Coal & Min. Co. v. Edwards, 103 Ill. 472; or where there is insolvency and gross mismanagement; U. S. Shipbuilding Co. v. Conklin, 126 Fed. 136, 60 C. C. A. 680.

Where the only indebtedness of an insolvent corporation is to the party bringing the creditor's bill, a receiver is unnecessary; Baltimore & O. Tel. Co. v. Tel. Co., 54 Fed. 50, 4 C. C. A. 184, 8 U. S. App. 340.

It is not necessary that a creditor's claim should first be reduced to judgment; Chicago & S. E. Ry. Co. v. Kenney, 159 Ind. 72, 62 N. E. 26, contra, Callahan v. Ice & Ref. Co., 13 Ohio Cir. Ct. 479, 7 O. C. D. 349.

A federal court has no jurisdiction to appoint a receiver for an insolvent corporation at the suit of a simple contract creditor whose demand is not in judgment; and consent of the debtor will not confer jurisdiction; Maxwell v. McDaniels, 184 Fed. 311, 106 C. C. A. 453; that the waiver by the corporation of the objection will confer jurisdiction was held in Pennsylvania Steel Co. v. Ry. Co., 157 Fed. 440; American Can Co. v. Preserving Co., 183 Fed. 96, 105 C. C. A. 388; that the absence of a judgment or other lien does not defeat the court's jurisdiction, see Dodds v. Tunnel Co., 188 Fed. 447. In McGraw v. Mott, 179 Fed. 646, 103 C. C. A. 204, it was considered that, independent of statutory authority, insolvency alone is not ground in a federal court for the appointment of a receiver, but the court based its appointment there on a New Jersey act which authorizes a suit by any creditor or stockholder to wind up an insolvent corporation, creating a right which can be enforced in a federal court.

To justify a receiver, some proper final relief in equity must be asked for in the bill. It is not a final relief that a receiver may bring suits; Zuber v. Min. Co., 180 Fed. 625. There must be an imperative necessity for the appointment; Lemker v. Kalberlah, 105 Ill. App. 445; it is a purely ancillary remedy; Vila v. Storage Co., 68 Neb. 222, 94 N. W. 136, 97 N. W. 613, 63 L. R. A. 791, 110 Am. St. Rep. 400, 4 Ann. Cas. 59; to prevent irreparable loss; Hayes v. Land Co., 147 Ala. 340, 41 South. 909.

Where a debtor's assets are claimed by various creditors, a creditor may be appointed to collect and preserve them in order to prevent a multiplicity of suits; Hopper v. Morgan (N. J.) 42 Atl. 171.

A receiver was appointed for a water company after a decree had been made depriving it of its privilege to maintain its plant, though there had been no default on the bonds; Farmers' Loan & Trust Co. v. Waterworks Co., 139 Fed. 661; a receiver may be appointed before default, to preserve the property; Farmers' Loan & T. Co. v. Waterworks Co., 139 Fed. 661.

Where a partnership has been dissolved, a receiver will usually be appointed if the property is unsafe in the hands of the partners; Wilcox v. Pratt, 125 N. Y. 688, 25 N. E. 1091; Bufkin v. Boyce, 104 Ind. 53, 3 N. E. 615. On a bill for dissolution on account of improper conduct of partners, a receiver is almost a matter of course; but where a partnership has expired by limitation and there is no special ground for a receiver one will not ordinarily be appointed; Bufkin v. Boyce, 104 Ind. 53, 3 N. E. 615. A receiver will not be appointed to continue the business, except temporarily; Allen v. Hawley, 6 Fla. 164, 63 Am. Dec. 198.

A receiver will be appointed if there is fraud or mismanagement on the part of one partner; or a disagreement between them; or an appropriation of firm property to individual use; or one partner is excluded from the management; or where a liquidating partner is insolvent; Smith, Rec. § 191.

Receivers will be appointed to take charge of trust property when it is in danger, and such appointment is necessary for its preservation; Hatcher v. Massey, 66 Ga. 66; as where the trustee is not responsible; Ellett v. Newman, 92 N. C. 519; or neglects his duties; 4 D. & W. 117; or uses the trust funds on his own account; Albright v. Albright, 91 N. C. 220; or refuses to collect a debt belonging to the estate; L. R. 8 Ch. App. 597; or has failed to obey an order to pay over money of the trust; 54 L. J. Ch. 1130; but ordinarily the remedy will be by the removal of the trustee. The jurisdiction to appoint a receiver exists, but will usually be exercised only in very special cases.

Where a sole trustee is insolvent, a receiver will be appointed; L. R. 1 Ch. App. 325; or where the trustee is poor and of bad habits; 12 Sim. 363.

Equity will appoint a receiver as between co-tenants of real estate in cases of necessity; Low v. Holmes, 17 N. J. Eq. 151; though the cases are rare; as in case of partition suits; Goodale v. Dist. Court, 56 Cal. 32; and where one tenant excludes the other from possession; or is insolvent and refuses to account; or refuses to execute the necessary leases or interferes with the collection of rent; Smith, Rec. § 317.

It is said that equity will more willingly appoint a receiver of a mining property than of ordinary property; High, Recrs. § 606.

A receiver will be appointed for good cause in a suit for specific performance; Galloway v. Campbell, 142 Ind. 324, 41 N. E. 597; Leonard v. Whaley, 91 Hun 304, 36 N. Y. Supp. 147; but see Darusmont v. Patton, 4 Lea (Tenn.) 597. Under special and urgent circumstances, a receiver may be appointed as between lessor and lessee; Chicago & A. O. & M. Co. v. Petroleum Co., 57 Pa. 83.

In Carey v. Carey, 2 Daly (N. Y.) 425, the income of property of the defendant in divorce proceedings was placed in the hands of a receiver to provide for the wants of his family during the divorce litigation and after its termination; so in case of a decree for alimony; Barker v. Dayton, 28 Wis. 367.

A receiver will be appointed to take charge of the estate of a decedent, but "a strong case must be made out to induce the court to dispossess a trustee or executor who is willing to act"; Haines v. Carpenter, 1 Woods 262, Fed. Cas. No. 5,905, affirmed in id. 91 U. S. 254, 23 L. Ed. 345. Pending probate proceedings the property will in some cases be protected by the appointment of a receiver; In re Colvin, 3 Md. Ch. 279. In Appeal of Schlecht, 60 Pa. 172, where a will had been admitted to probate and an appeal was pending on an issue to try the validity of the will, a bill for the appointment of a receiver was refused.

A receiver may be appointed in lieu of an executor or administrator, where there has been waste or misappropriation; or such a result is probable; or the executor is insolvent and this is coupled with misapplication; Fairbairn v. Fisher, 57 N. C. 390; but not for poverty alone; id.; or where an executor is dead or refuses to act; or where the executor is a non-resident; Smith, Rec. § 301.

A receiver will be appointed as between the vendee and vendor of realty where there is a contract of sale under which possession has been delivered and there is a default in payments, the vendee not being responsible; Smith, Rec. § 315.

The comptroller of the currency has power to appoint a receiver of a national bank, to take possession of its assets, collect its debts, and enforce the personal liability of the stockholders. In cases not within the national bank act, equity has jurisdiction to appoint receivers as in case of other corporations. A receiver of a national bank is an officer and agent of the United States within R. S. § 380, requiring the district attorney to conduct all suits relating to national banks in which the United States or any of its officers or agents are parties; Gibson v. Peters, 150 U. S. 342, 14 Sup. Ct. 134, 37 L. Ed. 1104. The closing of a national bank and the appointment of a receiver transfers the assets of the bank to him; Scott v. Armstrong, 146 U. S. 499, 13 Sup. Ct. 148, 36 L. Ed. 1059; he has a reasonable time to elect whether he will take property leased with an option to purchase, or return it; Sunflower Oil Co. v. Wilson, 142 U. S. 313, 12 Sup. Ct. 235, 35 L. Ed. 1025.

Generally any stranger to the suit may be appointed receiver. The court will not appoint attorneys and solicitors in the cause; 1 Hog. Ir. 322; masters in chancery; 6 Ves. 427; an officer of the corporation; Hoppock's Ex'rs v. Ramsey, 28 N. J. Eq. 166; Attorney-General v. Bank, 1 Paige, Ch. (N. Y.) 517; though it is sometimes done especially in the case of large railroad systems. There is no general rule about appointing officers of the company as receivers: generally the courts refuse to do so; Ralston v. R. Co., 65 Fed. 557. Counsel for an adverse party cannot act as receiver's counsel, and if he do he will not be paid out of the funds; Farwell v. Tel. Co., 161 Ill. 522, 44 N. E. 891; a public officer charged with the duty of winding up an insolvent corporation may be appointed; Taylor v. Life Ass'n, 3 Fed. 465; so also a mortgagee; 2 Term 238; 9 Ves. 271; a trustee; 3 Ves. 516; but not ordinarily a party in the cause; Benneson v. Bill, 62 Ill. 408.

A receiver may be appointed without notice to the adverse party, though generally this should not be done; Elwood v. Bank, 41 Kan. 475, 21 Pac. 673. It will be done only where the defendant cannot be found or where there is danger of loss or irreparable injury; Smith, Rec. § 5.

The appointment and retention of a receiver cannot be collaterally attacked; Greenawalt v. Wilson, 52 Kan. 109, 34 Pac. 403.

A receiver has no power without the previous direction of the court to incur any expenses, except those absolutely necessary for the preservation and use of the property; Cowdrey v. R. Co., 93 U. S. 352, 23 L. Ed. 950.

He is responsible for good faith and reasonable diligence. When the property is lost or injured by any negligence or dishonest execution of the trust, he is liable in damages; but he is not as of course responsible because there has been an embezzlement or theft. He is bound to such ordinary diligence as belongs to a prudent and honest discharge of his duties, and such as is required of all persons who receive compensation for their services: Story, Bailm. § 620; see Kain v. Smith, 80 N. Y. 458; but he is not the agent of an insolvent railroad company, and hence the company is not liable for damages occasioned by his negligence in operating the road: Metz v. R. Co., 58 N. Y. 61, 17 Am. Rep. 201; nor is he personally liable: Cardot v. Barney, 63 N. Y. 281, 20 Am. Rep. 533; but he is liable as receiver for loss as a carrier of goods: Paige v. Smith, 99 Mass. 395. It is held that, where an injury results from the fault or misconduct of a receiver, the court may in its discretion either take cognizance of the question of the receiver's liability, and determine it, or permit the aggrieved party to sue at law; Klein v. Jewett, 26 N. J. Eq. 474; Camp v. Barney, 4 Hun (N. Y.) 373.

In a railroad receivership the court will not order the receiver to pay the rental of a leased portion of the road, when he has not received therefrom sufficient to pay such rental, over and above operating expenses, and when the trustee of the leased property has asked the court for its surrender, but has permitted it to remain in the receiver's hands and has not taken possession of it under an order granted by the court; Quincy, M. & P. R. Co. v. Humphreys, 145 U. S. 82, 12 Sup. Ct. 787, 36 L. Ed. 632.

Receivers are not assignees and are not bound to adopt a lease, but have an option to do so or not; New York, P. & O. R. Co. v. R. Co., 58 Fed. 280; Ames v. R. Co., 60 Fed. 966. A receiver is not compelled to adopt the contracts or leases of the railroad company, but is entitled to a reasonable time to elect, and a court will not order him to pay rental when the income is not sufficient to pay running expenses; U. S. Trust Co. v. R. Co., 150 U. S. 287, 14 Sup. Ct. 86, 37 L. Ed. 1085; Seney v. R. Co., 150 U. S. 310, 14 Sup. Ct. 94, 37 L. Ed. 1092. A receiver of an insolvent corporation, who takes possession of a leasehold estate held by the corporation, does not thereby become an assignee of the term, nor liable on the covenants of the lease; Metropolitan L. Ins. Co. v. Sanborn, 34 Misc. 531, 69 N. Y. Supp. 1009; but is liable only for a reasonable rent while in possession; Bell v. Protective League, 163 Mass. 558, 40 N. E. 857, 28 L. R. A. 452, 47 Am. St. Rep. 481; and in some cases for the rental specified in the lease; Spencer v. Columbian Expo., 163 Ill. 126, 45 N. E. 250. See LEASE.

A receiver of a railroad is entitled to a reasonable time in which to elect whether or not to retain rolling stock formerly obtained by the company on periodical payments. If he retains it, he must pay the contract price; if he retains it for a time and then releases it, he must pay a fair price for its use, which is usually based on the mileage of the cars and is not the stipulated "rental" under the contract; Farmers' L. & T. Co. v. R. Co., 42 Fed. 6.

The receiver of a railroad is not liable for his refusal to carry the plaintiff on a ticket issued by the company before his appointment. The plaintiff has only the right to come in as a general creditor for the price of the ticket; Casey v. R. Co., 15 Wash. 450, 48 Pac. 53.

Freight money paid to a company before the appointment of a receiver does not entitle the company to sue the receiver for refusal to carry the goods; Central Trust Co. v. R. Co., 51 Fed. 15, 16 L. R. A. 90.

Damages accruing during the time a railroad is in the hands of a receiver are part of the operating expenses, payable out of the income, if there is any; if not, out of the corpus of the property; Cross v. Evans, 86 Fed. 1, 29 C. C. A. 523; Memphis & C. R. Co. v. Hoechner, 67 Fed. 456, 14 C. C. A. 469, 31 U. S. App. 644.

Equity may order a receiver of a railroad to buy rolling stock when necessary for the continued operation of the road and charge the price as a first lien on the property; Union Trust Co. v. R. Co., 117 U. S. 434, 6 Sup. Ct. 809, 29 L. Ed. 963; Wallace v. Loomis, 97 U. S. 146, 24 L. Ed. 895.

Separate receivers will not be appointed in two suits against the same railroad company. The existing receivership should be extended; Lloyd v. R. Co., 65 Fed. 351.

A receiver appointed in a federal court is required to manage the property in accordance with the laws of the state where in it is situate; U. S. Jud. Code § 65.

Where a receiver has been discharged and a railroad turned over to the company, it was held that the company was liable to an action by one who had suffered personal injury by the negligence of the employes while the road was in the hands of the receiver; Texas & P. R. Co. v. Bloom, 60 Fed. 979, 9 C. C. A. 300, 23 U. S. App. 143.

A mortgagee plaintiff at whose instance a receiver has been appointed for a railway cannot be compelled, if expenses of operation and management exceed the value of the property, to make good a deficit, unless the order of appointment was made on that condition, and he is not liable to the employes of the receiver for their wages; Farmers' L. & T. Co. v. R. Co., 31 Or. 237, 48 Pac. 706, 38 L. R. A. 424, 65 Am. St. Rep. 822.

The doctrine of Fosdick v. Schall, 99 U. S. 252, 25 L. Ed. 339 (first suggested by Judge Dillon), is that the income of a railroad company, out of which a mortgage is to be paid, is the net income obtained by deducting from gross earnings what is required for operating expenses, proper equipment, and useful improvements. Every mortgagee impliedly agrees that the current debts made in the ordinary course of business shall be paid from the current receipts before he has any claim on the income. Also, that when there is a diversion of income from the payment of current debts to pay fixed charges, thus increasing the security of the latter, this must be returned to the current debt fund before the mortgagee is paid. This was followed in Burnham v. Bowen, 111 U. S. 781, 4 Sup. Ct. 675, 28 L. Ed. 596, where it was held that a supply claim incurred prior to the receivership was a charge on the income coming into the receiver's hands, as well as that received before his appointment. Such a claim is payable out of the receiver's surplus earnings, whether or not, during the company's operation of the road, there was a diversion of income, either in paying interest or in betterments; and even where the company has misappropriated such income to purposes not beneficial to the mortgagee; Virginia & A. Coal Co. v. R. & B. Co., 170 U. S. 355, 18 Sup. Ct. 657, 42 L. Ed. 1068. See Miltenberger v. Ry. Co., 106 U. S. 286, 1 Sup. Ct. 140, 27 L. Ed. 117.

The dominant feature of the doctrine, as applied in Burnham v. Bowen, 111 U. S. 776, 4 Sup. Ct. 675, 28 L. Ed. 596, is said to be that where expenditures were made which were essentially necessary to enable the road to be operated as a continuing business, and it was the expectation of the creditors that the indebtedness would be paid out of current earnings, a superior equity arises in favor of the materialman as against the mortgage bonds as to the income arising both before and after the appointment of a receiver; Virginia & A. Coal Co. v. R. & B. Co., 170 U. S. 355, 18 Sup. Ct. 657, 42 L. Ed. 1068. This equity arises upon the tacit or express understanding that the current earnings would be appropriated for the payment of the debt. Even though the mortgage provides for a sequestration of income for the benefit of the bondholders, that income, until strict foreclosure or a sale of the road, is charged with the prior equity of unpaid supply claims; id. Equity will confine itself within very restricted limits in the application of this doctrine; Kneeland v. Loan & T. Co., 136 U. S. 89, 10 Sup. Ct. 950, 34 L. Ed. 379; Thomas v. Car Co., 149 U. S. 95, 13 Sup. Ct. 824, 37 L. Ed. 663; in both of which cases it was not, under special circumstances, applied to car trust rentals prior to the suit for foreclosure.

The doctrine has in some courts been extended with great freedom, and the granting of preferences and the issue of receiver's certificates carried to such an extent as to give rise in the public mind to an erroneous view of the powers of courts of equity in this regard. In Central Trust Co. v. R. Co., 80 Fed. 624, 26 C. C. A. 30, the circuit court of appeals remarks that "the liberality with which this equity was extended by some of the circuit courts in favor of general creditors, induced the supreme court in Kneeland v. Trust Co., 136 U. S. 89, 10 Sup. Ct. 950, 34 L. Ed. 379, to call attention to the necessity of preserving the general priority of contract liens over all but a limited class of claims. Through Mr. Justice Brewer, the court said: "The appointment of a receiver vests in the court no absolute control over the property, and no general authority to displace vested contract liens. Because, in a few specified and limited cases, this court has declared that unsecured claims were entitled to priority over mortgage debts, an idea seems to have obtained that a court appointing a receiver acquires power to give such preference to any general and unsecured claims. It has been assumed that a court appointing a receiver could rightfully burden the mortgaged property for the payment of any unsecured indebtedness. . . . It is the exception, and not the rule, that such priority of liens can be displaced. We emphasize this fact of the sacredness of contract liens, for the reason that there seems to be growing an idea that the chancellor, in the exercise of his equitable power, has unlimited discretion in this matter of the displacement of vested liens." While the court appointing an ancillary receiver will protect local creditors having prior rights or liens, it will recognize no distinction between foreign and domestic creditors whose claims stand on equal footing, and it rests in the court's discretion whether it will distribute the assets or transmit them to a primary receiver; Sands v. Greeley & Co., 88 Fed. 130, 31 C. C. A. 424.

Orders appointing a receiver usually direct the payment of such preferred claims of this class as the master shall find to be equitably entitled; Blair v. R. Co., 22 Fed. 471; and it is the better practice to make the order then; Central Trust Co. v. R. Co., 41 Fed. 551; they will be paid even if not provided for in the original decree; Miltenberger v. R. Co., 106 U. S. 286, 1 Sup. Ct. 140, 27 L. Ed. 117; the order can be made afterwards; Central Trust Co. v. R. Co., 41 Fed. 551. It has been held that there can be no preference as to the corpus of the property where payment was not provided for in the original decree; Cutting v. R. Co., 61 Fed. 150, 9 C. C. A. 401; nor any preference whatever; Central Trust Co. v. R. Co., 69 Fed. 295; but it is also held that where the earnings have been diverted to the payment of interest or permanent improvements, preferred debts will be charged on the corpus if the current income is not sufficient to pay them; Burnham v. Bowen, 111 U. S. 776, 4 Sup. Ct. 675, 28 L. Ed. 596; St. Louis, A. & T. H. R. Co. v. R. Co., 125 U. S. 658, 8 Sup. Ct. 1011, 31 L. Ed. 832; and sometimes even without showing a diversion of earnings; Miltenberger v. R. Co., 106 U. S. 286, 1 Sup. Ct. 140, 27 L. Ed. 117.

A receiver of a railroad on coming into possession of earnings should pay out of the same all debts for supplies contracted within a reasonable time before the receivership, before making any expenditure for betterments or interest on mortgages; Southern R. Co. v. Brake Co., 76 Fed. 502, 22 C. C. A. 298.

The court may authorize receivers, in their discretion, to pay the current payrolls and supply accounts incurred in the operation of the road within four months before their appointment; New England R. Co. v. Steel Co., 75 Fed. 54, 21 C. C. A. 219. Current operating expenses for a limited time before the appointment of a receiver under a foreclosure bill may be charged on the income earned during the receivership or upon the corpus of the property, in preference to the lien of the mortgage; Ames v. R. Co., 74 Fed. 335. A receiver of a railroad is properly authorized to pay all balances due to other carriers and connecting lines, and should be allowed to pay, from the proceeds of the sale of receiver's certificates, charges for freight on cars, coal, oil, etc., consigned to the insolvent company and due before the appointment of a temporary receiver; Finance Co. of Pa. v. R. Co., 62 Fed. 205, 10 C. C. A. 323, 8 U. S. App. 547.

Mileage due under a contract for the use of Pullman cars is not distinguishable from car rentals, and cannot be made a preferred claim on the appointment of a receiver; Pullman's Palace-Car Co. v. Trust Co., 84 Fed. 18, 28 C. C. A. 263; Thomas v. Car Co., 149 U. S. 95, 13 Sup. Ct. 824, 37 L. Ed. 663.

A cable for a cable railway, if necessary, is entitled to a preference, though no diversion of income is shown; and the lapse of two years will not bar the claim; New York, G. & I. Co. v. Motor Co., 83 Fed. 365, 27 C. C. A. 550.

The payment of unpaid debts for operating expenses accrued within ninety days, and of ticket and freight balances due, are necessary for the preservation of the mortgaged property, in order to keep it a going concern; Union Trust Co. v. R. Co., 117 U. S. 456, 6 Sup. Ct. 809, 29 L. Ed. 963.

Where a receiver is in possession under foreclosure proceedings of a general mortgage on a system of railroads, preferred debts will be charged on the earnings of the entire system; Central Trust Co. v. R. Co., 30 Fed. 332.

Preferred debts are said to be those "which, when incurred, operated in a direct way to the advantage of the bondholder;" Easton v. R. Co., 38 Fed. 12; or which were "made to preserve the estate;" Frazier v. R. Co., 88 Tenn. 138, 12 S. W. 537; or were payments "necessary in the ordinary administration of the affairs of the corporation;" Blair v. R. Co., 23 Fed. 521; or were reasonably "necessary to incur in order to keep the road in operation;" Short, Ry. Bonds § 624.

R. Co., 23 Fed. 521 (but not one employed for a special purpose; Louisville, E. & St. L. R. Co. v. Wilson, 138 U. S. 501, 11 Sup. Ct. 405, 34 L. Ed. 1023; nor an attorney's fee for services rendered a year and a half before the receivership; Bownd v. Ry. Co., 51 Fed. 58; but the annual salary of a regular counsel for a short time before receivership will be preferred; Blair v. R. Co., 23 Fed. 521; not a secretary of the company; Central Trust Co. v. R. Co., 69 Fed. 295; nor a claim for legal services in advising parties who lent money to keep the road in operation; Louisville, E. & St. L. R. Co. v. Wilson, 138 U. S. 501, 11 Sup. Ct. 405, 34 L. Ed. 1023); supplies and material for equipping, operating, and repairing the road; Fosdick v. Schall, 99 U. S. 252, 25 L. Ed. 339; Northern Pac. R. Co. v. Lamont, 69 Fed. 23, 16 C. C. A. 364; but not when furnished on credit payable at some definite period, in the future; Bound v. Ry. Co., 58 Fed. 473, 7 C. C. A. 322; American L. & T. Co. v. R. Co., 46 Fed. 101. It applies to ties, hardware and traffic balances; Gregg v. Trust Co., 109 Fed. 220, 48 C. C. A. 318; necessary repairs to a railroad; Southern R. Co. v. Tillett, 76 Fed. 507, 22 C. C. A. 303; jackscrews; Southern R. Co. v. Jack Co., 117 Fed. 424, 54 C. C. A. 598; new cable for a cable railroad (after two years); New York G. & I. Co. v. Motor Co., 83 Fed. 365, 27 C. C. A. 550; ties; Gregg v. Trust Co., 197 U. S. 193, 25 Sup. Ct. 415, 49 L. Ed. 717; rails; Lackawanna I. & C. Co. v. Trust Co., 176 U. S. 298, 20 Sup. Ct. 363, 44 L. Ed. 475; a gear wheel and pinion for a cable road; Central Trust Co. v. Clark, 81 Fed. 269; a power house for an electric street railway; Illinois T. & S. B. v. Doud, 105 Fed. 123, 44 C. C. A. 389, 52 L. R. A. 481; damages for injuries to employees of a receiver are part of operating expenses; Meyer Rubber Co. v. R. Co., 174 Fed. 731, affirmed in Willcox v. Jones, 177 Fed. 870, 101 C. C. A. 84.

The vendor of rolling stock under a car trust is not preferred as to the balance of payments due him; Huidekoper v. Locomotive Works, 99 U. S. 258, 25 L. Ed. 344. The rental of cars used by the receiver is held to be chargeable to the proceeds of the sale of the property as one of the expenses of the administration; Lane v. R. Co., 96 Ga. 630, 24 S. E. 157; as is also the unpaid rental during their use by the company before the receiver was appointed, and compensation for the ordinary wear and tear and the expense of returning the cars to the owner; id.; contra, as to rentals accruing before the receivership; Kneeland v. Trust Co., 136 U. S. 89, 10 Sup. Ct. 950, 34 L. Ed. 379; Union Trust Co. v. R. Co., 117 U. S. 479, 6 Sup. Ct. 809, 29 L. Ed. 963.

Hamilton, 134 U. S. 296, 10 Sup. Ct. 546, 33 L. Ed. 905; nor the price of a locomotive bought six months before the receivership; Manchester Locomotive Works v. Truesdale, 44 Minn. 115, 46 N. W. 301, 9 L. R. A. 140; nor will claims for damages for breach of contract; Central Trust Co. v. R. Co., 32 Fed. 566; nor those caused by the operation of the road before the appointment of the receiver; Hiles v. Case, 14 Fed. 141; Central Trust Co. v. R. Co., 28 Fed. 871; but see Dow v. R. Co., 20 Fed. 260, a case said to be of doubtful authority; Short, Ry. Bonds § 626. It does not apply to ballast cars used in improving the road bed where it appears that there was no net income; Fordyce v. R. R., 145 Fed. 544; nor to counsel fees; Gregg v. Trust Co., 109 Fed. 220, 48 C. C. A. 318.

The ordinary period within which such claims are allowed is six months; Scott v. R. Co., 6 Biss. 535, Fed. Cas. No. 12,527; but claims have been awarded a preference after eight months; Skiddy v. R. Co., 3 Hughes 320, Fed. Cas. No. 12,922; eleven months; Burnham v. Bowen, 111 U. S. 776, 4 Sup. Ct. 675, 28 L. Ed. 596; nearly two years; Central Trust Co. v. R. Co., 41 Fed. 551; two years; Cobb v. Clough, 83 Fed. 605; three years; Hale v. Frost, 99 U. S. 389, 25 L. Ed. 419. There is no fixed time within which priority can be given; it is a question of reasonable time; Wood v. R. Co., 70 Fed. 741.

The rule has been held to apply only to railroads; Wood v. Trust Co., 128 U. S. 416, 9 Sup. Ct. 131, 32 L. Ed. 472; not to manufacturing corporations; Seventh N. B. of Philadelphia v. Iron Co., 35 Fed. 436; Fidelity Ins. & S. D. Co. v. Iron Co., 42 Fed. 372; nor to street railways; Front St. Cable Ry. Co. v. Drake, 84 Fed. 257; nor to steamship lines; Bound v. Ry. Co., 50 Fed. 312; nor to a hotel company; Raht v. Attrill, 106 N. Y. 423, 13 N. E. 282, 60 Am. Rep. 456; it is held applicable to street railways; Litzenberger v. Trust Co., 8 Utah 15, 28 Pac. 871; Illinois T. & S. B. v. Doud, 105 Fed. 123, 44 C. C. A. 389, 52 L. R. A. 481; a coal and coke company; Drennen v. Trust & D. Co., 115 Ala. 592, 23 South. 164, 39 L. R. A. 623, 67 Am. St. Rep. 72; a mining company; Cunningham v. Min. Co., 103 Mo. App. 398, 76 S. W. 487 (contra, Manhattan Trust Co. v. Iron Co., 19 Wash. 493, 53 Pac. 951); a telegraph and telephone company; Keelyn v. Tel. Co., 90 Fed. 29; to all quasi-public corporations; Drennen & Co. v. Deposit Co., 115 Ala. 592, 23 South. 164, 39 L. R. A. 623, 67 Am. St. Rep. 72. In Ohio it is a statutory rule.

The right to claim for labor and materials in preference to the mortgage debt is not affected by the sale of the property if such right be reserved in the decree affirming the same; Southern R. Co. v. Steel Co., 176 U. S. 257, 20 Sup. Ct. 347, 44 L. Ed. 458.

Suits. A receiver must ordinarily obtain leave of the appointing court before instituting a suit; but not where he sues for debt due him in his official capacity; L. R. 12 Eq. 614; or sues in the appointing court with its sanction; Smith, Rec. § 69; Cox v. Volkert, 86 Mo. 505.

A receiver cannot sue outside the jurisdiction of his appointment; Great Western Min. & Mfg. Co. v. Harris, 198 U. S. 561, 25 Sup. Ct. 770, 49 L. Ed. 1163; Kirwan Mfg. Co. v. Truxton, 2 Pennewill (Del.) 48, 44 Atl. 427; Southern B. & L. Ass'n v. Price, 88 Md. 155, 41 Atl. 53, 42 L. R. A. 206; otherwise where, by statute or assignment, he has sufficient title, as a quasi-assignee, a representative of the creditors; Bernheimer v. Converse, 206 U. S. 516, 27 Sup. Ct. 755, 51 L. Ed. 1163.

In some cases in the federal courts, decided before the case (supra) of Great Western Min. & Mfg. Co. v. Harris, 198 U. S. 561, 25 Sup. Ct. 770, 49 L. Ed. 1163, such suits were sustained in a foreign jurisdiction; see Rogers v. Riley, 80 Fed. 759; In re Wood, 95 Fed. 947; Lewis v. Clark, 129 Fed. 570, 64 C. C. A. 138.

The objection must be made at the proper time; Great Western Tel. Co. v. Purdy, 162 U. S. 329, 16 Sup. Ct. 810, 40 L. Ed. 986. In this sense federal courts in different states are foreign to each other, and so are federal and state courts; but federal courts in different districts of the same state are not; Horn v. R. Co., 151 Fed. 626.

By comity a receiver may be permitted to sue for a specific asset, but not even then if the property would thereby be taken out of the state to the prejudice of domestic creditors; Nolen v. Kaufman, 70 Mo. App. 653. If he has obtained a judgment, he may sue on it in a foreign state; McBride v. Bank, 200 Fed. 895.

But it is also said to be now "well established that a receiver may invoke the aid of a foreign court in obtaining possession of property or funds within its jurisdiction to which he is entitled," but not against the creditors of a non-resident debtor who are seeking to subject property to the payment of their debts; Catlin v. Silver-Plate Co., 123 Ind. 477, 24 N. E. 250, 8 L. R. A. 62, 18 Am. St. Rep. 338; and this is a matter of comity; National Trust Co. v. Miller, 33 N. J. Eq. 155. A receiver appointed in one state can sue in another by comity, in respect of property rights in the latter state, provided the domestic creditors are protected; Toronto General T. Co. v. R. Co., 123 N. Y. 37, 25 N. E. 198.

It is held that an Illinois receiver appointed at the suit of a non-resident creditor may hold the assets against an Illinois creditor; Holbrook v. Ford, 153 Ill. 633, 39 N. E. 1091, 27 L. R. A. 324, 46 Am. St. Rep. 917.

Assets in another state of the party for whose property the receiver is appointed are subject to attachment in the courts of such other state by creditors there resident, and even by non-resident creditors (other than those of the receivership state); Mason v. Mfg. Co., 81 Md. 446, 32 Atl. 311, 29 L. R. A. 273, 48 Am. St. Rep. 524.

See Linville v. Hadden, 88 Md. 594, 41 Atl. 1037, 43 L. R. A. 222; Gilman v. Ketcham, 81 Wis. 60, 54 N. W. 395, 23 L. R. A. 52, 36 Am. St. Rep. 899; Commercial Nat. Bank v. Iron & S. Co., 95 Tenn. 172, 31 S. W. 1002, 29 L. R. A. 164; Robertson v. Staed, 135 Mo. 135, 36 S. W. 610, 33 L. R. A. 203, 58 Am. St. Rep. 569.

In Buswell v. Order of Iron Hall, 161 Mass. 224, 36 N. E. 1065, 23 L. R. A. 846, it was held that the ancillary receiver should remit the fund to the home receiver for distribution, if it should appear that Massachusetts claimants would there be placed on an equality with home claimants. This case is said to have gone to the limits of comity; Smith, Rec. § 73. Where a receiver takes property to a foreign state his possession will be protected; Singerly v. Fox, 75 Pa. 112; contra, Humphreys v. Hopkins, 81 Cal. 551, 22 Pac. 892, 6 L. R. A. 792, 15 Am. St. Rep. 76.

One who has a legal cause of action sounding merely in tort against a receiver appointed by a court of chancery has a right to pursue his redress by an action at law. Such action cannot be brought without the chancellor's permission, but this cannot be refused, unless the claim preferred be manifestly unfounded; Davis v. Gray, 16 Wall. (U. S.) 218, 21 L. Ed. 447. See Barton v. Barbour, 25 Alb. L. J. 46.

A receiver cannot be sued without the consent of the appointing court; Porter v. Sabin, 149 U. S. 473, 13 Sup. Ct. 1008, 37 L. Ed. 815; Wayne Pike Co. v. State, 134 Ind. 672, 34 N. E. 440; Smith v. Ry. Co., 151 Mo. 391, 52 S. W. 378, 48 L. R. A. 368; but there are exceptions to this rule: By act of congress, March 3d, 1889, every receiver appointed by a federal court may be sued without leave of court, but subject to the general equity jurisdiction of the court which appointed him. This act extends to any court of competent jurisdiction, state or federal, and not merely to the appointing court; McNulta v. Lochridge, 141 U. S. 327, 12 Sup. Ct. 11, 35 L. Ed. 796; Dillingham v. Russell, 73 Tex. 47, 11 S. W. 139, 3 L. R. A. 634, 15 Am. St. Rep. 753. It applies to actions for personal injuries to passengers; Fullerton v. Fordyce, 121 Mo. 1, 25 S. W. 587, 42 Am. St. Rep. 516; suits on patents may be brought without leave; Hupfeld v. Plano Co., 66 Fed. 788; but not one to condemn a crossing over the railroad in the receiver's hands; Buckhannon & N. R. Co. v. Davis, 135 Fed. 707, 68 C. C. A. 345, or one to take from the receiver's control property belonging to the corporation; Hollifield v. R. Co., 99 Ga. 365, 27 S. E. 715.

Receivers operating a railroad in another state are liable to action there; Paige v. Fmjt, 99 Mass. 395; property in another state, in the hands of a receiver, may be garnished there; Phelan v. Ganebin, 5 Colo. 14; where a receiver has taken possession of property not specified in the decree appointing him; Hills v. Parker, 111 Mass. 508, 15 Am. Rep. 63.

It is held that suing without leave is mere contempt of court and does not affect the jurisdiction of the court in which the suit is brought; Phelan v. Ganebin, 5 Colo. 14; and that the proceedings are regular till the appointing court interferes; Pruyn v. McCreary, 182 N. Y. 568, 75 N. E. 1133; other cases hold that there is no jurisdiction till leave is granted; Barton v. Barbour, 104 U. S. 126, 26 L. Ed. 672; Keen v. Breckenridge, 96 Ind. 69; Wiswall v. Sampson, 14 How. (U. S.) 52, 14 L. Ed. 322. Leave to sue rests in the discretion of the appointing court; Mechanics' N. B. v. Landauer, 68 Wis. 44, 31 N. W. 160; ordinarily leave will be granted to sue only in the appointing court; Palmer v. Scriven, 21 Fed. 354; and a case at law may be ordered to be tried in equity; Shedd v. Seefeld, 230 Ill. 118, 82 N. E. 580, 13 L. R. A. (N. S.) 709, 120 Am. St. Rep. 269.

A failure to get leave is waived if the case has gone on to an adverse decision against the receiver; Manker v. Loan Ass'n, 124 Ia. 341, 100 N. W. 38; but in Haag v. Ward, 89 Mo. App. 186, it was held not to be waived where the receiver pleaded. Application for leave to sue may be made by motion in the receivership case; Wilson v. Rankin, 129 N. C. 447, 40 S. E. 310.

See, generally, 38 Amer. L. Rev. 516.

Under the strict common law, a receiver must sue in the name of the corporation or firm of which he is receiver; High, Rec. § 209; the receiver brings suit in the company's name but for his own use; Yeager v. Wallace, 44 Pa. 294; he sues in his own name on his own contracts; Singerly v. Fox, 75 Pa. 112; in states having codes of procedure he may sue in his own name, as having the beneficial interest; 5 Thomps. Corp. § 6979.

Suit should be brought against the company, but service made on the receiver; McNulta v. Lochridge, 141 U. S. 327, 12 Sup. Ct. 11, 35 L. Ed. 796; an attachment execution should be served on him; Conshohocken Tube Co. v. Car Co., 167 Pa. 589, 31 Atl. 934.

The receiver of a corporation cannot sue in his own name to recover property of the corporation which has never been in his possession nor been assigned to him, where authority to bring such suit has not been conferred on him by statute or by decree of court; Wilson v. Welch, 157 Mass. 77, 31 N. E. 712. Actions against the receiver are, in law, actions against the receivership, or the funds in the hands of the receiver, and his contracts, misfeasances, negligences, and liabilities are official and not personal; and judgments against him as receiver are payable only out of the funds in his hands; McNulta v. Lochridge, 141 U. S. 327, 12 Sup. Ct. 11, 35 L. Ed. 796.

He has a summary remedy against one who has possession of receivership funds, obtained since the appointment, even though the party claims title or a lien; but must bring suit if possession was had before the receivership, or the party claims adversely; Horn v. R. Co., 151 Fed. 626.

The court can, by summary proceedings, compel payment by a purchaser from a receiver of the price of goods sold and delivered; McCarter v. Finch, 55 N. J. Eq. 245, 36 Atl. 937.

Where a circuit court has appointed a receiver of a steamer and all other property of a railroad company, and the steamer came into collision with another vessel and was libelled in admiralty, it was held that the circuit court did not err in declining to issue an injunction against the admiralty proceedings; Paxson v. Cunningham, 63 Fed. 132, 11 C. C. A. 110, 21 U. S. App. 466.

Where property is in the hands of a receiver, an independent suit cannot be brought to foreclose a mortgage on it, even in the same court; American Loan & T. Co. v. R. Co., 86 Fed. 390.

Judgment against a corporation obtained between the entry of an order appointing a receiver therefor and the approval of his bond creates no lien on the property; Temple v. Glasgow, 80 Fed. 441, 25 C. C. A. 540.

Where a receiver has been guilty of a public nuisance, the court will enjoin him therefrom; Felton v. Ackerman, 61 Fed. 225, 9 C. C. A. 457, 22 U. S. App. 154.

A purchaser of a claim against a railroad company which is in the hands of a receiver is not estopped to attack the validity of an order appointing the receiver made before he became a party to the action; Grant v. Ry. Co., 116 Cal. 71, 47 Pac. 872.

It is not inconsistent with the relations between a receiver and the court appointing him that he should appeal from an order of such court granting an injunction against him; Felton v. Ackerman, 61 Fed. 225, 9 C. C. A. 457, 22 U. S. App. 154.

The appointment of a receiver of a corporation fixes the status and priorities of its creditors; Cowan v. Glass Co., 184 Pa. 1, 38 Atl. 1075.

A circuit court of the United States has no power to appoint a receiver of property already in the possession of a receiver duly and previously appointed by a state court; Shields v. Coleman, 157 U. S. 169, 15 Sup. Ct. 570, 39 L. Ed. 660.

A receiver appointed for one corporation cannot act for another; Hook v. Bosworth, 64 Fed. 443, 12 C. C. A. 208, 24 U. S. App. 341.

Where a receiver has been wrongfully appointed, the defeated complainant is held to be liable for costs and expenses; Hendrie & B. Mfg. Co. v. Parry, 37 Colo. 359, 86 Pac. 113; In re Lacov, 142 Fed. 960, 74 C. C. A. 130; State v. Dist. Court, 28 Mont. 227, 72 Pac. 613; Link Belt Mach. Co. v. Hughes, 195

Ill. 413, 63 N. E. 186, 59 L. R. A. 673; but not in the case of an insolvent corporation where the other creditors received the benefits of the appointment, though the complainant did not make his claim; Berry v. Rood, 225 Mo. 85, 123 S. W. 888; to the same effect, Clark v. Brown, 119 Fed. 130, 57 C. C. A. 76; McCarthy v. Peake, 18 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 138, where the costs and expenses were not put on the complainant.

If the appointment was made without jurisdiction, the receiver cannot have compensation out of the fund, though he realized profits; Grant v. Ry. Co., 116 Cal. 71, 47 Pac. 872; Bowman v. Hazen, 69 Kan. 682, 77 Pac. 589; State v. Bank, 197 Mo. 605, 95 S. W. 867; Brundage v. S. & L. Ass'n, 11 Wash. 288, 39 Pac. 669; but it has been held that it must be paid out of the funds in his hands regardless of who is ultimately to bear the burden; In re Hill Co., 159 Fed. 73, 86 C. C. A. 263; Hopfensack v. Hopfensack, 61 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 508; Cutter v. Pollock, 7 N. D. 631, 76 N. W. 235.

If the fund is insufficient, he may come upon whoever secured his appointment; Frick v. Fritz, 124 Ia. 529, 100 N. W. 513; Tome v. King, 64 Md. 166, 21 Atl. 279; Ephraim v. Bank, 129 Cal. 589, 62 Pac. 177; by having it taxed against the complainant; German N. B. v. Best & Co., 32 Colo. 192, 75 Pac. 308; or by separate proceedings; Ephraim v. Bank, 129 Cal. 589, 62 Pac. 177.

In Atlantic Trust Co. v. Chapman, 208 U. S. 360, 28 Sup. Ct. 406, 52 L. Ed. 528, 13 Ann. Cas. 1155, a trustee under a mortgage given by a canal and irrigation company, who brought suit to foreclose, was held not liable for receivers' certificates authorized by the court for the purpose of operating the property. To the same effect, McLean v. Gillespie, 130 Ill. App. 356; Farmers' Loan Co. v. R. Co., 31 Or. 237, 48 Pac. 706, 38 L. R. A. 424, 65 Am. St. Rep. 822. In some cases the court has been held to have discretion to put the costs on the fund, or on the plaintiff, or divide them among the parties; Palmer v. Texas, 212 U. S. 118, 29 Sup. Ct. 230, 53 L. Ed. 435; Rounsaville v. Langston, 99 Ga. 117, 24 S. E. 972; French v. Gifford, 31 Ia. 428. See generally Bellamy v. Tel. Co., 25 Okl. 18, 105 Pac. 340, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 412, and note.

An order fixing the compensation of a receiver, and taxed as such in the costs, is a final judgment upon a collateral matter arising out of the action and appealable by any party interested in the fund; Grant v. R. Co., 116 Cal. 71, 47 Pac. 872. As to a receiver's compensation, see 32 A. & E. Corp. Cas. 532.

The appointment of a receiver does not abate personal actions against the debtor, and the receiver has no status in court thereunder until he is made a party thereto on his own application. The plaintiff may proceed to final judgment without him; Wilder v. New Orleans, 87 Fed. 843, 31 C. C. A. 249.

A receivership of a railroad as a going concern should not be unnecessarily prolonged, and in case of unnecessary delay the court should listen to the application of any creditor and give due notice to the receiver, for its prompt termination: In re Metropolitan Ry. Receivership, 208 U. S. 90, 28 Sup. Ct. 219, 52 L. Ed. 403.

A bond given to the receiver of a corporation, "his successors and assigns," enures after the termination of the receivership to the benefit of the corporation which may sue upon it and the surety is not discharged; American Surety Co. v. Campbell & Zell Co., 138 Fed. 531, 71 C. C. A. 55.

After the receiver has settled his account and been discharged, jurisdiction of the cause may be retained by the court for the purpose of carrying into final effect any orders made.

See Smith, Receiverships; High; Gluck & Becker, Receivers; BAILIFF; ROLLING STOCK; MORTGAGE; LEASE; MERGER; RECEIVERS' CERTIFICATES; REORGANIZATION.

RECEIVER GENERAL OF THE DUCHY OF LANCASTER. An officer of the Duchy court, who collects all the revenues, fines, forfeitures, and assessments within the duchy.

RECEIVER GENERAL OF THE PUBLIC REVENUE. An officer appointed in every county in England to receive the taxes granted by parliament, and remit the money to the treasury.

RECEIVER OF STOLEN GOODS. By statutory provision, the receiver of stolen goods, knowing them to have been stolen, may be punished as the principal, in perhaps all the states.

To make this offence complete, the goods received must have been stolen, they must have been received by the defendant, and he must know that they had been stolen.

The original theft must be proved against the receiver just as strictly as if the thief were being tried for larceny, but only by such evidence as is admissible against the receiver. A confession by the thief when charged with the crime is inadmissible; 18 Cox 470; and the jury must disregard the fact that they had just heard the thief plead guilty; Odgers, C. L. 372. The thief may be called as a witness for the prosecution, and if he admits his guilt, that is some evidence to go to the jury, but it is entitled to but little weight if uncorroborated; 4 F. & F. 43. Receiving goods stolen abroad does not constitute the offence; but otherwise by act of 1896 in England.

The goods stolen must have been received by the defendant. Prima facie, if stolen goods are found in a man's house, he, not being the thief, is a receiver; 1 Den. Cr. Cas. 601. And though there is proof of a criminal intent to receive, and a knowledge that the goods were stolen, if the exclusive possession still remains in the thief, a conviction for receiving cannot be sustained; 2 id. 37. So a principal in the first degree, particeps criminis, cannot at the same time be treated as a receiver; 2 id. 459. Where a prisoner is charged in two counts with stealing and receiving, the jury may return a verdict of guilty on the latter count, if warranted by the evidence, although the evidence is also consistent with the prisoner having been a principal in the second degree in the stealing; Bell, Cr. Cas. 20. See Whiting v. State, 48 Ohio St. 220, 27 N. E. 96. But a person having a joint possession with the thief may be convicted as a receiver; Dearsl. 494. The actual manual possession or touch of the goods by the defendant, however, is not necessary to the completion of the offence of receiving; it is sufficient if they are in the actual possession of a person over whom the defendant has a control, so that they would be forthcoming if he ordered it; id. 494; as of a servant, to the master's knowledge; 72 J. P. 451.

Husband and wife were indicted jointly for receiving. The jury found both guilty, and found, also, that the wife received the goods without the control or knowledge of the husband, and apart from him, and that "he afterwards adopted his wife's receipt." It was held that this finding did not warrant the conviction of the husband; Dearsl. & B. 329. A wife could not be convicted for receiving from her husband goods which she knew he had stolen; Odgers, C. L. 373.

The offence of receiving stolen property involves a criminal intent as a material element, such as an intent to aid the thief, of obtaining a reward for restoring it to the owner, or in some way to derive profit from the act; Arcia v. State, 26 Tex. App. 193, 9 S. W. 685.

It is almost always difficult to prove guilty knowledge; and that must, in general, be collected from circumstances. If such circumstances are proved which to a person of common understanding and prudence, and situated as the prisoner was, must have satisfied him that they were stolen, this is sufficient. For example, the receipt of watches, jewelry, large quantities of money, bundles of clothes of various kinds, or personal property of any sort, to a considerable value, from boys or persons destitute of property and without any lawful means of acquiring them, and specially if bought at untimely hours, the mind can arrive at no other conclusion than that they were stolen. This is further confirmed if they have been bought at an under-value, concealed, the marks defaced, and falsehood resorted to in accounting for the possession of them; 2 Russ. Cr. 253; 1 Fost. & F. 51; Whart. Cr. L. 933, 986. See Huggins v. People, 135 Ill. 243, 25 N. E. 1002, 25 Am. St. Rep. 357. Evidence that other stolen goods were found in defendant's possession is admissible to show guilty knowledge; State v. Crawford, 38 S. C. 330, 17 S. E. 36.

At common law, receiving stolen goods, knowing them to have been stolen, is a misdemeanor; 2 Russ. Cr. 253. But in Massachusetts it has been held to partake so far of the nature of felony that if a constable has reasonable grounds to suspect one of the crime of receiving or aiding in the concealment of stolen goods, knowing them to be stolen, he may without warrant arrest the supposed offender; Rohan v. Sawin, 5 Cush. (Mass.) 281.

A current coin, which has not passed into circulation, may be sold as a curiosity and, if stolen from its owner by the vendor, who is convicted of larceny, an order of restitution may be made against the purchaser. Semble otherwise, if the thief has dealt with it as current coin and passed it into circulation; [1899] 2 Q. B. 111.

See [1892] 2 Q. B. 597; RECENT POSSESSION OF STOLEN GOODS; also a note in 22 L. R. A. (N. S.) 833.

RECEIVERS' CERTIFICATES. Acknowledgments of indebtedness issued by a receiver under the order of the court by which he was appointed, either directly in discharge of obligations incurred in the management of the property, or for borrowing money for the maintenance and operation of the property, and redeemable out of its proceeds. They may be made a lien on the property when that is necessary for its proper management and operation in the interest of all who may be concerned in it, as directed in the order under which they are issued, and are usually made a first charge on the fund in the receiver's hands, after payment of the operating expenses.

They are not negotiable instruments, so as to relieve the purchaser or his assigns from equities arising out of the proceedings in the case; Bernard v. Trust Co., 159 Fed. 620, 86 C. C. A. 610, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1118. The view is held that they lack every element of negotiability; Gluck & Becker, Recrs. § 95. The leading (early) case is Meyer v. Johnston, 53 Ala. 237. A holder takes subject to prior equities; Central Nat. Bank v. Hazard, 30 Fed. 484.

In the case of property such as a railroad, which is of a character to give the public a right to its continued operation and use, the court in a proper case may impose the expenses and obligations of operation upon the property regardless of the question of who may be the ultimate owner of the property; Illinois T. & S. Bank v. Ry. Co., 115 Cal. 285, 47 Pac. 60. A court of equity has power to appoint a receiver for a railroad and to authorize the issue of certificates for raising money necessary for the management and preservation of the road, and make the debt thereby created a first lien; Wallace v. Loomis, 97 U. S. 146, 24 L. Ed. 895; Union Trust Co. v. Ry. Co., 117 U. S. 434, 6 Sup. Ct. 809, 29 L. Ed. 963. But a court of equity cannot order the issue of certificates, to be a paramount lien, by the receiver of an insolvent private corporation, where the business is affected with no public interest unless such issue is essential to preserve the property or franchises; Florida Land & Imp. Co. v. Merrill, 52 Fed. 78, 2 C. C. A. 629; International Trust Co. v. Decker Bros., 152 Fed. 78, 81 C. C. A. 302, 11 L. R. A. (N. S.) 152; Fidelity Ins., T. & S. D. Co. v. Iron Co., 68 Fed. 623; as against lienors who have not assented to their issue; Doe v. Transp. Co., 78 Fed. 62. But where the receiver and 85 per cent. of the creditors petitioned the court to allow an issue of receivers' certificates, to conserve a valued property, and only one small creditor objected, the court allowed him to be paid and certificates to be issued; Borchardt Co. v. Naval Stores Co., 206 Fed. 366.

In Lockport Felt Co. v. Paper Co., 74 N. J. Eq. 686, 70 Atl. 980, the insolvent corporation owned eighteen mills; after a receiver was appointed foreclosure on one of them was threatened; the court ordered receiver's certificates to issue, to become a lien on all the mills, and prior to existing mortgages.

In the case of a mining company the court cannot, against the objection of even a small minority of the mortgage bondholders, authorize the issue of certificates to be a first lien, to enable a continuance of the operation of the mines; Farmers' L. & T. Co. v. Coal Co., 50 Fed. 481, 16 L. R. A. 603; nor can such certificates be issued for payment of taxes in the case of the foreclosure of the second mortgage of a private corporation, to be a paramount lien, against the consent of the first mortgagee; Hanna v. Trust Co., 70 Fed. 2, 16 C. C. A. 586, 30 L. R. A. 201; or in the like case for carrying out contracts for improvements made with purchasers of the company's land; Hanna v. Trust Co., 70 Fed. 2, 16 C. C. A. 586, 30 L. R. A. 201, 36 U. S. App. 61. In the case of a railroad such certificates cannot be issued and given a first lien, on an application ex parte without notice to lienholders, the proceeds to be used for the maintenance of the road; State v. R. Co., 45 S. C. 464, 23 S. E. 380; Bernard v. Trust Co., 159 Fed. 620, 86 C. C. A. 610, 16 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1118.

Where a mine and railroad were operated in connection with each other by the same company, certificates were issued as a charge upon both properties; Karn v. Iron Co., 86 Va. 754, 11 S. E. 431.

If the order authorizing certificates for borrowing money to carry on the business does not limit their payment to any particular fund, the right of bona fide holders for value to resort to the general assets as against general creditors will not be qualified by a quasi-limitation apparent on the face of the certificates; Appeal of Neafie (Pa.) 12 Atl. 271.

When the receiver is appointed on petition of a stockholder, and earnings have been used to pay interest on the bonds, there is no equity which requires payment of past due claims for labor and materials by the issue of receivers' certificates therefor, payable out of the corpus of the property; there is an equity to pay out of net earnings for labor necessary to keep the property in actual operation, but such earnings cannot be anticipated by the issue of receivers' certificates unless by agreement of parties; Street v. R. Co., 59 Fed. 25; nor can such certificates be issued against the opposition of first mortgage bondholders for new equipment and construction of a narrow gauge road of which new owners would manifestly change the gauge to the standard, so that the proposed improvements would be useless; id. Except under extraordinary circumstances, a court ought not to order the issue of receivers' certificates, with a prior lien, to complete an unfinished railroad; Shaw v. R. Co., 100 U. S. 605, 25 L. Ed. 757. Such an order was made in Kennedy v. R. Co., 2 Dill 448, Fed. Cas. No. 7,706, where it was necessary to complete the road in order to secure a land grant; and in Stanton v. Alabama & C. R. Co., 2 Woods 506, Fed. Cas. No. 13,296, to preserve a railroad and complete some considerable portion of it.

Certificates issued, under an order made without notice to creditors, for debts prior to the receivership, give the holders no preference over other creditors; Laughlin v. Rolling-Stock Co., 64 Fed. 25. They cannot be issued, with priority over existing mortgages, for wages accrued before the appointment of the receiver or for deficiency of supplies; Union Trust Co. v. Souther, 107 U. S. 592, 2 Sup. Ct. 295, 27 L. Ed. 488; In re Eureka Basin W. & M. Co., 96 N. Y. 49; Turner v. R. Co., 95 Ill. 134, 35 Am. Rep. 144. Certificates issued, not to preserve the property, but to pay unsecured claims, cannot be given priority over an antecedent mortgage; Hooper v. Trust Co., 81 Md. 559, 32 Atl. 505, 29 L. R. A. 262 (but see RECEIVER, as to paying material and labor claims); when in excess of the amount authorized by the court they cannot be enforced against the property unless the proceeds were used for its benefit; Wesson v. Chapman, 77 Hun 144, 28 N. Y. Supp. 431. They cannot be issued to pay interest on bonds; Newton v. Mfg. Co., 76 Fed. 418 (unless perhaps on a prior mortgage not in controversy). They may be issued to pay claims for supplies; Rutherford v. R. Co., 178 Pa. 38, 35 Atl. 926; or to complete and equip a railroad and pay labor claims previously incurred; First Nat. Bank of Houston v. Ewing, 103 Fed. 168, 43 C. C. A. 150.

Allowances to receivers and their counsel as compensation for services are taxable as costs, and have priority over receivers' certificates; Petersburg Sav. & Ins. Co. v. Dellatorre, 70 Fed. 643, 7 C. C. A. 310; and certificates issued under an order not giving them priority over other claims, are not entitled to preference over debts of the receiver contracted in carrying on the business; Lewis v. Steel Co., 183 Pa. 248, 38 Atl. 606; and persons taking such certificates in exchange for certificates before issued under an order giving them a preference, are not entitled to priority even under the first order; id. Whether they are entitled to priority out of net income over a deficiency judgment on a mortgage depends on the equities of the case and on no fixed rule; American Trust Co. v. S. S. Co., 190 Fed. 113, 111 C. C. A. 376.

The holder of certificates is put upon inquiry as to the whole course of the proceedings of a litigation in which they were issued, and is charged with notice thereof; Mercantile Trust Co. v. R. Co., 58 Fed. 6, 7 C. C. A. 3; and when the order for the issue was ex parte, and the proceeds were improperly applied, a holder who made no demand for three years and until the foreclosure sale was confirmed and a decree of distribution entered, was guilty of gross laches and estopped by the decree from asserting his claim; id. Where defendants held receivers' certificates for a right of way and agreed that they should be postponed to other certificates to be issued to plaintiffs, but on a sale defendants were paid for the right of way and plaintiffs' certificates were not paid in full, the latter were entitled to recover from the defendants the amount so paid them; Fletcher v. Waring, 137 Ind. 159, 36 N. E. 896.

Holders of certificates cannot enjoin a sale under a decree in favor of an intervening mechanics' lien creditor whose claim was prosecuted before the certificates were authorized; Gordon v. Newman, 62 Fed. 686, 10 C. C. A. 587.

It has been held that a chancellor cannot authorize a receiver to borrow money by selling interest-bearing receivers' certificates of indebtedness at less than their face value; Meyer v. Johnston, 53 Ala. 237; but see Stanton v. R. Co., 2 Woods 506, Fed. Cas. No. 13,296.

Such certificates are considered as "costs of suit," in a decree directing the payment of the "costs of this suit" after the payment of the expenses of the sale; Farmers' L. & T. Co. v. R. Co., 106 Fed. 565.

Purchasers of certificates are not bound to see to the application of the purchase money; Union Trust Co. v. R. Co., 117 U. S. 434, 6 Sup. Ct. 809, 29 L. Ed. 963. See RECEIVER; ROLLING STOCK; MORTGAGE.

RECEIVING. Taking or having. Baker v. Keiser (Md.) 23 Atl. 735.

RECENT POSSESSION OF STOLEN PROPERTY. Possession of the fruits of crime recently after its commission is prima facie evidence of guilty possession; and if unexplained, either by direct evidence, or by the attending circumstances, or by the character and habits of life of the possessor, or otherwise, it is usually regarded by the jury as conclusive. 1 Tayl. Ev. § 122. See 1 Greenl. Ev. § 34; Wilson v. U. S., 162 U. S. 615, 16 Sup. Ct. 895, 40 L. Ed. 1090.

It is manifest that the force of this rule of presumption depends upon the recency of the possession as related to the crime, and upon the exclusiveness of such possession.

If the interval of time between the loss and the finding be considerable, the presumption, as it affects the party in possession of the stolen property, is much weakened, and the more especially so if the goods are of such a nature as, in the ordinary course of things, frequently to change hands. From the nature of the case, it is not possible to fix any precise period within which the effect of this rule of presumption can be limited; it must depend not only upon the mere lapse of time, but upon the nature of the property and the concomitant circumstances of each particular case. Thus, where two ends of woollen cloth in an unfinished state, consisting of about twenty yards each, were found in the possession of the prisoner two months after they had been stolen, it was held that the prisoner should explain how he came by the property; 7 C. & P. 551. But where the only evidence against a prisoner was that certain tools had been traced to his possession three months after their loss, an acquittal was decided; 3 C. & P. 600. And so, on an indictment for horse-stealing, where it appeared that the horse was not discovered in the custody of the accused until after six months from the date of the robbery; 3 C. & K. 318; and where goods lost sixteen months before were found in the prisoner's house, and no other evidence was adduced against him, he was not called upon for his defence; 2 C. & P. 459.

Such possession of stolen goods may be indicative of any more aggravated crime which has been connected with theft. Upon an indictment for arson, proof that property which was in the house at the time it was burnt was soon afterwards found in the possession of the prisoner was held to raise a probable presumption that he was present and concerned in the offence; 2 East, Pl. Cr. 1035. A like inference has been raised in the case of murder accompanied by robbery; Wills, Circ. Ev. 72, 241; in the cases of burglary and shopbreaking; 4 B. & Ald. 122; 9 C. & P. 364; Com. v. Millard, 1 Mass. 6; and in the case of the possession of a quantity of counterfeit money; Russ. & R. 308; Dears. 552; but the recent possession of stolen property by one charged with receiving it, knowing it to be stolen, raises no presumption that he knew that it had been stolen; State v. Bulla, 89 Mo. 595, 1 S. W. 764.

Upon the principle of this presumption, a sudden and otherwise inexplicable transition from a state of indigence, and a consequent change of habits, is sometimes a circumstance extremely unfavorable to the supposition of innocence; Com. v. Montgomery, 11 Metc. (Mass.) 534, 45 Am. Dec. 227. See Boston & W. R. Corp. v. Dana, 1 Gray (Mass.) 101.

But this rule of presumption must be applied with caution and discrimination; for the bare possession of stolen property, though recently stolen, uncorroborated by other evidence, is sometimes fallacious and dangerous as a criterion of guilt; 2 Hale, Pl. Cr. 289.

See 1 Benn. & H. Lead. Cr. Cas. 371, where this subject is fully considered; RECEIVER OF STOLEN GOODS.

RECEPTUS (Lat.). In Civil Law. The name sometimes given to an arbitrator, because he had been received or chosen to settle the differences between the parties. Dig. 4, 8; Code 2, 56.

RECESS. The time in which the court is not actually engaged in business. In re Gannon, 69 Cal. 541, 11 Pac. 240.

RECESSION. A re-grant; the act of returning the title of a country to a government which formerly held it, by one which has it at the time; as, the recession of Louisiana, which took place by the treaty between France and Spain, of October 1, 1800. See 2 White, N. Rec. 516.

RÉCIDIVE (Fr.). The state of an individual who commits a crime or misdemeanor, after having once been condemned for a crime or misdemeanor; a relapse.

Récidiviste, an old offender.

RECIDIVIST. A habitual criminal. One who makes a trade of crime. Reformation in such cases is rare. Such criminals generally either succumb to tuberculosis or heart disease in prison or end in an asylum. Sometimes attacks of acute mania or melancholia have a good influence upon such persons, but generally after an attack of acute insanity they are found to be still subject to their criminal tendencies. McDonald, Criminology, ch. viii. As to cases of innate tendency to particular crimes or special propensities, see id. pt. ii. ch. i.-ii.

RECIPROCAL CONTRACT. In Civil Law. One by which the parties enter into mutual engagements.

They are divided into perfect and imperfect. When they are perfectly reciprocal, the obligation of each of the parties is equally a principal part of the contract, such a sale, partnership, etc. Contracts imperfectly reciprocal are those in which the obligation of one of the parties only is a principal obligation of the contract: as, mandate, deposit, loan for use, and the like. In all reciprocal contracts the consent of the parties must be expressed. Pothier, Obl. n. 9; La. Civ. Code, arts. 1753, 1759. See CONTRACT; MUTUAL CONSENT.

RECIPROCITY. Mutuality; state, quality, or character of that which is reciprocal.

The states are bound to many acts of reciprocity. The constitution requires that they shall deliver to each other fugitives from justice; that the records of one state, properly authenticated, shall have full credit in the other states; that the citizens of one state shall be citizens of any state into which they may remove. Their privileges and immunities shall not be abridged by any state law.

See EXTRADITION; FOREIGN JUDGMENTS; PRIVILEGES AND IMMUNITIES.

Between nations. Mutual concessions made by nations in favor of the importation of the products and manufactures of each other.

The president of the United States has been authorized by various tariff acts to enter into reciprocal agreements with foreign countries, concerning the mutual importation of manufactures and products, and to suspend certain provisions of the tariff laws, accordingly. For the purpose of readjusting the present duties on importations into the United States and at the same time to encourage the export trade of this country, the President is authorized and empowered to negotiate trade agreements with foreign nations wherein mutual concessions are made looking toward freer trade relations and further reciprocal expansion of trade and commerce, but such agreements before becoming operative must be submitted to Congress for ratification or rejection. Act of Oct. 3, 1913.

Under the Copyright Act of 1909 he may determine the existence of certain conditions on which reciprocity shall exist; Bong v. Art Co., 214 U. S. 236, 29 Sup. Ct. 628, 53 L. Ed. 979, 16 Ann. Cas. 1126.

RECITAL. The repetition of some former writing, or the statement of something which has been done. It is useful to explain matters of fact which are necessary to make the transaction intelligible. 2 Bla. Com. 298; Big. Estop. 365.

IN CONTRACTS. The party who executes a deed is bound by the recitals of essential facts contained therein; Com. Dig. Estoppel (A 2); 2 Co. 33. The amount of consideration received is held an essential fact under this rule, in England; 5 B. & Ald. 606; 1 B. & C. 704; otherwise in the United States; Morse v. Shattuck, 4 N. H. 229, 17 Am. Dec. 419; Pritchard v. Brown, 4 N. H. 397, 17 Am. Dec. 431; Shepherd v. Little, 14 Johns. (N. Y.) 210; Wegley's Adm'rs v. Weir, 7 S. & R. (Pa.) 311. But see Brocket v. Foscue, 8 N. C. 64; Forest v. Shores, 11 La. 416; Powell v. Mfg. Co., 3 Mas. 347, Fed. Cas. No. 11,356.

IN DEEDS. The recitals in a deed of conveyance bind parties and privies thereto, whether in blood, estate, or law; Whart. Ev. 1039; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 23; and see 3 Ad. & E. 265; Carver v. Jackson, 4 Pet. (U. S.) 1, 7 L. Ed. 761. See ESTOPPEL. Recitals in a deed bind parties and claimants under them, but not strangers claiming by an adverse title, or those who claim by title anterior or paramount to the deed; Sabariego v. Maverick, 124 U. S. 261, 8 Sup. Ct. 461, 31 L. Ed. 430. Recitals of preliminary proceedings in tax deeds are not evidence of the facts recited; Downer v. Tarbell, 61 Vt. 530, 17 Atl. 482; Henderson v. White, 69 Tex. 103, 5 S. W. 374.

Recitals are deemed to be made upon suggestion of the grantee; Carver v. Jackson, 4 Pet. (U. S.) 87, 7 L. Ed. 761; and are part of the title; Penrose v. Griffith, 4 Binn. (Pa.) 231; they are evidence against the grantee; Schuykill & D. Imp. & R. Co. v. McCreary, 58 Pa. 304; and parol evidence is not admissible to contradict them.

Recitals of relationship in a recent deed are generally held inadmissible; Costello v. Burke, 63 Ia. 361, 19 N. W. 247. A map or plat referred to in a deed may become a part thereof; Beach Front Hotel Co. v. Sooy, 197 Fed. 881, 118 C. C. A. 579. Reference in a deed for shore land to a plat containing curved lines, apparently indicating the lines of high and low water, does not estop the grantee and his successors in title to claim that the lands were riparian or littoral; Beach Front Hotel Co. v. Sooy, 197 Fed. 881, 118 C. C. A. 579.

Where certain guaranties recited a consideration of $1 to the subscriber in hand paid, the receipt thereof was thereby acknowledged, the guarantors were estopped to deny that any consideration had in fact been paid; Bond v. Farwell, 172 Fed. 58, 96 C. C. A. 546.

If the recitals of a patent nullify its granting clause, the grant fails; St. Louis Smelting & Ref. Co. v. Kemp, 104 U. S. 644, 26 L. Ed. 875. See Kirby v. Lewis, 39 Fed. 70. If the operative parts of a deed are ambiguous, the recitals may be referred to as a key to the intention of the parties; 5 Russ. 344; but not if the operative parts are clear; 19 L. J. Q. B. 462; and the same rule applies to statutes; 4 Ch. D. 592. If they are at variance, the operative parts must be effective and the recitals ineffective, but the latter may explain ambiguities; L. R. 1 Eq. 183; in such case, in a conveyance, if the recital is clear as to what is meant and the operative parts go beyond the recitals, the conveyance must be restricted; L. R. 1 Eq. 361; 29 Ch. D. 514. A misrecital in a deed may influence its construction; Elphins. Interpr. of Deeds, 139.

The recital of the payment of the consideration money is evidence of payment against subsequent purchasers from the same grantor; Pennsylvania Salt Mfg. Co. v. Neel, 54 Pa. 19; but not against third parties, when it is necessary for the party claiming under the deed to show full payment before receiving notice of an adverse equity; Lloyd v. Lynch, 28 Pa. 425, 70 Am. Dec. 137. A deed of defeasance which professes to recite the principal deed must do so truly; Cruise, Dig.

tit. 32, c. 7, § 28. See 3 Ch. Cas. 101; Co. Litt. 352; Com. Dig. Fait (E 1).

IN STATUTES. A mere recital in an act, whether of fact or of law, is not conclusive, unless it is clear that the legislature intended that the recital should be accepted as a fact in the case; Kinhead v. U. S., 150 U. S. 483, 14 Sup. Ct. 172, 37 L. Ed. 1152.

IN BONDS. The recitals in corporate bonds may constitute notice to holders of facts which will affect their rights. See Parsons v. Jackson, 99 U. S. 434, 25 L. Ed. 457; Byers v. Trust Co., 175 Pa. 318, 34 Atl. 629. One who buys bonds which recite that they are for the principal and interest of other bonds, is chargeable with notice that the former indebtedness was overdue; Higgins v. Lansingh, 154 Ill. 301, 40 N. E. 362. In Provident Life & Trust Co. v. Mercer Co., 170 U. S. 593, 18 Sup. Ct. 788, 42 L. Ed. 1156, it was said as to recitals in county bonds: "By a long series of decisions such recitals are held conclusive, in favor of a bona fide holder of bonds, that precedent conditions, prescribed by statute and subject to the determination of those county officers, have been fully complied with. For instance, whether an election has been held, whether at such an election a majority voted in favor of the issue of bonds, whether the terms of the subscription have been complied with, and matters of a kindred nature which either expressly or by necessary implication are to be determined in the first instance by the officers of the county, will in favor of a bona fide holder be conclusively presumed to have been fully performed, provided the bonds contain recitals similar to these in the bonds before us." The court applied the doctrine of the conclusive effect of such recitals not only to matters transpiring before the placing of the bonds in the hands of the trustee, such as the election, etc., but also to conditions which it was urged were to be performed subsequently to the execution, such as that the bonds should not be binding until the railway should have been so completed through the county, that a train of cars had passed over it.

See, also, Town of Coloma v. Eaves, 92 U. S. 484, 23 L. Ed. 579; Citizens' Saving & Loan Ass'n v. Perry Co., 156 U. S. 692, 15 Sup. Ct. 547, 39 L. Ed. 585; Andes v. Ely, 158 U. S. 312, 15 Sup. Ct. 954, 39 L. Ed. 996; BONDS; MUNICIPAL BONDS.

IN JUDICIAL RECORDS. A recital in the record of a court imports absolute verity, and all parties thereto are estopped from denying its truth; Ex parte Rice, 102 Ala. 671, 15 South. 450; and the recitals of the record of a trial court are conclusive on the parties as to the term at which a decree was rendered; if the record is incorrect, the remedy is by a proceeding in the trial court to secure a correction; State v. Hopewell, 35 Neb. 822, 53 N. W. 990.

IN PLEADING. In Equity. The decree formerly contained a recital of the pleadings. This usage is now mostly abolished, though it obtains largely in New Jersey.

At Law. Recitals of deeds or specialties bind the parties to prove them as recited.

Definite recitals in municipal bonds of preliminary facts relating to the regularity of their issue will estop the municipality from disputing the facts; Lake County v. Graham, 130 U. S. 674, 9 Sup. Ct. 654, 32 L. Ed. 1065; L. R. 5 Q. B. 642 (contra, Ontario v. Hill, 99 N. Y. 324, 1 N. E. 887); or recitals of the performance of conditions precedent, as against a bona fide purchaser for value; Presidio County v. Bond & Stock Co., 212 U. S. 58, 29 Sup. Ct. 237, 53 L. Ed. 402; but no recital of power to issue them is binding; Northern Nat. Bank of Toledo v. Porter Tp., 110 U. S. 608, 4 Sup. Ct. 254, 28 L. Ed. 258. If the recital in a public bond is that the bonds were issued "in pursuance of" or "in conformity with" the statute, this is an assertion that the statute has been followed; but if "under" the statute is used, the purchaser is put upon inquiry and the municipality is not estopped to show that the bonds are void because in excess of the constitutional limit; Bates v. School Dist., 25 Fed. 192; Com. Dig. Pleader (2 W. 18); 4 East 585; Wilbur v. Brown, 3 Den. (N. Y.) 356; Scott v. Horn, 9 Pa. 407; Baltimore Cemetery Co. v. First Independent Church, 13 Md. 117; and a variance in an essential matter will be fatal; Bishop v. Quintard, 18 Conn. 395; even though the variance be trivial; 1 Chitty, Pl. 424. The rule applies to all written instruments; Ulrick v. Ragan, 11 Ala. 529; Addis v. Van Buskirk, 24 N. J. L. 218; Atlantic Mut. F. Ins. Co. v. Sanders, 36 N. H. 252; not, it seems, where it is merely brought forward as evidence, and is not made the ground of action in any way; Marshall v. Adams, 11 Ill. 40.

Recitals of public statutes need not be made in an indictment or information; Dy. 155 a, 346 b; Cro. 187; 1 Wms. Saund. 135; nor in a civil action; Crawford v. Bank, 6 Ala. 289; Shaw v. Tobias, 3 N. Y. 188; but, if made, a variance in a material point will be fatal; 4 Co. 48; Cro. Car. 135; Bac. Abr. Indictment ix.

Recitals of private statutes must be made; Eckert v. Head, 1 Mo. 593; and the statutes proved by an exemplified copy unless admitted by the opposite party; Steph. Pl. 347; Proprietors of Kennebeck Purchase v. Call, 1 Mass. 483; but not if a clause be inserted that it shall be taken notice of as a public act; 1 Cr. M. & R. 47; Brookville Ins. Co. v. Records, 5 Blackf. (Ind.) 170; contra, 1 Mood & M. 421. Pleading a statute is merely stating the facts which bring a case within it, without making any mention, or taking any notice of the statute itself; McKay v. Woodle, 28 N. C. 352. Counting upon a statute consists in making express reference to

It, as by the words "against the form of the statute [or "by force of the statute"] in such case made and provided." Reciting a statute is quoting or stating its contents; Steph. Pl. 347; Gould, Pl. 46.

Recital of a record on which the action is based must be correct, and a variance in a material point will be fatal; Blakey v. Saunders, 9 Mo. 742; State v. Williams, 17 Ark. 371; Iglehart v. Hobart, 19 Ill. 637; otherwise where it is offered in evidence merely; State Bank v. Gray, 12 Ark. 760.

RECITE. In a statute requiring that a sheriff's deed recite the execution, names of the parties, etc., it was held that the word recite does not mean to copy or repeat verbatim, but only to state the substance of the execution. Armstrong's Lessee v. McCoy, 8 Ohio 128, 31 Am. Dec. 435.

RECKLESS. Heedless, careless, rash, indifferent to consequences. Kansas City, M. & B. R. Co. v. Crocker, 95 Ala. 412, 11 South. 262. It implies heedlessness and indifference. Lake Shore & M. S. R. Co. v. Bodemer, 139 Ill. 596, 29 N. E. 692, 32 Am. St. Rep. 218. Reckless indifference as to the consequences of a criminal act may, no doubt, be characterized as malice. But heedlessness is not malice, and neither of them surely amounts to malice aforethought; Odgers, C. L. 270.

RECKLESSNESS. An indifference whether wrong is done or not. An indifference to the rights of others. Recklessness and wantonness are stronger terms than mere or ordinary negligence. Kansas Pac. R. Co. v. Whipple, 39 Kan. 531, 18 Pac. 730.

RECLAIM. To demand again; to insist upon a right; as, when a defendant for a consideration received from the plaintiff has covenanted to do an act, and fails to do it, the plaintiff may bring covenant for the breach, or assumpsit to reclaim the consideration. Weaver v. Bentley, 1 Caines (N. Y.) 47.

RECLAMATION OF ARID LANDS. See IRRIGATION.

RECLAMATION OF SWAMP LANDS. See ASSESSMENT.

RECOGNITION. An acknowledgment that something which has been done by one man in the name of another was done by authority of the latter. See AGENCY; RATIFICATION.

In International Law. The acknowledgment of the claim of a new state to be admitted into the family of nations. In the case of states whose uncivilized condition has prevented them from being recognized as members of the family of nations, the question of the justice of their claim to recognition will depend upon the extent to which it seems probable that they are in a condition to abide by the principles and fulfill the duties imposed by international law. In the case of states which are formed by the successful revolt of one part of a nation against the rest of the nation, the question of their recognition depends upon the fact that they have established a de facto government and have proven their ability to maintain their independence. No fixed rule can be laid down regarding the time when recognition is due to an insurgent state. If the parent state itself acknowledges the independence of the insurgent state, no difficulty is presented; but in other cases the de facto independence of the new state must be determined from the cessation of hostilities against it by the parent country, or by the manifest inability of the parent state to conquer the territory. A too precipitate recognition of an insurgent colony would constitute an offense on the part of the recognizing state against the parent state. 1 Opp. 116-121.

In the United States it devolves upon the president to determine when recognition is to be accorded to a new state, and his decision is not subject to review by the courts. It has been claimed that congress may dictate to the president on this point, but precedents are against the claim. 1 Willoughby, Constitutional Law 461. See EXECUTIVE POWER.

As a general rule international law is not concerned with internal changes within a sovereign state. The government of a state may change from a monarchy to a republic without any change in the identity of the state in the family of nations.

As to recognition of belligerency, see NEUTRALITY; BELLIGERENCY; INSURGENCY.

See EXECUTIVE POWER.

A method of deciding doubtful questions of property by sworn witnesses instead of by the English process of compurgation or ordeal. Twelve men, who must be freemen and hold property, were chosen from the neighborhood and sworn, and the matter was decided according to their witness, or "recognition." It was introduced into England by the Norman kings; Mrs. John Richard Green, in 1 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. H. 116.

RECOGNITORS. In English Law. The name by which the jurors impanelled on an assize were known. Barnet v. Ihrie, 17 S. & R. (Pa.) 174.

See ASSIZE; RECOGNITION.

RECOGNIZANCE. An obligation of record, entered into before a court or officer duly authorized for that purpose, with a condition to do some act required by law which is therein specified. 2 Bla. Com. 341. See U. S. v. Insley, 49 Fed. 776.

The liability of bail above in civil cases, and of the bail in all cases in criminal matters, must be evidenced by a recognizance, as the sheriff has no power to discharge upon a bail-bond being given to him in these cases. See 4 Bla. Com. 297.

The object of a recognizance is to secure the presence of the defendant to perform or suffer the judgment of the court. In some of the United States, however, this distinction is not observed, but bail in the form of a bail-bond is filed with the officer, which is at once bail below and above, being conditioned that the party shall appear and answer to the plaintiff in the suit, and abide the judgment of the court.

In civil cases they are entered into by bail, conditioned that they will pay the debt, interest, and costs recovered by the plaintiff under certain contingencies, and for other purposes under statutes.

In criminal cases they are either that the party shall appear before the proper court to answer to such charges as are or shall be made against him, that he shall keep the peace or be of good behavior. The presence of witnesses may also be secured in the same manner; People v. Rundle, 6 Hill (N. Y.) 506.

Who may take. In civil cases recognizances are generally taken by the court; Treasurer of Vermont v. Rolfe, 15 Vt. 9; State v. Montgomery, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 221; or by some judge of the court in chambers, though other magistrates may be authorized therefor by statute, and are in many of the states; Frost v. Roatch, 6 Whart. (Pa.) 359; State v. Austin, 4 Humphr. (Tenn.) 213.

In criminal cases the judges of the various courts of criminal jurisdiction and justices of the peace may take recognizances; State v. Dawson, 6 Ohio, 251; Com. v. McNeill, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 127; Goodwin v. Dodge, 14 Conn. 206; People v. Rutan, 3 Mich. 42; the sheriff, in some cases; Gray v. State, 5 Ark. 265; Shreeve v. State, 11 Ala. 676; but in case of capital crimes the power is restricted usually to the court of supreme jurisdiction. See BAIL.

In cases where a magistrate has the power to take recognizances it is his duty to do so, exercising a judicial discretion, however; State v. Best, 7 Blackf. (Ind.) 611. In form it is a short memorandum on the record, made by the court, judge, or magistrate having authority, which need not be signed by the party to be found; Kean v. Franklin, 5 S. & R. (Pa.) 147; Com. v. Downey, 9 Mass. 520; Grigsby v. State, 6 Yerg. (Tenn.) 354. It is to be returned to the court having jurisdiction of the offence charged, in all cases; People v. Van Eps, 4 Wend. (N. Y.) 387; Treasurer of Vermont v. Merrill, 14 Vt. 64.

Discharge and excuse under. A surrender of the defendant at any time anterior to a fixed period after the sheriff's return of non est to a ca. sa., or taking the defendant on a ca. sa.; Bryan v. Simonton, 8 N. C. 51; Smith v. Rosecrantz, 6 Johns. (N. Y.) 97; discharges the bail (see FIXING BAIL); Arch. Cr. P. 184; as does the death of the defendant before the return of non est; Bish. Cr. Proc. 264; Antonio v. Arthur, 1 N. & M'C. (S. C.) 251; Parker v. Bidwell, 3 Conn. 84; or a loss of custody and control by act of government or of law without fault of the bail prior to being fixed; Way v. Wright, 5 Metc. (Mass.) 380; Caldwell v. Com., 14 Gratt. (Va.) 698; including imprisonment for life or for a long term of years in another state; Loflin v. Fowler, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 335; but not voluntary enlistment; Herrick v. Richardson, 11 Mass. 234; or long delay in proceeding against bail; Champion v. Noyes, 2 Mass. 485; Howard v. Miller, 1 Root (Conn.) 428; or a discharge of the principal under the bankrupt or insolvent laws of the state; McCausland v. Waller, 1 Harr. & J. (Md.) 156; Trumbull v. Healy, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 670; Payson v. Payson, 1 Mass. 292; McGlensey v. McLearn, 1 Harr. (Del.) 466; and, of course, performance of the conditions of the recognizance by the defendant, discharges the bail. And see BAIL-BOND; FIXING BAIL.

The formal mode of noting a discharge is by entering an exoneration; Boggs v. Teackle, 5 Binn. (Pa.) 332; Strang v. Barber, 1 Johns. Cas. (N. Y.) 329; Lockwood v. Jones, 7 Conn. 439. A culprit giving a recognizance to appear to an indictment, and not to depart from the court without leave, is not discharged from his obligation, nor is his surety thereon, by the quashing of the indictment; State v. Hancock, 54 N. J. L. 393, 24 Atl. 726.

The remedy upon a recognizance is by means of a scire facias against the bail; Cappeau v. Middleton, 1 Harr. & G. (Md.) 154; State v. Carr, 4 Ia. 289; State v. Stout, 11 N. J. L. 124; Com. v. McNeill, 19 Pick. (Mass.) 127; or by suit, in some cases; Matthews v. Cook, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 33; Mix v. Page, 14 Conn. 329. A surety on a recognizance may defend by showing the invalidity of the indictment against his principal; McDaniel v. Campbell, 78 Ga. 188; contra, Lee v. State, 25 Tex. App. 331, 8 S. W. 277.

Without notice to the principal, a recognizance cannot be legally amended against objection of the sureties; Hand v. State, 28 Tex. App. 28, 11 S. W. 679.

It is indispensable to a legal default and declaration of forfeiture of a recognizance, that the principal in the recognizance should have been regularly called, and, upon such call, failed to appear; Brown v. People, 24 Ill. App. 72. See BAIL; SURETYSHIP; SUBROGATION.

RECOGNIZE. To try; to examine in order to determine the truth of a matter. 3 Sharsw. Bla. Com. App. No. III, § 4; Bracton 179.

To enter into a recognizance.

RECOGNIZEE. He for whose use a recognizance has been taken.

RECOGNIZOR. He who enters into a recognizance.

RECOLEMENT. In French Law. The reading and re-examination by a witness of a deposition, and his persistence in the same, or his making such alteration as his better recollection may enable him to do after having read his deposition. Without such re-examination the deposition is void. Pothier, Proced. Cr. s. 4, art. 4.

RECOMMENDATION. The giving to a person a favorable character of another.

When the party giving the character has acted in good faith, he is not responsible for the injury which a third person, to whom such recommendation was given, may have sustained in consequence of it, although he was mistaken.

But when the recommendation is knowingly untrue, and an injury is sustained, the party recommending is civilly responsible for damages; 3 Term 51; Russell v. Clark's Ex'rs, 7 Cra. (U. S.) 69, 3 L. Ed. 271; Allen v. Addington, 7 Wend. (N. Y.) 9; Boyd's Ex'rs v. Browne, 6 Pa. 310; whether it was done merely for the purpose of benefiting the party recommended or the party who gives the recommendation. See PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS.

And in case the party recommended was a debtor to the one recommending, and it was agreed, prior to the transaction, that the former should, out of the property to be obtained by the recommendation, be paid, or in case of any other species of collusion to cheat the person to whom the credit is given, they may both be criminally prosecuted for the conspiracy. See CHARACTER; Fell, Guar. c. 8; Barney v. Dewey, 13 Johns. (N. Y.) 224, 7 Am. Dec. 372; Wise v. Wilcox, 1 Day (Conn.) 22; Lobre v. Pointz, 5 Mart. N. S. (La.) 443.

RECOMPENSE. A reward for services; remuneration for goods or other property.

In maritime law there is a distinction between recompense and restitution. When goods have been lost by jettison, if at any subsequent period of the voyage the remainder of the cargo be lost, the owner of the goods lost by jettison cannot claim restitution from the owners of the other goods; but in the case of expenses incurred with a view to the general benefit, it is clear that they ought to be made good to the party, whether he be an agent employed by the master in a foreign port, or the ship-owner himself.

RECOMPENSE OF RECOVERY IN VALUE. A phrase applied to the matter recovered in a common recovery, after the vouchee has disappeared and judgment is given for the demandant. 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 2093.

RECONCILE. While etymologically not synonymous with "harmonize," reconcile is so nearly equivalent as not to mislead a jury instructed as to the reconciliation of conflicting testimony. Holdridge v. Lee, 3 S. D. 134, 52 N. W. 265.

RECONCILIATION. The act of bringing persons to agree together, who before had had some difference.

A renewal of cohabitation between husband and wife is proof of reconciliation; and such reconciliation destroys the effect of a deed of separation; 4 Eccl. 238. See Bish. Mar. & D. § 1707.

RECONDUCTION. In Civil Law. A renewing of a former lease; relocation. Dig. 19. 2. 13. 11; Code, Nap. art. 1737-1740.

RECONSTRUCTION. This term has been widely used to describe the measures adopted by congress, at the close of the War of Secession in the United States, to regulate the admission of the representatives from the Southern states, the re-establishment of the federal authority within their borders, and the changes in their internal government, in order to adapt them to the condition of affairs brought about by the war.

RECONSTRUCTION OF A CORPORATION. A term used in England instead of the more common term amalgamation. See 20 L. Q. R. 392; MERGER.

RECONVENTION. In Civil Law. An action brought by a party who is defendant against the plaintiff before the same judge. Lanusse's Syndics v. Pimpinella, 4 Mart. N. S. (La.) 439. To entitle the defendant to institute a demand in reconvention, it is requisite that such demand, though different from the main action, be nevertheless necessarily connected with it and incidental to the same. La. Code of Pr. art. 375; Keene v. Relf, 11 La. 309. The reconvention of the civil law was a species of cross-bill. Story, Eq. Pl. § 402. See RECOURPMENT.

RECOPIACION. In Spanish Law. A compilation of the Laws of the Indies, made by Philip IV in 1661. See Ponce v. Church, 210 U. S. 315, 28 Sup. Ct. 737, 52 L. Ed. 1068.

RECORD. A written memorial made by a public officer authorized by law to perform that function, and intended to serve as evidence of something written, said, or done. Mandeville v. Perry, 6 Call (Va.) 78; Com. v. Rodes, 1 Dana (Ky.) 595.

Records may be either of legislative or judicial acts. Memorials of other acts are sometimes made by statutory provisions.

Legislative acts. The federal and state constitutions, acts of congress and of the several legislatures are the highest kind of records. The printed journals of congress have been so considered. See Dougl. 598; Cowp. 17.

A record in judicial proceedings is a precise statement of the suit from its commencement to its termination, including the conclusion of law thereon, drawn up by the proper officer, for the purpose of perpetuating the exact state of facts; or in the language of Lord Coke, "records are memorials or remembrances, in rolls of parchment, of the proceedings and acts of a court of justice, which hath power to hold pleas according to the course of the common law." See Davidson v. Murphy, 13 Conn. 216.

The proceedings of the courts of common law are records. But every minute made by a clerk of a court for his own future guidance in making up his record is not a record; Leveringe v. Dayton, 4 Wash. C. C. 698, Fed. Cas. No. 8,288. See Snyder v. Wise, 10 Pa. 157; Thomas v. Robinson, 3 Wend. (N. Y.) 267; Good v. French, 115 Mass. 201.

Proceedings in courts of chancery are said not to be, strictly speaking, records; but they are so considered; Gresl. Ev. 101. And see Scott v. Blanchard, 8 Mart. N. S. (La.) 303; Craig v. Brown, 1 Pet. C. C. 352, Fed. Cas. No. 3,328.

In a case brought from the circuit court, the opinion regularly filed below may be examined in order to ascertain whether either party claimed that a state statute upon which the judgment necessarily depended, in whole or in part, was in contravention of the United States Constitution, but not to ascertain that which should be made to appear in a bill of exceptions, or the pleadings; Loeb v. Columbia Tp. Trustees, 179 U. S. 484, 21 Sup. Ct. 174, 45 L. Ed. 280; or to ascertain whether the case raises any question determined adversely to a right, etc., under the constitution or laws of the United States; Gross v. Mortg. Co., 108 U. S. 477, 2 Sup. Ct. 940, 27 L. Ed. 795. The former rule that the opinion below was no part of the record was abrogated (Murdock v. Memphis, 20 Wall. [U. S.] 590, 22 L. Ed. 429), and finally a rule of court provided that a copy of the opinion below should go up in the transcript; Loeb v. Columbia Tp. Trustees, 179 U. S. 484, 21 Sup. Ct. 174, 45 L. Ed. 280. But the mere fact that a paper is found among the files does not make it a part of the record; it must be put there by some action of the court below; England v. Gebhardt, 112 U. S. 502, 5 Sup. Ct. 287, 28 L. Ed. 811, but it is said that this language cannot be taken too broadly; Loeb v. Columbia Tp., 179 U. S. 484, 21 Sup. Ct. 174, 45 L. Ed. 280.

It is within the power of any court of general jurisdiction to restore its lost records or to expunge false or fraudulent interpolations therein; Blakemore v. Wilson, 61 Ill. App. 454; or where the record is silent, or, where it suggests as a fact something contrary to the fact, to correct the record by an order nunc pro tunc; Holman v. State, 79 Ga. 155, 4 S. E. 8. See In re Wight, 134 U. S. 136, 10 Sup. Ct. 487, 33 L. Ed. 865. The power of a court to amend its own records is limited to the correction of actual mistakes and omissions; Jones v. Newton, 65 Hun 619, 19 N. Y. Supp. 786. A court has an inherent power to amend its record; this is not to create a new record, but presupposes an existing record susceptible of amendment; Gagnon v. U. S., 193 U.

S. 451, 24 Sup. Ct. 510, 48 L. Ed. 745. A court may always, after the expiration of the term, amend the record nunc pro tunc to conform to the facts, where there are sufficient data; Borrego v. Territory, 8 N. M. 446, 46 Pac. 349. If there has been a failure to file a record within the time required, a subsequent filing cures this defect; provided no motion to docket and dismiss has been made; 24 U. S. App. 527.

In criminal proceedings all parts of the record must be interpreted together, and a deficiency in one part may be supplied by what appears elsewhere therein; St. Clair v. U. S., 154 U. S. 134, 14 Sup. Ct. 1002, 38 L. Ed. 936.

Altering records of a court is a crime punishable at common law; 2 East, P. C. 866. See Saunders v. People, 38 Mich. 218; State v. Williams, 30 Me. 484; 1 Bish. Cr. L. § 468 (6). An attorney may be disbarred for alteration of the record by falsifying the stenographer's transcript of the evidence to deceive an appellate court; State v. Harber, 129 Mo. 291, 31 S. W. 889.

Laws for the registration of deeds are of statutory origin, and the statute must be examined to determine what instruments are to be recorded, where they are to be recorded, and the effect of a failure to record them; First Nat. Bank of Claremore v. Keys, 229 U. S. 179, 33 Sup. Ct. 642, 57 L. Ed. 1140.

The fact of an instrument affecting property being recorded according to law is held to operate as a constructive notice to all subsequent purchasers of any estate, legal or equitable, in the same property; Parkist v. Alexander, 1 Johns. Ch. (N. Y.) 394. And even if not recorded, if it has been filed for record and its existence is necessarily implied from the existence of another instrument already of record, purchasers will be deemed to have had notice of its existence; 14 Cent. L. J. 374.

But all conveyances and deeds which may be de facto recorded are not to be considered as giving notice: in order to have this effect, the instruments must be such as are authorized to be recorded, and the registry must have been made in compliance with the law, otherwise the registry is to be treated as a mere nullity, and it will not affect a subsequent purchaser or incumbrancer unless he has actual notice; 2 Sch. & L. 68; Astor v. Wells, 4 Wheat. (U. S.) 466, 4 L. Ed. 616; 1 Story, Eq. Jur. § 403; Bullard v. Hinckley, 5 Greenl. (Me.) 272; but where a statute makes it discretionary to record an instrument, the effect of recording is in no wise lessened, but is deemed a constructive notice the same as if the recording had been required; Appeal of Pepper, 77 Pa. 373. The record of a deed is not constructive notice of its contents when it is not entitled to be recorded under the recording acts; Prentice v. Storage Co., 58 Fed. 437, 7 C. C. A. 293. Where a proper book is kept for the purpose of showing when an instrument is left for record, delay or negligence in entering it in other books will not affect it as a lien upon the property: Appeal of Woods, 82 Pa. 116.

But it is held that it is the duty of a mortgagee to see that his mortgage is correctly recorded: a mortgage defectively recorded and indexed by changing the first initial of the mortgagor's name, the correct name being entirely omitted from the record, is not binding on a subsequent purchaser, without notice, from the mortgagor; Prouty v. Marshall, 225 Pa. 570, 74 Atl. 550, 25 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1211. So a judgment docketed against Amanda Haring is not notice as to property standing in the name of Melvina Harnig; Haring v. Murphy, 60 Misc. Rep. 374, 113 N. Y. Supp. 452. See cases cited in Burns v. Ross, 215 Pa. 293, 64 Atl. 526, 7 L. R. A. (N. S.) 415, 114 Am. St. Rep. 963.

A recorder, if errors in transferring should occur, should explain them and not erase; Glasgow v. Kann, 171 Pa. 262, 32 Atl. 1095. An action will lie against a recorder of deeds for neglect; Rising v. Dickinson, 18 N. D. 478, 121 N. W. 616, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 127, 138 Am. St. Rep. 779, 20 Ann. Cas. 484.

Records of a public office (here a card index of assessments made by the official, though not required by law to be kept) are public property; Robison v. Fishback, 175 Ind. 132, 93 N. E. 666, Ann. Cas. 1913B, 1271.

See, as to recording acts, 3 Law Mag. & Rev., 4th sec. 412; Judge Cooley's Paper in 4th Rep. Am. Bar Asso. (1881); Lecture of W. H. Rawle before the Law Dept. Univ. of Pa., 1881; as to mortgages, see MORTGAGE; as to falsification of a record, see FORGERY.

As to giving full faith and credit to judicial proceedings, under the United States constitution, see FOREIGN JUDGMENT. The constitutional provision applies in terms to public acts, records, and judicial proceedings, and it is held that the term records in the Judiciary Act of May 26, 1790, which provides how they shall be proved and admitted in evidence, includes all acts, legislative, executive, judicial, and ministerial, composing the public records of the state; White v. Burnley, 20 How. (U. S.) 250, 15 L. Ed. 886.

Questions as to what is or is not a part of the record have arisen, principally on writ of error or appeal, as to what parts of the record and proceedings of the court below are to be considered as parts of the record before the appellate court. In many of these cases, matters which were actually a part of the record below are only such in the court above when made so by being embodied in the bill of exceptions. Among the matters and things which have been held not to be a part of the record, but to be considered with reference to the foregoing qualification, are: Trial list; Moore v. Kline, 1 Pen. & W. (Pa.) 129; bond for costs; Montgomery v. Carpenter, 5 Ark. 264; Maynard v. Hoskins, 8 Mich. 81; writing sued on;

Williams v. Duffy, 7 Humphr. (Tenn.) 255; Clark v. Gibson, 2 Ark. 109 (unless made so by oyer or otherwise; Pelham v. Bank, 4 Ark. 202); an affidavit made to supply a part of the record which has been lost; Troy v. Reilley, 3 Scam. (Ill.) 259; papers presented to a court and acted upon merely as matters of evidence; Kirby v. Wood, 16 Me. 81; the registry of a mechanic's lien; Davis v. Church, 1 W. & S. (Pa.) 240; the statement of demand, in the court for the trial of small causes; Vandyke v. Bastedo, 15 N. J. L. 224; a warrant of attorney to confess judgment and an affidavit showing the death of one of the signers of it; Magher v. Howe, 12 Ill. 379; instructions to the jury; Pierce v. Locke, 11 Ia. 454 (contra, where they were signed by the judge and filed; Allen v. Davison, 16 Ind. 416); letters copied into the transcripts as exhibits; Stodder v. Grant, 28 Ala. 416; papers filed after an appeal prayed, taken, and signed by the judge; Gray v. Nations, 1 Ark. 557; a plea stricken from the files; Kelly v. Matthews, 5 Ark. 223; Schmidt v. Colley, 29 Ind. 120; minutes of the court taken at the trial; Dawley v. Hovious, 23 Cal. 103; or clerk's minutes; People v. Mining Co., 33 Cal. 171; a bill of particulars; Eggleston v. Buck, 24 Ill. 262; a summons or other writ; Childs v. Risk, Morr. (Ia.) 439 (otherwise where there was no appearance; Stanton v. Woodcock, 19 Ind. 273).

The following have been held to be parts of the record: A stipulation as to sale of mortgaged premises and solicitor's fee; Cord v. Southwell, 15 Wis. 211; depositions in a probate court; Lipscomb v. Postell, 38 Miss. 476, 77 Am. Dec. 651; affidavits filed in opposition to an application for an injunction; Gagliardo v. Crippen, 22 Cal. 362; motions, notices, and rulings of court; Lemondo v. French, 4 G. Greene (Ia.) 123; a finding of the court; Smith v. Lewis, 20 Wis. 350; Sutter v. Streit, 21 Mo. 157; a submission and award filed; Buntain v. Curtis, 27 Ill. 374; a bill of exceptions settled on an appeal from an order; Mead v. Walker, 20 Wis. 518; an instrument of which oyer is craved; Cummins v. Woodruff, 5 Ark. 116. The opinion of the trial court as to the facts was held a part of the record; Gregg v. Spencer, 96 Ia. 501, 65 N. W. 411; but in Pennsylvania it was said to be not a good principle so to treat the opinion; In re Morrison's Estate, 183 Pa. 155, 38 Atl. 895.

Under recording acts. Statutes of the several states have required enrolment of certain deeds, mortgages, and other instruments, and declared that the copies thus made should have the effect of records. An instrument lodged for record is considered as recorded from that time, whether it was actually copied in the book or not, or in the proper book or not; Farabee v. McKerrihan, 172 Pa. 234, 33 Atl. 583, 51 Am. St. Rep. 734.

The sole object of acts for the restoration of lost records is to restore them as they existed; In re Jones' Estate, 17 Cal. App. 330, 119 Pac. 670; Whitney v. Land Co., 119 Ala. 497, 24 South. 259; Vail v. Iglehart, 69 Ill. 332.

The legislature has power to provide for the re-establishment of lost-record title papers to real estate against unknown claimants, upon process served by publication; Title & Document Restoration Co. v. Kerrigan, 150 Cal. 289, 88 Pac. 356, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 682, 119 Am. St. Rep. 199, 11 Ann. Cas. 465; that such a statute limited its operation to cases where such records were destroyed by earth-quakes, fire, or flood, will not render it invalid as special legislation; id. The duty of determining unsettled questions respecting the title to real estate is local in its nature to be discharged in such mode as may be provided by the state in which the land is situated; Arndt v. Griggs, 134 U. S. 316, 10 Sup. Ct. 557, 33 L. Ed. 918.

Inspection of Records. At common law, there was no general right of inspection, but the right depended entirely upon the question whether the party seeking to exercise it had an interest. If he had, he was entitled to exercise the right upon the payment of the usual fees; 7 Mod. 127; 1 Stra. 304; 2 id. 260, 954, 1005; but a mere stranger who had no such interest had no right of inspection at common law; 8 Term 390; and the custodian might permit or refuse the inspection at his discretion without any control by a court; 6 Ad. & El. 84. At a comparatively early period, this distinction between those who had and those who had not an interest became obliterated; 1 Wils. 297; People v. Cornell, 47 Barb. (N. Y.) 329. The effect of modern recording acts making the public records notice, has aided to accomplish this result, and, indeed, makes the right of inspection and of enforcing the privilege an essential one; 4 D. & R. 820; Brewer v. Watson, 71 Ala. 299, 46 Am. Rep. 318; Silver v. People, 45 Ill. 224; Aitcheson v. Huebner, 90 Mich. 643, 51 N. W. 634. It does not extend in England to merely quasi-public records, such as court rolls of a manor; Bunb. 269; or to records of a justice of the peace; Perkins v. Cummings, 66 Vt. 485, 29 Atl. 675; or to a marriage license docket; Marriage License Docket No. 2, 4 Pa. Dist. R. 284; contra, marriage license docket, id. 162.

The right of inspection will not exist as to the record of private suits, at least before trial, where it is sought only to gratify malice or curiosity, or to make profit by disclosing private affairs and making public scandalous matters; Schmedding v. May, 85 Mich. 1, 48 N. W. 201, 24 Am. St. Rep. 74; nor does it extend to records required by law to be kept secret, as, the proceedings of a county electrical board; Gleaves v. Terry, 93 Va. 491, 25 S. E. 552, 34 L. R. A. 144. The right of inspection is secured by statute in most of the states, and is not dependent on interest, though in some cases it is denied if detrimental to public policy or is sought by a citizen of another state; Brewer v. Watson, 61 Ala. 310. In case of refusal, the right may be enforced; In re Chambers, 44 Fed. 786; Lum v. McCarty, 39 N. J. L. 287; State v. Long, 37 W. Va. 266, 16 S. E. 578; even though the rules of the office require the records to be kept secret. The right when denied is enforced by mandamus; Barber v. Title & Guaranty Co., 53 N. J. Eq. 158, 32 Atl. 222; Brewer v. Watson, 71 Ala. 299; Aitcheson v. Huebner, 90 Mich. 643, 51 N. W. 634; Hawes v. White, 66 Me. 305. Injunction is usually held not to be a proper remedy; Belt v. Abstract Co., 73 Md. 289, 20 Atl. 982, 10 L. R. A. 212; Buck v. Collins, 51 Ga. 391, 21 Am. Rep. 236; Diamond Match Co. v. Powers, 51 Mich. 145, 16 N. W. 314; Barber v. Title & Guaranty Co., 53 N. J. Eq. 158, 32 Atl. 222. The right of inspection is very much drawn into question in cases where the right is sought to be exercised by abstract and title insurance companies. Objections to the use of public offices by the agents of such companies are made upon the ground of interference with the legitimate fees of the public officers, with the business of the office, and of possible injuries to the records. The right has been sustained in Re Chambers, 44 Fed. 786; Stockman v. Brooks, 17 Colo. 248, 29 Pac. 746; People v. Richards, 99 N. Y. 620, 1 N. E. 258; Com. v. O'Donnell, 12 W. N. C. (Pa.) 291; and, after some fluctuation, in Barber v. Title & Guaranty Co., 53 N. J. Eq. 158, 32 Atl. 222; Burton v. Reynolds, 102 Mich. 55, 60 N. W. 452; Randolph v. State, 82 Ala. 527, 2 South. 714, 60 Am. Rep. 761; Buck v. Collins, 51 Ga. 391, 21 Am. Rep. 236; Belt v. Abstract Co., 73 Md. 289, 20 Atl. 982, 10 L. R. A. 212, a statute having been passed as a result of a previous decision otherwise. They are always at the service of a person desiring to examine them; Miller v. Moise, 168 Fed. 940. A citizen is not required to show a special interest; Burton v. Tuite, 78 Mich. 363, 44 N. W. 282, 7 L. R. A. 73. A title insurance company has the right to examine judgment indexes in the district court on a matter of current business if it does not interfere with the clerk in his duties or with persons exercising their right of access thereto; Bell v. Ins. & Trust Co., 189 U. S. 131, 23 Sup. Ct. 569, 47 L. Ed. 741.

As to the custody of court records and when they may be removed, see In re Caswell, 18 R. I. 835, 29 Atl. 259, 27 L. R. A. 82, 49 Am. St. Rep. 814.

Where the right is permitted, the custodian may make reasonable rules; People v. Richards, 99 N. Y. 620, 1 N. E. 258; Day v. Button, 96 Mich. 600, 56 N. W. 3; Upton v. Catlin, 17 Colo. 546, 31 Pac. 172, 17 L. R. A. 282; and charge reasonable fees; Burton v. Reynolds, 102 Mich. 55, 60 N. W. 452. The right to inspect has been held to include the right to copy; Hanson v. Eichstaedt, 69 Wis. 538, 35 N. W. 30; State v. Rachac, 37 Minn. 372, 35 N. W. 7; contra, Boylan v. Warren, 39 Kan. 301, 18 Pac. 174, 7 Am. St. Rep. 551; Randolph v. State, 82 Ala. 527, 2 South. 714, 60 Am. Rep. 761.

RECORD OF NISI PRIUS. In English Law. A transcript from the issue-roll: it contains a copy of the pleadings and issue. Steph. Pl. 105.

RECORDARE. A writ to bring up judgments of justices of the peace. Halconbe v. Loudermilk, 48 N. C. 491.

RECORDARI FACIAS LOQUELAM. In English Practice. A writ commanding the sheriff that he cause the plaint to be recorded which is in his county, without writ, between the parties there named, of the cattle, goods, and chattels of the complainant taken and unjustly distrained as it is said, and that he have the said record before the court on a day therein named, and that he prefix the same day to the parties, that then they may be there ready to proceed in the same plaint. 2 Sell. Pr. 166. Now obsolete.

RECORDATION. Used in Louisiana as equivalent to recording. See RECORDING ACTS.

RECORDATUR (Lat.). An order or allowance that the verdict returned on the nisi prius roll be recorded. Bacon, Abr. Arbitration, etc. (D).

RECORDER. A judicial officer of some cities, possessing generally the powers and an authority of a judge. Republica v. Dallas, 3 Yeates (Pa.) 300. See Egleston v. City Council, 1 Mill. Const. (S. C.) 45.

Anciently, recorder signified to recite or testify on recollection, as occasion might require, what had previously passed in court; and this was the duty of the judges, thence called recorders. Steph. Pl. note 11.

An officer appointed to make record or enrolment of deeds and other legal instruments authorized by law to be recorded. See RECORDING ACTS; RECORD.

In England, a judge of a borough court of quarter sessions. He is appointed by the crown on the recommendation of the home secretary. He must be a barrister of not less than five years standing and is ex officio a justice of the peace for the borough.

A judicial officer in Philadelphia under the charter of 1691, next in authority to the mayor. He was required to be learned in the law. See Vaux's Recorder's Reports, Philadelphia, 1846.

RECORDER OF LONDON. One of the justices of oyer and terminer, and a justice of the peace of the quorum for putting the laws in execution for the preservation of the peace and government of the city. Whart. Law Lex.

RECORDING ACTS. Statutes which regulate the official recording of conveyances, mortgages, bills of sale, hypothecations, assignments for the benefit of creditors, articles of agreement, and other instruments, for the purpose of informing the public, creditors and purchasers, of transactions affecting the ownership of property and the pecuniary responsibility of individual persons. See RECORD.

RECORDS, EARLY ENGLISH. A record commission was appointed in 1800 by parliament, which in 37 years of service printed many records of England, Wales and Scotland. See their reports. Extracts from that on the "Statutes of the Realm" will be found in 2 Sel. Essays in Anglo. Amer. L. H. 171. See 2 Holdsw. Hist. E. L.

RECORDUM. A record; a judicial record. It is used in the phrase prout patet per recordum, which is a formula employed, in pleading, for reference to a record, signifying as it appears from the record. 1 Chit. Pl. 385; Philpot v. McArthur, 10 Me. 127.

RECOUPMENT (Fr. recouper, to cut again). The act of abating or recouping a part of a claim upon which one is sued by reason of a legal or equitable right resulting from a counter-claim arising out of the same transaction. The right of the defendant, in the same action, to claim damages from the plaintiff, either because he has not complied with some cross obligation of the contract upon which he sues, or because he has violated some duty which the law imposed upon him in the making or performance of that contract. Mayor of New York v. Mable, 13 N. Y. 151, 64 Am. Dec. 538; Heaton v. Colgrove, 3 Ind. 265; Robertson v. Davenport, 27 Ala. 574; Brunson v. Martin, 17 Ark. 270; Higgins v. Lee, 16 Ill. 495; Nelson v. Johnson, 25 Mo. 430.

Recoupment is the right to set off unliquidated damages, while the right of set-off, as distinguished from recoupment, comprehends only liquidated demands, or those capable of being ascertained by calculation; Parker v. Hartt, 32 N. J. Eq. 225. Both these terms have a technical meaning and both are included in the same general term, counter-claim, which see.

In a cross demand, which a defendant may set up or not, at his choice; he is not concluded if he does not. Whether he can afterwards sue for the residue of his claim, or not, is a disputed question. He could not, at common law, obtain a judgment against the plaintiff in his favor; Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co. v. Kirven, 215 U. S. 258, 30 Sup. Ct. 78, 54 L. Ed. 179.

Defences, such as recoupment, which, though arising out of the transaction constituting the plaintiff's demand, may cut it down or give rise to an antagonistic demand, are of modern growth and are merely a convenience that saves bringing another suit, not a necessity of the defence. When defendant sets them up he becomes a plaintiff in his turn and subjects himself to the jurisdiction; Virginia-Carolina Chemical Co. v. Kirven, 215 U. S. 252, 30 Sup. Ct. 78, 54 L. Ed. 179. It is a cross demand as distinguished from a defence; Merchants H. & L. Co. v. J. B. Clow & Sons, 204 U. S. 286, 27 Sup. Ct. 285, 51 L. Ed. 488.

This is not a new title in the law, the term occurring from the 14th to the 16th centuries, although it seems of late years to have assumed a new signification, and the present doctrine is said to be still in its infancy; 7 Am. L. Rev. 389. Originally it implied a mere deduction from the claim of the plaintiff, on account of payment in whole or in part, or a former recovery, or some analogous fact; 3 Co. 65; 4 id. 94; 5 id. 2, 31; 11 id. 51, 52. See note to Icily v. Grew, 6 Nev. 467; Viner, Abr. Discount, pl. 3, 4, 9, 10; Barber v. Chapin, 28 Vt. 413. This meaning has been retained in many modern cases, but under the name of deduction or reduction of damages; 1 Maule & S. 318, 323; 2 M. & G. 241; 7 M. & W. 314; Curtis v. Ward, 20 Conn. 204; McMorris v. Simpson, 21 Wend. (N. Y.) 610; Pierce v. Benjamin, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 356, 25 Am. Dec. 396. The word recoupment has also been applied to cases very similar to the above; Stearns v. Marsh, 4 Den. (N. Y.) 227, 47 Am. Dec. 248; Saltus v. Everett, 20 Wend. (N. Y.) 267, 32 Am. Dec. 541. See 7 Am. L. Rev. 389, where recoupment is fully treated.

Recoupment as now understood seems to correspond with the reconvention of the civil law, sometimes termed demandes incidentes by the French writers, in which the reus, or defendant, was permitted to exhibit his claim against the plaintiff for allowance, provided it arose out of, or was incidental to, the plaintiff's cause of action. Œuvres de Pothier, vol. 9, p. 39; 1 White, New Rec. 285; Voet. tit. de Judiciis, n. 78; La. Code Pr. art. 375; Lanusse's Syndics v. Pimpipienella, 4 Mart. N. S. (La.) 439; Walcott v. Hendrick, 6 Tex. 406.

In England, as well as in some states, the principles of recoupment as defined above have been recognized only in a restricted form. Under the name of reduction of damages, the defendant is allowed to show all such violations of his contract by the plaintiff as go to render the consideration less valuable, but he is compelled to resort to an independent action for any immediate or consequential damages affecting him in other respects; 8 M. & W. 858; 1 C. & P. 384; McAlpin v. Lee, 12 Conn. 129, 30 Am. Dec. 609; Dodge v. Tileston, 12 Pick. (Mass.) 330; Withers v. Greene, 9 How. (U. S.) 231, 13 L. Ed. 109. See Reynolds & Lee v. Bell, 84 Ala. 496, 4 South. 703; Andre v. Morrow, 65 Miss. 315, 3 South. 659, 7 Am. St. Rep. 658. But these restrictions are all gradually disappearing, and the law is assuming the form expressed in the cases cited under the definition of modern recoupment, the main reason upon which the doctrine now rests being the avoidance of circuity of action.

In Pennsylvania a defendant may avail himself, by way of recoupment or equitable defence, of a breach of warranty or of a fraudulent representation, and show that the goods sold were worth less than they would have been if they were such as they were warranted or represented to be; Dushane v. Benedict, 120 U. S. 648, 7 Sup. Ct. 696, 30 L. Ed. 810.

There are some limitations and qualifications to the law of recoupment, as thus established. Thus, it has been held that the defendant is not entitled to any judgment for the excess his damages in recoupment may have over the plaintiff's claim, nor shall he be allowed to bring an independent action for that excess; Britton v. Turner, 6 N. H. 481, 26 Am. Dec. 713; Stow v. Yarwood, 14 Ill. 424; McLane v. Miller, 12 Ala. 613; Batterman v. Pierce, 3 Hill (N. Y.) 171; Brunson v. Martin, 17 Ark. 270. If recoupment is put upon the ground of a cross-action and not a more defence for the reduction of damages, there is no reason why he should not have judgment to the extent of his injury. Such seems to be the practice in Louisiana, under the name of reconvention; Miller v. Stewart, 12 La. Ann. 170; and such will probably be the practice under those systems of pleading which authorize the court, in any action which requires it, to grant the defendant affirmative relief; Ogden v. Coddington, 2 E. D. Sm. (N. Y.) 317. See, also, Calvin v. McClure, 17 S. & R. (Pa.) 385; Davidson v. Remington, 12 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 310.

The damages recouped must be for a breach of the same contract upon which suit is brought; Deming v. Kemp, 4 Sandf. (N. Y.) 147; Miles v. Elkin, 10 Ind. 329; Halderman v. Berry, 74 Mich. 424, 42 N. W. 57. For example, when chattels have been sold with an express or implied warranty, and there were latent defects unknown to the purchaser, he may retain the goods without notifying the vendor, and either sue for his damages or recoup the same in an action against him for the price; Buffalo Barb Wire Co. v. Phillips, 67 Wis. 129, 30 N. W. 295; Tillyer v. Glass Co., 13 Ohio C. C. 99, 7 O. C. D. 209; even if the sale were on approval, but the contract did not limit the purchaser to the return of the property, if unsatisfactory; Shupe v. Collender, 56 Conn. 489, 15 Atl. 405, 1 L. R. A. 339; or one who has pledged stocks as collateral to a note, if sued on the note, may recoup the damages resulting from wrongful appropriation of the stocks by the pledgee; Rush v. Bank, 71 Fed. 102, 17 C. C. A. 627, 36 U. S. App. 248. The surety on a note, in an action by the payee, may set up, by way of recoupment, the breach of warranty of the property sold to the maker for which the note was given; Loring v. Morrison, 15 App. Div. 498, 44 N. Y. Supp. 526; but if a surety is sued alone, he cannot recoup for a warranty in favor of his principal, without the consent of the latter: Phoenix Iron Works Co. v. Rhea, 98 Tenn. 461, 40 S. W. 482. It may be for a tort; but it seems that the tort must be a violation of the contract, and it is to be measured by the extent of this violation, and no allowance taken of malice: Allaire Works v. Guion, 10 Barb. (N. Y.) 55; Brigham v. Hawley, 17 Ill. 38; Heck v. Shener, 4 S. & R. (Pa.) 249, 8 Am. Dec. 700. The language of some cases would seem to imply that recoupment may be had for damages connected with the subject-matter or transaction upon which the suit is brought, but which do not constitute a violation of any obligation imposed by the contract, or of any duty imposed by the law in the making or performance of the contract: Stow v. Yarwood, 14 Ill. 424. But these cases will be found to be decided with reference to statutes of counter-claim. And even in the construction of such statutes it has been doubted whether it is not better to confine the damages to violations of the contract: Lovejoy v. Robinson, 8 Ind. 399; Cram v. Dresser, 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 120.

It is well established, in the absence of statutory provisions, that it is optional with the defendant whether he shall plead his cross-claim by way of recoupment, or resort to an independent action; Cook v. Moseley, 13 Wend. (N. Y.) 277; Hall v. Clark, 21 Mo. 415. Nor does the fact of a suit pending for the same damages estop him from pleading them in recoupment, although he may be compelled to choose upon which action he shall proceed; Naylor v. Schenck, 3 E. D. Sm. (N. Y.) 135; Good v. Good, 5 Watts (Pa.) 116. Payment after action brought, although never pleadable in answer to the action, was usually admitted in reduction of damages; Pemigewasset Bk. v. Brackett, 4 N. H. 557; Bischof v. Lucas, 6 Ind. 26; 1 M. & W. 463. But the defendant can never recoup for damages accruing since action brought; 20 E. L. & E. 277; Harger v. Edmonds, 4 Barb. (N. Y.) 256; Gordon v. Kennedy, 2 Binn. (Pa.) 287.

The right of recoupment will usually be allowed to sureties and indorsers in cases where it would be permitted for the benefit of the principal debtor, as, for example, a successful recoupment by the maker of a note will enure to the benefit of the indorser when sued with the maker; Wolf v. Michael, 21 Misc. Rep. 86, 46 N. Y. Supp. 991.

It has been maintained by some courts that the law of recoupment is not applicable to real estate. Accordingly, they have denied the defendant the right, when sued for the purchase-money, to recoup for a partial failure of title; Greenleaf v. Cook, 2 Wheat. (U. S.) 13, 4 L. Ed. 172; Key v. Henson, 17 Ark. 254. But most of these cases will be found denying him that right only before eviction. A confusion has been introduced by regarding failure of title and failure of consideration as convertible terms. The consideration of a deed without covenants is the mere delivery of the instrument; Rawle, Cov. 588. A failure of title in such case is not a failure of consideration, and it therefore affords no ground for recoupment. The consideration of a deed with covenants does not fail till the covenantee has suffered damages on the covenants, which in most cases does not happen till eviction, either actual or constructive. After this has happened, his right to recoup is now pretty generally admitted. This is nothing more than allowing him to recoup as soon as he can sue upon the covenants; Mayor of New York v. Mable, 13 N. Y. 151, 64 Am. Dec. 538; Rice v. Goddard, 14 Pick. (Mass.) 293; Pence v. Huston's Ex'rs, 6 Gratt. (Va.) 305; Dart, Vend. 381; Rawle, Cov. 583.

It has been more generally admitted that where there is a failure of the consideration as to the quantity or quality of the land, the purchaser may recoup upon his covenants; Wheat v. Dotson, 12 Ark. 699; 2 Kent 470; House v. Marshall, 18 Mo. 368; Green v. Batson, 71 Wis. 54, 36 N. W. 849, 5 Am. St. Rep. 194.

Under the common-law system of pleading, the evidence of a recoupment, if going to a total failure of consideration, might be given under the general issue without notice, but if it went only to a partial failure, notice was required to prevent surprise; McCullough v. Cox, 6 Barb. (N. Y.) 386; Jones v. Winchester, 6 N. H. 497. This is the only way it could be admitted, for it could not be pleaded, a partial defence constituting neither a plea in bar nor in abatement. Under a notice it was admitted to aid in sustaining the general denial.

But under the new systems of practice there being no general issue to which the notice was subsidiary, the defendant is required to plead his defence whether it is in answer of the whole demand or only in reduction of damages; Bush v. Prosser, 11 N. Y. 352; House v. Marshall, 18 Mo. 368.

The effect to be given to the law of recoupment will depend, in many of the states, upon the statutes of counter-claim and offset in force. In Missouri, for instance, it is provided that if any two or more persons are mutually indebted in any manner whatever, and one of them commence an action against the other, one debt may be set against the other, although such debts are of a different nature; 1 R. S. § 3867. The term counter-claim under this statute is held to include both set-off and recoupment; Gordon v. Bruner, 49 Mo. 570; the distinction between the two terms being important only from the fact that the former must arise from contract, and can only be used in an action founded on contract; while the latter may spring from a wrong, provided it arose out of the transaction set forth in the petition, or was connected with the subject of the action; id. In the case of actions arising out of contracts it has been held that nothing would be allowed by way of recoupment unless it worked a violation of some obligation imposed by the contract, or some duty imposed by the law in the making or performance of it; Cram v. Dresser, 2 Sandf. (N. Y.) 120; Lovejoy v. Robinson, 8 Ind. 399.

See SET-OFF; Waterman, Set-Off, etc.; 10 L. R. A. 378, note; 7 Am. L. Rev. 389; 9 Am. L. Reg. 330; Beecher v. Baldwin, 55 Conn. 419, 12 Atl. 401, 3 Am. St. Rep. 63.

RECOURSE. To recur. As to indorsement without recourse, see INDORSEMENT.

RECOVERER. The demandant in a common recovery, after judgment has been given in his favor, assumes the name of recoverer.

RECOVERY. The restoration of a former right, by the solemn judgment of a court of justice. Hoover v. Clark's Adm'r, 7 N. C. 169. See 28 L. J. C. P. 312; 8 Q. B. D. 470.

In its general use, recovery signifies a collection of a debt by process and course of law. People v. Reis, 76 Cal. 269, 18 Pac. 309.

The phrase right of recovery is used to express the possession of a right of action under the existing facts.

A true recovery, usually known by the name of recovery simply, is the procuring a former right by the judgment of a court of competent jurisdiction: as, for example, when judgment is given in favor of the plaintiff when he seeks to recover a thing or a right.

A common recovery is a judgment obtained in a fictitious suit, brought against the tenant of the freehold, in consequence of a default made by the person who is last vouched to warranty in such suit. Bacon, Tracts 148.

Common recoveries are considered as mere forms of conveyance or common assurances: although a common recovery is a fictitious suit, yet the same mode of proceeding must be pursued, and all the forms strictly adhered to, which are necessary to be observed in an adversary suit. The first thing, therefore, necessary to be done in suffering a common recovery is that the person who is to be the demandant, and to whom the lands are to be adjudged, should sue out a writ or præcipe against the tenant of the freehold; whence such tenant is usually called the tenant to the præcipe. In obedience to this writ the tenant appears in court, either in person or by his attorney; but, instead of defending the title to the land himself, he calls on some other person, who upon the original purchase is supposed to have warranted the title, and prays that the person may be called in to defend the title which he warranted, or otherwise to give the tenant lands of equal value to those he shall lose by the defect of his warranty. This is called the voucher, vocatio, or calling to warranty. The person thus called to warrant, who is usually called the vouchee, appears in court, is impleaded, and enters into the warranty, by which means he takes upon himself the defence of the land. The defendant then desires leave of the court to imparl, or confer with the vouchee in private, which is granted of course. Soon after the demandant returns into court, but the vouchee disappears or makes default, in consequence of which it is presumed by the court, that he has no title to the lands demanded in the writ, and therefore cannot defend them; whereupon judgment is given for the demandant, now called the recoverer, to recover the lands in question against the tenant, and for the tenant to recover against the vouchee lands of equal value in recompense for those so warranted by him, and now lost by his default. This is called the recompense of recovery in value; but as it is customary for the crier of the court to act, who is hence called the common vouchee, the tenant can only have a nominal and not a real recompense for the land thus recovered against him by the demandant. A writ of habere facias is then sued out directed to the sheriff of the county in which the lands thus recovered are situated; and on the execution and return of the writ the recovery is completed. The recovery here described is with single voucher; but a recovery may be, and is frequently, suffered with double, treble, or further voucher, as the exigency of the case may require, in which case there are several judgments against the several vouchees.

Common recoveries were invented by the ecclesiastics in order to evade the statute of mortmain, by which they were prohibited from purchasing, or receiving under the pretence of a free gift, any land or tenements whatever. They have been used in some states for the purpose of breaking the entail of estates. See, generally, Cruise, Digest, tit. 36; 2 Wms. Saund. 42, n. 7; 4 Kent 487; Pigot, Comm. Rec. passim. See Chall. Real P. 279; Big. Estop. 418.

All the learning in relation to common recoveries is nearly obsolete, as they are out of use. Rey, a French writer, in his work Des Institutions Judiciaires de l'Angleterre, tom. ii. p. 221, points out what appears to him the absurdity of a common recovery. See Lyle v. Richards, 9 S. & R. (Pa.) 330; Sharp v. Thompson, 1 Whart. (Pa.) 151; Stump v. Findlay, 2 Rawle (Pa.) 168, 19 Am. Rep. 622; Dudley v. Sumner, 5 Mass. 438; Carroll's Lessee v. Maydwell, 3 Harr. & J. (Md.) 292.

Recovery Back—of money paid by mistake. The right to recover excessive payments made to public service corporations depends upon whether or not the payments are made under such circumstances as to be involuntary, and when payment is made under protest, this is sometimes termed "duress of goods" and may be recovered; Mt. Pleasant Mfg. Co. v. R. Co., 106 N. C. 207, 10 S. E. 1046; Southwestern Alabama Ry. Co. v. Maddox & Son, 146 Ala. 539, 41 South. 9; Harmony v. Bingham, 12 N. Y. 99, 62 Am. Dec. 142; but, it seems, a shipper may, if he chooses, refuse to pay the over-charge and recover damages for the delay; Loomis v. Ry. Co., 17 Mo. App. 340.

An illegal license fee cannot be recovered back if voluntarily paid; Garrison v. Tillinghast, 18 Cal. 408, but it may be, if involuntarily paid; Magnolia v. Sharman, 46 Ark. 358; Neumann v. La Crosse, 94 Wis. 103, 68 N. W. 654; Harvey v. Olney, 42 Ill. 336; whereas, payment in excess of amount constitutionally chargeable, for a license fee imposed under an unconstitutional ordinance, may be recovered back; C. & J. Michel Brewing Co. v. State, 19 S. D. 302, 103 N. W. 40, 70 L. R. A. 911.

An agent paying his principal's money, by mistake, to a third person, may maintain an action in his own name to recover it back; Parks v. Fogleman, 97 Minn. 157, 105 N. W. 560, 4 L. R. A. (N. S.) 363, 114 Am. St. Rep. 703. Where overpayment is made in ignorance or forgetfulness of previous payments, the money so paid may be recovered; Hum- mel v. Flores (Tex.) 39 S. W. 309; Goodling v. Morgan, 37 Me. 419; Pool v. Allen, 29 N. C. 120; Ashley v. Jennings, 48 Mo. App. 142; Jackson v. McKnight, 17 Hun (N. Y.) 2.

Where one employed a printer to print a libellous pamphlet and paid him £50 and the printer set up the type and then refused to publish it because libellous, it was held that there could be no recovery back; 23 T. L. R. 575.

Money paid out by an officer under a misconstruction of law may be recovered back; U. S. v. Saunders, 79 Fed. 407, 24 C. C. A. 649.

Parties receiving moneys illegally paid by a public officer are liable, ex æquo et bono, to refund them; Wisconsin Cent. R. Co. v. U. S., 164 U. S. 190, 17 Sup. Ct. 45, 41 L. Ed. 399.

See PROTEST; REPETITION; QUASI-CONTRACTUS.

RECREANT. A coward; a poltroon. 3 Bla. Com. 340.

RECRIMINATION. In Criminal Law. An accusation made by a person accused against his accuser, either of having committed the same offence or another.

In general, recrimination does not excuse the person accused nor diminish his punishment, because the guilt of another can never excuse him. But in applications for divorce on the ground of adultery, if the party defendant can prove that the plaintiff or complainant has been guilty of the same offence, the divorce will not be granted; 2 Bish. Mar. & D. 340; 1 Hagg. Cons. 144; 4 Eccl. 360. See 1 Hagg. Eccl. 790; 1 Hagg. Cons. 147; Dig. 24. 3. 39; 48. 3. 13. 5; 1 Add. Eccl. 411; Redington v. Redington, 2 Colo. App. 8, 29 Pac. 811; COMPENSATION; CONDONATION; DIVORCE.

RECTIFIER. As used in the internal revenue laws, this term is not confined to a person who runs spirits through charcoal; but is applied to any one who rectifies or purifies spirits in any manner whatever, or who makes a mixture of spirits with anything else, and sells it under any name. Quantity of Distilled Spirits, 3 Ben. 73, Fed. Cas. No. 11,494.

RECTOR. In Ecclesiastical Law. One who rules or governs: a name given to certain officers of the Roman church. Dict. Canonique.

In English Law. He that hath full possession of a parochial church. A rector (or parson) has for the most part the whole right to all the ecclesiastical dues in his parish; where, as in theory of law, a vicar has an appropriator over him, entitled to the best part of the profits, to whom the vicar is, as it were, perpetual curate, with a standing salary. Cowell; 1 Bla. Com. 384; 2 Steph. Com. 677.

RECTORY. In English Law. Corporeal real property, consisting of a church, glebelands, and tithes. 1 Chitty, Pr. 163.

RECTUS IN CURIA (Lat. right in court). The condition of one who stands at the bar, against whom no one objects any offence or prefers any charge.

When a person outlawed has reversed his outlawry, so that he can have the benefit of the law, he is said to be rectus in curia. Jacob, Law Dict.

RECUPERATORES (Lat.). In Roman Law. A species of judges originally established, it is supposed, to decide controversies between Roman citizens and strangers concerning the right to the possession of property requiring speedy remedy, but gradually extended to questions which might be brought before ordinary judges.

After the enlargement of their powers, the difference between them and judges, it is supposed, was simply this:—if the prætor named three judges, he called them recuperatores; if one, he called him judex. But opinions on this subject are very various. Colman, De Romano judicio recuperatorio. Cicero's oration pro Cæcin. 1, 3, was addressed to recuperatores.

The result of the latest investigation of this subject is that, while ordinary cases were referred to the college of the centumviri, in cases where the prætor wished to obtain a speedy decision he had power to appoint an extraordinary college of three or five recuperatores whose instructions required them to find a verdict within a designated time. Such a course was often required in cases involving personal liberty, and the result was that the jurisdiction of the centumviri over all such actions became displaced by the court of recuperatores. The latter were also appointed in cases to which aliens were parties. Like the judices the recuperatores were private persons; Sohm, Inst. Rom. L. 150, n. 3.

RECUSABLE. See IRRECUSABLE; CONTRACTUAL OBLIGATION; CONTRACT.

RECUSANTS. In English Law. Persons who wilfully absent themselves from their parish church, and on whom penalties were imposed by various statutes passed during the reigns of Elizabeth and James I. Whart. Dict.

Those persons who separate from the church established by law. Termes de la Ley.

RECUSATION. In Civil Law. A plea or exception by which the defendant requires that the judge having jurisdiction of the cause should abstain from deciding upon the ground of interest, or for a legal objection to his prejudice.

A recusation is not a plea to the jurisdiction of the court, but simply to the person of the judge. It may, however, extend to all the judges, as when the party has a suit against the whole court. Pothier, Procéd. Civ. 1ère part. ch. 2, s. 5. It is a personal challenge of the judge for cause. See State v. Lewis, 2 La. 390. It may be done by the judge himself; Peyton v. Enos, 16 La. Ann. 135.

The challenge of jurors. La. Code Pract. art. 499, 500. An act, of what nature soever it may be, by which a strange heir, by deeds or words, declares he will not be heir. Dig.

29. 2. 95. See, generally, Poydras v. Livingston, 5 Mart. O. S. (La.) 292.

RED BOOK OF THE EXCHEQUER OF WESTMINSTER. An ancient book of records containing entries and inrollments of many charters and ancient acts of parliament as well as other instruments relating to the king and the rights of the crown, from the time of William I to the end of Edward III. Some of the earlier parts of it were compiled by Alexander de Swereford, first a clerk, and afterwards a baron, of the Exchequer, in the reign of Henry III. Record Commission, in 2 Sel. Essays in Anglo-Amer. L. H. 190.

RED TAPE. In a derivative sense, order carried to fastidious excess; system run out into trivial extremes. Webster v. Thompson, 55 Ga. 434.

REDDENDO SINGULA SINGULIS (Lat.). Referring particular things to particular persons. For example: when two descriptions of property are given together in one mass, both the next of kin and the heir cannot take, unless in cases where a construction can be made reddendo singula singulis, that the next of kin shall take the personal estate, and the heir-at-law the real estate. 14 Ves. 490. See 11 East 513, n.; Bac. Abr. Conditions (L).

REDDENDUM (Lat.). That clause in a deed by which the grantor reserves something to himself out of that which he therein granted. It usually follows the tenendum, and is generally in these words, "yielding and paying." Formerly it indicated the services to be rendered to the lord of the fee. In every good reddendum or reservation these things must concur: namely, it must be in apt words; it must be of something issuing or coming out of the thing granted, and not a part of the thing itself nor of something issuing out of another thing; it must be of a thing on which the grantor may resort to distrain; it must be made to one of the grantors, and not to a stranger to the deed. See 2 Bla. Com. 299; Co. Litt. 47; Shepp. Touchst. 80; Cruise, Dig. tit. 32, c. 24, s. 1; Dane, Abr. Index.

See YIELDING AND PAYING.

REDDIDIT SE (Lat. he has rendered himself). In English Practice. An indorsement made on the bail-piece when a certificate has been made by the proper officer that the defendant is in custody. Com. Dig. Bail (Q 4).

REDDITION. A surrendering or restoring; also, a judicial acknowledgment that the thing in demand belongs to the demandant, and not to the person surrendering. Cowell.

REDEEM. To purchase back; to regain, as mortgaged property by paying what is due; to receive back by paying the obligation. Miller v. Ratterman, 47 Ohio St. 156, 24 N. E. 496; See Pace v. Bartles, 47 N. J. Eq. 170, 20 Atl. 352.

REDEMPTION (Lat. re, back, emptio, a purchase). A purchase back by the seller from the buyer. It is applied to denote the performance of the conditions upon performance of which a conditional sale is to become ineffective as a transfer of title, or, more strictly, a right to demand a reconveyance becomes vested in the seller. In the case of mortgages, this right is a legal right until a breach of conditions, when it becomes an equitable right, and is called the equity of redemption. See MORTGAGE; EQUITY OF REDEMPTION; [1914] A. C. 25.

REDEMPTIONES (Lat.). Heavy fines. Distinguished from Misericordia, which see.

REDHIBITION. In Civil Law. The avoidance of a sale on account of some vice or defect in the thing sold, which renders its use impossible or so inconvenient and imperfect that it must be supposed that the buyer would not have purchased it had he known of the vice. La. Civ. Code, art. 2496.

This is essentially a civil-law right. The effect of the rule expressed by the maxim caveat emptor is to prevent any such right at common law, except in cases of express warranty. 2 Kent 374; Sugd. Vend. 222.

REDHIBITORY ACTION. In Civil Law. An action instituted to avoid a sale on account of some vice or defect in the thing sold which renders its use impossible or so inconvenient and imperfect that it must be supposed the buyer would not have purchased it had he known of the vice. La. Civ. Code 2496.

REDISSEISOR. See DISSEISIN.

REDITUS ALBI (Lat.). A rent payable in money; sometimes called white rent, or blanche farm. See ALBA FIRMA.

REDITUS NIGRI (Lat.). A rent payable in grain, work, and the like; it was also called black mail. This name was given to it to distinguish it from reditus albi, which was payable in money.

REDITUS QUIETI. Quit rents. 1 Steph. Com. 676.

REDMANS, or RADMANS. Men who, by the tenure or custom of their lands, were to ride with or for the lord of the manor, about his business. Domesday Book.

REDOBATORES (L. Lat.). Those that buy stolen cloth and turn it into some other color or fashion, that it may not be recognized. Redubbers, q. v. Barrington, Stat., 2d ed. 87, n.; Co. 3d Inst. 134; Britton, c. 29.

REDRAFT. In Commercial Law. A bill of exchange drawn at the place where another bill was made payable and where it was protested, upon the place where the first bill was drawn, or, when there is no regular commercial intercourse rendering that practicable, then in the next best or most direct practicable course. 1 Bell, Com. 406. See RE-EXCHANGE.

REDRESS. The act of receiving satisfaction for an injury sustained. For the mode of obtaining redress, see REMEDIES; 1 Chitty, Pr. Anal. Table.

REDUBBERS. See REDOBATORES.

REDUNDANCY. Matter introduced in an answer or other pleading which is foreign to the bill or article.

The respondent is not to insert in his answer any matter foreign to the articles he is called upon to answer, although such matter may be admissible in a plea; but he may, in his answer, plead matter by way of explanation pertinent to the articles, even if such matter shall be solely in his own knowledge, and to such extent incapable of proof; or he may state matter which can be substantiated by witnesses; but in this latter instance, if such matter be introduced into the answer, and not afterwards put in the plea, or proved, the court will give no weight or credence to such part of the answer. Per Lushington, 3 Curt. Eccl. 543.

A material distinction is to be observed between redundancy in the allegation and redundancy in the proof. In the former case, a variance between the allegation and the proof will be fatal, if the redundant allegations are descriptive of that which is essential. But in the latter case, redundancy cannot vitiate because more is proved than is alleged, unless the matter superfluously proved goes to contradict some essential part of the allegation; 1 Greenl. Ev. § 67.

REEF. In Mining Law. A vein or lode containing or supposed to contain minerals.

RE-ENTRY. The act of resuming the possession of lands or tenements in pursuance of a right which the party exercising it reserved to himself when he quit his former possession.

Conveyances in fee reserving a ground-rent, and leases for a term of years, usually contain a clause authorizing the proprietor to re-enter in case of the non-payment of rent, or of the breach of some covenant in the lease, which forfeits the estate. Without such reservation he would have no right to re-enter for the mere breach of a covenant, although he may do so upon the breach of a condition which, by its terms, is to defeat the estate granted; 2 Bingh. 13; 1 M. & Ry. 694; Tayl. Landl. & T. § 290; Woodf. Landl. & T. 310.

An estate granted upon condition subsequent is not vested again in the grantor or his heirs for condition broken until after re-entry; Edmondson v. Leach, 56 Ga. 461; Star Brewery Co. v. Primas, 163 Ill. 652, 45 N. E. 145; or if actual entry be impossible, then until the grantor or his heirs lay claim to the property; First Presbyterian Church of Beaufort v. Elliott, 65 S. C. 251, 43 S. E. 674.

When a landlord is about to enforce his right to re-enter for the non-payment of rent, he must make a specific demand of payment, and be refused, before the forfeiture is complete, unless such demand has been dispensed with by an express agreement of the parties; McCormick v. Connell, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 151; 7 Term 117; 5 Co. 41. In the latter case, a mere failure to pay, without any demand, constitutes a sufficient breach, upon which an entry may at any time subsequently be made; Van Rensselaer v. Jewett, 2 N. Y. 147; Coon v. Brickett, 2 N. H. 164; 2 B. & C. 490. The demand may be in the form of a notice to quit; Haynes v. Inv. Co., 35 Neb. 766, 53 N. W. 979.

The requisites of a demand upon which to predicate a forfeiture for the non-payment of rent, at common law, are very strict. It must be for the payment of the precise sum due upon the day when, by the terms of the lease, it becomes payable; if any days of grace are allowed for payment, then upon the last day of grace; Co. Litt. 203; 7 Term 117; Van Rensselaer v. Jewett, 2 N. Y. 147; see Finkelstein v. Herson, 55 N. J. L. 217, 26 Atl. 688; at a convenient time before sunset, while there is light enough to see to count the money; Jackson v. Harrison, 17 Johns. (N. Y.) 66; 1 Saund. 287; at the place appointed for payment, or if no particular place has been specified in the lease, then at the most public place on the land, which, if there be a dwelling-house, is the front door; Remsen v. Conklin, 18 Johns. (N. Y.) 450; Connor v. Bradley, 1 How. (U. S.) 211, 11 L. Ed. 105; Co. Litt. 202 a; notwithstanding there be no person on the land to pay it; Bac. Abr. Rent (1); and if the re-entry clause is coupled with the condition that no sufficient distress be found upon the premises, the landlord must search the premises to see that no such distress can be found; 15 East 286; McCormick v. Connell, 6 S. & R. (Pa.) 151.

A re-entry, at common law, for condition forfeited in a lease, is void unless the evidence shows that the common-law forms have been complied with. A mere taking possession of the premises, when unoccupied, is not sufficient; Prout v. Roby, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 475, 21 L. Ed. 58.

But the statutes of most of the states, following 4 Geo. II. c. 28, now dispense with the formalities of a common-law demand, by providing that an action of ejectment may be brought as substitute for such a demand in all cases where no sufficient distress can be found upon the premises. And this latter restriction disappears entirely from the statutes of such of the states as have abolished distress for rent.

The clause of re-entry for non-payment of rent operates only as a security for rent; for at any time before judgment is entered in the action to recover possession the tenant may either tender to the landlord, or bring into the court where the action is pending, all the rent in arrear at the time of such payment, and all costs and charges incurred by the landlord, and in such case all further proceedings will cease. And in some states, even after the landlord has recovered possession, the tenant may in certain cases be reinstated upon the terms of the original lease, by paying up all arrearages and costs; Tayl. Landl. & T. 302. See, generally, Wms. R. P. 285.

The acceptance by a landlord, after his right of possession is fixed, of property from the tenant in payment of rent that had accrued, is no waiver of his right to enter; Frazier v. Caruthers, 44 Ill. App. 61; but the acceptance of rent accruing after breach of a condition in a lease, with full knowledge of the breach, is a waiver of the right to declare a forfeiture and re-enter; Brooks v. Rogers, 99 Ala. 433, 12 South. 61.

But the courts will not relieve against a forfeiture which has been wilfully incurred by a tenant who assigns his lease, or neglects to repair or to insure, contrary to his express agreement, or if he exercises a forbidden trade, or cultivates the land in a manner prohibited by the lease; for in all such cases the landlord, if he has reserved a right to re-enter, may at once resume his former possession and avoid the lease; 2 Price 206, n.; 9 C. & P. 706; Pollard v. Shaffer, 1 Dall. (U. S.) 210, 1 L. Ed. 104; 3 V. & B. 29; 12 Ves. 291.

Where the landlord is justified in re-entering and taking possession of the premises, the lessee can recover no damages for the loss of the portion of the term, or for injury to the business, but may recover for property destroyed or any unnecessary damage thereto; Bergland v. Frawley, 72 Wis. 559, 40 N. W. 372.

REEVE. An ancient English officer of justice, inferior in rank to an alderman.

He was a ministerial officer appointed to execute process, keep the king's peace, and put the laws in execution. He witnessed all contracts and bargains, brought offenders to justice and delivered them to punishment, took bail for such as were to appear at the county court, and presided at the court or folcmote. He was also called gerefa.

There were several kinds of reeves: as, the shire-gerefa, shire-reeve or sheriff; the heh-gerefa, or high-sheriff; tithing-reeve, burghor or borough-reeve.

REEVELAND. See REVELAND.

RE-EXAMINATION. A second examination of a thing. A witness may be re-examined, in a trial at law, in the discretion of the court; and this is seldom refused. In equity, it is a general rule that there can be no re-examination of a witness after he has once signed his name to the deposition and turned his back upon the commissioner or examiner. The reason of this is that he may be tampered with, or induced to retract or qualify what he has sworn to; 1 Mer. 130.

RE-EXCHANGE. The expense incurred by a bill being dishonored in a foreign country where it is made payable and returned to that country in which it was made or indorsed and there taken up. 11 East 265; 2 Campb. 65.

The loss resulting from the dishonor of a bill of exchange in a country different from that in which it was drawn or indorsed.

It is ascertained by proof of the sum for which a sight bill (drawn at the time and place of dishonor at the then rate of exchange at the place where the drawer or indorser sought to be charged resides) must be drawn in order to realize at the place of dishonor the amount of the dishonored bill and the expenses consequent on its dishonor. The holder may draw a sight bill for such sum on either the drawer or one of the indorsers. Such bill is a "redraft"; Benj. Chalm. Bills, art. 221. See L. R. 3 App. Cas. 146; Byles, Bills 444.

The drawer of a bill is liable for the whole amount of re-exchange occasioned by the circuitous mode of returning the bill through the various countries in which it has been negotiated, as much as for that occasioned by a direct return; 11 East 265; 3 B. & P. 335. And see Price v. Page, 24 Mo. 65; Watt v. Riddle, 8 Watts (Pa.) 545; 2 How. 764; 9 Exch. 25.

In some states legislative enactments have been made which regulate damages on re-exchange. These damages are different in the several states. See Lennig v. Ralston, 23 Pa. 137; Hendricks v. Franklin, 4 Johns. (N. Y.) 119; Farmers' Bank of Canton v. Brainerd, 8 Ohio 292; MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

RE-EXTENT. A second extent on lands or tenements, on complaint that the former was partially made, etc. Cowell.

REFALO. A word composed of the three syllables re. fa. lo., for recordari facias loquelam. 2 Sell. Pr. 160; 8 Dowl. 514.

REFARE. To bereave, take away, or rob. Cowell.

REFECTION (Lat. re, again, facio, to make). In Civil Law. Reparation; re-establishment of a building. Dig. 19. 1. 6. 1.

REFEREE. A person to whom has been referred a matter in dispute, in order that he may settle it. His judgment is called an award. See ARBITRATOR; REFERENCE.

REFEREES, COURT OF. In the passage of private bills through the house of commons, the practice was adopted in 1864 of the appointment of referees on such bills, consisting of the chairman of ways and means and not less than three other persons to be appointed by the speaker. The referees were formed into one or more courts, three at least being required to constitute each court, a member in every case being chairman, but receiving no salary. The referees inquired into the proposed works, etc., and reported to the house. The committees of the house on any bill might also refer any question to the referees for their decision. It was also ordered in 1864 that the referees should decide on all petitions as to the right of the petitioner to be heard, i. e., his locus standi. A court of referees was specially constituted for the adjudication of this right, called locus standi. A series of reports of the court of referees on private bills in parliament, called Locus Standi reports, has been published since 1867.

REFEREES, OFFICIAL. Officials in the King's Bench Division of the High Court of Justice in England, created by the judicature acts. They are three in number. They try such questions and actions as may be referred to them, and act as arbitrators in certain cases.

REFERENCE. In Contracts. An agreement to submit to certain arbitrators matters in dispute between two or more parties for their decision and judgment. See ARBITRATION AND AWARD.

In Mercantile Law. A direction or request by a party who asks a credit to the person from whom he expects it, to call on some other person named, in order to ascertain the character or mercantile standing of the former. See PRIVILEGED COMMUNICATIONS.

In Practice. The act of sending any matter by a court of chancery, or one exercising equitable powers, to a master or other officer, in order that he may ascertain facts and report to the court.

That part of an instrument of writing where it points to another for the matters therein contained. For the effect of such reference, see Corbin v. Jackson, 14 Wend. (N. Y.) 619, 28 Am. Dec. 550. The thing referred to is also called a reference.

Reference bureau. See STATUTE.

REFERENDARIUS (Lat.). An officer by whom the order of causes was laid before the Roman emperor, the desires of petitioners made known, and answers returned to them. Vicat, Voc. Jur.; Calvinus, Lex.

A king's chancellor at the time of the conquest. 1 Social England 136. See CANCELLARIUS.

REFERENDUM (Lat.). In International Law. A note addressed by an ambassador to his government, submitting to its consideration propositions made to him touching an object over which he has no sufficient power and is without instructions. When such a proposition is made to an ambassador, he accepts it ad referendum; that is, under the condition that it shall be acted upon by his government, to which it is referred.

In Municipal Law. The submission of a proposed law to the voting citizens of a country for their ratification or rejection. A mode of appealing from an elected body to the whole body of voters.

The laws are first passed upon by the legislature and then referred to the people for their final ratification.

This method of government is supposed to have originated in Switzerland; but it has in effect been employed in the United States since the revolution, in country, city, township, and school district governments, especially in New England. It has also, during the same time, been the practice in the United States for new state constitutions to be submitted to popular vote after they have been prepared by a convention of delegates elected by the people.

See INITIATIVE, REFERENDUM AND RECALL; LOCAL OPTION; CONSTITUTIONALITY; Oberholtzer, The Referendum in America; DELEGATION; LEGISLATIVE POWER.

REFORM. To reorganize; to rearrange. Thus, the jury "shall be reformed by putting to and taking out of the persons so impanelled." Stat. 3 Hen. VIII. c. 12; Bacon, Abr. Juries (A).

To reform an instrument in equity is to make a decree that a deed or other agreement shall be made or construed as it was originally intended by the parties, when an error or mistake as to a fact has been committed. A contract has been reformed although the party applying to the court was in the legal profession and he himself drew the contract, it appearing clear that it was framed so as to admit of a construction inconsistent with the true agreement of the parties; 1 S. & S. 210; 3 Russ. 424. But a contract will not be reformed in consequence of an error of law; see 1 Story, Eq. Jur. 109; 1 Russ. & M. 418; 1 Chitty, Pr. 124; Clapp v. Hoffman, 159 Pa. 531, 28 Atl. 362; nor unless the mistake is mutual; Steinberg v. Ins. Co., 49 Mo. App. 255; and only as between the original parties, or those claiming under them in priority, including purchasers with notice; Cross v. Bean, 81 Me. 525, 17 Atl. 710. Equity will not reform instruments which express an intention of the parties at the time they are made, based on the knowledge then possessed by them, though their intention would have been different if they had been better informed; Wise v. Brooks, 60 Miss. 891, 13 South. 836.

A person who seeks to rectify a deed on the ground of mistake must establish in the clearest and most satisfactory manner, that the alleged intention to which he desires it to be made conformable continued concurrently in the minds of all the parties down to the time of its execution; and also must be able to show exactly and precisely the form to which the deed ought to be brought; 4 De G. & J. 265; Roberts v. Derby, 68 Hun, 299, 23 N. Y. Supp. 34; Simmons Creek Coal Co. v. Doran, 142 U. S. 417, 12 Sup. Ct. 239, 35 L. Ed. 1063. Before commencing an action to reform a deed a demand must be made on the grantee; Popijoy v. Miller, 133

Ind. 19, 32 N. E. 713. Where the mistake has been on one side only, the utmost that the party desiring relief can obtain is rescission, not reformation; Ad. Eq. 171; Bellows v. Stone, 14 N. H. 175. But if there is mistake on one side and fraud on the other, there is a case for reformation; Welles v. Yates, 44 N. Y. 525; Bisph. Eq. § 469; Simmons Creek Coal Co. v. Doran, 142 U. S. 417, 12 Sup. Ct. 239, 35 L. Ed. 1063.

A lease will not be reformed in equity, so as to make it conform to another lease, where both leases have the same legal effect, as judicially construed; Liggett v. Shira, 159 Pa. 350, 28 Atl. 218.

Where a deed does not express the intention of the parties at the time of its execution, equity will afford relief and decree a reformation; Baldwin v. Fence Co., 73 Fed. 574, 19 C. C. A. 575, 39 U. S. App. 162.

A clerical mistake by one party at the time of executing the contract, unknown to the other, for which the latter is not responsible, will be sufficient ground for such relief and decree; Trenton T. C. Co. v. Shingle Co., 80 Fed. 46.

Where a policy of insurance was issued to a receiver of property, there being a contest as to the title to the property held by the receiver, the real owner, having established his title, may have the policy reformed, or, if the intent of the parties appears on its face, no reformation is necessary in order to enable the real owner to maintain an action on it; Steel v. Ins. Co., 51 Fed. 715, 2 C. C. A. 463, 7 U. S. App. 325.

The correction of a written instrument for fraud or mistake in its execution requires clear, unequivocal, and convincing evidence; U. S. v. Budd, 144 U. S. 154, 12 Sup. Ct. 575, 36 L. Ed. 384. It will not be decreed against bona fide purchasers for value; American Mtg. Co. of Scotland v. O'Harra, 56 Fed. 278, 5 C. C. A. 502, 15 U. S. App. 79.

Where a bid for certain public work contained an error in the amount for which it was offered to do the work, and the bidder sought to rescind his offer, it was held that equity would not reform a written contract unless a mistake is proved to be the mistake of both parties, but may rescind and cancel a contract upon the ground of a mistake of one party as to facts material to the contract; Moffett Co. v. Rochester, 82 Fed. 255.

Where a decree has been entered reforming a contract, the contract as so reformed will be taken as the true agreement; Blair v. Implement Co., 87 Neb. 736, 128 N. W. 632. See MISTAKE.

REFORM ACT. An act passed by parliament in 1832, drawn by Lord John Russell, which disfranchised 56 boroughs, increased the county representation and increased the electorate.

REFORMATORY. An institution or place in which efforts are made, either to cultivate the intellect or instruct the conscience or improve the conduct where the inmates voluntarily submit themselves to its instruction or discipline or are forcibly detained therein. Hughes v. Daly, 49 Conn. 34. See PRISONER.

REFRESHING THE MEMORY. To revive the knowledge of a subject by having a reference to something connected with it.

As to witnesses, see MEMORANDUM.

REFRIGERATOR CARS. See RAILROADS.

REFUND. To pay back by the party who has received it, to the party who has paid it, money which ought not to have been paid.

On a deficiency of assets, executors and administrators cum testamento annexo are entitled to have refunded to them legacies which they may have paid, or so much as may be necessary to pay the debts of the testator; and in order to insure this they are generally authorized to require a refunding bond. See Bac. Abr. Legacies (II).

REFUNDING BOND. See REFUND.

REFUSAL. The act of declining to receive or to do something.

A grantee may refuse a title, see ASSENT; one appointed executor may refuse to act as such. In some cases, a neglect to perform a duty which the party is required by law or his agreement to do will amount to a refusal.

The word is often used to indicate an option: as, the refusal of a house. See OFFER; CONTRACT.

REFUSE. To deny a request or demand. Burns v. Fox, 113 Ind. 206, 14 N. E. 541.

REGALIA. A privilege, prerogative, or right of property pertaining to a sovereign. The regalia includes the power of judicature of life and death, of war and peace, of masterless goods as estrays; of assessments, and of minting money.

In England the term was sometimes applied to things, as the crown and sceptre, etc., and sometimes to the dignity, power, and pecuniary rights of the king. The term differs from sovereignty as being applicable to both things and to rights to things, and also as not being inherent in or inseparable from the sovereign power, for regalia may be alienated, either with or without the consent of parliament. 1 Hall, Int. Law 150.

Upon the breaking up of the Roman Empire, the princes and cities which declared themselves independent, appropriated to themselves those parts in which nature, most rich and liberal, yields extraordinary products. These portions or reserved rights were called regalia. Id.

REGARD, THE. An enquiry held, once every three years, by twelve knights chosen for the purpose (Henry III). The most important articles of their enquiry related to es-sarts, purprestures and waste. Other articles dealt with hawks and falcons, mines, harbors in the forest suitable for the export of timber, etc., and the possessors of arrows, greyhounds or other things likely to harm the deer. 1 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 344. See Rawle, Exmoor Forest. In 3 Bla. Com. 71, it is spoken of as a court for the lawing and expeditation of dogs.

REGARDANT. (French, regardant, seeing or vigilant). A vassal regardant was one who had the charge to do all base services within the manor, and to see the same freed of annoyances. Co. Litt. 120; 2 Bla. Com. 93.

REGE INCONSULTO. An ancient writ issued from the sovereign to the judges not to proceed in a cause which may prejudice the crown, until advised. Jenk. Cent. 97.

REGENCY. The authority of the person in monarchical countries invested with the right of governing the state, in the name of the monarch, during his minority, absence, sickness, or other inability.

REGENT. A ruler; a governor. The term is usually applied to one who governs a regency, or rules in the place of another.

In the canon law, it signifies a master of professor of a college. Dict. du Dr. Can.

It sometimes means simply a ruler, director, or superintendent; as in New York, where the board who have the superintendence of all the colleges, academies, and schools are called the regents of the University of the state of New York.

REGIAM MAJESTATEM (Lat.). An ancient book purporting to contain the law of Scotland, and said to have been compiled by king David, who reigned 1124-1153. It is not part of the law of Scotland, though it was ordered to be revised with other ancient laws of Scotland by parliaments of 1405 and 1407. Stair, Inst. 12, 508. So Craig, Inst. 1. 8. 11; Scott, Border Antiq. prose works 7, 30; but Erskine, Inst. b. 1, tit. 1, § 13, and Ross 60, maintain its authenticity. It is cited in some modern Scotch cases. 2 Swint. 409; 3 Bell, Hou. L. It is a servile copy of Glanville; Robertson, Hist. Charles V. 262.

REGICIDE (Lat. rex, king, cædere, to kill, slay). The killing of a king, and, by extension, of a queen. Théorie des Lois Criminelles, vol. 1, p. 300.

REGIDOR. In Spanish Law. One of a body, never exceeding twelve, who formed a part of the ayuntamiento, or municipal council, in every capital of a jurisdiction in the colonies of the Indies. The office of a regidor was held for life; that is to say, during the pleasure of the supreme authority. In most places the office was purchased; in some cities, however, they were elected by persons of the district, called capitulares. Strother v. Lucas, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 442, 9 L. Ed. 1137, note.

RÉGIME DOTAL. See DOTAL PROPERTY.

REGIMIENTO. In Spanish Law. The body of regidores, who never exceeded twelve, forming a part of the municipal council, or ayuntamiento, in every capital of a jurisdiction. Strother v. Lucas, 12 Pet. (U. S.) 442, 9 L. Ed. 1137, note.

REGINA (Lat.). A Queen.

REGIO ASSENSU. A writ whereby the sovereign gives his assent to the election of a bishop. Reg. Orig. 294.

REGISTER. A book containing a record of facts as they occur, kept by public authority; a register of births, marriages, and burials.

In England, where there is a state church, which has authority to legislate with respect to parish records, parish records are by law invested with the characteristics of public records; 1 Salk. 281; Stark. Ev., 4th ed. 299. But in the United States where there is no religion established by law, church registers, in the absence of statutory provisions, are not regarded as public records; Kennedy v. Doyle, 10 Allen (Mass.) 161; Childress v. Cutter, 16 Mo. 24.

Entries in the baptismal register of a church, made by a clergyman in the regular discharge of his duties, are admissible in evidence after his death, though there is no law requiring such records to be kept. Ordinarily such entries are admissible only for the purpose of proving the fact and date of baptism, and not of other matters therein stated, such as the date of the birth of the child; Weaver v. Leiman, 52 Md. 708; Kennedy v. Doyle, 10 Allen (Mass.) 161; Blackburn v. Crawfords, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 175, 18 L. Ed. 186.

These registers, when admissible, are not, in general, evidence of any fact not required to be recorded in them; Morrissey v. Ferry Co., 47 Mo. 521; Kabok v. Ins. Co., 51 Hun, 639, 4 N. Y. Supp. 718; Durfee v. Abbott, 61 Mich. 471, 28 N. W. 521; Blackburn v. Crawfords, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 175, 18 L. Ed. 186. They have sometimes been admitted in evidence as being made by a third person in the discharge of an official duty; Whitcher v. McLaughlin, 115 Mass. 167; Weaver v. Leiman, 52 Md. 708. See DECLARATIONS.

Statutes have been enacted in several states which give to such records, in a measure, their common-law importance. See Lewis v. Marshall, 5 Pet. (U. S.) 475, 8 L. Ed. 195; Lavin v. Mutual Aid Soc., 74 Wis. 349, 43 N. W. 143; Shutesbury v. Hadley, 133 Mass. 242.

In Pennsylvania, the registry of births, etc., made by any religious society in the state is evidence, by act of assembly, but it must be proved as at common law; Stoeber v. Lessee of Whitman, 6 Binn. 416. A copy of the register of births and deaths of the Society of Friends in England, proved before the lord mayor of London by an ex parte affidavit, was allowed to be given in evidence to prove the death of a person; Hyam v.

Edwards, 1 Dall. 2, 1 L. Ed. 11; and a copy of a parish register in Barbadoes, certified to be a true copy by the rector, proved by the oath of a witness, taken before the deputy secretary of the island and notary public, under his hand and seal, was held admissible to prove pedigree, the handwriting and office of the secretary being proved; Kingston v. Lesley, 10 S. & R. 383. In North Carolina, a parish register of births, marriages, and deaths, kept pursuant to the statute of that state, is evidence of pedigree; Jacocks v. Gilliam, 7 N. C. 47. In Connecticut, a parish register has been received in evidence; Huntly v. Compstock, 2 Root 99. See Jackson v. Boneham, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 226; 1 Phill. Ev. 305; 1 Curt. 755; 6 Eccl. 452.

See VITAL STATISTICS; REGISTRATION.

The certificate of registry granted to the person or persons entitled thereto, by the collector of the district, comprehending the port to which any ship or vessel shall belong; more properly, the registry itself. For the form, requisites, etc., of certificate of registry, see Acts of Cong. Dec. 31, 1792, May 6, 1864, R. S. § 4182; 3 Kent 141.

REGISTER, REGISTRAR. An officer authorized by law to keep a record called a register or registry: as, the register for the probate of wills.

REGISTER GENERAL. An officer of England to whom, subject to such regulations as shall be made by a principal secretary of state, the general superintendence of the whole system of registration of births, deaths, and marriages is entrusted. 3 Steph. Com. 234.

REGISTER OF SHIPS. A register kept by the collectors of customs, in which the names, ownership, and other facts relative to the merchant vessels are required by law to be entered. The register is evidence of the nationality and privileges of an American ship. Rap. & L. Law Dict.

The purpose of a registry is to declare the nationality of a vessel engaged in trade with foreign nations, and to enable her to assert that nationality wherever found; The Mohawk, 3 Wall. (U. S.) 566, 18 L. Ed. 67.

A certificate of a vessel's registry and proof that she carried the flag of the United States establish a prima facie case of proper registry under the laws of the United States, and of the nationality of the vessel and its owners; St. Clair v. U. S., 154 U. S. 134, 14 Sup. Ct. 1002, 38 L. Ed. 936.

REGISTER OF WILLS. An officer in Pennsylvania who has jurisdiction over the probate of wills and granting letters of administration.

REGISTER OF WRITS. A book preserved in the English court of chancery, in which were entered, from time to time, all forms of writs once issued. Stat. Westm. 2, c. 25.

See DE NATURA BREVIIUM.

It is spoken of as one of the most ancient books of the common law. Co. Litt. 159; Co. 4th Inst. 150; 8 Co. Pref.; 3 Shars. Bla. Com. 183*. It was first printed and published in the reign of Hen. VIII. This book is still an authority, as containing, in general, an accurate transcript of the forms of all writs as then framed, and as they ought still to be framed in modern practice.

But many of the writs now in use are not contained in it. And a variation from the register is not conclusive against the propriety of a form, if other sufficient authority can be adduced to prove its correctness. Steph. Pl. 7, 8.

REGISTERED BOND. One whose negotiability is temporarily withdrawn by a writing thereon that it belongs to a specific person, and by a registry to that effect at a specified office. Cook, St. & Stockh. § 15.

REGISTERED LETTER. A letter is not registered so as to complete service of notice by registered letter until it is numbered as required by the postal laws, although the postmaster has received it properly addressed and given a receipt therefor. Ross v. Ins. Co., 93 Ia. 222, 61 N. W. 852, 34 L. R. A. 466. A registered letter must be delivered by the carrier to the person to whom it is addressed; Joslyn v. King, 27 Neb. 38, 42 N. W. 756, 4 L. R. A. 457, 20 Am. St. Rep. 656.

REGISTRARIUS (Lat.). An ancient name given to a notary. In England this name is confined to designate the officer of some court the records or archives of which are in his custody.

REGISTRATION. The word "registration," used in the U. S. R. S. § 2011, has a general, not a technical, meaning, and indicates any list or schedule containing a list of voters, the being upon which constitutes a prerequisite to vote, unless there is a system of registration described by act of congress, and applied by the act as the only registration of voters under the law. The Delaware assessment lists, made primarily by the assessors of the different hundreds, and completed by the levy courts of the different counties, are such lists, though they contain not only a list of voters, but of other persons besides. The registration of voters intended by the act of congress need not be conclusive evidence that the person registered is qualified to vote; In re Appointment of Supervisors of Election, 1 Fed. 1. This decision was prior to the existence in Delaware of a registration act eo nomine.

The registration of voters under the Delaware act was held to be so far judicial and not ministerial that a mandamus was refused to restore to the voting list the name of a person stricken off by the board of registration; Lurtz v. Hardcastle, 1 Marvel (Del.) 450, 41 Atl. 194.

In the United States circuit court for South Carolina it was held that the registration laws of that state were null and void as being an unreasonable restriction of the right of suffrage, evidently intended to exclude ignorant persons, especially of the African race, and a violation both of the constitution of the state and of the fourteenth and fifteenth amendments to the constitution of the United States; Mills v. Green, 67 Fed. 518.

See LAND TRANSFER; TORRENS SYSTEM; RECORD; REGISTRATION.

REGISTRATION OF BIRTHS, MARRIAGES, AND DEATHS. In most states acts have been passed requiring physicians, clergymen, etc., to register all such events with the proper county officer. The validity of these laws has been sustained under the police power; Robinson v. Hamilton, 60 Ia. 134, 14 N. W. 202, 46 Am. Rep. 63. See REGISTER; VITAL STATISTICS.

REGISTRUM BREVIUM (Lat.). The name of an ancient book which was a collection of writs. See REGISTER OF WRITS.

REGISTRY. A book, authorized by law, in which writings are registered or recorded.

RÈGLE DE DROIT (Fr.). A rule of law.

REGNANT. One having authority as a king; one in the exercise of royal authority.

REGRATING. In Criminal Law. Every practice or device, by act, conspiracy, words, or news, to enhance the price of victuals or other merchandise, is so denominated. Co. 3d Inst. 196; 1 Russell, Cr. 169. Whart. Cr. Law 1849. See RESTRAINT OF TRADE.

REGULA. See MAXIMS.

REGULAR CLERGY. Monks who lived according to the rules of their respective houses or societies, in contradistinction to the parochial clergy, who did their duties "in seculo," and hence were called secular clergy. 1 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 387, n.

REGULAR PROCESS. Regular process is that which has been lawfully issued by a court or magistrate having competent jurisdiction.

When the process is regular, and the defendant has been damnified, as in the case of a malicious arrest, his remedy is by an action on the case, and not trespass; when it is irregular the remedy is by action of trespass.

If the process be wholly illegal or misapplied as to the person intended to be arrested, without regard to any question of fact, or whether innocent or guilty, or the existence of any debt, then the party imprisoned may legally resist the arrest and imprisonment, and may escape, be rescued, or even break prison; but if the process and imprisonment were in form legal, each of these acts would be punishable, however innocent the defendant might be, for he ought to submit to legal process and obtain his release by due course of law; 1 Chitty, Pr. 637; 5 East 304, 308; 2 Wils. 47; 1 East, Pl. Cr. 310. See ESCAPE; ARREST; ASSAULT; FALSE IMPRISONMENT; MALICIOUS PROSECUTION.

* The Restoration of Charles II. did not take place till 1660, but the regnal year of his reign is computed from the death of Charles I., disregarding the Commonwealth.

REGULATE. To adjust by rule, method, or established mode; to direct by rule or restriction; to subject to governing principles or laws. State v. Ream, 16 Neb. 683, 21 N. W. 398.

REGULATION OF COMMERCE. It is the power to prescribe the rules by which it shall be governed, that is, the conditions upon which it shall be conducted; to determine when it shall be free and when subject to duties or other exactions. The power also embraces within its control all the instrumentalities by which that commerce may be carried on, and the means by which it may be aided and encouraged. Gloucester Ferry Co. v. Pennsylvania, 114 U. S. 203, 5 Sup. Ct. 826, 29 L. Ed. 158.

It means the power to make laws not merely rules and regulations; Snead v. R. Co., 151 Fed. 608.

As used in the constitution, transportation being essential to commerce, every obstacle to it, or burden laid upon it, by legislative authority, is regulation; Hannibal & St. J. R. Co. v. Husen, 95 U. S. 470, 24 L. Ed. 527; Bagg v. R. Co., 109 N. C. 279, 14 S. E. 79, 14 L. R. A. 596, 26 Am. St. Rep. 569. See COMMERCE; INTER-STATE COMMERCE COMMISSION.

REGULATIONS. Army regulations prescribed by the secretary of war and intended for the government of the army do not bind the commander-in-chief nor the secretary of war; U. S. v. Burns, 12 Wall. (U. S.) 246, 20 L. Ed. 388; but see Arthur v. U. S., 16 Ct. Cl. 422; those made pursuant to law bind even the executive; Davis, Military Law; they differ from the Articles of War, which are express enactments of Congress. Departmental regulations are issued under R. S. § 161. Military orders are authoritative directions, issued by the president. The general regulations are sometimes called Standing Orders.

See ARTICLES OF WAR; MILITARY LAW.

Regulations of the secret service department of the treasury are laws of the United States under R. S. § 753; U. S. v. Fuellhart, 106 Fed. 911. Those of the department as to internal revenue have the force of laws; Stegall v. Thurman, 175 Fed. 813.

REHABERE FACIAS SEISINAM (Lat. do you cause to regain seisin). When a sheriff in the "habere facias seisinam" had delivered seisin of more than he ought, this judicial writ lay to make him restore seisin of the excess. Reg. Jud. 13, 51, 54.

REHABILITATION. The act by which a man is restored to his former ability, of which he had been deprived by a conviction, sentence, or judgment of a competent tribunal.

REHEARING. A second consideration which the court gave to a cause on a second argument.

In England a case heard by the Chancellor on appeal from the Master of the Rolls, etc., is a rehearing; Emerson v. Davies, 1 W. & M. 21, Fed. Cas. No. 4,437.

A rehearing cannot be granted by the supreme court after the record has been remitted to the court below; Browder v. McArthur, 7 Wheat. (U. S.) 58, 5 L. Ed. 397.

Where any judge, who concurred in the decision, thinks proper to have a rehearing, the motion for one will be considered, otherwise it will be denied as of course; Brooks v. Reynolds, 59 Fed. 923, 8 C. C. A. 370, 16 U. S. App. 713.

Where the grounds for a rehearing were not brought to the attention of the court at the argument or by brief, permission to reargue will be granted only in extreme cases; U. S. v. Hall, 63 Fed. 472, 11 C. C. A. 294, 21 U. S. App. 426; and not where the questions have already been fully considered; Imperial Life Ins. Co. v. Newcomb, 63 Fed. 560, 11 C. C. A. 340, 27 U. S. App. 290; and not when the ground was not overlooked at the former trial; Clark v. Five Hundred and Five Thousand Feet of Lumber, 70 Fed. 1020, 17 C. C. A. 555, 34 U. S. App. 45. That a judgment of affirmance was by an equal decision of the judges merely, affords no ground for granting a rehearing; People v. New York, 25 Wend. (N. Y.) 256, 35 Am. Dec. 669. See PRECEDENT.

The practice in the federal courts is to file a petition for a rehearing which, with the argument in its support, is submitted, without oral argument, for the consideration of the court.

When a motion for a new trial of an action at law and a petition for rehearing have been denied, equity will not entertain a bill to set the judgment aside on the same grounds alleged in the motion and petition; Hendrickson v. Bradley, 85 Fed. 508, 29 C. C. A. 303.

The refusal of the circuit court to grant a rehearing is not the subject of review; Hardin v. Boyd, 113 U. S. 756, 5 Sup. Ct. 771, 28 L. Ed. 1141.

Courts, especially in cases of general interest, order a reargument where they are in doubt or where the case was not argued before a full bench. In Taylor v. Young, 71 Pa. 81, eminent counsel not connected with the cause petitioned the court for a reargument on the ground that the judgment was not well considered and that it would unsettle titles to real estate. A reargument was ordered and the former decision was reversed. See REOPENING CASE; BILL OF REVIEW.

When the merits have been decided on appeal, the circuit court cannot without leave of the supreme court grant a new trial, rehearing or review or hear new defences by amendment to the answer; In re Potts, 166 U. S. 263, 17 Sup. Ct. 520, 41 L. Ed. 994. After the mandate has gone down to the lower court, an application for a rehearing must be made in the appellate court. See BILL OF REVIEW.

REHYPOTHECATION. See PLEDGE; STOCK BROKER.

REI INTERVENTUS (Lat.). When a party is imperfectly bound in an obligation, he may, in general, annul such imperfect obligation; but when he has permitted the opposite party to act as if his obligation or agreement were complete, such things have intervened as to deprive him of the right to rescind such obligation: these circumstances are the rei interventus; 1 Bell, Com., 5th ed. 328, 329; Burton, Man. 128.

REIGN. For the years of the reigns of English and British sovereigns, see REGNAL YEARS.

REIMBURSE. To pay back. Philadelphia Trust, S. D. & I. Co. v. Audenreid, 83 Pa. 264.

REINSCRIPTION. The law of Louisiana requires a mortgage to be periodically reinscribed in order to preserve its priority, though suit be pending to foreclose; Watson v. Bondurant, 30 La. Ann. 1. When ten years have elapsed from the date of inscription without reinscription the mortgage is without effect as to all persons whatsoever who are not parties to it; Adams v. Daunis, 29 La. Ann. 315.

REINSTATE. To restore to a state from which one has been removed. South v. Com'rs of Sinking Fund, 86 Ky. 190, 5 S. W. 567.

REINSTATEMENT. This term in the law of insurance implies placing the insured in the same condition that he occupied and sustained towards the insurer next before the forfeiture was incurred, and does not imply reinsurance or the making of a new contract or policy of insurance. Lovick v. Life Ass'n, 110 N. C. 93, 14 S. E. 506.

REINSURANCE. Insurance effected by an underwriter upon a subject against certain risks, with another underwriter, on the same subject, against all or a part of the same risks, not exceeding the same amount. In the original insurance, he is the insurer; in the second, the assured. His object in reinsurance is to protect himself against the risks which he has assumed. There is no privity of contract between the original assured and the reinsurer, and the reinsurer is under no liability to such original assured; 3 Kent 227; New York Cent. Ins. Co. v. Ins. Co., 20 Barb. (N. Y.) 468; Philadelphia Ins. Co. v. Ins. Co., 23 Pa. 250; Eagle Ins.

Co. v. Ins. Co., 9 Ind. 443; Louisiana Mut. Ins. Co. v. Ins. Co., 13 La. Ann. 246. See Pars. Mar. Ins. 301.

In the absence of any usage to the contrary, and of any specific stipulation in the policy, the original insurer may protect himself by reinsurance to the whole extent of his liability; Insurance Co. of North America v. Ins. Co., 140 U. S. 565, 11 Sup. Ct. 909, 35 L. Ed. 517.

Reinsurance has been considered as a contract of indemnity against liability, not for actual loss; 1 Joyce, Ins. § 134. A reinsurer is liable on his policy although the reinsurance is to the whole extent of the original insurer's liability, as such a contract is valid and is not affected by local custom to the contrary; Insurance Co. of North America v. Ins. Co., 140 U. S. 565, 11 Sup. Ct. 909, 35 L. Ed. 517. He is liable on a parol agreement to reinsure; Bartlett v. Ins. Co., 77 Ia. 155, 41 N. W. 601; and to the full extent of his policy notwithstanding the insolvency of the reinsured; In re Republic Ins. Co., Fed. Cas. No. 11,705; which does not affect the responsibility under it, the contract of reinsurance being totally distinct from the original insurance; the original insured has no claim against the reinsurers. The reassured remains solely liable on the original insurance and alone has no claim against the reinsurer. Hence if the original insurer become bankrupt and the assured were paid but a small dividend out of his estate, the reinsurer is still liable to pay the whole amount of the reinsurance to the trustee of the original insurer without deducting the dividend and the original assured has no claim in respect of the money so paid; Consolidated Real Estate & Fire Ins. Co. of Baltimore v. Cashow, 41 Md. 59; Strong v. Ins. Co., 62 Mo. 289, 21 Am. Rep. 417. The extent of the liability of the reinsurer is neither contingent upon the amount paid by the reassured, nor upon any payment whatever by him. When a loss occurred which is covered by the policy of reinsurance, the reassured is entitled to recover from the reinsurer not what he has paid, but all that he has become liable to pay by reason of such loss; Gantt v. Ins. Co., 68 Mo. 503.

Where the insurer reinsured in the name and for the benefit of the original insured, the reinsurer was held liable to the original insured; 12 N. B. 432. Under an agreement by which the reinsurer agreed to reinsure a life association on all its risks and to assume all such policies and to pay the holders thereof all such sums as the company might under such policies become liable to pay, the reinsurer was held directly liable to a policy holder of the reinsured; Glen v. Ins. Co., 56 N. Y. 379. And so where the reinsurer agreed to reinsure all outstanding fire risks of another insurance company and assume all liability under any outstanding policies;

Shoaf v. Ins. Co., 127 N. C. 308, 37 S. E. 451, 80 Am. St. Rep. 894.

The contract is one of indemnity to the reinsured and binds the reinsurer to pay to the reinsured the whole loss sustained in respect to the subject of the insurance to the extent to which he is insured. It is not necessary that the reinsured should first pay the loss to the party first insured before proceeding against the reinsurer upon his contract. The liability of the latter is not affected by the insolvency of the reinsured or its inability to fulfill its own contract with the original insured; Allemannia Ins. Co. v. Ins. Co., 209 U. S. 332, 28 Sup. Ct. 544, 52 L. Ed. 815, 14 Ann. Cas. 948, citing Hone v. Ins. Co., 1 Sandf. (N. Y.) 137; Consolidated Real Estate & Fire Ins. Co. v. Cashow, 41 Md. 59.

If the contract of reinsurance provides that the insured can sue the reinsurer, it is held in most of the cases that such action will lie; Richards, Ins. Law § 319. As soon as the reinsured company has sustained a loss it may at once bring suit against its reinsuring company; (1892) 2 Ch. 423; Gantt v. Ins. Co., 68 Mo. 503.

REISSUABLE NOTES. Bank-notes which, after having been once paid, may again be put into circulation.

They cannot properly be called valuable securities while in the hands of the maker, but in an indictment may properly be called goods and chattels; Ry. & M. 218. See U. S. v. Moulton, 5 Mas. 537, Fed. Cas. No. 15,827; 2 Russ. Cr. 147. And such notes would fall within the description of promissory notes; 2 Leach 1090.

REISSUE; REISSUED PATENT. See PATENT.

REJOINDER. The defendant's answer to the plaintiff's replication. Andr. Steph. Pl. 151.

It must conform to the plea; Keay v. Goodwin, 16 Mass. 1; 2 Mod. 343; be triable, certain, direct, and positive, and not by way of recital, or argumentative; Lewis v. Cooke, 1 H. & McH. (Md.) 159; must answer every material averment of the declaration; Judge of Probate v. Ordway, 23 N. H. 198. It must not be double; Neff v. Powell, 6 Blackf. (Ind.) 421; U. S. v. Cumpton, 3 McLean 163, Fed. Cas. No. 14,902; and there may not be several rejoinders to the same replication; Slocumb's Adm'r v. Holmes's Adm'r, 1 How. (Miss.) 139; 1 Wms. Saund. 337, n.; nor repugnant or insensible. See Co. Litt. 394; Archb. Civ. Pl. 278; Comyns, Dig. Plead. (H).

REJOINING GRATIS. Rejoining within four days from the delivery of the replication, without a notice to rejoin or demand of rejoinder. 1 Archb. Pr. 280, 317. But judgment cannot be signed without demanding; 3 Dowl. 537.

RELATION (Lat. re, back, fero, to bear). In Civil Law. The report which the judges made of the proceedings in certain suits to the prince were so called.

These relations took place when the judge had no law to direct him, or when the laws were susceptible of difficulties; it was then referred to the prince, who was the author of the law, to give the interpretation. They were made in writing, and contained the pleadings of the parties and all the proceedings, together with the judge's opinion, and prayed the emperor to order what should be done. This ordinance of the prince thus required was called a rescript. Their use was abolished by Justinian, Nov. 125.

In Contracts. When an act is done at one time, and it operates upon the thing as if done at another time, it is said to do so by relation: as, if a man deliver a deed as an escrow, to be delivered, by the party holding it, to the grantor, on the performance of some act, the delivery to the latter will have relation back to the first delivery. Termes de la Ley. Again, if a partner be adjudged a bankrupt, the partnership is dissolved, and such dissolution relates back to the time when the commission issued; 3 Kent 33. See Litt. 462; Johnson v. Stagg, 2 Johns. (N. Y.) 510; Jackson v. Dickenson, 15 Johns. (N. Y.) 309, 8 Am. Dec. 236; Hammond v. Warfield, 2 Harr. & J. (Md.) 151; Fiction.

This doctrine, like every other fiction, has its limitations; its root must be planted in some antecedent, lawful right; U. S. v. R. Co., 142 Fed. 187; thus when an attachment was issued and levied without sufficient affidavit, an amended affidavit will relate back and uphold the levy; id.; Powers v. Hurmurt, 51 Mo. 136.

RELATIONS. A term which, in its widest sense, includes all the kindred of the person spoken of. It has long been settled that in the construction of wills it includes those persons who are entitled as next of kin under the statute of distribution; 2 Jarm. Wills 661; Drew v. Wakefield, 54 Me. 291; L. R. 20 Eq. 410; [1894] 3 Ch. 565; Gallagher v. Crooks, 132 N. Y. 338, 30 N. E. 746; in the interpretation of a statute, the term was held not to include a stepson; Kimball v. Story, 108 Mass. 382; or a wife; Esty v. Clark, 101 Mass. 36, 3 Am. Rep. 320; In re Estate of Renton, 10 Wash. 533, 39 Pac. 145; or a brother-in-law; Horton v. Earle, 162 Mass. 448, 38 N. E. 1135; held to include a step-father; Smith v. Supreme Tent Knights of Maccabees of the World, 127 Ia. 115, 102 N. W. 830, 69 L. R. A. 174.

A legacy to "relations" generally, or to "relations by blood or marriage," without enumerating any of them, will, therefore, entitle to a share such of the testator's relatives as would be entitled under the statute of distributions in the event of intestacy; 1 Madd. 45; 1 Bro. C. C. 33. The same rule extends to devises of real estate; 1 Taunt. 263. See LEGACY; KINDRED.

Relations to either of the parties, even beyond the ninth degree, have been holden incapable to serve on juries: 3 Chitty, Pr. 795, note c. As to the disqualification of a judge by reason of relationship, see JUDGE. Relationship or affinity is no objection to a witness, unless in the case of husband and wife. See WITNESS.

RELATIVE FACT. A fact having relation to another fact; a minor fact; a circumstance. Burril, Circ. Ev. 121. See RELLEVANCY.

RELATIVE POWERS. Those which relate to land: so called to distinguish them from those which are collateral to it.

These powers are appendant: as, where a tenant for life has a power of making leases in possession. They are in gross when a person has an estate in the land, with a power of appointment, the execution of which falls out of the compass of his estate, but notwithstanding, is annexed in privity to it, and takes effect in the appointee out of an interest appointed in the appointer. 2 Bouvier, Inst. n. 1930.

RELATIVE RIGHTS. Those to which a person is entitled in consequence of his relation with others; such as the rights of a husband in relation to his wife; of a father as to his children; of a master as to his servant; of a guardian as to his ward.

In general, the superior may maintain an action for an injury committed against his relative rights.

RELATOR. A rehearser or teller. One who, by leave of court, brings an information in the nature of a quo warranto.

At common law, strictly speaking, no such person as a relator to an information is known, he being a creature of the statute of 9 Anne. In this country, even where no similar statute prevails, informations are allowed to be filed by private persons desirous to try their rights, in the name of the attorney-general, and these are commonly called relators; though no judgment for costs can be rendered for or against them; Com. v. Woelper, 3 S. & R. (Pa.) 52. In chancery, the relator is responsible for costs; 4 Bouvier, Inst. n. 4022.

See QUO WARRANTO.

RELEASE. The giving up or abandoning a claim or right to the person against whom the claim exists or the right is to be exercised or enforced.

Releases may either give up, discharge, or abandon a right of action, or convey a man's interest or right to another who has possession of it or some estate in the same. Shepp. Touchst. 320; Littleton 444. In the former class a mere right is surrendered; in the other not only a right is given up, but an interest in the estate is conveyed and becomes vested in the release.

An express release is one directly made in terms by deed or other suitable means.

An implied release is one which arises from acts of the creditor or owner, without any express agreement. See Pothier, Obl. nn. 608, 609.

A release by operation of law is one which, though not expressly made, the law presumes in consequence of some act of the releasor; for instance, when one of several joint obligors is expressly released, the others are also released by operation of law; 3 Salk. 298; Rowley v. Stoddard, 7 Johns. (N. Y.) 207.

Releases of claims which constitute a cause of action acquit the releasee, and remove incompetency as a witness resulting from interest.

Littleton says a release of all demands is the best and strongest release; sect. 508. Lord Coke, on the contrary, says claims is a stronger word; Co. Litt. 291 b.

In general, the words of a release will be restrained by the particular occasion of giving it; T. Raym. 399. It cannot apply to circumstances of which the party had no knowledge at the time he executed it; and if it be so general as to include matters never contemplated, the party will be entitled to relief; 6 H. & N. 347.

The general words in a release are limited always to the things which were in the contemplation of the parties when the release was given; L. R. 4 H. L. 623.

The word release in an assignment for the benefit of creditors, requiring creditors accepting its terms to execute releases of their claims, was held to include any instrument sufficient to secure the absolute discharge of the debtor as to creditors accepting the terms of the assignment; Burgiss v. Westmoreland, 38 S. C. 425, 17 S. E. 56. See PREFERENCE.

In the following cases a construction has been given to the expressions mentioned: A release of "all actions, suits, and demands;" 3 Mod. 277; "all actions, debts, duties, and demands;" id. 1, 64; 8 Co. 150 b; 2 Saund, 6 a; "all demands;" 5 Co. 70 b; Salk. 578; Tryon v. Hart, 2 Conn. 120; "all actions, quarrels, trespasses;" Dy. 2171, pl. 2; Cro. Jac. 487; "all errors, and all actions, suits, and writs of error whatsoever;" T. Raym. 399; "all suits;" 8 Co. 150; "of covenants;" 5 Co. 70 b.

Where a creditor promised to sign a release of his claim, but afterwards refuses to execute it, the debtor is not released from liability; McNutt v. Loney, 153 Pa. 281, 25 Atl. 1088. A parol agreement to release a party from liability on a note, unsupported by any consideration, cannot be enforced; Maness v. Henry, 96 Ala. 454, 11 South. 410. The voluntary payment by a third person of the amount then due on a contract is a sufficient consideration to support a release of the contract; Indianapolis Rolling Mill v. R. R., 120 U. S. 256, 7 Sup. Ct. 542, 30 L. Ed. 639.

A release under seal may be attacked at law for fraud in the consideration where the seal is by statute made only prima facie evidence of consideration; Olston v. Ry. Co., 52 Or. 343, 96 Pac. 1095, 97 Pac. 538, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 915; Wagner v. Ins. Co., 90 Fed. 395, 33 C. C. A. 121; an injured person may defeat the operation of a release under seal pleaded in bar to an action at law for the injury, by showing fraud in its procurement, although there was no actual misrepresentation as to the character and purport of the instrument executed; Rockwell v. Traction Co., 25 App. D. C. 98. It has been held that the only fraud which may be availed of in an action at law to avoid a formally executed release, not under seal, of all claims under a life insurance policy, is misrepresentation, deceit or trickery, practiced to induce the execution of the release which the signer never intended to execute and upon which the minds of the contracting parties never met. Misrepresentations of fact to procure the execution of a release as actually made can only be availed of in equity; Pacific Mut. L. Ins. Co. of Cal. v. Webb, 157 Fed. 155, 84 C. C. A. 603, 13 Ann. Cas. 752. A release may be impeached where the signer of the instrument is deceived into signing it by the belief that he is signing something other than that which he really does sign. A release procured through fraud of this character may be shown in an action at law for the injury, if the release is pleaded as a bar to the action; Hartley v. R. Co., 214 Ill. 78, 73 N. E. 398. A release, if executed by the injured party with the belief that it was only a receipt for wages, is not a bar to an action at law for the injuries; Cleary v. Electric Light Co., 65 Hun, 621, 19 N. Y. Supp. 951, affirmed 139 N. Y. 643, 35 N. E. 206.

A release of a claim for personal injuries by an injured person at a time when he was mentally incapacitated is not a bar to an action for injuries; Julius v. Traction Co., 184 Pa. 19, 39 Atl. 141; Alabama & V. R. Co. v. Jones, 73 Miss. 110, 19 South. 105, 55 Am. St. Rep. 488; Perry v. M. O'Neil & Co., 78 Ohio St. 200, 85 N. E. 41; or where the injured person was so enfeebled by opiates and the shock and pain of the injuries as to be unable to enter into contractual relations; Bliss v. R. Co., 160 Mass. 447, 36 N. E. 65, 39 Am. St. Rep. 504.

Where a release from liability for personal injury was obtained by fraud, it is not necessary, before suit for the injury, to obtain a decree rescinding the release or to refund the amount paid under the release; St. Louis & S. F. R. Co. v. Richards, 23 Okl. 256, 102 Pac. 92, 23 L. R. A. (N. S.) 1032. The amount paid under the release need not be repaid or tendered, where the facts show that a tender would have been rejected; O'Brien v. R. Co., 89 Ia. 644, 57 N. W. 425; Rotan Grocery Co. v. Noble, 36 Tex. Civ. App. 231, 81 S. W. 586; Missouri Pac. R. Co. v. Goodholm, 61 Kan. 758, 60 Pac. 1066; U. S. v. Edmondston, 181 U. S. 500, 21 Sup. Ct.

718, 45 L. Ed. 971; Pierce v. Lukens, 144 Cal. 397, 77 Pac. 996; Williams v. Patrick, 177 Mass. 160, 58 N. E. 583; Merrill v. Pike, 94 Minn. 186, 102 N. W. 393; or where it appears that the defendant's unsoundness prevented him from understanding the transactions; Johnson v. Granite Co., 53 Fed. 569; in such cases an allowance on the recovery will be made of the amount received under the release; Union Pac. R. Co. v. Harris, 158 U. S. 326, 15 Sup. Ct. 843, 39 L. Ed. 1003; Sanford v. Ins. Co., 11 Wash. 653, 40 Pac. 609; contra, that there must first be a tender back of the amount received, see Bramble v. R. Co., 132 Ky. 547, 116 S. W. 742, and cases cited in Olston v. R. Co., 52 Or. 343, 96 Pac. 1095, 97 Pac. 538, 20 L. R. A. (N. S.) 915.

Where one has a right of action against two or more, and covenants with one of them not to sue him, it does not operate as a release of the others, though an express release to him would have that effect; L. R. 8 Ex. 81; 4 Ch. App. 208; Maslin's Ex'rs v. Hiett, 37 W. Va. 15, 16 S. E. 437; so of covenant to sue one of two joint tort-feasors; [1892] 2 Q. B. 511.

In Estates. The conveyance of a man's interest or right which he hath unto a thing to another that hath the possession thereof or some estate therein. Shepp. Touchst. 320. The relinquishment of some right or benefit to a person who has already some interest in the tenement, and such interest as qualifies him for receiving or availing himself of the right or benefit so relinquished. Burton, R. P. 15*.

The words generally used in such conveyance are "remised, released, and forever quit-claimed." Littleton § 445.

Releases of land are, in respect of their operation, divided into five sorts: releases that enure by way of passing the estate, or mitter l'estate (q. v.), e. g. a release by joint-tenant to co-joint-tenant, which conveyance will pass a fee without words of limitation. Releases that enure by way of passing the right, or mitter le droit, e. g. by disseisee to disseisor. Releases that enure by enlargement of the estate. A release to the tenant in possession, by him who hath the reversion or inheritance, is said to enlarge his estate and to be equal to an entry and feoffment and to amount to a grant and attornment. The law requires privity of estate, that the releasor have a right, and the releasee such a possession as will make him capable of taking an estate; Bac. Abr. Release (C) 4.

Releases that enure by way of extinguishment: e. g. a lord releasing his seignorial rights to his tenant.

Releases that enure by way of feoffment and entry: e. g. if there are two disseisors, a release to one will give him a sole estate, as if the disseisee had regained seisin by entry and enfeoffed him. 2 Sharsw. Bla. Com. 325*. See 4 Cruise, Dig. 71; Gilb. Ten. 82; Co. Litt. 264; Russell v. Coffin, 8 Pick.

(Mass.) 143; Carroll v. Norwood's Heirs, 5 Harr. & J. (Md.) 158; Jackson v. Burgott, 10 Johns. (N. Y.) 457, 6 Am. Dec. 349.

A release must be to a specific person.

The technicalities of English law as to releases are not generally applicable in the United States. The corresponding conveyance is a quit-claim deed. Smith's Heirs v. Bank, 21 Ala. 125.

RELEASEE. A person to whom a release is made.

RELEASOR. He who makes a release.

RELEGATIO. In Civil Law. A kind of banishment known to the civil law, which did not take away the rights of citizenship, which deportatio did.

Some say that relegatio was temporary, deportatio perpetual; that relegatio did not take away the property of the exile, and that deportatio did; but these distinctions do not seem always to exist. There was one sort of relegatio for slaves, viz. in agros; another for freemen, viz. in provincias. Relegatio only exiled from certain limits; deportatio confined to a particular place (locus pænæ). Calvinus, Lex.

RELEGATION. The temporary banishment or exile by special act of parliament. Co. Litt. 133 a.

RELEVANCY. Applicability to the issue joined. That quality of evidence which renders it properly applicable in determining the truth and falsity of the matters in issue between the parties to a suit. See 1 Greenl. Ev. § 49. Two facts are said to be relevant to each other when so related "that according to the common course of events, one either taken by itself or in connection with other facts, proves or renders probable the past, present, or future existence or non-existence of the other." Steph. Dig. Ev. art. 1. This is relevancy in a logical sense. Legal relevancy requires a higher standard of evidentiary force. It includes logical relevancy and demands a close connection between the fact to be proved and the fact offered to prove it. The fact, however, that it is logically relevant does not insure admissibility; it must also be legally relevant; U. S. v. Ross, 92 U. S. 281, 23 L. Ed. 707; it is, however, the tendency of modern jurisprudence to admit most evidence logically relevant. Chamb. Best, Ev. 251, n.

Relevancy of evidence does not depend upon the conclusiveness of the testimony offered, but upon its legitimate tendency to establish a controverted fact; Interstate Commerce Commission v. Baird, 194 U. S. 25, 24 Sup. Ct. 563, 48 L. Ed. 860.

RELICTA VERIFICATIONE (Lat. his pleading being abandoned). A confession of judgment made after plea pleaded: viz. a cognovit actionem accompanied by a withdrawal of the plea.

Bouv.—180

RELICION (Lat. relinquo, to leave behind). An increase of the land by the retreat or recession of the sea or a river.

Where the sea cut off the sea front of the main land between certain points and afterwards a beach was reformed outside the main land, and divided from it by a bay of navigable water, it was held that the title to the new formation was in the owners of the part cut off. Murphy v. Norton, 61 How. Pr. (N. Y.) 197.

See AVULSION; ALLUVION; LAKE; RIVER; WATERS.

RELIEF. A sum payable by a new tenant, the duty being incident to every feudal tenure, by way of fine or composition with the lord for taking up the estate which was lapsed or fallen in by the death of the last tenant. At one time the amount was arbitrary: but afterwards the relief of a knight's fee became fixed at one hundred shillings. 2 Bla. Com. 65. See 3 Holdsw. Hist. E. L. 53.

RELIEF ASSOCIATION. See RAILROAD RELIEF FUNDS.

RELIEF, PRAYER FOR. A bill in equity concludes with such prayer for specific relief as the plaintiff deems himself entitled to under the averments of the bill; and a prayer for general relief is usually added. See BILL.

RELIGION (Lat. re, back, ligo, to bind). Real piety in practice, consisting in the performance of all known duties to God and our fellow-men. It has been held to include the principle of gratitude to an active power who can confer blessings. 38 L. J. M. C. 5.

The constitution of the United States provides that "congress shall make no law respecting an establishment of religion, or prohibiting the free exercise thereof." See Story, Const. 1870; Miller, Const. 645. Congress cannot pass a law for the government of a territory which prohibits the free exercise of religion; Reynolds v. U. S., 98 U. S. 162, 25 L. Ed. 244; religion is not defined in the constitution, its meaning there must be ascertained elsewhere. Jefferson was the leader of the movement for placing this clause in the constitution; id. See 12 Hening's Stat. 84; 1 Jeff. Works 45, 79; 2 id. 355; 8 id. 113. This provision and that relating to religious tests (q. v.) are limitations upon the power of congress only; Cooley, Const. 205; perhaps the fourteenth amendment may give additional securities if needful; id. By establishment of religion is meant the setting up of a state church, or at least the conferring upon one church of special favors which are denied to others; 1 Tuck. Bla. Com. App. 296; 2 id. App. n. G. The Christian religion is, of course, recognized by the government, yet not so as to draw invidious distinctions between different religious beliefs, etc.; Cooley, Const. 206. As to a religious country; Church of Holy Trinity v. U. S., 143 U. S. 457, 12 Sup. Ct. 511, 36 L. Ed. 226.

With the exception of these provisions, the preservation of religious liberty is left to the states. The various state guarantees have been summed up by Judge Cooley, who says that under American constitutions the following things are unlawful: 1. Any law respecting the establishment of religion. 2. Compulsory support by taxation or otherwise of religious instruction. 3. Compulsory attendance upon religious worship. 4. Restraints upon the free exercise of religion according to the dictates of conscience. 5. Restraints upon the expression of religious belief. Const. Lim. 575.

The constitutions of most of the states forbid any religious test for holding office, except that in some states belief in the existence of God is required.

A person's religious belief cannot be accepted as a justification for his committing an overt act, made criminal by the law of the land (polygamy); Reynolds v. U. S., 98 U. S. 145, 25 L. Ed. 244. By the constitution "congress is deprived of all legislative power over mere opinion, but was left free to reach actions which were in violation of social duties or subversive of good order;" id., 98 U. S. 164, 25 L. Ed. 244. Where the parents of a sick child omitted to call in medical attendance because of their religious belief that what they did would be effective, they were held not guilty of manslaughter; 10 Cox, Cr. Cas. 531; otherwise, if they had actively starved it to death under like religious belief; id.

A father who belonged to a sect called the "Peculiar People" was convicted of manslaughter for neglect to provide medical aid for his child; [1899] 1 Q. B. 283. "Religious belief" is no defense to a prosecution for failure to procure medical attendance for a sick child; Owens v. State, 6 Okl. Cr. 110, 116 Pac. 345, 36 L. R. A. (N. S.) 633, Ann. Cas. 1912B, 1218. See Reynolds v. U. S., 98 U. S. 167, 25 L. Ed. 244.

"But beyond all these matters no purpose of action against religion can be imputed to any legislation, state or national, because this is a religious people. This is historically true." Holy Trinity Church v. U. S., 143 U. S. 465, 12 Sup. Ct. 511, 36 L. Ed. 226. The opinion quotes from the early charters of the colonies, the Declaration of Independence and from state constitutions, and then adds: "There is no dissonance in these declarations. There is a universal language pervading them all, having one meaning; they affirm and reaffirm that this is a religious nation. These are not individual sayings, declarations of private persons; they are organic utterances; they speak the voice of the entire people."

The opinion quotes the language of Updegraph v. Com., 11 S. & R. (Pa.) 394: "Christianity, general Christianity, is, and always has been, a part of the common law of Pennsylvania; . . . not Christianity with an established church, and tithes, and spiritual courts; but Christianity with liberty of conscience to all men." It also quotes the opinion of Kent, Ch., in People v. Ruggles, 8 Johns. (N. Y.) 290, 5 Am. Dec. 335: "The people of this state, in common with the people of this country, profess the general doctrines of Christianity, as the rule of their faith and practice." In the Girard Will Case, 2 How. (U. S.) 127, 11 L. Ed. 205, it was said: "It is also said, and truly, that the Christian religion is a part of the common law of Pennsylvania."

An agreement by the District of Columbia to erect buildings on the grounds of a private incorporated hospital, in charge of Roman Catholic sisters, to be used by poor patients sent there, is not in conflict with art. 1 of the United States constitution forbidding congress to make laws for the establishment of religion; Bradfield v. Roberts, 175 U. S. 291, 20 Sup. Ct. 121, 44 L. Ed. 168.

See ASSOCIATION; CHARITIES; CHARITABLE USES; POLYGAMY; RELIGIOUS TEST; RELIGIOUS EDUCATION; RELIGIOUS SOCIETY; CHRISTIANITY.

As to religious belief as a qualification for a witness, see WITNESS; ECCLESIASTICAL LAW; CONSTITUTION OF UNITED STATES.

RELIGIOUS BOOKS. Those which tend to promote the religion taught by the Christian dispensation, unless by associated words the meaning is so limited to show that some other form of worship is referred to. Simpson v. Welcome, 72 Me. 500, 39 Am. Rep. 349.

RELIGIOUS CORPORATION. See RELIGIOUS SOCIETY.

RELIGIOUS EDUCATION. Questions respecting the religious education of children arise not infrequently by reason of applications to the courts for either restraining or mandatory process intended to control the religious education of children where differences exist between the parents or where the relations of a deceased parent seek to control the direction given to the mind of the child.

Where the husband was a Roman Catholic and the wife a Protestant, and by an antenuptial agreement the children were to be brought up as Roman Catholics, but they had been educated as Protestants, and it appeared that the father gave way to drink and two girls of fifteen and eleven were before the court on the application of the father, who had reformed, to restore them to his charge and educate them at a Papist school, it was held that the children should remain at the Protestant school where they then were; [1896] 1 Ch. 740.

Courts or those who have the guardianship of a child after the father's death should have a sacred regard to the religion of the father and, unless under very special circumstances, should see that the child is brought up in his religious faith; L. R. 6 Ch. 530.

Where both father and mother were Roman Catholics and, after the death of the father, a posthumous child was born, and five years after the father's death, the mother became a Protestant and, until the child was about nine years of age, educated it in that faith, the court refused to order the child to be brought up in the father's belief; S. D. M. & G. 760.

Where no abandonment by the father is shown, the mere fact that a child will be better off or more contented under other people's care will not justify his instruction in a creed other than the father's; but when abandonment is proved, the question turns upon the welfare of the child; L. R. 8 Ch. 622. See 24 Ch. Div. 317. The pecuniary welfare of the child will be weighed together with its moral welfare, but the danger of making the former all important must be guarded against; 4 My. & Cr. 688.

The practice of the courts of having interviews with the children is discouraged as tending to encourage controversial opinions in their tender minds, and because the child is often so nervous that the court can form no useful opinion in that way; [1893] 1 Ch. 143.

See CUSTODY; INFANT; PARENT AND CHILD. As to the Bible in schools, see SCHOOLS.

RELIGIOUS IMPOSTORS. Those who falsely pretend an extraordinary commission from heaven, or terrify and abuse the people with false denunciations of judgment; punishable with fine, imprisonment, and infamous corporal punishment. 4 Br. & H. Com. 71.

RELIGIOUS MEN. Such as entered into some monastery or convent. In old English deeds, the vendee was often restrained from aliening to "Jews or religious men," lest the lands should fall into mortmain. Religious men were civilly dead. Blount.

RELIGIOUS SOCIETY. A body of persons associated together for the purpose of maintaining religious worship. In this country they are not ecclesiastical corporations in the English sense, but ordinary private, civil corporations, and as such subject to the ordinary civil jurisdiction; Watson v. Jones, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 679, 20 L. Ed. 666; Gram v. Prussia Emigrated Evangelical Lutheran German Soc., 36 N. Y. 161; Smith v. Nelson, 18 Vt. 511.

The religious corporation and the church are distinct bodies, independent of each other, though one may exist within the other. When a church and society are united, the society commonly owns the property and makes the pecuniary contract with the clergyman, but in many instances a society exists without a church and a church without a society; Silsby v. Barlow, 16 Gray (Mass.) 329. Membership in the church is not ordinarily a prerequisite to membership in the corporation, and the excommunication of a member who was trustee of a religious society did not disqualify him from holding that office; Bouldin v. Alexander, 15 Wall. (U. S.) 131, 21 L. Ed. 69. This distinction between the church and the society has been stated by Judge Cooley, who said that the statute under consideration contemplates a church connected with the corporation, though that may not be essential. The church is not incorporated and does not control the property or the membership of the society, while the corporation has nothing to do with the church except to provide for its temporal wants; Hardin v. Second Baptist Church of Detroit, 51 Mich. 137, 16 N. W. 311, 47 Am. Rep. 555. The unincorporated ecclesiastical body has power to control and discipline its membership, but the religious corporation has no power to try or disfranchise a corporator for moral delinquency, and in case of an attempt to do so, he has his remedy at law; People v. Church, 53 N. Y. 103.

Their powers, like those of other corporations, are construed with reference to the object of their corporate existence and extend so far, and so far only, as necessary to effectuate them. It has been held that a church corporation the object of whose incorporation was "the more efficient worship of God, the preservation and perpetuation of said church, and the better control and regulation of the property thereof," had no power to charter a steamboat, manage a public excursion, and sell tickets therefor, in order to raise money to pay debts of the church; Harriman v. Church, 63 Ga. 186, 36 Am. Rep. 117.

Where there is a dispute over the rights of contending factions of an unincorporated church to the use of the church property, an injunction will lie at the suit of the faction entitled to the property to restrain trespasses thereon by the other faction; Fulbright v. Higginbotham, 133 Mo. 668, 34 S. W. 875.

Even where the corporation is defective, yet where land has been acquired for the use of a religious society, equity will enforce that use no matter where the legal title is vested or though it be in an individual. So the corporation itself will be compelled by the courts to administer the property upon the trusts attached to it in the grant or donation. "The corporation or society are trustees and can no more divert the property from the use to which it was originally dedicated than any other trustee. If they should undertake to divert the funds, equity will raise some other trustee to administer them and apply them according to the intention of the original donors or subscribers." Sharswood, J., in Appeal of Schnorr, 67 Pa. 138, 5 Am. Rep. 415.

The effect of church divisions upon such trusts is discussed by Mr. Justice Miller in Watson v. Jones, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 679, 20 L. Ed. 666. He classifies the cases under three heads:

(1st.) Was the property in question devoted, by the express terms of the gift, grant, or sale, to the support of any specific religious doctrine, or was it acquired for the general use of the society for religious purposes, with no other limitation?

(2d.) Is the society which owned it of strictly congregational form of church government, owing no submission to any organization outside the congregation?

(3d.) Or is it one of a number of such societies, united to form a more general body, with ecclesiastical control in the general association over the members and societies of which it is composed?

In the first class of cases, the court will, when necessary to protect the trust to which the property has been devoted, inquire into the religious faith or practice of the parties claiming its use or control, and will see that it shall not be diverted from that trust.

If the property was acquired in the ordinary way of purchase, or gift, for the use of a religious society, the court will inquire who constitute that society, or its legitimate successors, and award to them the use of the property.

In case of the independent order of the congregation, this is to be determined by the majority of the society, or by such organization of the society as, by its own rules, constitute its government.

In the class of cases in which property has been acquired in the same way by a society which constitutes a subordinate part of a general religious organization with established tribunals for ecclesiastical government, these tribunals must decide all questions of faith, discipline, or ecclesiastical government.

In such cases where the right of property in the civil court is dependent on the question of doctrine, discipline, ecclesiastical law, rule, or custom, or church government, and that has been decided by the highest tribunal within the organization to which it has been carried, the civil court will accept that decision as conclusive, and be governed by it in its application to the case before it; Watson v. Jones, 13 Wall. (U. S.) 680, 20 L. Ed. 666; s. c. 11 Am. L. Reg. 430, with a full note by Judge Redfield.

Where a church is in full connection with a synodical body, those who secede, whether a majority or not, lose all right and privilege to the corporate property, and those who remain hold them; Gable v. Miller, 10 Paige (N. Y.) 627.

The majority of a church cannot change its doctrines and still retain the property given to it against the minority adhering to the faith in which the church was founded;

Smith v. Pedigo, 145 Ind. 361, 33 N. E. 777, 44 N. E. 363, 19 L. R. A. 433, 32 L. R. A. 838; Mack v. Kime, 129 Ga. 1, 58 S. E. 184, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 675; Christian Church of Sand Creek v. Church, 219 Ill. 503, 76 N. E. 703.

Where property is devoted under a trust to a particular religious faith or form of church government, those who adhere, however small in numbers, are entitled to its use, as against those who abandon the doctrines of a church; Harmon v. Dreher, Speer Eq. (S. C.) 87; McGiunis v. Watson, 41 Pa. 9; Keyser v. Stansifer, 6 Ohio, 363; Hosea v. Jacobs, 98 Mass. 65; Nance v. Busby, 91 Tenn. 303, 18 S. W. 874, 15 L. R. A. 801.

In the leading English case, Free Church of Scotland v. Overtoun, [1904] A. C. 515, on the question of the right of the majority to unite with another religious organization, differing in essential points, it was held that the majority could not lawfully alienate the property from its original purpose and that it belonged to the minority who held to the original tenets of the founder.

Where the members of a parish sought an injunction to prevent the vestry of a church from closing it, in order to carry on its work in another part of the parish, the injunction was refused; Burke v. Rector of Trinity Church, 63 Misc. Rep. 43, 117 N. Y. Supp. 255.

In some states, as Illinois, Maryland, and Massachusetts, statutes provide that the appropriate Roman Catholic archbishop shall be and may become a corporation sole. See ROMAN CATHOLIC CHURCH.

An allegation that by the regulations of the Roman Catholic Church the bishop of the diocese holds all its property in his own name as trustee, for its benefit, and that each priest assigned to duty is entitled to hold the bishop individually liable for his salary, is not sufficient to sustain an action for salary brought by a priest against his bishop. A trust created by the rules of a church which is not shown to be capable of making contracts, accepting benefits, and compelling performance, is not recognized by law. The courts will not take judicial notice of the civil rights and powers of the Roman Catholic Church, so far as its civil rights and duties are concerned, in the absence of averment or proof upon the subject. Where such a question has been submitted to an ecclesiastical tribunal in the church, its decision, adverse to the claim, is a bar to an action therefor; Baxter v. McDonnell, 155 N. Y. 83, 49 N. E. 667, 40 L. R. A. 670.

A bishop is not liable to a priest for his salary; both are fellow-servants of the same church; Rose v. Vertin, 46 Mich. 457, 9 N. W. 491, 41 Am. Rep. 174. Those who deal with an unincorporated church must trust the performance of civil obligations to the honor and good faith of its members; Trustees for First Soc. of M. E. Church v. Clark, 41 Mich. 737, 3 N. W. 207.

The condition in a gift to a church to teach a definite Christian doctrine is not satisfied by teaching merely a form of general evangelical Christianity; Lowrey v. Hawaii, 215 U. S. 554, 30 Sup. Ct. 209, 54 L. Ed. 325.

A conveyance of real estate to a trustee for the use of a particular congregation constitutes an executed legal estate in the congregation itself, to be used by it for such purposes as the law allows; and the congregation may direct the trustee to convey to other persons as trustees, and he may not refuse to do so on the ground that he is a Bishop of the Roman Catholic Church of which the congregation is a part; Krauczunas v. Hoban, 221 Pa. 213, 70 Atl. 740.

The right of a communistic religious association to engage in business enterprises is upheld in State v. Amuna Soc., 132 Ia. 304, 109 N. W. 894, 8 L. R. A. (N. S.) 909, 11 Ann. Cas. 231.

A priest necessarily subjects his conduct, in that capacity, to the laws and customs of his church; and in that respect, when his case has been heard according to the prescribed forms, the decision of the tribunals of the church will be respected by the courts; Stack v. O'Hara, 98 Pa. 213; Chase v. Cheney, 58 Ill. 509, 11 Am. Rep. 95.

In religious bodies all matters of faith and internal government will be left to the decision of the bodies themselves; Tuigg v. Treacy, 104 Pa. 493; Trustees of East Norway Lake Norwegian Evangelical Lutheran Church v. Halvorson, 42 Minn. 503, 44 N. W. 663; Stewart v. Lee, 5 Del. Ch. 573; Schlichter v. Keiter, 156 Pa. 119, 27 Atl. 45, 22 L. R. A. 161; Schweiker v. Husser, 146 Ill. 428, 34 N. E. 1022. But where these decisions violate the law of the land, or their own law; Appeal of Kerr, 89 Pa. 97; courts will examine them; Pounder v. Ashe, 36 Neb. 564, 54 N. W. 847; after the ecclesiastical remedies have been exhausted; Buettner v. Frazer, 100 Mich. 179, 58 N. W. 834.

If property rights are involved, courts will assume jurisdiction; Cushman v. Church, 162 Pa. 280, 29 Atl. 872; Lynd v. Menzies, 33 N. J. L. 162; and the office of priest; O'Hara v. Stack, 90 Pa. 477; or vestryman; Dahl v. Palache, 68 Cal. 248, 9 Pac. 94; involves a property right.

See RELIGION; EXPULSION; 12 Am. L. Reg. N. S. 201; 15 id. 264; Mt. Zion Baptist Church v. Whitmore, 83 Ia. 138, 49 N. W. 81, 13 L. R. A. 198; Brown v. Clark, 102 Tex. 323, 116 S. W. 360, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 671; Mack v. Kime, 129 Ga. 1, 58 S. E. 184, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 675, 692; Poynter v. Phelps, 129 Ky. 381, 111 S. W. 699, 24 L. R. A. (N. S.) 729.

RELIGIOUS TEST. The constitution of the United States declares that "no religious test shall ever be required as a qualification to any office or public trust under the United States." This clause was introduced for the double purpose of satisfying the scruples of many persons who feel an invincible repugnance to any religious test or affirmation, and to cut off forever every pretence of any alliance between church and state in the national government. Story, Const. § 1841. See RELIGION.

RELIGIOUS USE. See CHARITABLE USES.

RELINQUISHMENT. In Practice. A forsaking, abandoning, or giving over a right: for example, a plaintiff may relinquish a bad count in a declaration, and proceed on a good; a man may relinquish a part of his claim in order to give a court jurisdiction.

RELIQUA. The remainder or debt left upon balancing an account.

RELOCATIO (Lat.). In Civil Law. A renewal of a lease on its determination on like terms as before. It may be either express or tacit; the latter is when the tenant holds over with the knowledge and without objection of the landlord. Mackeldey, Civ. Law, § 379.

REMAINDER. The remnant of an estate in land, depending upon a particular prior estate created at the same time and by the same instrument and limited to arise immediately on the determination of that estate and not in abridgment of it. 4 Kent 197. See Will. Real P. 282.

A contingent remainder is one which is limited to an uncertain or dubious person, or which is to take effect on an event or condition which may never happen or be performed, or which may not happen or be performed till after the determination of the preceding particular estate.

A vested remainder is one by which a present interest passes to the party, though perhaps to be enjoyed in future, and by which the estate is invariably fixed to remain to a determinate person after the particular estate has been spent.

There are four classes of contingent remainders. 1. Where the remainder depends on a contingent determination of the preceding estate, and it remains uncertain whether the use or estate limited in future will ever vest. 2. Where the contingency on which the remainder is to take effect is independent of the determination of the preceding estate and must precede the remainder. 3. Where the condition upon which the remainder is limited is certain in event, but the determination of the particular estate may happen before it. 4. Where the person to whom the remainder is limited is not ascertained or not in being. 4 Kent 207, quoting Fearn, Cont. Rem.

They are divided by Blackstone into two kinds. 1. Remainders limited to take effect to a dubious and uncertain person, or 2. Upon a dubious or uncertain event; and by Lord Ch. J. Willes into, 1. Where the person to whom the remainder was limited is not in esse. 2. Where the commencement of the remainder depended on some matter collateral to the determination of the particular estate; Willes 327; 4 Kent 207, and note, where the classification of Blackstone is approved.

There are exceptions to the third and fourth classes of contingent remainders, as enumerated by Fearn, as, a limitation for a long term of years with remainder over gives a vested remainder; and where one takes an estate of freehold and an immediate remainder is limited thereon in the same instrument to his heirs in fee or in tail, the remainder is immediately executed in possession and he becomes seised in fee or in tail. 4 Kent 209. See SHELLEY'S CASE, RULE IN.

The rule that where there is a possibility upon a possibility, the remainder is void; 2 Co. 51; is said to be obsolete; 4 Kent 206, n.; 2 H. L. Cas. 186.

See CONTINGENT REMAINDER; CROSS-REMAINDER; EXECUTORY DEVISE; LIMITATION; REVERSION.

REMAINDER-MAN. One who is entitled to the remainder of the estate after a particular estate carved out of it has expired. Will. Real P. 290.

REMAND. When a prisoner is brought before a judge on a habeas corpus, for the purpose of obtaining his liberty, the judge hears the case, and either discharges him or not: when there is cause for his detention, he remands him.

REMANDING A CAUSE. The sending it back to the same court out of which it came, for the purpose of having some action on it there. March 100. See REMOVAL OF CAUSES.

REMANENT PRO DEFECTU EMPTORUM (Lat. remanent, they remain, pro defectu, through lack, emptorum, of buyers). The return made by the sheriff to a writ of execution when he has not been able to sell the property seized, that the same remains unsold for want of buyers; in that case the plaintiff is entitled to a venditioni exponas. Com. Dig. Execution (C 8).

REMANET (Lat.). The causes which are entered for trial, and which cannot be tried during the term, are remanets. 1 Sell. Pr. 434; 1 Phill. Ev. 4.

REMEDIAL. That which affords a remedy: as, a remedial statute, or one which is made to supply some defects or abridge some superfluities of the common law. 1 Bla. Com. 86. The term remedial statute is also applied to those acts which give a new remedy. Esp. Pen. Act. 1. See Wilberf. Stat. L. 231.

REMEDY. The means employed to enforce a right or redress an injury.

Remedies for non-fulfilment of contracts are generally by action; see ACTION; AS-

SUMPSIT; COVENANT; DEBT; DETINUE; or in equity, in some cases, by bill for specific performance. Remedies for the redress of injuries are either public, by indictment, when the injury to the individual or to his property affects the public, or private, when the tort is only injurious to the individual. See INDICTMENT; FELONY; MERGER; TORTS; CIVIL REMEDY.

Remedies are preventive which seek compensation, or which have for their object punishment. The preventive, or removing, or abating remedies may be by acts of the party aggrieved or by the intervention of legal proceedings: as in the case of injuries to the person or to personal or real property, defense, resistance, recaption, abatement of nuisance, and surety of the peace, or injunction in equity, and perhaps some others. Remedies for compensation may be either by the acts of the party aggrieved, or summarily before justices, or by arbitration, or action, or suit at law or in equity. Remedies which have for their object punishments or compensation and punishments are either summary proceedings before magistrates, or indictment, etc.

Remedies are specific or cumulative: the former are those which can alone be applied to restore a right or punish a crime: for example, where a statute makes unlawful what was lawful before, and gives a particular remedy, that is specific, and must be pursued, and no other; Cro. Jac. 644; 2 Burr. 803. But when an offence was antecedently punishable by a common-law proceeding, as by indictment, and a statute prescribes a particular remedy, there such particular remedy is cumulative, and proceedings may be had at common law or under the statute; 1 Saund. 134, n. 4.

In a very large number of cases there are concurrent remedies the resort to one of which does not bar the other. This is particularly true where there is a legal and an equitable remedy with respect to the same subject-matter. For example, a bill in equity against the holder of a note to recover possession of it, and against makers for the balance due on it, may be maintained, pending an action at law against the holders and makers to recover from the latter the balance due; and where the action at law failed on the ground that the plaintiffs were not in possession, the judgment did not bar the proceeding in equity; New England Trust Co. v. Packing Co., 166 Mass. 46, 43 N. E. 928.

The maxim ubi jus ibi remedium has been considered so valuable that it gave occasion to the first invention of that form of action called an action on the case; 1 Sm. Lead. Cas. 472. The novelty of the particular complaint alleged in an action on the case is no objection, provided there appears to have been an injury to the plaintiff cognizable by law; 3 Term 63; 2 M. & W. 519.

There is an important distinction to be considered in connection with the construction and effect of statutes, between those which create rights, and those which afford remedies. This distinction has an important effect upon the legislative power, with respect to many subjects constantly involved in the question whether an act is obnoxious to the provision of the federal constitution against impairing the obligation of contracts, under which title the subject is discussed and to which reference should be made. The distinction is also important in many questions merely of state legislation. "The remedies which one legislature may have prescribed for the redress of private wrongs, a subsequent legislature can change or modify at pleasure, and make the new remedy applicable to pending controversies, provided a substantial or adequate remedy is left, and provided, further, that the legislature is not prohibited from making the new remedy applicable to pending suits by some provision of the organic law. . . . It is true that the courts have, on some occasions, refused to apply statutes which dealt with the remedy for the redress of private grievances to existing controversies, and have held them solely applicable to actions thereafter brought. But it will be found, we think, on an examination of most of this class of cases, that the refusal to apply to existing suits statutes which were plainly applicable thereto, and which merely changed or modified the course of procedure, was based either on the ground that, if so applied, they would operate unfairly, and cause loss or inconvenience to the parties, or on the ground that the right involved had become so far established by acts done and performed in reliance on the prior law, and its continuance in force, that it would savor of injustice to take away such right by making the new law applicable to the pending controversy;" Campbell v. Min. Co., 83 Fed. 643, 27 C. C. A. 646, where it was held that a statutory right to two trials in ejectment may be taken away by the legislature as to pending suits.

See RETROSPECTIVE; EX POST FACTO LAW; ELECTION OF REMEDIES.

REMEMBRANCER, KING'S. He was at the head of the department which had charge of all revenue suits, and of matters pertaining to the office of sheriff. He attended as the officer of the king's bench when the lord mayor made his appearance on November 9th, and as representing the old court of exchequer when the city of London did suit and service in discharge of quit-rents for certain lands anciently held under the crown. He presided at the Trial of the Pyx, the assaying and weighing of the coins of the realm. See Remembrances of Sir F. Pollock. The present incumbent is in the central office of the supreme court of judicature.

REMISE, RELEASE, AND QUIT-CLAIM. The ordinary effective words in a release.

These words are, in this country, sufficient to pass the estate in a primary conveyance; Dart v. Dart, 7 Conn. 250; Thorndike v. Norris, 24 N. H. 460; Smith's Heirs v. Bank, 21 Ala. 125. Remise is a French word synonymous with release. See QUIT-CLAIM.

REMISSION (Lat. re, back, mitto, to send).

In Civil Law. A release of a debt.

It is conventional when it is expressly granted to the debtor by a creditor having a capacity to alienate; or tacit, when the creditor voluntarily surrenders to his debtor the original title, under private signature constituting the obligation. La. Civ. Code. art. 2195.

Forgiveness or pardon of an offence.

It has the effect of putting back the offender into the same situation he was before the commission of the offence. Remission is generally granted in cases where the offence was involuntary or committed in self-defence. Pothier, Pr. Civ. sect. 7, art. 2, § 2.

At Common Law. The act by which a forfeiture or penalty is forgiven. U. S. v. Morris, 10 Wheat. (U. S.) 246, 6 L. Ed. 314.

REMIT. To annul a fine or forfeiture.

This is generally done by the courts where they have a discretion by law: as, for example, when a juror is fined for non-attendance in court, after being duly summoned, and, on appearing, he produces evidence to the courts that he was sick and unable to attend, the fine will be remitted by the court.

In Commercial Law. To send money, bills, or something which will answer the purpose of money.

To send back, as to remit a check. Colvin v. Acc. Ass'n, 66 Hun, 543, 21 N. Y. Supp. 734.

REMITTANCE. Money sent by one merchant to another, either in specie, bill of exchange, draft, or otherwise.

REMITTEE. A person to whom a remittance is made. Story, Bailm. § 75.

REMITTER. To be placed back in possession.

When one having a right to lands is out of possession, and afterwards the freehold is cast upon him by some defective title, and he enters by virtue of that title, the law re-mits him to his ancient and more certain right, and, by an equitable fiction, supposes him to have gained possession under it. 3 Bla. Com. 190; Com. Dig. Remitter; Litt. § 659.

REMITTIT DAMNA (Lat. he releases damages). An entry on the record by which the plaintiff declares that he remits the damages or a part of the damages which have been awarded him by the jury.

In some cases a misjoinder of action may be cured by the entry of a remittit damna; Chitty, Pl. 207.

REMITTITUR DAMNUM. The act of the plaintiff upon the record, whereby he abates the excess of damages found by the jury beyond the sum laid in the declaration. See 1 Saund. 285, n. 6. It cannot be filed by one of several plaintiffs, and where the widow of one killed by the negligence of a railroad company brought an action for damages on behalf of herself and her children and the parents of the deceased, a remittitur filed by the widow, reducing the judgment on behalf of each claimant, was held to be invalid and a new trial was ordered; Southern Pac. Co. v. Tomlinson, 163 U. S. 369, 16 Sup. Ct. 1171, 41 L. Ed. 193.

It is within power of the trial court, in tort for unliquidated damages, to require a plaintiff to remit so much as the court deems excessive, under penalty of having a new trial granted; Noxon v. Remington, 78 Conn. 290, 61 Atl. 963.

REMITTITUR OF RECORD. After a record has been removed to the supreme court and a judgment has been rendered, it is to be remitted or sent back to the court below, for the purpose of re-trying the cause, when the judgment has been reversed, or of issuing an execution when it has been affirmed. The act of so returning the record, and the writ issued for that purpose, bear the name of remittitur.

REMITTOR. A person who makes a remittance to another.

REMONSTRANCE. A petition to a court or deliberative or legislative body, in which those who have signed it request that something which is in contemplation to perform shall not be done.

REMOTE. At a distance; afar off. See CAUSA PROXIMA; MEASURE OF DAMAGES.

REMOVAL FROM OFFICE. A deprivation of office by the act of a competent officer or of the legislature. It may be express, that is, by a notification that the officer has been removed, or implied, by the appointment of another person to the same office; Bowerbank v. Morris, Wall. Sr. 118, Fed. Cas. No. 1,726. See In re Hennen, 13 Pet. (U. S.) 230, 10 L. Ed. 136. See OFFICER.

REMOVAL OF CAUSES. Under what are known as the removal acts, provision is made by federal statutes for the removal of causes in the state courts to the federal courts in certain cases.

The legislation on the subject begins with the Judiciary Act of 1789, which provided for the removal of suits commenced in the state courts against aliens, or citizens of other states, where the matter in dispute exceeded $500; 1 Stat. 73. This act continued in force, being substantially included in the Revised Statutes (section 639, now repealed by the Judicial Code), until 1875, when the jurisdiction was greatly enlarged; 18 Stat. 470; Girardey v. Moore, 3 Woods, 397, Fed. Cas. No. 5,462. The same section also provided for the removal of suits between citizens of one state claiming lands under grants of different states; 1 Stat. 73; and this act was also substantially included in the Revised Statutes (section 647, also repealed), and also in the act of 1887, with changes as to the jurisdictional limit, the party who might petition for removal, and the state from which the grant must be derived.

The act of 1833, occasioned by the nullification laws in South Carolina, provided for the removal of proceedings against federal revenue officers; 4 Stat. 633. This act was included in the Revised Statutes (section 643, also repealed by the Judicial Code), which with some extension of its scope, was, until the enactment of that Code, still in force, not having been repealed expressly or by implication by the act of 1875; Venable v. Richards, 105 U. S. 636, 26 L. Ed. 1196; and being excepted from repeal by the act of 1887; 25 Stat. 433. The act of 1863 related in terms to certain cases arising out of the civil war and has no subsequent force or effect. Several acts were passed during the reconstruction period, which were consolidated in R. S. §§ 641, 642 (both repealed by the Judicial Code and replaced by section 31), relating to the removal of causes in which there was a denial of civil rights, either by the action or non-action of the judicial tribunals of the state. This act was expressly saved from repeal by the act of 1887. The act of 1866 related to procedure merely, and authorized the removal of a separable part of a cause by one non-resident defendant joined with a resident; 14 Stat. 306. This was substantially covered by R. S. § 639 (repealed by the Judicial Code), but was repealed by the act of 1875 and not revived by that of 1887. The act of 1876 (14 Stat. 558), subsequently included in R. S. § 639, authorized the removal of causes upon an affidavit of prejudice or local influence. This was not repealed by the act of 1875 (Hess v. Reynolds, 113 U. S. 73, 5 Sup. Ct. 377, 28 L. Ed. 927), but was repealed and supplied by that of 1887; Fisk v. Henarie, 142 (U. S.) 459, 12 Sup. Ct. 207, 35 L. Ed. 1080. See infra. The act of 1868 authorized the removal of suits against federal corporations other than banks; 15 Stat. 227; R. S. § 640 (repealed by the Code); but this was repealed by the act of 1887. The act of 1868 authorized the removal of personal actions brought by an alien against civil officers of the United States; 17 Stat. 44; R. S. § 641 (repealed by the Code). Subject to the change in the jurisdictional amount, this act was expressly, and probably not impliedly, repealed by the act of 1887.

The general act of 1875 was one largely extending the federal jurisdiction and the right of removal: 18 Stat. L. 470; and the result of it was such an overcrowding of the dockets of the federal courts as to induce the passage of the very restrictive act of 1887, which is now in force, as part of the Judicial Code. It was generally considered to have been framed for the purpose of reorganizing the circuit courts of the United States and its operation was practically to repeal prior legislation on the subject, except some special acts of limited scope, and to substitute this act for pre-existing legislation as to the federal law on the subject of the removal of causes. The act of 1887 was supplemented by the act of August 13, 1888; 25 Stat. 433, which was passed for the purpose of correcting errors and ambiguities in the act of 1887. As thus amended, the act gave to the circuit courts original concurrent jurisdiction of all civil suits where the matter in dispute exceeded, exclusive of interest and costs, the sum or value of $2,000 (now enlarged to $3,000). In certain classes of cases there is a right to remove independently of amount; such as criminal cases and those civil actions touching matters not capable of a reduction to a pecuniary basis.

All the acts regulating the removal of causes are combined and codified in Chapter III of the Judicial Code, including sections 28-39. Section 28, down to the proviso at the end, is identical with section 2 of the Act of March 3, 1875, as amended by the acts of March 3, 1887, and October 13, 1888, except the substitution of the district for the circuit court. Sections 29 and 30 are, with mere verbal changes, section 3 of the Acts of March 3, 1887, and October 13, 1888. Sections 31, 32, 33 and 35 are sections 641, 642, 643, 644 and 645 of the Revised Statutes respectively. Sections 36, 37, 38 and 39 are sections 4, 5, 6, and 7 respectively of the act of March 3, 1875, as amended by acts of March 3, 1887 and Oct. 13, 1888. In the repealing proviso of the Judicial Code contained in Chapter XIV, all the statutes and sections of the Revised Statutes, for which the sections of Chapter III are thus substituted are expressly repealed (including the whole of the act of March 3, 1875, which repeal of course carries the amendments to that act in the acts of March 3, 1887, and August 3, 1888). The limitations of jurisdiction of the federal courts declared in the statutes thus embodied in the Judicial Code limit the jurisdiction as to actions removed from state courts as well as to those originally begun in the circuit court; Hyde v. Victoria Land Co., 125 Fed. 970.

The constitutional right of congress to enact the legislation providing for the removal of causes "arising under the laws of the United States has long since passed beyond doubt. It was exercised almost contemporaneously with the adoption of the constitution, and the power has been in constant use ever since." The jurisdiction of the federal courts "is essential, also, to a uniform and consistent administration of national laws. . . . The founders of the constitution could never have intended to leave to the possibly varying decisions of the state courts what the laws of the government it established are, what rights they confer, and what protection should be extended to those who execute them;" Tennessee v. Davis, 100 U. S. 257, 265, 25 L. Ed. 648. The removal of suits from the state courts depends on the legislation of congress; Gumbel v. Pitkin, 124 U. S. 131, 153, 8 Sup. Ct. 379, 31 L. Ed. 374. "The constitution declares the lines with which congress may confer jurisdiction, but the ground and limit of actual jurisdiction to be exercised by the court are to be found in the acts of congress and not in the constitution;" In re Cilley, 58 Fed. 977.

In determining whether an amount in dispute exceeds the jurisdictional amount, the plaintiff's demand, unless colorable, must furnish the rule, but where the law does give the rule, the legal cause of action, and not the plaintiff's demand, must be regarded; Hayward v. Mfg. Co., 85 Fed. 4, 29 C. C. A. 438. See JURISDICTION.

Where the main controversy is removed the ancillary proceedings go with it without respect to the amount involved; Lanning v. Osborne, 79 Fed. 657. And a proceeding which is merely ancillary to a decree of foreclosure in a state court is not removable; Daugherty v. Sharp, 171 Fed. 466.

Chapter III of the Judicial Code, which is practically a re-enactment of the law as it stood upon the act of 1887, authorizes the removal from the state courts of the following classes of suits:

1. Suits at law or in equity arising under the constitution or laws or treaties of the United States.

2. Any other suits of which the district courts of the United States have jurisdiction under the act.

3. Any suits in which there is a controversy wholly between citizens of different states, and which can be fully determined as between them.

4. Any suit pending in a state court in which the defendant, being a citizen of another state, shall make it appear to the district court that from prejudice or local influence he will not be able to obtain justice in the state court.

In all these cases the jurisdictional limit of $2,000 is applicable. It was at first doubted whether this was so in cases removed on the ground of prejudice or local influence, and there were decisions to the effect that the limitation of amount did not apply in those cases; Fales v. Ry. Co., 32 Fed. 673; McDermott v. Ry. Co., 38 Fed. 529, 3 L. R. A. 455; Frishman v. Ins. Co., 41 Fed. 449; but it was finally settled by the supreme court that the limitation applies in this as in other cases; In re Pennsylvania Co., 137 U. S. 451, 11 Sup. Ct. 141, 34 L. Ed. 738.

Provisions are also continued by Chapter

III for the removal of causes in which civil rights were denied, as previously provided in section 641, of suits against revenue officers as in section 643, or by aliens against civil officers of the United States as in section 644. In all cases, the removal is, of course, to the district courts in lieu of the circuit courts, as theretofore.

The proceeding for removal is by petition filed in the state court, upon which an order is made, if the case is within the act, directing the removal, upon the filing of a bond, with surety, for entering a copy of the record in the circuit court, where the case proceeds as if originally commenced therein; if improperly removed it may be remanded to the state court and there proceeded with. The proceedings under the act of 1887 are generally of the same character as those under the preceding acts, and, as a rule, the decisions under the latter are applicable, with the exception, of course, of cases relating to the construction of acts repealed and not supplied by subsequent legislation.

The procedure for removal is prescribed in section 29, Jud. Code, and those for dismissing or remanding a case improperly removed are in section 27. Section 38 prescribes that the federal court shall proceed in a suit removed as if it had been originally commenced in that court. Section 39 provides for securing the record by certiorari when a proper return is not made by the state court.

The removal acts are not penal and therefore not subject to any rule of strict construction; they are not in derogation of any right to a trial in a state court, as there is no such right; the rule of construction is that applied to other statutes giving jurisdiction; Woolridge v. McKenna, 8 Fed. 650; but the act of 1887 is to be construed with reference to its evident restrictive intent, and more strongly against one seeking to avoid its requirements; Dwyer v. Peshall, 32 Fed. 497; and this, as all other cases of construction, applies to the present law under section 294, which provides that the Code is to be treated as a continuation of the previous act and not as a new enactment.

The right to remove is no more a vested right than the right to trial in the state court, and may therefore be taken away at will by congress; Manley v. Olney, 32 Fed. 708.

The cognizance over cases removed to the federal court has been referred to the appellate jurisdiction; on the ground that the suit is not instituted in that court by original process; Martin v. Hunter's Lessee, 1 Wheat. (U. S.) 304, 4 L. Ed. 97; but this jurisdiction has been more accurately characterized as "original jurisdiction acquired indirectly by a removal from the state court"; Dennistown v. Draper, 5 Blatchf. 336, Fed. Cas. No. 3,804.

The federal jurisdiction attaches on the filing of the bond and petition; Crehore v. Ry.

Co., 131 U. S. 243, 9 Sup. Ct. 692, 33 L. Ed. 144. The validity of the legislation on this subject has been repeatedly affirmed; Gaines v. Fuentes, 92 U. S. 10, 23 L. Ed. 524; Tennessee v. Davis, 100 U. S. 257, 25 L. Ed. 648; Strauder v. West Virginia, 100 U. S. 303, 25 L. Ed. 664; State v. Hoskins, 77 N. C. 530; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Cary, 28 Ohio St. 208. And it has been further decided that when the terms upon which the right is given have been complied with, the right of removal cannot be defeated by state legislation; Home Ins. Co. v. Morse, 20 Wall. (U. S.) 445, 22 L. Ed. 365. It has been said that a state has the right to impose conditions, not in conflict with the constitution or the laws of the United States, on the transaction of business within its territory by a foreign corporation, or having given a license, to revoke it with or without cause; and that it may therefore require foreign corporations to forego their right of removal, or cease to do business within the state; Doyle v. Ins. Co., 94 U. S. 535, 24 L. Ed. 148; State v. Doyle, 40 Wis. 220, 22 Am. Rep. 692.

But in Barron v. Burnside, 121 U. S. 186, 7 Sup. Ct. 931, 30 L. Ed. 915, it was said that the point decided in Doyle v. Ins. Co., 94 U. S. 535, 24 L. Ed. 148, was expressly limited to the principle that an injunction would not be granted to restrain the action of state officers in such case; and it is settled that any legislation by the states intended to defeat the right of removal or to require from foreign corporations a stipulation in advance that they will not exercise it, is unconstitutional and void; id.; Southern Pac. Co. v. Denton, 146 U. S. 202, 13 Sup. Ct. 44, 36 L. Ed. 942; Herndon v. R. Co., 218 U. S. 135, 30 Sup. Ct. 633, 54 L. Ed. 970; Roach v. R. Co., 218 U. S. 159, 30 Sup. Ct. 639, 54 L. Ed. 978; Com. v. Coal Co., 97 Ky. 238, 30 S. W. 608; Erie R. Co. v. Stringer, 32 Ohio St. 468; or by a state law providing a special remedy in its own courts; Mason v. Boom Co., 3 Wall. Jr. 252, Fed. Cas. No. 9,232; nor can the right of removal be defeated by agreement of parties; Hobbs v. Ins. Co., 56 Me. 417, 96 Am. Dec. 472. But a state statute providing that if a foreign corporation shall remove cases to the United States courts the license to do business shall be revoked, is not unconstitutional; Security Mut. L. Ins. Co. v. Prewitt, 202 U. S. 246, 26 Sup. Ct. 619, 50 L. Ed. 1013, 6 Ann. Cas. 317.

See JURISDICTION.

Formerly the right of removal was given to either party without regard to the position occupied as plaintiff or defendant; Meyer v. Const. Co., 100 U. S. 457, 25 L. Ed. 593; but under the act of 1887 this right is in most cases given to the defendant only, the exception being where citizens of the same state claim land under grants from different states and the defendant must be a non-resident; Martin v. Snyder, 148 U. S. 663, 13 Sup. Ct. 706, 37 L. Ed. 602; but a case is not removable from the state court on the ground of citizenship, unless both at the commencement of the action, and also when the removal is asked, the defendants are citizens of a state other than the one of which the plaintiff is a citizen: Kellam v. Keith, 144 U. S. 568, 12 Sup. Ct. 922, 36 L. Ed. 544; Young v. Ewart, 132 U. S. 267, 10 Sup. Ct. 75, 33 L. Ed. 352. Some question has arisen as to which party is to be considered the plaintiff in proceedings for the exercise of the right of eminent domain, and if, by local practice, the landowner is the plaintiff, he cannot remove; Mt. Washington Ry. Co. v. Coe, 50 Fed. 637; Hudson River R. & T. Co. v. Day, 54 Fed. 545.

By a proviso at the end of the Jud. Code, § 26, no case arising under the Employers' Liability Act of April 22, 1908, can be removed to a federal court and this was enforced by a remand of such case to the state court upon the ground that under the Jud. Code considered as a whole, including the proviso, the right of removal did not exist in such case; Lee v. Ry. Co., 193 Fed. 685; on any ground whatever; Hulac v. Ry. Co., 194 Fed. 747; McChesney v. R. Co., 197 Fed. 85; and the same result was reached in the Second Employers' Liability Cases, Mondou v. R. Co., 223 U. S. 1, 32 Sup. Ct. 169, 56 L. Ed. 327, 38 L. R. A. (N. S.) 44, where, after quoting from the Employers' Liability Act of 1908, as amended in 1910, the provision that the jurisdiction of the federal courts is made "concurrent with that of the several states, and no case arising under this act and brought in any state court of competent jurisdiction shall be removed to any court of the United States," the court added that the amendment, as appears by its language, instead of granting jurisdiction to the state courts, presupposes that they already possess it.

Where several are sued as partners and only one has been served, he is not precluded from removal by the non-joinder of the others in the removal proceedings; Tremper v. Schwabacher, 84 Fed. 413. Where one may sue either one of two parties and he chooses to sue both, he may do so, though his motive in joining them is to prevent a removal to a federal court; Deere, Wells & Co. v. Ry. Co., 85 Fed. 876.

A suit between a state and citizens of another state cannot be removed on the ground of citizenship; Stone v. South Carolina, 117 U. S. 430, 6 Sup. Ct. 799, 29 L. Ed. 962; Postal Telegraph Cable Co. v. Alabama, 155 U. S. 482, 15 Sup. Ct. 192, 39 L. Ed. 231; State v. Trustees of University, 65 N. C. 714, Fed. Cas. No. 10,318; Connecticut v. Adams, 9 Ohio C. C. 21, 6 O. C. D. 46. Nor a suit between a state and a foreign corporation; Arkansas v. Kansas & T. Coal Co., 183 U. S. 185, 22 Sup. Ct. 47, 46 L. Ed. 144; but in a suit by railroad commissioners to restrain a railroad company from violating the law and a late order of the commissioners the state is not the real party plaintiff so as to preclude a removal, although it is contingently liable for costs; Missouri, K. & T. Ry. Co. v. Warehouse Com'rs, 183 U. S. 53, 22 Sup. Ct. 18, 46 L. Ed. 78; and the mere presence on the record of a state as a party plaintiff, will not defeat removal, if it appears that the state has no real interest; Ex parte Nebraska, 209 U. S. 436, 28 Sup. Ct. 581, 52 L. Ed. 876.

Corporations existing by virtue of acts of congress may remove to the federal courts actions brought against them in the state courts, on the ground that they are "suits arising under the laws of the United States"; Supreme Lodge of Knights of Pythias v. Hill, 76 Fed. 468, 22 C. C. A. 280.

As to the status of corporations as non-residents, see Patch v. R. Co., 207 U. S. 277, 28 Sup. Ct. 80, 52 L. Ed. 204, 12 Ann. Cas. 518; Martin's Adm'r v. R. Co., 151 U. S. 673, 14 Sup. Ct. 533, 38 L. Ed. 311. "Citizens," as used in the removal laws and jurisdictional statutes, means residence with the intention of permanently remaining in a particular place; Harding v. Standard Oil Co., 182 Fed. 421. Where there is no separable controversy, the cause can not be removed on the ground of diversity of citizenship unless all the defendants are non-residents of the state in which it is brought, notwithstanding that the plaintiff is a citizen of a different state from any of the defendants; Parkinson v. Barr, 105 Fed. 81. The removal provisions in the Judicial Code, § 28, though available as between citizens of states, are not so to citizens of territories; Anaconda Copper Min. Co. v. Copper Co., 200 Fed. 808.

The diversity of citizenship at the commencement of the action must appear from the petition; Stevens v. Nichols, 130 U. S. 230, 9 Sup. Ct. 518, 32 L. Ed. 914; La Confiance Compagnie Anonyme D'Assurance v. Hall, 137 U. S. 61, 11 Sup. Ct. 5, 34 L. Ed. 573; and if it does not it cannot be supplied by amendment; Fife v. Whittell, 102 Fed. 537; though imperfect statements may be amended; Crehore v. R. Co., 131 U. S. 240, 9 Sup. Ct. 692, 33 L. Ed. 144. Diversity of citizenship must be shown to have existed when the suit was commenced, as well as at the time of the application for removal; Wilson v. Giberson, 124 Fed. 701; Kellam v. Keith, 144 U. S. 568, 12 Sup. Ct. 922, 36 L. Ed. 544. A federal court cannot acquire jurisdiction by removal on the ground of diversity of citizenship where neither of the parties is a resident of the district and there is no consent or waiver of rights; Southern Pac. Co. v. Burch, 152 Fed. 168, 82 C. C. A. 34; Yellow Aster Min. & Mill. Co. v. Crane Co., 150 Fed. 580, 80 C. C. A. 566; Bottoms v. R. Co., 179 Fed. 318; Goldberg-Bowen & Co. v. Ins. Co., 152 Fed. 831; and in such case the action should, on plaintiff's motion, be remanded; Turk v. R. Co., 193 Fed. 252. Where an alien sues a citizen in a state court in the district of the latter's residence, the cause is not removable unless a federal question is presented; H. J. Decker, Jr., & Co. v. R. Co., 189 Fed. 224.

A suit between plaintiffs who are citizens of different states, and a defendant which is a corporation of a state other than the state in which the suit is brought, is not removable on the ground of diversity of citizenship under section 28, of the Judicial Code; Puget Sound S. M. Works v. R. Co., 195 Fed. 350.

Application for removal must be before the plea is due; and this means at or before the time when the defendant is required by the laws of the state to answer or plead to the merits; Wilson v. R. Co., 82 Fed. 15; and the time is not extended by delay in taking judgment or default for want of plea; Kansas City, Ft. S. & M. R. Co. v. Daughtry, 138 U. S. 298, 11 Sup. Ct. 306, 34 L. Ed. 963; nor can it be by stipulation of the parties or by the discretionary action of the judge in a particular case; Fox v. R. Co., 80 Fed. 945.

When the petition and bond are filed, the state court is without authority to proceed further; Marshall v. Holmes, 141 U. S. 589, 12 Sup. Ct. 62, 35 L. Ed. 870.

The court will not permit any fraud on the law either to prevent removal or to secure it, and the joinder of a party for this purpose will not be allowed to prevent a removal; Crawford v. R. Co., 130 Fed. 395; Kelly v. Ry. Co., 122 Fed. 286; but where there is a joint cause of action against both defendants, the cause cannot be removed even though to prevent it was the real purpose of the joinder; Armstrong v. R. Co., 192 Fed. 608; Evansberg v. Insurance Stove R. & F. Co., 168 Fed. 1001; and where, under the settled law of the state, the defendants were jointly liable it will not be treated as a fraudulent joinder; Chicago, B. & Q. R. Co. v. Willard, 220 U. S. 413, 31 Sup. Ct. 460, 55 L. Ed. 521.

All the facts essential to federal jurisdiction must appear on the record; Tod v. Ry. Co., 65 Fed. 145, 12 C. C. A. 521, 22 U. S. App. 707. They must appear from the plaintiff's statement where that is the ground of removal, and cannot be supplied by statement in the petition for removal or subsequent pleadings; Postal Telegraph Cable Co. v. Alabama, 155 U. S. 482, 15 Sup. Ct. 192, 39 L. Ed. 231; Oregon Short Line & U. N. Ry. Co. v. Skottowe, 162 U. S. 490, 16 Sup. Ct. 869, 40 L. Ed. 1048. A prima facie case must be shown by the record; Stone v. S. Carolina, 117 U. S. 430, 6 Sup. Ct. 799, 29 L. Ed. 962.

If a cause removed is not remanded when it might be, and proceeds without objection to judgment, the latter remains in force until vacated; Des Moines Nav. & R. Co. v. Homestead Co., 123 U. S. 552, 8 Sup. Ct. 217, 31 L. Ed. 202. One who petitions for or consents to removal cannot afterwards object to it as not asked for in time; Connell v. Smiley, 156 U. S. 335, 15 Sup. Ct. 353, 39 L. Ed. 443. If a cause is removed and the circuit court decides it has no jurisdiction, it re-mands and does not dismiss; Cates v. Allen, 149 U. S. 452, 13 Sup. Ct. 883, 977, 37 L. Ed. 804.

A state court may take cognizance of a suit brought by the state in its own courts against citizens of other states, subject to the right of the defendant to have such suit removed and subject also to the appellate jurisdiction of the supreme court of the United States; Plaquemines Tropical Fruit Co. v. Henderson, 170 U. S. 511, 18 Sup. Ct. 685, 42 L. Ed. 1126.

Where the state court denies the motion for removal but the record is nevertheless filed in the circuit court, which proceeds to a hearing and then remands, the order refusing removal works no prejudice, and the error, if any, is immaterial; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Fitzgerald, 160 U. S. 556, 16 Sup. Ct. 389, 40 L. Ed. 536.

Actual removal subjects the defendants to the jurisdiction of the federal court and is a waiver of privileges claimed by pleas in abatement, but the mere filing a petition in the state court is not a waiver of exception to its jurisdiction; Hinds v. Keith, 57 Fed. 10, 6 C. C. A. 231, 13 U. S. App. 222.

An order of the circuit court remanding a case to a state court was, at the time of the enactment of the Judicial Code, not reviewable by the supreme court by any direct proceeding; Powers v. R. Co., 169 U. S. 92, 18 Sup. Ct. 264, 42 L. Ed. 673. And such order was held not reviewable prior to the act of March 3, 1875, because such order was not a final judgment or decree, but by that act it was expressly made reviewable. By the act of March 3, 1887, however, it was provided that no appeal or writ of error from the decision of the circuit court remanding the case should be allowed, and under this state of the law it was held that the action of the circuit court was final; Missouri P. R. Co. v. Fitzgerald, 160 U. S. 556, 16 Sup. Ct. 389, 40 L. Ed. 536, followed in McLaughlin Bros. v. Hallowell, 228 U. S. 278, 33 Sup. Ct. 465, 57 L. Ed. 835. The Judicial Code does not seem to change the conditions created by the act of 1887, and at all events, inasmuch as the appellate jurisdiction of both the circuit court of appeals and the supreme court is only from final judgments or decrees, the subject seems to be remitted to the condition in which it was prior to the act of March 3, 1875, as decided in Missouri P. Ry. v. Fitzgerald, supra. In both cases cited it was also held that the order to remand could not be reviewed on appeal or error from the state court, inasmuch as that court could not be held to have decided against a final right when it merely recognized the decision of the federal court as conclusive and acted upon it. The act of 1887 (re-enacted Aug. 13, 1888) it was held, took away the inherent power of the supreme court to relieve by mandamus when a case, removed from a state court, was improperly remanded; In re Pennsylvania Co., 137 U.

S. 451, 11 Sup. Ct. 143, 34 L. Ed. 741. The defendant may waive defects in removal proceedings if jurisdiction actually exists, and if he does so, the court will not of its own motion inquire into the regularity of the proceedings; Mackay v. Development Co., 229 U. S. 173, 33 Sup. Ct. 638, 57 L. Ed. 1138; but when the state court asserts jurisdiction after a proper application for removal, the question is not waived by the party entitled to the removal by reason of his appearing and contesting the matter in dispute; Home L. Ins. Co. v. Dunn, 19 Wall. (U. S.) 214, 22 L. Ed. 68; Meyer v. Const. Co., 100 U. S. 457, 25 L. Ed. 593; National Steamship Co. v. Tugman, 106 U. S. 118, 1 Sup. Ct. 58, 27 L. Ed. 87. He may take an appeal, should the decision be against him, to the highest court of the state, save the question of removal on the record, and failing there, to the supreme court of the United States; Oakley v. Goodnow, 118 U. S. 43, 6 Sup. Ct. 944, 30 L. Ed. 61; Baltimore & O. R. Co. v. Koontz, 104 U. S. 5, 26 L. Ed. 643. In the event of his obtaining a decision in favor of removal there, the judgment of the state court will be reversed and an order made to transfer the case to the circuit court for trial on the merits; Gaines v. Fuentes, 92 U. S. 10, 23 L. Ed. 524. If a cause be improperly removed and the circuit court entertains jurisdiction improperly, its judgment will be reversed by the supreme court with directions to the circuit court to remand the same to the state court; Knapp v. R. Co., 20 Wall. (U. S.) 117, 22 L. Ed. 328.

The denial by a state court of an application to amend a petition for removal is not a denial of a right secured by the constitution of the United States; Stevens's Adm'r v. Nichols, 157 U. S. 370, 15 Sup. Ct. 640, 39 L. Ed. 736.

When a suit over which a state court has full jurisdiction in equity is removed to a circuit court on the ground of diverse citizenship, and it appears that the courts of the United States have no jurisdiction in equity over such a controversy, the cause should be remanded to the state court, instead of dismissing it for want of jurisdiction; Cates v. Allen, 149 U. S. 451, 13 Sup. Ct. 883, 37 L. Ed. 804.

A bill in equity to reach partnership property and set aside judgments confessed by fraud, presented a single controversy as to all defendants and could not be removed by one for diversity of citizenship; Graves v. Corbin, 132 U. S. 571, 10 Sup. Ct. 196, 33 L. Ed. 462; so also of a bill to prevent the payment of county bonds alleged to be invalid where some bondholders were citizens of the same state with the plaintiffs and others who sought to remove of a different state; Brown v. Trousdale, 138 U. S. 389, 11 Sup. Ct. 308, 34 L. Ed. 987; so of a bill to recover possession of town bonds where the bailee is a necessary party and a citizen of the same state; Wilson v. Oswego Tp., 151 U. S. 56, 14 Sup. Ct. 259, 38 L. Ed. 70. One of two corporations sued jointly in a state court for tort, though pleading severally, cannot remove the case on the ground of a separable controversy; Louisville & N. R. Co. v. Wangelin, 132 U. S. 599, 10 Sup. Ct. 203, 33 L. Ed. 474; so of a complaint against a corporation and its agents individually for damages for polluting a stream, and seeking a remedy against them jointly, though they answer separately with separate defences; Plymouth G. Min. Co. v. Canal Co., 118 U. S. 264, 6 Sup. Ct. 1034, 30 L. Ed. 232. To remove upon the ground of separable controversy, the case must be capable of separation into two or more independent suits, one of which is wholly between citizens of different states in the sense that it may be fully determined as between them without the presence of the other parties to the record; Barth v. Coler, 60 Fed. 466, 9 C. C. A. 81, 19 U. S. App. 646; Mitchell v. Smale, 140 U. S. 406, 11 Sup. Ct. 819, 35 L. Ed. 442; see Merchants' Cotton Press & Storage Co. v. Ins. Co., 151 id. 368, 14 Sup. Ct. 367, 38 L. Ed. 195; but separate defences do not create separate controversies within the meaning of the removal act; Graves v. Corbin, 132 U. S. 571, 10 Sup. Ct. 196, 33 L. Ed. 462; Little v. Giles, 118 U. S. 596, 7 Sup. Ct. 32, 30 L. Ed. 269; and a defendant cannot make an action several which plaintiff elects to make joint; Little v. Giles, 118 U. S. 596, 7 Sup. Ct. 32, 30 L. Ed. 269; Torrence v. Shedd, 144 U. S. 527, 12 Sup. Ct. 726, 36 L. Ed. 528.
